W. O. Walker Says No Place for Charity, Republicans Only Will Pass Civil Rights Laws

CLEVELAND— Declaring that sentimentality and charity don't get results, William O. Walker, editor of the Cleveland Call-Post last week urged colored Americans to help put both a Republican President and Congress in office if they are really interested in having civil rights legislation enacted.

Admitting that President Truman deserves credit for his courageous fight for civil rights, Mr. Walker said that Mr. Truman could do no more than he has since, under the Constitution, he can only recommend desired legislation.

The Congress alone can enact it, Mr. Walker pointed out, adding that "there is little hope of colored persons" getting any civil rights legislation from a Democratic Congress."

Votes Thrown Away

"Therefore," he continued, "anyone who places his hopes for civil rights legislation in his vote for any Democrat is just deluding himself and throwing away his vote."

About Henry A. Wallace and his Progressive Party, the editor stated that both have made much ado over the civil rights issue and are trying to lure voters into their fold by their honeyed words.

While Mr. Wallace, by his preachings and criticisms, is making both of the regular parties "walk a straighter path," no one interested in getting results should vote for the Third Party ticket since each vote for it will be wasted.

Sat 10-9-48

GOP Congress Held Only Hope

Then stumping for Governor Dewey, the Republican candidate, Mr. Walker said:

"Whether we like it or don't like it, the plain truth is, the colored man's only hope for ever obtaining civil rights legislation under present rules of Congress, is through the Republicans.

"While Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican nominee, has received less publicity in the pre-campaign era on his civil rights views, nevertheless, it is upon his shoulders that our hope must rest for achieving any or all of these laws.

Can't Afford Split

"I say this hope rest upon Dewey, because the hope of a Republican Congress depends upon his receiving a sufficiently large vote to carry into office with him, a majority for his party in both houses.

"If Dewey should be elected and fail to carry Congress for his party, he would be just as helpless in obtaining any Civil Rights legislation as President Truman. In other words, our hope for civil rights legislation rests entirely upon a Republican Congress.

In our zeal then for civil rights legislation, if we are going to be practical, we must center our attention on the election of a Republican Congress.

"In the last Congress, the Republicans had a big majority in the House and a slim majority in the Senate. The Republicans can't afford to lose a single Senate contest this fall.

Sat 10-9-48

Let Others Experiment

"In these days when Georgia is rallying around Herman Talmadge, with the Ku Klux Klan again on the march and the Dixiecrats preaching race hate at every cotton gin in the South, it is high time that the colored voters of the States outside the South give serious thought to their voting.

"Certainly we have received enough impetus in our long, bitter fight for civil rights, not to do anything now that will jeopardize the progress we have made.

"Let the other people experiment with the Wallace movement. They have nothing to lose because they already have their civil rights.

"Certainly with the South in complete control of the Democratic party and bitterly opposed to the passage of any civil rights legislation, there is no sound reason why our people should vote to put the Democrats back in power.

"This year, let's be practical. Elect a Republican Congress and bring civil rights legislation closer to a reality."

Dewey's 16-Car Train Has Comforts of Home

● By DOUGLASS HALL

(Special AFRO Writer With Dewey's Special Train)

Sat 10-9-48

Baltimore Md

What is it like to ride a campaign train? What are the accommodations like? How is the food? What about baths, sleeping quarters? Is the Presidential candidate well protected?

Do you see him often? How do other writers feel about colored newspaper men being a part of the official party? Do waiters and porters give the same service without hesitation?

What about hotel accommodations in the cities where the train stops overnight? Do you attend receptions, parties, and other similar social affairs with members of the official crew? Does Governor Dewey have a colored person on his staff? How many members of the colored press? Questions similar to these could easily run the lenth of this article, but I will reserve the balance of the space for answers.

Douglass Hall

Interesting Train

Campaign specials, dedicated to vote-getting, are perhaps the most interesting trains in the world, especially when the candidate aboard is aspiring for the Presidency of the United States. I am riding such a train.

In many instances it is like any other trains, that is, it has an engine and a long string of Pullman cars, usually about 15, carrying the candidate and members of his staff, and about a hundred members of the press.

Although Presidential campaign specials have been running since Stephen A. Douglass and Abe Lincoln took to the rails back in 1858, it was only a short while ago that the colored press was given representation on board.

There are three on board, Julius Adams, Amsterdam News; Lem Graves, Pittsburgh Courier, and myself. This is the third campaign in which they have been given berths.

The boys tell me that when colored writers started covering these specials the other reporters were cold and indifferent.

Some were insulting. They did not want them because heretofore coverage had been an exclusive for them.

Sat 10-9-48

Big, Happy Family

But there are no such incidents on the "Dewey Victory Special." The boys have learned to accept colored writers and quite often sit and talk, and even offer assistance whenever they see the need. It is almost one big, happy family.

All of us travel with the same official status. We are identified badge. Cops in all cities have been by a 2½ inch orange and white posted to recognize the identification. Usually they greet the wearers with a smile.

We travel in compartments which are occupied by two persons. There is a wash-bowl, hot and cold water, ice water for drinking, clothes closet, and a toilet.

The room is air-conditioned for the warm sections, but just the twist of the wrist will turn on the heat. Linen is changed each day and a porter serves your needs around the clock.

Best Food Served

Only the best food is served. Today's menu was buff colored, 11 by 14 inches, and printed on the finest paper. It had a beautiful scenic natural colored photo in the center.

But once you opened it there was even more. You had six selections, among them individual boneless chicken pie, garden vegetables, potatoes $2.25;

Assorted cold meats, potato salad, $2.60. Of course, you can order a la carte almost anything that you want.

There are different prices for eating. I have noticed that different roads served the same food for different prices. The service is top-bracket.

At present there are 16 cars on the train if you count the baggage car. Let's begin at the rear of the train. That is where Governor and Mrs. Dewey live—in the last car.

This arrangement was necessary because the governor makes many speeches from the rear platform. The entire coach is detailed for his use.

There is a dining room, living room, shower, kitchen, and almost anything else that they might find at home. At almost each stop a telephone is connected and they talk with their two kids in Albany, N.Y., and attend to official business.

Bodyguards, Detectives

The next three cars house bodyguards, railroad detectives, secretarial staff, advisors, and maybe a few newspaper men. Usually, the wire-men (AP, UP) are always close to the candidate.

The assumption is that if anything breaks, since they serve all the papers, they would be of greater service in that position.

Fifth from the rear is a lounge car, which serves as a place for relaxation in the day and puts up transient guests at night. Someone is always getting on to chat with the Governor, or just to be near him.

Sat 10-9-48

Others talk so much and long until the train pulls off with them on board. Then there are newsmen for local papers who want to ride just for the atmosphere.

There are two diners and a work car, where typewriters are singing night and day. The rest of the cars house almost a hundred newsmen, including Elmer Davis, American Broadcasting Company; Roscoe Drummond, Christian Science Monitor; John Cutter, UP; Jack Bell, AP; W. W. Chapman, NBC; and Edward Clark, Life.

For the first few days when the train starts out, it's a lot of fun. But after that, it's like being at sea—you want to see land. Occasional stops are made but even your time on the ground is scheduled. You are seldom left on your own.

Hotel rooms are provided for baths. Usually, some press club throws a reception for the "visiting press." Sometimes, there is food but most of the time, only drinks.

Dewey Visits Press

Governor Dewey makes several visits to the press room. He shakes hands with everybody. Once in a while, he holds a press conference. But there is no car aboard large enough to accomodate all the press representatives, so it's usually not so hot.

There is a sound system installed on the train. When the Governor is speaking from the rear of the train, he can be heard in many of the cars.

No one has been left behind on this trip so far but I had a very narrow escape when we first started out. I have to walk about twelve cars back each time I want to see the Governor speak from the rear of the platform.

Sat 10-9-48

A whistle blows as a warning for all members of the Dewey party to get on the train. I started for Car 10—and the train started off at the same time. I started a spirited trot, but just before I arrived at an entrance, an alert trainman closed it. I increased my speed, so did the train. Finally, a porter saw my plight and opened a door behind me.

Several other writers and photographers have been cut off by the crowd but all have managed to catch up.

Dewey Record Offers New Deal Hope to Race

The Courier

34a(1)

Sat 10-9-48 Pittsburgh Pa.

By LEM GRAVES Jr., Courier's Washington Correspondent

ABOARD DEWEY VICTORY SPECIAL—What is the Dewey record on civil rights?

In the absence of very much in the way of clear-cut emphasis on this phase during the campaign so far, this record will be very important to Negro voters. From the information this writer has been able to accumulate from those close to the New York Governor during this tour, a brief summary of the record is as follows:

New York State, under Governor Dewey, has enacted the strongest set of civil rights statutes of any State in the union. When a Negro's rights are violated in New York, there is legal redress on the law books. In addition, the New York Bill of Rights covers practically every area of human activity and provides for the safety and security of minority groups.

The civil rights laws, enacted in 1945, and signed by Governor Dewey, prohibits discrimination on account of race, creed, color or national origin in: alcoholic beverage sale, jury panels, resorts, amusement parks, restaurants, inns, hotels and places of public accommodation, public utilities, employment, labor union membership, civil service, public schools, practice of law, contracting for public works, and employment by any firm, corporation, or institution, or by State, agency or political subdivision. In addition, the laws provide for equal protection for all minorities.

Sat 10-9-48

ENACT FEPC

On March 12, 1945 the Ives-Quinn (FEPC) Bill was passed by the General Assembly on recommendations by a State-wide committee, including three Negroes, and which investigated job discrimination. On July 1, 1945, the State committee against discrimination, a permanent committee, began work. The ban on discrimination applies alike to employers, labor organizations, employment agencies and other groups. This includes big firms like the Telephone Company and powerful Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Dewey supported and signed a bill providing for reapportionment of political districts which made possible the election of the first congressman from New York City. Though the Democrats capitalized on this gerrymander to elect Rep. Adam C. Powell, the situation was created by the Republican Governor of New York. Incidentally, Franklin D. Roosevelt, while Governor of New York, twice vetoed this bill.

INTEREST IN EDUCATION

Governor Dewey appointed a commission, including one Negro, Dr. George E. Haynes, to study New York's educational system. The greater New York University which it recommended is being organized and Dr. Haynes is one of the fifteen trustees appointed to the board which will co-ordinate all education in New York. There will be no color lines in education in New York.

New York assures Negroes integrated participation in all social welfare advances such as health safe-guards, child welfare legislation, education, housing, and old age benefits. In fact, low rent housing in Negro communities is greater than the population ratio would indicate.

Sat 10-9-48

Negroes have had the protection of a Dewey-sponsored Home Rent protection law which was instantly effective at the expiration of OPA. They are protected, as are all other New Yorkers, by Women's Wage Equality Laws, a 55½ cent minimum wage law, a Workmen's compensation law which includes domestics, increased unemployment insurance benefits, increased disability benefits, veterans benefits which are higher than elsewhere, and the opportunity to work on highways without discrimination.

On the question of integration of Negroes into Government positions, Governor Dewey made his position plain when, in 1942 while he was campaigning for Governor, he was asked if he would decline to name a Negro to an administrative position if he was otherwise qualified. To this question he answered: "positively not."

APPOINTEES LISTED

His record on appointments follows: while U. S. District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, he appointed Judge Hubert T. Delany and Mrs. Eunice Carter as special prosecutors in New York County. Later, as District Attorney for New York County, he named as assistants, Ellis F. Rivers, at $10,000, Elmer Carter at $6,000, and W. H. Yergan, at $4,000.

Since becoming Governor, Dewey has made more than twenty high level appointments of Negroes. Some of them are: C. B. Powell, New York Athletic Commission; Ellis Rivers, City Court Judgeship at $17,000 (Rivers was later elected to a ten-year term); Noah C. A. Walter, member Industrial Compensation Board, $5,000; Bertha J. Diggs, secretary in the Department of Labor, $5,000; St. Claire Bourne, Publicity Director, State Commission against discrimination (SCAD) $5,000; Elmer A. Carter, member, SCAD, $10,000; Henry K. Craft, field representative SCAD $4,200; Lillian Sharpe Hunter, field representative, SCAD, $4,200, also Frank Forbes, Judge Athletic Commission; Mrs. Mathew V. Boutee, member Training School Visiting Board; Dr. Henry O. Harding, member State Hospital Visiting Board; Grant Reynolds, member State Correction Commission; Dr. Walter Beekman, member State War Council's Committee on discrimination; Eugene Faulkner, Counselor New York Division of Veterans Affairs; Louis J. Warner, Veterans Affairs Counselor; and Dr. George E. Haynes, Trustee of the Greater New York University.

The Rev. George H. Sims. The Rev. Elijah Echols and Mr. Powell were members of the original committee which formulated the FEPC (or SCAD) Bill.

Sat 10-9-48

MENTIONED ON TOUR

This is a brief outline of the Dewey record. In one of his campaign speeches, in Sante Fe, N. M., Dewey alluded indirectly to this record. After that, on his Western tour, he made only occasional references to his hope that class and race antagonisms might be eliminated.

In some sections, the racial reference in his general remarks on National Unity was entirely left out.

Afro Poll Finds Truman Losing on Civil Rights

Sat 10-30-48

AFRO-AMERICAN surveys of colored voters, in four heavily-populated East Coast areas, indicate the most evenly split vote in Tuesday's Presidential election since the late President Roosevelt took office.

They show, however, that in the three-party race he will not receive a majority of the votes of colored citizens.

An analysis of the results also shows that, despite Mr. Truman's stand on civil rights, he will lose thousands of voters who formely supported his party's candidate.

Baltimore Md.

Covers 350,000 Voters

Areas represented in the poll have over 475,000 colored citizens of voting age. Excluding the capital, where most residents do not vote, the poll covers 350,000 potential colored voters.

In these combined areas, where Mr. Roosevelt polled over 70% of the votes in 1944, Mr. Truman will get approximately 47%, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey will receive 33% and Henry A. Wallace will get 12%. Eight per cent had no opinion or had not made up their mind.

Dewey Gains

Governor Dewey's showing is considerably stronger than in 1944. The survey indicates that he has gained 3%, or over 10,000 backers in the area covered, in four years.

He has gained strength despite the fact that he, as well as Mr. Truman will lose voters to Progressive candidate Henry Wallace.

That both parties will lose to Wallace was shown by second choices listed by voters preferring the Progressive Party candidate. Over two-thirds claim they would have voted for Truman while the rest said Dewey would be their choice were Wallace not running.

Wallace's strength, supposedly once very great among colored voters, apparently has dwindled considerably. He has maintained the highest percentage of backers in Northern New Jersey, with 22%. He has a low of 11% in Philadelphia.

Civil Rights No Issue

Despite the talk of civil rights, that issue will not be the deciding factor for most independent voters. Participants expressed confidence in Dewey, Truman and Wallace on civil rights, generally holding that the chance for legislation is greater than ever before.

For these people, labor policy, maintaining the peace, avoiding a depression, a concept of what each party stands for, which interest it looks out for—these were the issues on which they based their decision.

It would indicate that many votes will be cast on other than so-called "colored issues," and that a large number of "party" votes will be cast than ever before.

It is likely that fewer colored voters will go to the polls than in 1944, however.

The argument over civil rights and the 80th Congress seems to have benefited neither party. Colored Washingtonians, next door to Congress, were not in agreement as to whom to blame because no rights legislation came out of either the regular or special session.

Reasons Listed

Only 3% more blamed the Republicans than the Democrats, with 30% blaming neither party in particular.

The three factors most mentioned by backers of each candidate, and those on which voters evidently will decide are:

FOR DEWEY

"He is the stronger man, more capable administrator, needed in the present world crisis."

"His New York record on civil rights.' '

"It is time for a change."

FOR TRUMAN

"His courageous stand on civil rights."

His party, in 16 years, has done most for colored citizens."

FOR WALLACE

"He is the only real Christian advocating racial equality, brotherhood of man."

"He has the right philosophy and approach to bring lasting peace to the world."

"He is a true friend or labor."

GOP Nominee Speaks Before 2,000 in NYC

SINGLE STANDARD

Urges Economic System of Opportunity for All

Baltimore Md.

NEW YORK — Governor Thomas E. Dewey, Republican Presidential candidate, last week, proposed a "human rights" program dedicated against discrimination and with "equal justice and equal treatment for all."

Speaking at a dinner meeting of the Smith Memorial Foundation, honoring the memory of Alfred E. Smith, late Governor of New York and unsuccessful 1928 Democratic Presidential candidate, Gov. Dewey pledged that he would combat the politically explosive problems of racial and religious discrimination through application of a single governmental standard.

He told the 2,000 diners at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel that his own experience in New York, with its multitudinous and articulate minority groups, had proved that it was possible to find "peaceful, honest solutions to problems which fester when they are ignored or explode if they are mishandled."

All Are Brothers

Mr. Dewey expressed an abiding determination to advance the cause of human rights, declaring that in America, "all men were intended to be brothers and one man could start life as good as any other, and that the truth to which this nation is dedicated is that all men are created free and equal. That truth is still one of the most powerful moral forces of the world."

Mr. Dewey attacked the "abhorrent concept that every human being is the same as every other," adding his own viewpoint that "we are equal, but by God's grace, we are not all the same."

Human Rights Program

Sat 10-30-48

The GOP Presidential candidate declared:

"I assert that human beings are not identical—that no human being is common—that we are all—every single one of us—uncommon people. We are separate individuals whose human differences in talent, in religious faith, in purpose and achievement, enrich our communities and are to be gloried in.

"We are equal in the status conferred upon us by birth, in our rights before the law, in economic opportunity, and in our right to bow down only to our God. We are all equal, but, by God's grace, we are not all the same."

Emphasizing that America's particular problem is to reconcile the human rights of each individual with the human rights of each other individual, Mr. Dewey asserted:

Single Standard

"Every human right carries with it a responsibility to use it in the interest of others and not to their injury. It means that government which administers these rights must guide its way by one single standard of equal justice and equal treatment for all.

"By a faithful adherence to this standard we can meet even our most difficult problems of discrimination against minority groups, of prejudice, of bigotry, of denial of certain human rights.

"From my own experience in this State with the largest minority groups in the nation, I have found it possible to find peaceful, honest solutions to problems which fester when they are ignored or explode if they are mishandled.

Sat 10-30-48

Social Responsibility

"By a simple re-discovery of our devotion to human rights and the protection of others from the abuse of those rights, we can draw a line through every conflict and draw it straight and true. It can be drawn so that both civil liberty and social responsibility complement and fortify each other.

"We should deal with the problem of social injustice wherever it is to be found in America and solve that problem in American terms."

Opportunity for All

Mr. Dewey made no direct statement that he would, if elected, press for a fair employment practices law, modeled after the N.Y. State Anti-Discrimination Law, but asserted:

"We should strengthen our economic systems so that it shall become—even more than in the past—a system of opportunity and promise, equipped to deliver to all of our people an even higher standard of living.

"We should provide the vision and the moral leadership necessary to make us again a united people, so that we feel the strength of unity and no foreign power can possibly believe that our divis;ions may be aggravated and exploited to our destruction.

"This is the way our human rights must be safeguarded and enlarged."

Sat Oct 30-48

Freedom for All

In concluding, Mr. Dewey asserted:

"As a people, let us join together in an uncompromising attachment to these principles; let us share a deep conviction of the urgent need to have them applied; let us know in our minds and feel in our hearts that every human being is entitled to be himself, to contribute of his own best talents to the betterment of all. let us re-dedicate ourselves to the dignity the equal opportunity and freedom of all."

Dewey Turns On Steam in Shaky Areas

By LEM GRAVES Jr.
(Courier's Washington Correspondent)

Sat 10-16-48

ABOARD DEWEY VICTORY TRAIN—GOP Presidential candidate Thomas E. Dewey, still operating on the theory that he can personally promote a victory in the White House sweepstakes without too much difficulty returned to the business of trying to salvage the shaky Senatorial seats of Republicans in sensitive political areas on Monday. Dewey fears that, without his help the Democrats may control the Senate even if he is elected President.

Governor Dewey launched a nine-State, eight-day campaign tour with a major labor speech in Pittsburgh Monday night. In a direct appeal for labor support, which up to this point is pretty generally committed to the Democratic standard-bearer, President Truman, Governor Dewey reiterated his persistent theme of unity, calling upon business and labor to unite in the interest of a stable U. S. economy

He declined to repudiate the Taft-Hartley Law, which is anathema to organized labor blocs, but implied, in general language, that the law might be adjusted if certain aspects of it proved undesirable in operation.

NEED FOR TEAMWORK

The labor speech emphasized the need for teamwork in the development of a sound business and industrial economy, the New York governor urged cooperation between labor and management instead of antagonism and friction. He suggested that labor-management relations in New York under his administration had been generally good.

High on the priority list for campaign assistance from the GOP candidate is Senator Joe Ball of Minnesota. Senator Ball, damned by liberal and labor elements as an unreconstructed reactionary, is facing a bitter fight in his native bustings with liberal, progressive Democrat Humphreys, Mayor of Minneapolis. Governor Dewey will travel into Minnesota on this trip to drape his prestige around the shoulders of Senator Ball in an effort to save this Senate seat for the GOP.

Similar excursions into Illinois, Oklahoma, Kentucky and Indiana are on the Dewey agenda for the tour this week. The Pittsburgh stop was preceded by five platform appearances in Pennsylvania where urban Democratic machines are threatening to garner a few more votes than the GOP campaign directors think it is safe to lose.

WASHINGTON BUZZING

Meanwhile, Washington is buzzing with rumors which, if true, may upset Governor Dewey's carefully calculataed plans to coast to the Presidential victory without making unnecssary commitments in his major speeches. There are some optimistic Democratic souls who believe that a surprise alliance between Progressive Candidate Henry Wallace and President Harry S. Truman is in the making, and that a "deal" may be consumated in these waning weeks of the election race.

For evidence they cite last week's meeting between Harold Ickes and President Truman and the gradual withdrawal of Progressive candidates in areas where liberal Democrats were facing defeat because of the split in the Democratic vote. It is believed by some that Truman's purpose in calling Ickes in was to persuade the flamboyant ex-cabinet-officer-turned-columnist to bring Wallace back into the fold in order to save the Democratic administration, now facing almost certain defeat.

In event any such far-fetched and admittedly doubtful alliance is formed during Governor Dewey's current eight-day odyssey, it is likely that Dewey will hastily reorganize his fources and launch a real fight for the Presidency. This would involve fighting speeches with major political commitments of a spceific character. Major obstacle to a "deal" between Wallace and Truman is foreign policy, on which the two candidates are as far apart as the proverbial poles.

Dewey's choice of the great steel center of Pittsburgh for his major labor address was warmly welcomed by Pittsburgh workers, who packed huge Hunt Armory for this address. From Pittsburgh, Governor Dewey went into Ohio, and thence to Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Oklahoma, Kentucky and Minnesota. He will wind up Sunday in his native Owossa, Mich., where he will spend the day with his mother, after which he will work his way back into Albany with a few stops and platforms appearances in western New York State.

MR. DEWEY AND THE SOUTH

The Times

Between some of the reactionary elements that have followed the trail of the "Dixiecrats" in their rebellion against the civil rights program of President Truman, and the idea of a South advancing toward the two-party system, there may be a seven-league non sequitur. If that were the whole story of the politically "Solid South" that is now visibly cracking up, then the chapter of the 1948 Presidential campaign might close as did the one in 1928 (when four normally Democratic Southern States went Republican), with the region's return to old allegiances, the single-party as well as the single-crop system. But the South is turning over new furrows politically also, and out of the wider division of 1948 there may emerge the beginnings of a two-party system which, starting in the border states, will spread in the course of time to the deeper South. The revolt against the civil rights program has been in the hands of politicians who, for the most part, have used an appeal couched in platitudes and shibboleths characteristic of an older South. But the opposition to Mr. Truman and one-party government also includes the alert leadership which in the long interval between the campaigns of 1928 and 1948 has spurred the whole Southeastern region toward the tremendous strides it has taken in public education, home and farm ownership, and industrial progress.

Thur 10-21-48

New York N.Y.

The border states of Maryland and Kentucky are already two-party states. In elections of recent years, as much as 40 per cent of the popular vote in Virginia has been counted in the Republican column. Tennessee, which has recently given a sound trouncing to Boss Ed Crump of Memphis, has a rising Republican party. In the November election two or three states in the deep South may give the Thurmond-Wright ticket a majority and two or three more may give the Dewey-Warren ticket their electoral votes. In all these states that will split the "Solid South" the Republican party may elect Congressmen and gain a foothold for future progress. In Virginia, which has been moving toward the status of a "border" political state, an old barrier was broken when Richmond recently elected a Negro to its nine-man unicameral council. In the fact that historic prejudices are breaking down under the impetus of new leadership is to be found the real hope of the development of a two-party system below the Potomac.

The Republican planking for such a two-party system was provided at Philadelphia. The Republican National Convention adopted a platform calling for "a revision of the procedure for the election of the President and the Vice President that will more exactly reflect the popular will." The action traced back to the Lodge-Gossett resolution, of which the patrons were Senator Lodge of Massachusetts (who was also chairman of the Resolutions Committee of the Republican National Convention) and Representative Gossett of Louisiana. Introduced at the last session of Congress, the resolution proposed an amendment to the Constitution giving candidates for the Presidency only such proportionate strength in the Electoral College as they win in popular votes in each state. It was approved by the Judiciary Committees of both branches of Congress. The chief technical change would be that a state's electoral votes would no longer be cast in a block. Each state would retain the number of electoral votes it now has, but these would be divided proportionately among the candidates according to their popular totals. The next Congress may pass the Lodge-Gossett resolution, or one like it. Since the proposed constitutional amendment would require ratification by three-fourths of the states, the South alone could defeat it. But if it could be persuaded to approve it, the step would be toward cancellation of the mortgage of the one-party system.

Here would be the first ground for an appeal to that element in Southern regions which has a growing conviction that a South in which there was a real contest for electoral votes could also become a region revitalized and a larger force in national affairs. The two-party system would have to be made attractive to the South. Mr. Dewey may well be the man to devise such a program. It should be an appeal to a young South that is just coming of age. And it would constitute a high mission in American government.

For the NNPA News Service

Associate Justice William O. Douglas of the United States Supreme Court is being frequently mentioned as a running mate for President Truman in the Presidential election this year. In fact, is has been reported that Gael Sullivan, executive director of the Democratic national committee, has informed Justice Douglas that the 1948 Vice Presidential nomination is his for the taking.

New Orleans

Biographical sketches of Justice Douglas throw little or no light on his attitude toward the issues of the day. Prior to his appointment to the Supreme Court, the only public office he held was membership on the Securities and Exchange Commission from 1936 to 1939. Serving as chairman from 1937 to 1938, he has been on the bench since April 17. 1939.

Senator James O. Eastland Democrat, of Mississippi, who recently demonstrated his irresponsibility by accusing the Supreme Court of being judicially dishonest is against Justice Douglas. That fact alone is almost sufficient to make every colored and every liberal Democrat in the country be for Justice Douglas.

Paraphrasing William Jennings Bryan, the Mississippi Senator declared on the Senate floor recently that "The Democrat electors of the South will not sacrifice our people upon the cross of political expediency. And this goes for Mr. Douglas, as well as any other candidate who is nominated by the Northern Democrats against our will and over our protests."

A great speech, delivered by Justice Douglas in Chicago recently at the dinner given in honor of a great liberal in American political history, John Peter Altgeld, of Illinois, may shed some light upon the political philosophy of Justice Douglas. Sat. 2-7-48

Justice Douglas traced Altgeld's rise to maturity during the days of the robber barons and his career as Governor of Illinois. He declared that men and women are the greatest natural resources of the nation and called upon civic, cultural, religious organizations to keep close ties with the people of the world.

Turning from the international to the national field. Justice Douglas declared that not only the courts, especially the lower courts, but the legislative and executive branches of the government also have responsibilities for the protection of civil liberties.

"Yes, it takes courage to stand between an unpopular minority and the community, insisting that our Bill of Rights was designed for the protection of all people whatever their race, creed, or political faith." declared Justice Douglas, adding: Informer Sentinel

THE INSIDE STORY:

Loyalty to the President Kept Ike from Running

BY JOHN S. KNIGHT
Editor of the Free Press

PHILADELPHIA — Why did Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower refuse to run for president?

There are a dozen different versions. This one comes direct from the White House feedbox.

The story goes that Ike simply could not bring himself to run against his commander-in-chief either as the Republican or Democratic nominee.

DID IKE WANT the presidency? Sure.

But his loyalty to President Truman and to Secretary of State George Marshall made him shy away from the Republicans.

Mr. Truman's determination to be a candidate for re-election removed any possibility of Eisenhower's letting his name be presented before the Democrats.

Had Mr. Truman declined to run, Ike would have been the Democratic candidate.

The same Administration source responsible for this version of the Eisenhower political saga confidently predicts that Ike will be the Democrats' man in 1952.

Leader Says He Is Only Democrat To Fill Post; Calls Him Man Of Hour

A call for a "draft Eisenhower" movement "as a service to the state, to the nation, and to the world," was issued late last night to all candidates for delegate and elector in the Democratic primary of May 4. Marion Rushton, Democratic national committeeman, a candidate for re-election, issued the call.

In a prepared statement, Mr. Rushton pointed out that General Dwight David Eisenhower might be available as a nominee of the party and that endorsement of him would provide a rallying point for a heretofore negative campaign. He then said:

"I call upon all candidates for delegate and elector to express themselves in similar fashion. I hope that one of those so selected as delegate will be commissioned to place the name of Dwight David Eisenhower in nomination for the presidency." 4-18-48

(This call will be followed up by a poll taken by The Advertiser. Mr. Rushtons action was independently conceived. See editorial page, 2B, for Advertiser comment on possible developments.)

Sparkman Asks Chief Of Columbia To Put His Hat Into Ring

By The Associated Press

Frank Hague, Democratic national committee vice chairman, deserted President Truman Sunday and pulled New Jersey's 36 nominating votes with him into the Democratic presidential drive for Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The shift built up to well over 100 the total of convention votes definitely committed to the retired army chief of staff, with scores more from New York to California, reported wavering.

It turned mere talk of a draft into a definite boom.

Nothing less than a flat-footed "I won't run" statement from the general now can head off the Eisenhower move short of a vote in the Philadelphia convention next week. Montgomery

Eisenhower withheld any statement at all for the time. A spokesman at Columbia University where Eisenhower is president, said that as far as he knows the general will have nothing to say before T[illegible]day—if then.

Unless he picks an earlier spot, Eisenhower will get his first public chance to say something about the Democratic draft move in an address to Columbia students Tuesday afternoon.

Truman Unavailable

All he has had to say lately has come through aides. And that has consisted of rereading last January's statement that he is not "available" for high public office. That statement was issued in connection with a Republican presidential boom.

President Truman, en route by train to Bolivar, Mo., to help dedicate a statue to the South American liberator Simon Bolivar, was not immediately reachable for reaction. Also out of quick reach were high officials of the Democratic Party. National Chairman J. Howard McGrath was in New England.

Hague mentioned his previous endorsement of the President for a nomination to a full term, and his own pro-Truman activities at the last national convention. He spoke of high personal regard for the President.

34a(1)

But he said he had been studying candidates and talking with party leaders in recent months and had decided "not to force upon the Democrats of the state a man whom they do not want."

He said he had been told that if the Democrats ran Mr. Truman the November result would be a Republican landslide.

Announcing his shift to Eisenhower, Hague said:

"He has done a great job. He led us through one of the greatest wars in history. I say he should be drafted to finish his job. Mon. 7-5-48

Calls For General

"We cannot be successful with President Truman as the candidate. The people are clamoring for leadership. They do not feel they have that leadership in the President of the United States or in the Republican nominee (Gov. Thomas E. Dewey).

"But they do believe they have world leadership in the person of Gen. Eisenhower."

There were no quick authoritative estimates of just how many votes General Eisenhower can have it he wants them, but politicians counted 110 solidly committed: New Jersey's 36 plus 20 from South Carolina, 28 from Georgia and 26 from Virginia.

Additional weight was given to week end discussions which indicated possible cracks in such delegations as those from New York, Illinois, Michigan, California, and Pennsylvania, and other less heavy-voting states.

All that talk is due to come to a head in Philadelphia Saturday, at a caucus called by James Roosevelt, California state chairman, and announced by Mayor O'Dwyer, of New York—provided Eisenhower doesn't stop it all with a word beforehand.

In Washington Senator Sparkman (D), Alabama, kept the Eisenhower drum rumbling with a list of 10 reasons why he said it is the general's "duty" to accept a draft. 7-5-48

Sparkman For Him

Sparkman and other enthusiastic friends of the former Army chief of staff whipped up toward a full sized Eisenhower boom in the national convention next week. But Sparkman told reporters that Democrats shouldn't try to name him if he will refuse to run.

Sparkman said leaders of the Eisenhower draft should get a statement from him before the "movement snowballs to a nomination." Montgomery

"I'm convinced that unless General Eisenhower makes a statement, his name will be put in omination, he will be nominated nd elected," he added. Eisen- ower has been seeing "every- ody who has come to see him nd he has not said no yet," the enator added hopefully.

Sparkman told reporters that Eisenhower, now president of olumbia University, does reject emocratic offers. it is his guess that Mr. Truman will be nominated. Advertiser

Sparkman made his public statement to Eisenhower by radio as a "terrible concerned American citizen." 7-5-48

In a direct slap at President Truman, the senator said:

"We are concerned because we do not ourselves seem to have leaders in office or clamoring for office who are equal to the task of guiding us in this crucial and perilous era."

Among the reasons Sparkman gave Eisenhower for responding favorably to the draft movement were these contentions:

1. Eisenhower has the support of a majority of the people.
2. He supports cooperation among nations.
3. In world affairs, he can bargain with leaders of different political beliefs.
4. He would have a "salutary" effect on Congress.
5. He could combat inflationary forces. Mon. 7-5-48
6. He could "defeat the real estate lobby" on housing bills.
7. He could protect general welfare from special interest lobbies.
8. He has "great administrative ability."

Move Will Collapse, President Declares

ABOARD TRUMAN TRAIN ENROUTE TO BOLIVAR, MO.—(AP)—A top aide said Sunday night that President Truman is "absolutely convinced" that opposition to his nomination will collapse at the Democratic National Convention.

This official, who declined to be quoted by name, contended that at least some of the advocates of the move to draft General Dwight D. Eisenhower are using him as a cover for their efforts to give the nomination to Associate Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court.

He said that Mr. Truman believes that the former chief of staff of the Army is a Republican and would not be available for a Democratic nomination.

9. He could aid public power projects where defense is involved.

10. He could prevent "further delay" in social welfare legislation.

CONGRESSMAN POWELL FOR GEN. EISENHOWER

34a(1) Daily World

Atlanta, Ga

NEW YORK — (ANP) — For the first time since he was stricken by a heart attack last spring, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell appeared before a crowd of 1,500 persons here last week and warmly endorsed Gen. Dwight Eisenhower as a liberal he would support for President. Sun

"I believe in Eisenhowser," Powell shouted, "and I am willing to go out for him." 1-11-48

About his own political plans, Powell had little to say. If the major parties insist on nominating some "hack," it was made plain he will definitely be a candidate to succeed himself. Otherwise, Congressman Powell implied he will throw his support to the strongest qualified contender.

CALL TO ARMS

From what he said about housing, the high cost of living and jobs, it was evident that Rep. Powell was sounding a call to arms and had already opened his campaign for reelection.

Daily World

Among other things he promised to finance a grocery store in every church in Harlem if officials of the cooperating churches would furnish the manpower for such ventures. He added that butter could be bought in the store at Abyssinian church for 89 cents a pound, although some storekeepers here are charging as much as $1.04 a pound.

Atlanta, Ga.

Powell promised also to again show Harlemites what a picket line is supposed to be. He mentioned the city's largest dairy and several brewing concerns by name and claimed, if these companies continue to refuse employment to Negroes that he would personally lead a boycott against their products. Sun. 1-11-48

"And don't think," he admonished a few Negro store owners present, "that we won't picket your store for carrying the wrong goods on your shelves."

EMPHATIC 'NO,' IKE'S FINAL WORD

New Orleans, La.

~~34 a(1)~~

Won't Accept Under Any 'Terms, Conditions,'

Times Picayune

(The Associated Press)

Philadelphia, July 9. — Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower laid down a "final and complete" refusal today to accept the Democratic presidential nomination under any "terms, conditions or premises."

Key anti-Truman Democrats from the North quickly abandoned their campaign to draft the general and switched their support to the president.

Those from the South went into hurried huddles, trying to figure out whether they would try to get behind somebody else.

Truman backers, and even some party members who wanted another candidate, passed the word that it's all over, that the president will capture the nomination on the first ballot.

Gives Answer to Pepper

So it looked as if delegates were coming to town Monday mostly to pick a vice-presidential nominee and approve a party platform.

Eisenhower gave his positive "no" to Sen. Claude A. Pepper of Florida. It was his third attempt to avoid a political draft from either major political party.

"Under no condition," Eisenhower said in a telegram, "will I be in the position of repudiating or even seeming to swerve from the letter or spirit of my prior announcements.

"I will not violate by own conception of my appropriate sphere of duty.

"No matter under what terms, conditions or premises a proposal might be couched, I would refuse to accept the nomination." Sat. 7-10-48

Pepper was one of those who had declined to accept as final Eisenhower's other two pronouncements that the general could not accept a nomination to public office.

To Comply 'With Reluctance'

The senator said yesterday he would place Eisenhower's name in nomination at the Democratic convention next week if someone else didn't do it first.

It was for that reason that the general sent his "final and complete" refusal to the senator. Pepper said he would comply with "the greatest reluctance" with Eisenhower's urging that his name not be offered to the convention. 7-10-48

That, of course, would not keep someone else from nominating the general. And some delegations actually are pledged to vote for Eisenhower.

But the general could scarcely have made it more certain that he would turn the nomination down. He said his position was based on a "sincere conviction as to the best interests of the country."

Switch to Truman

In quick succession after Pepper released his wire:

1. Chicago Democratic Leader Jacob M. Arvey announced that he and Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York were abandoning the boom to draft Eisenhower and "intend to vote in the convention for the nomination of President Truman." Arvey in Chicago and O'Dwyer in New York both predicted Mr. Truman's nomination.

2. James Roosevelt, chairman of the California Democratic organization, had no immediate comment as he rode toward Philadelphia by special train. It was Roosevelt who called a caucus of anti-Truman, pro-Eisenhower forces for tomorrow night.

3. Leslie L. Biffle, convention sergeant-at-arms and adviser to President Truman, told a reporter: "I don't think there is any question now that the president will be nominated on the first ballot."

34 a(1)

'All Over,' Says Mitchell

4. Former Sen. Hugh Mitchell of Washington, who had given a strong hand to the attempts to draft Eisenhower, said "it's all over—President Truman is going to be nominated. Let's forget about our differences and get together to elect him."

5. Southerners weren't giving up quite so easily. But they were scrambling frantically and gloomily for some place to turn. Sat 7-10-48

Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama told a reporter: "Those of us who are against Mr. Truman are going to have to counsel and agree on another candidate."

Hill has been an Eisenhower man. He and many other Southerners were fighting Mr. Truman largely because of the president's stand for anti-lynching, anti-poll tax and anti-"Jim Crow" laws.

Hill made it clear that Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas would be just as unacceptable to the South as President Truman because of the civil rights issue. Next to Eisenhower, Douglas has been mentioned more than anyone else among stop-Truman Democrats.

Asks Unity for Truman

Arvey told a news conference he was not turning to Douglas. Instead, he called for united backing for Mr. Truman.

Democratic National Chairman McGrath says he is confident that Douglas also will decline to let his name go before the convention.

Among the Southerners, the trend seemed to be to try to get together on a "protest candidate" of their own. That might be someone who could offer no real challenge to Mr. Truman's nomination but who might become the pick of a Southern Democratic convention. 7-10-48

Unhappy Southerners already have announced they plan such a meeting in Birmingham July 17 if the Philadelphia convention selects Mr. Truman.

Talk Russell, Barkley

With that in mind, some of them were talking of people like Senator Richard Russell of Georgia, Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, who will deliver the keynote address here next Monday night, and House Democratic Leader Sam Rayburn of Texas.

Two Kentucky delegates already have announced they are coming here to work for Barkley for president.

Hill and Pepper said they plan to talk with Roosevelt when the California special arrives tomorrow morning. It probably will be decided then, Hill said, whether to go through with the caucus Roosevelt originally called for tomorrow night with the intention of getting up steam for Eisenhower.

Johnston Hedging

Also in a fidget was Senator Olin Johnston of South Carolina.

He was hedging a bit on whether he would lay before a Democratic national committee meeting tomorrow a resolution calling on Mr. Truman to get out of the presidential race.

Before coming to Philadelphia, he had announced he intended to do just that. McGrath hinted that any such resolution probably would be bottled up in a resolution committee of the national committee.

And after the latest Eisenhower statement, Johnston hustled off to see some other Southerners like Hill and Pepper. Over a shoulder he tossed word to a reporter he would decide later what he would do about his resolution.

Vice-President Problem

On the two biggest problems still apparently remaining before the convention — vice-presidential nomination and platform — nothing definite had developed.

A dozen-odd men have been mentioned for second spot on the ticket. McGrath said twice today that Mr. Truman had not expressed any preference.

A platform committee was in the process of winding up hearings today. It still has to hew the planks one by one, including the one on civil rights.

Who's Fooling Himself On Eisenhower Policies?

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky. Tues.

SENATOR JOHNSON of South Carolina has declared that he will nominate DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER at the Democratic National Convention. The Senator has given a demonstration of fire-eating in his opposition to President TRUMAN. Now he seems bent on continuing the act with a show of sword-swallowing in honor of EISENHOWER.

Just what do the Southern politicians expect to find in the popular ex-general as their candidate? The measure of their desperation is plainly displayed. Senator JOHNSON cries out that "a choice between TRUMAN and a Republican is a choice between Satan and Beelzebub." But how can he tell that EISENHOWER as a candidate "would prove acceptable to the South?"

TRUMAN only earned a place in Southern demonology when he advocated Federal legislation on lynching, the poll tax, and fair employment practices. His Southern foes must figure, then, that EISENHOWER would stand squarely on the other side of the civil rights issue. For proof they have only a statement the General made last April before a Congressional committee, in a discussion of segregation in the armed services. Here is what he said: 5-18-48

"When you try to pass laws to force someone to like someone else, you're going to get into trouble. In general, the Negro is less well educated than white men. Because of that, if you try to make a complete amalgamation, the Negro will be relegated to the lower jobs and his chances of promotion will be less because the competition (with better educated white men) for promotion will be tougher."

This somewhat dubious argument has apparently given assurance to Senator JOHNSON and the other rebellious Southern Democrats. Yet it does not touch on the fields of lynching and the poll tax, which can hardly be grouped under the heading of "forcing someone to like someone else." Probably without any political intention, the General won some Southern supporters who were already leaning in his direction, while he lost very little of the acclaim coming to him from the liberal side. A regional conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Worcester, Mass., assailed his "virtual endorsement of segregation." Yet he did not lose the support of such Democratic liberals as ELLIOTT and FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Jr., who are convinced that he shares their basic philosophy. Tues.

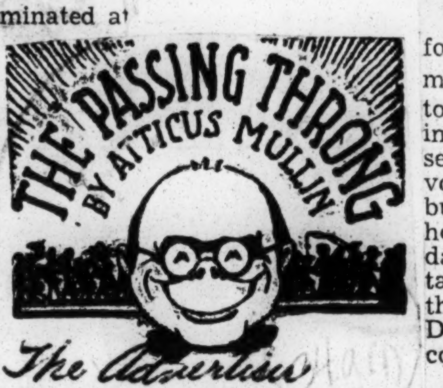
There is something very odd about the collection of personalities who have met in the EISENHOWER camp. They range all the way from the far right and the deep South to the short-of-WALLACE Northern left. These people cannot all be correct about their candidate. They are judging EISENHOWER by what they want him to be, rather than by what he himself might care to be if he yielded to their pressures and accepted the nomination. He is a deft, accomplished and engaging man, but a man with no taste for riding two horses that run as far apart as Senator OLIN JOHNSON of South Carolina and the younger ROOSEVELTS of Hyde Park. The political straddle was not a part of his training. One set of his followers would be in for a rude awakening if he were nominated at Philadelphia. 5-18-48

THE SOUTH

Two Questions

Time Chicago Ill.

South Carolina's coon-shouting Senator Olin Johnston, who stayed away from Washington's Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner because his wife was afraid she might be seated next to a "Nigra" (TIME, March 1), announced this week that he would nominate Dwight Eisenhower for President at the Democratic National Convention. This brought up two questions which probably won't be answered until the week of July 12: 1) Could the convention be stampeded into nominating Eisenhower? 2) Would Ike accept? 5-24-48 Mon.



The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

If there is anybody in South Alabama opposed to the nomination of General Eisenhower as the Democratic Presidential choice, his or her identity has not been made known as yet.

Since The Advertiser declared for Gen. Eisenhower last Sunday morning I have made it a point to inquire wherever I have been in an effort to sound out public sentiment. Out of hundreds of voters I have talked to, every one but one said he thought Eisenhower would make a fine candidate and, in 99 per cent of the talks, the opinion was expressed that he was the only man the Democrats could nominate who could win. Sat. 4-24-48

Fear was expressed in most instances that Gen. Eisenhower would not consent to make the race. But Senator Sparkman, in a story from Washington Thursday, expressed the opinion that he would yield if drafted to run.

Nothing like the wildfire Eisenhower boom has ever occurred in Alabama during my career as a political observer.

The Facts of Life About The Eisenhower Boom

Daily Worker
New York, N.Y.

By Abner W. Berry

THE LIBERALS AND LABOR LEADERS who are hanging onto the coattails of the Democratic Party and yelling "Eisenhower!!" for dear life should be told the nasty facts of political life. I suspect, of course, that many of them know some of the nasty facts but go on playing ostrich because they feel it is safer. But now that the "Southern Revolters" are competing with them in calling for the general, it's time they took stock.

They will find there's a lot of old Confederate lumber in the liberal and labor political yards. Ralph McGill, the astute and South-conscious editor of the Atlanta Constitution, is my authority. McGill has given the whole "Eisenhower boom" away—especially in its later stages.

Writing in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post about the "Dixie Revolt," Editor McGill states: Daily Worker

"Southerners count cynically, but none the less heavily, on help from the big city machines in the North. They know these machines such as Kelly's old organization in Cook County, Hague's in Jersey City, Ed Flynn's in New York, and others of lesser infamy, are up against a dilemma. State machines, especially those in the competitive two-party business, are interested in the Presidency only as it can help hem with their state tickets."

The writer goes on to state that ne machines don't believe they can win with Truman and are therefore willing to ditch Truman for a more likely candidate. New York, N.Y.

NOW IT would be foolish for these Democratic leaders personally to lead the "ditch Truman" brigades. It would affect their patronage. Thurs.

Ah! But there are those nice liberals who can make brave noises and who love the r-r-r-o-ll of the Eisenhower name and the shine of the brass. If only they can make noises loud enough the bosses may be "forced" to change in the convention by vote of the delegates. 5-27-48

Dr. Lerner of PM, Leon Henderson, Philip Murray and FDR, Jr., should listen closely to what the man is saying. Now, of course there is a lot that he didn't say. I'll try to fill it in.

If you are for a Democratic victory you are bound to want those 127 southern Electoral College votes for your candidate. Right? Well, there is one sure way to get them: Make Wallace and the Communists the main enemy and allow the "Revolters" to conduct their revolting campaigns below the Mason-Dixon line with a word of censure.

To be sure! Haven't the Americans for Democratic Action attacked Henry Wallace as a "Communist tool," and for his dereliction in the fight for Negro rights at the same time? Thurs.

But when the "Black Riders" flogged the white men and Negroes of Georgia there was a strange silence from the ADA crowd. Their silence was eloquent when Eugene "Bull" Connor's police attacked free speech in Birmingham. And Philip Murray has yet to defend his own union members against the terror that rages there. 5-27-48

NOW, TO COMPLETE THIS PICTURE, let us listen to John Temple Graves, southern syndicated columnist and an idea man for the "Revolters." Graves dishes up some sage advice to his compatriots in revolt in a recent column:

"One of the southern revolt leaders thinks the South should make sure how Eisenhower stands on the federal force bills (Confederate lingo for civil rights legislation) before rushing to take him as a Presidential candidate. I can't agree. The general's statement for segregation (made before the Senate Armed Services Committee) in the armed services is more than sufficient. It proves he would not be guilty of subordinating common sense to the pressure of the Negro minorities in doubtful states, and that is the best the South can hope for in any President." Daily Worker

That just about wraps it up. It's "common sense" to help keep the white supremacy Democrats in line. Their loyalty to the Democratic Party is not "doubtful." New York, N.Y.

So the southern "Revolters" and the liberals-for-the-Democratic Party are riding full tilt for election with Eisenhower. They are not disturbed one whit at Graves' claim that the general "sounded for all the world as if he were one of the leaders of the 'revolt in the South!'" 5-27-48

A more disgusting kettle of political fish has seldom graced the American scene. Thurs.

Rushton told The Advertiser Saturday that Eisenhower, naturally, was reluctant to seek the nomination but "information which has come to me recently indicates strongly that, if nominated, he would not decline."

The Montgomery attorney suggested that the Alabama delegation have the honor of putting in nomination the name of "the man of the hour," General Eisenhower.

Since the general apparently has "definitely" eliminated himself as a candidate by his previous statements, McCorvey said Sunday night, "I recall that I have previously suggested to The Advertiser that it occurred to me that General (George C.) Marshall (secretary of state) was probably our best bet in order to insure Democratic success this year." Montgomery, Ala.

McCorvey's Statement

McCorvey's complete statement follows: Mon. 4-19-48

"Undoubtedly if General Eisenhower would accept the Democratic nomination for the presidency, he would sweep the country in the November election. His recent statement recognizing that you cannot by legislation force people to select their associates was eminently sound.

"I had considered that Eisenhower had definitely, by his previous statements, eliminated himself as a possible nominee for the presidency by either of the major political parties. However, there is no man in Alabama in whose judgment I have more confidence than I have in Marion Rushton's, and it may be that the information Colonel Rushton intimates he has is such that the general would be available.

"I had previously suggested to The Advertiser that it occurred to me that General Marshall was probably our best bet in order to insure Democratic success this year." 4-19-48

U. S. Senator Lister Hill is gratified that National Committeeman Marion Rushton has joined him in advocating the nomination of Gen. Ike Eisenhower, by the Democrats of the nation, for the presidency. Mon

In a telegram to The Advertiser, Senator Hill commented on an Advertiser Sunday story about Committeeman Rushton's statements on the general.

Hill's wire of appreciation on Rushton's assistance in the Eisenhower move adds interest to the campaign and also to the editorial insistence of The Advertiser that Alabama Democrats, who are opposed to Truman and his civil rights, take a stand for a candidate instead of being mere objectors.

Research on Ike

Dear Sir:

While in the Public Library yesterday I came across an old speech by General Eisenhower. Since 'Ike" is in the public spotlight as a possible candidate, I thought that you might like to know of it. The following was issued in September, 1942:

"The presence of Negro troops in this theater creates a problem of interracial relationships much different from that existing in the United States. There is practically no colored population in the British Isles. Undoubtedly a considerable association of colored troops with British white population, both men and women, will take place on a basis mutually acceptable to the individuals concerned. Any attempt to curtail such association by official orders or restrictions is unjustified and must not be attempted. Furthermore, it must be realized by all ranks that it is absolutely essential that American officers and soldiers carefully avoid making any public or private statements of a derogatory nature concerning racial groups in the U S. Army. The spreading of derogatory statements concerning the character of any group of U. S. troops, either white or colored, must be considered as conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline and offenders must be promptly punished. In the interest of military efficiency, if for no other reason, isolated incidents of friction must be eliminated —General Eisenhower."

It proves he would not be guilty of subordinating common sense to the pressure of Negro minorities in doubtful states, and that is the best the South can hope for in any President.

Columbia, S.C.

The South can never expect a national Presidential candidate to see eye to eye with it on the race question, and will merely shut itself out of part in the proceedings if it insists. All it can expect is that a President will not play politics with Southern misery in this respect. Mon. 4-26-48

General Eisenhower's testimony before the Senate armed services committee should be more than satisfactory to the South. "We must never forget," he told the committee, "that in a very definite way the army is merely one of the mirrors that holds up to our faces the United States of America. It (the race question) has never been easy to solve because you have certain incontrovertible facts that you must walk right up to. One of them is that there is race prejudice in this country, and when you put into the same organization and make live together under the most intimate circumstances men of different races, we sometimes have trouble. Therefore there has been a sort of compromise made with this problem, right down through the years, with the army . . ."

The Record

The general even made the familiar (and true) point that the non-segregated Negro may be actually less favorably situated for advancement than the segregated one, because of the competition as well as the prejudice. "If you make a complete amalgamation," he testified, "what you are going to have is in every company the Negro is going to be relegated to the minor jobs. He is never going to get his promotion to such grades as technical sergeant, master sergeant, and so on, because the competition is too tough. If, on the other hand, he is in smaller units of his own, he can go up to that rate, and I believe he is entitled to the chance to show his wares . . ."

Columbia, S.C.

Then General Eisenhower made a statement which sounded for all the world as if he were one of the leaders of the "revolt in the South." While declaring that he did not "hold out for this extreme segregation," he said (and this deserves pasting in many hats): "If we attempt merely by passing a lot of laws to force someone to like someone else, we are just going to get into trouble." Mon. 4-26-48

No wonder Walter White has denounced General Eisenhower for this testimony. Read it backwards or forwards, between the lines or on them, analyze it and pschoanalyze it, and you can only conclude that Eisenhower is no man ever to be tearing a party, a region or a nation to pieces on the peculiar problem of the South.

Election Is Predicted If Southern Electoral Bloc Pledged To Him

Six Electors In

Four Delegates-At-Large Also Attain Majorities; Runoff Slated June 1

By The Associated Press

Alabama's decision to free her presidential electors from supporting the Democratic nominee opens wide the doors for a "draft Eisenhower" move in the South.

That is the view of some of the party's top leaders in Alabama are taking.

One of them, Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey of the state Democratic Executive committee, goes even further. He says he is convinced a Southern electorial bloc pledged to Gen. Dwight Eisenhower would see him elected president. 5-12-48

This, McCorvey said, could happen even if neither the Democrats nor Republicans nominate him. He explained it this way:

Without the South's electorial college support, there is a good possibility neither of the two major parties can muster a clear majority for their nominee.

This would throw the election into the House of Representatives where the former chief of staff would have a very good chance of emerging as the compromise choice.

Democratic National Committeeman Marion Rushton who launched the Eisenhower draft campaign was admittedly jubilant over the outcome of last Tuesday's primary.

Real Goal Now

"Now we've got something to work for in earnest," he said. "By the election of electors pledged against Truman, Alabama voters have shown their independence.

"Now we can go ahead and line up electorial college support for him." The Advertiser

Rushton said he still hopes the Democratic national party can get together on Eisenhower as a nominee. Montgomery, Ala.

"The state's rights convention in Jackson should convince McGrath and other party leaders," he said, "that the Democrats can not win with Truman even though they can get the nomination for him." Wed

(He referred to National Democratic Chairman J. Howard McGrath.) 5-12-48

As to whether Eisenhower would accept a draft, with Truman out of the way, Rushton observed:

. . . . . Nothing to Lose . . . . . .

"I don't see how any man could possibly turn down the nomination. We certainly have nothing to lose by offering it to him."

Rushton said he plans to have an interview with Eisenhower at an early date to dbiscuss the matter with him personally.

The national committeeman said most of Alabama's delegates to the convention have fold him, either verbally or in letters, they will go along with Eisenhower if there is a chance he will accept the nomination.

"Not one of those already elected or still in the running has indicated unwillingness to support Eisenhower," he said. "Some have said they don't want to look foolish by offering the nomination and having to take it back."

Is Said to Represent Militaristic Emphasis, Not to Be Real Liberal

New York, N.Y.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In their desperation liberal groups like the CIO and the Americans for Democratic Action are reported to be turning to Eisenhower as a Presidential candidate. There should be no excuse for this in view of Eisenhower's failure to make his position clear on important issues. Sat.

The few occasions when Eisenhower has spoken on issues reveal that he is not a real liberal. For example, in the Senate Armed Services Committee hearings on April 2 he endorsed Baruch's program of industrial mobilization, with all that means in the way of regimentation of labor. He also endorsed the principle of racial segregation in the armed forces. 5-1-48

In order to justify this he said: "In general the Negro is less well educated than his brother citizen that is white. And if you make a complete amalgamation what you are going to have is in every company the Negro is going to be relegated to the minor jobs and is never going to get his promotion to technical sergeant and master sergeant and so on because the competition is too tough."

The general indicated that he felt a Negro "can improve his standing and his social standing and his respect for certain of the standards that we observe," but at no point in his testimony did he reveal that Negroes who enlist in the Army must pass the same tests as do whites. For example, the average grades in the Army General Classification Test made by whites and Negroes are listed as follows:

	White.	Negro.
November, 1946	99	95
December, 1946	99	98
January, 1947 ...	Reports not available
February, 1947	100	96
March, 1947	102	98

General Eisenhower might also have stated that better educated Negroes might enlist in the Army if they did not have to submit to segregation and discrimination. The Times

Furthermore, General Eisenhower represents a militaristic and a nationalistic emphasis which liberals ought not to support. On April 2 he said: "I believe in one thing only, this United States is the greatest force and the greatest power for good in the world, and we have to be strong enough to extend its influence where it needs to go to protect ourselves."

If the CIO and ADA persist in supporting Eisenhower they may well find themselves responsible for encouraging forces of reaction over which they would have no control if a man like Eisenhower really became President. There is no excuse for promoting a candidate simply because he could win. Sat

Constitution 34a(1) Atlanta, Ga.

Sun. 7-4-48

By M. L. ST. JOHN

A nationwide stampede to draft Gen. Dwight Eisenhower for the Democratic presidential nomination was underway last night, with Georgia joining the son of the late President Roosevelt in sponsoring a pre-convention caucus at Philadelphia for next Saturday night.

State Democratic Chairman James Peters, of Manchester, announced yesterday he had accepted an invitation from James Roosevelt, Chairman of California's Democratic Committee, to join 18 States in sponsoring the caucus. The group is wiring key delegates throughout the nation.

Purpose of the caucus, the late President Roosevelt's son said, is to "achieve a free convention" and to draft a platform which would enable the Party to obtain an outstanding candidate for the Presidency. 7-4-48

Peters declared "it looks like Eisenhower." Georgia's State Democratic Convention Friday urged Truman to withdraw, asked Eisenhower to accept the nomination for President, and urged Sen. Russell for the Vice Presidency. Russell, at his Winder home, indicated he would be reluctant to accept the spot.

The Eisenhower boom was intensified with careful strategy yesterday, as the Roosevelt telegram was released simultaneously throughout the nation through local party leaders.

Southern States which had threatened to walk out of the Philadelphia Convention joined States in the East and Far West in indorsing Eisenhower. Gov. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, released to Eisenhower delegates pledged to his own candidacy, and Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, jumped into the Eisenhower move.

In a round-up of Southern opinion, the INS said Eisenhower's nomination would kill the proposed "revolt" against the Democratic Party, although Eisenhower's views on controversial civil rights remain a mystery. Leaders from Florida and Tennessee predicted their delegations would back "Ike."

Mississippi was the only state skeptical of the General. Gov. Fielding Wright declined comment. Oliver Emmerich, McComb publisher, feared that Eisenhower's name was being used without permission to perpetuate Mr Truman in office. He thought Eisenhower might "swing over" to Truman at the psychological moment. 7-4-48

The Associated Press reported that the "We-want-Ike" sentiment, already feverish among Southern political leaders, appeared to be spreading—to Illinois, California, New York, New England and other areas with important chunks of delegates.

At Columbia University, Eisenhower wasn't saying anything. There were unconfirmed reports he might clarify his position again over the weekend. Some said only a flat "no" could end the draft movement.

President Truman, who predicts his own nomination on the first ballot, took no direct steps to head off the Eisenhower boom, the White House said. But George Allen, former White House aide and personal friend of Mr. Truman, spent two hours with Gen. Eisenhower yesterday. Reports said he was a White House emissary to obtain the General's withdrawal. Presidential Secretary Charles Ross commented, however, that Allen went to see Eisenhower "on his own—I don't know for what purpose." 7-4-48

The move to nominate "Ike" was given on impetus when the top of the Convention ballot began to fill up with delegates wanting Eisenhower. Alabama is for him, and now Arkansas, and not too far down the roll call is Georgia.

As the Eisenhower bandwagon gathered strength, however, the Philadelphia Bulletin yesterday totaled the score of pledged delegates of the General and of Truman, and predicted Truman's nomination on the first ballot. Eisenhower has a total of 61½ pledged delegates and 91 others reported, for a grand total of 152½. Truman has 350 definitely pledged, with 647 others reported for a total of 997 — far above the number required to nominate.

Besides Roosevelt and Peters, the following State leaders signed the telegram calling the preconvention caucus to be held with the Illinois delegation at the John Bartram Hotel at 8 p. m. Saturday: 7-4-48

Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama; R. G. Beall of Arizona; R. B. Robbins, Mrs. Jack Carnes and Gov. Laney, all of Arkansas; James Roan of California; Chester Bowles of Connecticut; Jack Arvey of Illinois; Joseph Casey of Massachusetts; Cy Bevin of Michigan; Mayor Hubert Humphries of Minneapolis; William Ritchie of Nebraska; Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York; Gov. Thurmond of South Carolina; Gov. Beauford Jester of Texas; Clinton Vernon of Utah; Gov. William Tuck of Virginia; and Robert Tehan of Wisconsin.

The wire said:

"We join together in our desire to hold a caucus to achieve an open and free Democratic convention at Philadelphia. We do this from the realization that the crises in the world today make it obligatory that we seek for the leader of our party the ablest and strongest man available. We know we fulfill the wishes of the huge majority of Americans who want the Democratic Party to select a candidate of such stature that the prosperity of the nation and a lasting peace for the world will become secure. It is our belief that no man in these critical days can refuse the call to duty and leadership implicit in the nomination and virtual election to the Presidency of the United States. It is our duty to build a platform and conduct a convention which will justify our draft of such a candidate. Until this is accomplished we have no right to ask any prior pledge from any American. We invite and urge you and all others of like mind to meet us in Philadelphia."

But Rift Appears in Demand for Civil Rights in Platform—No New Word From General

By JAMES A. HAGERTY

Support of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower for the Democratic nomination for President is increasing among delegates to the Democratic National Convention, it was disclosed yesterday by a survey of the situation in each of the forty-eight states by correspondents of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Their dispatches indicated that President Truman is facing a hard and possibly losing fight for the nomination and may suffer further losses if the delegates can be assured that General Eisenhower will consent to be drafted. 7-5-48

One of the most important developments was the decision of the New Jersey delegation with thirty-six votes in the convention to support General Eisenhower. This action was taken at a hurriedly called caucus in Asbury Park, at which the delegates unanimously and with enthusiasm adopted a resolution endorsing the General after Frank Hague, national committeeman, had declared that the American people were "clamoring for leadership" and that "we feel we have world leadership in General Eisenhower." New York

Work of Anti-Truman Group

Sentiment for the nomination of General Eisenhower has spread like wildfire since organization of the anti-Truman movement led by James Roosevelt, state chairman and national committeeman from California, Jacob M. Arvey, Chicago leader, and Mayor William O'Dwyer of this city. Times

The anti-Truman leaders, who have sent out a call for a caucus at Philadelphia next Saturday to try to pick the strongest possible candidate for President, have been successful already in splitting the delegations from the states with the largest number of delegates, including New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and California.

The anti-Truman alliance, based partly upon belief that nomination of President Truman would result in defeat of many local Democratic candidates who otherwise would be elected, is composed of Southern Democrats, Northern city machines and remnants of liberal and independent groups represented in New York State by the Liberal party and throughout the country by the American for Democratic Action. 7-5-48

This is the alliance that supported the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt in three successful campaigns for re-election, minus the Communists, fellow travelers and "leftist" liberals now represented by the Progressive Citizens of America, who support Henry A. Wallace, third party candidate for President.

Cleavage Over Rights Plank

A rift in the anti-Truman combination over the platform, adoption of which presumably will precede the nomination of a candidate for President, seem possible when fifty Democratic leaders, including many active in the "draft-Eisenhower" movement, announced through Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey of Minneapolis that they would demand inclusion of the Truman civil rights program.

Opposition to this program is the basis of most of the anti-Truman sentiment in the South.

It is the plan of leaders of the anti-Truman combination to try to get delegates previously committed to President Truman by pledges, instructions or preference primaries to shift to General Eisenhower. This effort already has been successful in several states.

In California, for example, a majority of the delegates are reported to be ready to support General Eisenhower, even though all the California delegates signed a statement expressing preference for President Truman before their election at a statewide primary. In other states, delegations will be asked to reverse at caucuses action previously taken in support of the President. 7-5-48

There was still no word from General Eisenhower and a spokesman for Columbia University, of which he is president, said the general would have nothing to say before Tuesday, if he says anything at all.

The spokesman said he knew nothing of General Eisenhower's activities except that he played golf on Saturday. The general will return to his office today and will address Columbia summer students on the campus. There was no advance information on what he will say.

34a(1) Pres.

Harry Carlson, New Hampshire National Committeeman, who talked with General Eisenhower recently, said he was "satisfied" that the General would accept an "honest draft" to serve as President of the United States.

But he denied a published story that he had said that General Eisenhower had told him he would run and declared that he had "never quoted General Eisenhower as saying that he would accept a draft." Mon. 7-5-48

Farley Stands by Truman

James A. Farley, former National Chairman and Postmaster General, predicted the nomination of President Truman and said he was going to vote for him.

"I am astounded that there are people who would question the integrity of General Eisenhower's written word by advancing the idea that he would accept a draft," Mr. Farley said. "In my judgment, President Truman will be nominated at Philadelphia."

In Los Angeles, James Roosevelt said that many delegates, including some from two states which have pledged first-ballot votes for President Truman, had accepted invitations to attend the anti-Truman caucus. 7-5-48

Among those accepting the call for the caucus are National Committeemen James S. Peters of Georgia and onrose Sweetland of Oregon, Senator Claude Pepper of Florida, Lester H. Loble, Montana State Chairman, Clarence D. Martin of Seattle and Judge L. Perez of New Orleans, Thomas R. Mahoney, chairman of the Oregon delegation, also accepted, although his delegation is pledged to President Truman on the first ballot.

Senator John J. Sparkman of Alabama appealed to General Eisenhower in a radio broadcast to respond to "the call of duty" and consent to run.

'No' Meant 'No,' Says Ike Of Presidential Contest

Asked fo ra direct statement on the presidency, Ike said he did not talk politics with Mr. Truman. He added:

"I made up my mind to say nothing more. I wrote a letter and meant every word of it.

"I told my aides they could do the talking from now on. I'm not talking any more. I find it doesn't do any good."

Eisenhower in a letter to a New Hampshire publisher last Jan. 23 said he could not accept a presidential nomination. He said his decision to "completely" remove himself from the political scene was "definite and positive."

That letter was written at a time Ike was being mentioned prominently for the Republican presidential candidate. 4-11-48

Shift to Ike Blow To Negro

The Courier

Pittsburgh, Pa

By JOHN L. CLARK (Courier Political Analyst)

Sat. 7-10-48

The "Draft Eisenhower" movement, which roared through the political world this week, is an insult to Negroes . . . a repudiation of the progressive principles of the Democratic party — and Negroes cannot be expected to be a part of it.

Early in April of 1948, General Dwight D. Eisenhower told the Armed Services Committee of the United States that he favored "segregation of Negro soldiers in the United States Army . . . and that it (segregation) works to the advantage of the colored troops."

This statement aroused Negro leaders in every field of action, caused the Negro press to condemn the famous General of World War II, and became the starting point of a civil disobedience movement as a protest against segregation in the armed forces. 7-10-48

All of this happened a little over three months ago. But twenty or more leaders in the Democratic party, mostly of the Southern white supremacy clan, forgot about it or ignored it. They started a plot to draft General Eisenhower as the Presidential standard-bearer of the Democratic party.

NEW YORK—NAACP executive secretary, Walter White, has been invited to appear before the resolutions committee of the Democratic National Convention July 8 in Philadelphia to voice the demand of Negro voters that civil rights and other social welfare legislation be included in the Democratic platform of 1948.

These leaders come from California, New York, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Arizona, South Carolina, Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Utah, Kansas and New Jersey.

They are up in arms over the Civil Rights program which President Harry S. Truman recommended to Congress early this year, and decided on this method of pressure, through elected delegates, to block his nomination at the Philadelphia convention which opens July 12.

They want General Eisenhower, because he sincerely believes in segregation. Starting from the statement of record made before the Senate Committee, it seems to follow that he believes in everything that the champions of hate in the South hold dear—such as denying Negroes the right to vote, the right to work in all fields for which their talents are best fitted, and equal privileges in travel and hotel services. These rights, all of them, are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, but Southern States refuse to be governed by this sacred document.

These conclusions are based on the determined attitude of the twenty or more Democratic leaders to discard Truman because of his stand on rights of Negroes and adopt General Eisenhower because of his statement before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Th men who are making the Eisenhower drive, excepting those from the South, have said nothing about the Civil Rights issue. Their reasons for dumping Truman is that they must nominate the "strongest and ablest man available." But, nothing has appeared in public print, except the General's views on segregation in the Army, to indicate that he would be a strong vote-getter or an able President, if elected.

It is presumed that he is familiar with the foreign situation. And because of his extended military experiences he can deal with all foreign powers—friendly or unfriendly.

But the things which will determine the November elections are right here in the United States. Nobody knows how he feels about organized labor, the Taft-Hartley Law, the high cost of living, business monopolies, civil liberties, farmers' subsidies, Federal housing, aid to education, health insurance and broader old-age insurance, and so many other issues on which President Truman and a Republican Congress have differed.

DEALS WITH RIGHTS

The only direct statement from the General has been on segregation in the armed forces. This being true, the working citizen is justified in concluding that the real difference between Truman and Eisenhower deals with rights of the Negro.

Above the Mason and Dixon line, all voters are puzzled about the sudden shift to Eisenhower as Presidential timber, even if Truman was not in the race. The boom actually started in 1943 when Tank Corps 716 (Kansas) adopted a resolution to support the famous General for President.

This outfit and its suggestion was laughed down. In 1947, former Governor Alf Landon (Kansas) and Republican nominee in 1936, along with Roy Roberts, editor of the Kansas City Star, stated that Kansas Republicans would back Eisenhower for President. E. J. Pucalina, a Ponca City druggist, plugged Eisenhower in paid advertisements for his store.

QUOTES SHERMAN

This went on in spite of the General's statement to reporters in June, 1945, at Abilene, Kan.: "In the strongest language you can command you may state that I have no political ambitions at all. Make it even stronger than that if you can. I'd like to go further than Sherman in expressing myself on this subject."

(Sherman said: "I will not accept if nominated, and will not serve if elected.")

When Republicans closed in on the General in 1947, he made it clear that he was not interested in the office of President of the United States.

WHAT IS HE?

If Democrats have discovered new reasons for the General's availability, they have not passed them on to the voting public. It is not known whether General Eisenhower is Republican or Democrat. Some of his close friends say he is progressive, others say he is a "middle of the roader." Definitely, he is not a New Dealer. He thought that the New Deal policies impugned on private enterprise at some points. He admired President Roosevelt, but not his methods.

If the "Draft Eisenhower" boom continues to advance as it has in the past week the illustrious General of the Army will be nominated by Democrats in the Philadelphia Convention, starting July 12.

If the movement develops that way, and General Eisenhower accepts, President Truman's Civil Rights program will be tossed to the winds, and Negroes will be forced to look to Republicans for the basic rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States.

If the "Draft Eisenhower" movement succeeds in rounding up sufficient delegates for nomination, and the General declines this honor, the negative attitude of twenty or more Democratic leaders who took part in the movement will be known to Negroes, and these leaders should not expect support from this section of the American population.

If the "Draft Eisenhower" movement fizzles, and President Truman is nominated at the Philadelphia Convention, these Southern Democrats and those from other parts of the country will have lost the confidence of Negroes, who will support Truman regardless of how the "Draft Eisenhower" crowd shifts.

Regardless of what happens, Negroes will play an important part. They cannot, however, be expected to vote for a man who has publicly declared that they should not be treated as first-class citizens even when risking their lives for their country.

What Eisenh

Many Southern Democrats to whom President Truman is persona non grata are clinging to the hope that Gen. Eisenhower can be drafted. That hope is a compound of their distaste for Truman and their desire for a Democratic candidate who can win the election. They appear to think that Eisenhower is the only man with enough national appeal to carry the Democratic ticket to victory.

Birmingham, Ala.

Most of these anti-Truman, pro-Eisenhower Southern Democrats seem to shut their eyes to the possibility that Eisenhower has views which also would be objectionable to them. They don't know what he thinks on the civil rights issues about which they are disturbed. They appear to be going chiefly on the assumption that since "Ike" was born in Texas he is bound to have views like theirs.

Wed. 5-19-48

What does Eisenhower believe? What are his ideas on domestic issues? The general has never directly expressed himself on many matters which he would face if he were president. His thoughts on war and his deep feelings about peace are quite well known, but not his convictions on internal affairs. Wed. 5-19-48

Persons interested in getting some light on the general's thoughts should find valuable a newly published book, Eisenhower Speaks, by Rudolph Truenfels. This is a fairly complete collection of all Eisenhower has said in his public speeches. Here one gets an insight into the man, his thoughts, his approaches to national problems.

The News

Several things stand out. One is Eisenhower's great admiration for Franklin Roosevelt. That admiration extends beyond the limit of a man's loyalty to his chief. He praises F. D. R.'s idealism and courage. He emerges from his speeches as a liberal in the manner of the Hyde Park squire.

Birmingham, Ala.

He does not touch upon such matters as states' rights and the race question, except in regard to the latter, to make this perhaps significant declaration: "I do not differentiate among soldiers. I do not say white soldiers or Negro soldiers. I . . . look upon soldiers as soldiers." That statement may occasion speculation on the part of those Southern congressmen who have been endeavoring to introduce into the proposed draft law a provision establishing the principle of segregation in the armed services.

Birmingham, Ala.

Conspicuous in the collection of speeches is the absence of comment on domestic affairs. Of course Eisenhower in all the reported speeches was speaking as the commander in chief of the Allied forces in Western Europe and as Army chief of staff. But even in such speeches a man with even half an eye on the presidency, or a deep concern about internal matters, would have let slip a few revealing comments. There is none in Eisenhower Speaks except those that tend to label him as a liberal. The News

General's Notice Comes Amidst Big Boom

NEW YORK — (AP) —Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower said Monday night he "could not accept nomination for any public office."

He said in a statement that he "will not, at this time, identify myself with any political party and could not accept nomination for any public office or participate in partisan political contests."

Eisenhower, president of Columbia University, set forth his views in a memorandum to Robert Harron, director of the university's division of public relations. Tues.

He said that his views "with respect to my proper course of duty are still identical with those presented in the letter I wrote on Jan. 23, 1948." 7-6-48

At that time he said in a letter to a New Hampshire Republican backing him for the party's 1948 presidential nomination that "I am not available for and could not accept nomination to high political office."

Eisenhower, himself, was not present when Monday night's statement was handed out.

In his statement Eisenhower said that he would continue "subject to the pleasure of the university trustees" to perform his duties as president of the university.

The memorandum was distributed by Harron to dozens of reporters and photographers who crowded his fourth flood office in the University's journalism building.

Here's Memorandum

Eisenhower's memorandum to Harron said:

"I know that your office has for some days been overburdened with innumerable queries concerning my intentions in regard to the current political situation. My decisions and earnest convictions concerning possible personal connection with this year's political contests were given to the public several months ago, but it now appears that there has arisen a question as to whether or not I have changed my position.

"Profoundly touched by the renewed suggestion that I could satisfactorily fill high public office, my views with respect to my proper course of duty are still identical with those presented in the letter I wrote on Jan. 23, 1948." The Advertiser

"In response to any further queries as to my course of action during the foreseeable future, and in order that there may be no possible room for doubt in the mind of any interested American, will you please invite attention to the firm purposes expressed in my January letter and quote the following as coming personally from me. Eisenhower's statement came amidst a growing boom to draft him as the Democratic presidential nominee. The Advertiser

The former Army chief of staff and supreme commander of allied forces in Europe had been regarded by many Democratic Party leaders as the only man who could achieve victory in the Fall election over the Republicans.

Earlier in the day suggestions were heard in the capital that President Truman not only would step aside but might assume a leading role in the drive by the "we want Ike forces to nominate Eisenhower. 7-6-48 Montgomery, Ala.

Roosevelt Believed So

James Roosevelt, eldest son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt and one of the chief draft-Eisenhower sponsors, had gone on the radio only a few hours before the general's statement to say that he believed Eisenhower would respond to "a really sincere draft."

Truman, himself, had steered clear of peaking publicity of politics. His aides, however, said the chief executive remained confident of a first ballot nomination. Tues. 7-6-48

The general's statement came after a day of nation-wide developments bearing on the draft-Eisenhower movement.

One of the most important of these was action by former Sen. Hugh B. Mitchell, (D), Washington, a member of the platform committee for the Democratic National Convention, who telegraphed Truman asking the President to take the leadership of the Eisenhower movement.

MOBILE, ALA. — (AP) — The majority faction of Alabama's Democratic delegation organized and started a "Draft Eisenhower" push Wednesday.

Former Lt. Gov. Handy Ellis, chairman designate of the delegation, said Eisenhower's name would be the first placed in nomination at the Philadelphia convention "unless he absolutely refuses to permit it."

Alabama, first up on the roll call, will yield to Eisenhower's home state of Texas or his resident state Kansas for the nomination, he said. Thur. 7-1-48

"If Alabama does the nominating, I'll be tickled to death to make the nominating speech myself," he added.

Ellis said he understood an effort was being made to sound out Eisenhower on prospects of his accepting the nomination.

Alabama's 26-member delegation will meet in Philadelphia July 11, the day before the convention opens, for formal organization and for mapping strategy for the Eisenhower draft, Ellis said.

Caucused Tuesday Night

Ellis is one of the leaders of a group of 14 delegates pledged to walk out of the convention if Truman's civil rights program is put in the party platform.

A spokesman for the "walk-out" faction, John Mandeville, of Mobile, said 11 of the delegates caucused here Tuesday night after a testimonial dinner for Party Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, and agreed on Ellis.

Mandeville said the group had commitments from the three absent members approving Ellis. The three are E. C. Boswell of Geneva; L. A. Farmer of Dothan; and H. M. Abercrombie of Birmingham. Montgomery, Ala

D. Hardy Riddle, Talladega, was agreed upon for vice-chairman, and Mandeville for permanent secretary. Advertiser

"This assures Ellis' selection as permanent chairman at a pre-convention caucus to be held in Philadelphia," Mandeville said.

"So far as we are concerned, we are a majority." Thur. 7-1-48

U. S. Senator Lister Hill has been proposed previously for the chairmanship. Hill has refused to sign a walkout pledge.

White Supremacists Join Eisenhower 'Liberals'

By Abner W. Berry

"COLONEL" OLIN D. JOHNSTON, of the South Carolina Johnstons, has ripped the liberal canopy right off the Eisenhower candidacy with his anti-civil rights sword. Johnston, former governor of the Palmetto State and now one of its senators is a leader of the "Dixie Revolt." But that didn't prevent him from riding full tilt into the northern liberal gale, blown up by Americans for Democratic Action, sundry labor leaders and mugwump editors, hooping it up for the five star general. He wasn't frightened at all by the fact that Phil Murray, CIO president, and Franklin D. Soosevelt, Jr., were hot after Eisenhower. "Colonel" Johnston, a good Legionnaire, Elk, Mason, Woodman, Shriner, Optimist and white-supremacist, announced last Sunday he would nominate Eisenhower at the Democratic National Convention.

Johnston is a member of the Democratic National Committee. He is in on the political "know." He has been in politics since the close of the first world war, serving as alderman, member of the state legislature, mayor of Charleston, governor and other offices in the State of South Carolina since that time. He is also a member of the Democratic National Committee.

Being closer to the Democratic machine than either Max Lerner or Phil Murray, he is sure that the glamorous personality of Eisenhower wouldn't make one whit of difference in basic policy.

Daily Worker

WHAT NOW, "anti-Communist-liberals - for - Eisenhower?" This new ally may be embarrassing, but only because his indorsement of Eisenhower exposes the reactionary program of the party itself. Sen. Johnston's worry—and that of the "Dixie Revolters"—is not the Democratic Party and Truman. Of course, this is not to say that "Solid South Colonels" wouldn't like to nudge the Missouri gang away from the patronage swill trough. But their fears run to the same places as do those of the so-called "anti-Communist liberals."

New York, N. Y.

It ought to be clearer by now that the Dixie demagogues fairly gag on the name "Wallace"; and the mere mention of the third party and non-segregation causes them to reach for their bedsheets, torches and fat pine crosses. The South Carolina Senator, reading PM editorials and the reported speeches of Phil Murray, recognized a good thing and took it.

Thurs. 5-20-48

Up until he announced for Eisenhower there had been a confusing division of labor. The "ditch Truman" southerners had concentrated on the negative slogans without any indorsements. The northern "liberals" had concentrated on the positive slogan for Eisenhower.

Daily Worker

We ought to thank "Colonel" Johnston for having so brashly revealed the fraud behind the northern and southern anti-Truman candidate-hunters. The PM liberals can now have Eisenhower and save the precious two-party system of Sen. Johnston. They can calm their fears of a Republican victory by joining hands with the bedsheet boys and looking the other way when the crosses burn and a belief in white supremacy is made the basis for citizenship qualifications.

WHILE THE "anti-Communist liberals" in the North preach hell and damnation upon Henry A. Wallace in meeting after wishful meeting, the equally anti-Communist "Dixie Revolters" are engaging in more violent activities. They are purging Negroes from the voters' lists in Georgia, invoking the segregation laws to prevent freedom of speech and assembly, and backing up the whole thing with lawless courts, cops and the Klan. It is an ugly business that is uncovered in this announcement of Sen. Johnston.

Thurs. 5-20-48

Daily Worker

Anti-communism in America, as in Europe, is loosely tying together the frightened liberals and the politicians most interested in the development of fascism. It all goes to prove another Senator—Glen H. Taylor—right when he tells his audiences, "You can't be a real liberal any more if you are scared of being called a Communist."

New York, N. Y.

In the meantime, it's not too late for the Eisenhower liberal—and the general, himself—to give an answer to the Klan call of the good Senator, "Colonel" Olin D. Johnston. They can always put themselves out of his reach by giving the nod to Wallace. Or do they want to play along with the "Dixie Revolt"?

New Hampshire Leader Calls On Democrats To Urge Truman Out

Alabama Is Ready

But If Present President 'Is Put In Nomination' Indiana's Backing Him

By The Associated Press

Indiana swung some support to President Truman for the Democratic nomination yesterday while Southerners kept fanning the draft for Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The man who is going to head the Alabama delegation at the Democratic national convention said only an absolute refusal by Eisenhower to permit it can keep the general's name from being placed in nomination ahead of anyone else.

Thur. 7-1-48

That was former Lt. Gov. Handy Ellis, speaking up at Mobile, Ala. Ellis said he would be "tickled to death" to nominate Eisenhower himself. But he said Alabama will yield its first place on the convention roll call to let Texas or Kansas do it. The general is a native Texan but an official resident of Kansas.

In Washington, Senator Olin D. Johnston (D), South Carolina, said he talked with Eisenhower for 45 minutes in New York Tuesday and is "more convinced than ever" he is "the man of the hour" for the Democratic nomination.

Meantime President Truman conferred at the White House with Senator McGrath, Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic national committee, and other party leaders.

Talked Of Everything

McGrath told a reporter that "we talked about every phase of the Democratic situation currently being talked about in the newspapers. "This presumably would include the movement for Eisenhower.

Thur. 7-1-48

Asked about possible choices for the vice-presidential nomination, McGrath said this question is still "wide open." He expressed the opinion that the president "will leave the decision on the vice-president to the convention."

Former Gov. J. Melville Broughton of North Carolina, in Washington on business, told a reporter the "Eisenhower for President movement is the talk of Washington today." But he quickly added:

"The talk seems to be more of a hope than anything else at present. There seems to be no plan, no organization yet."

Broughton, Democratic nominee for the U. S. Senate this year, wouldn't state his preference. "I am a delegate-at-large; in fact you might say I am almost a delegate at sea," was the way he put it.

'Hope Of The World'

Senator McClellan (D), Arkansas, got out a brief statement saying Eisenhower as the next president "is the hope of the world in this present crisis."

Harry Carlson, Democratic national committeeman from New Hampshire, wrote to other members of the committee urging them to help persuade President Truman to withdraw in favor of Eisenhower.

But Ira Haymaker, Indiana Democratic chairman, said after a White House call that Indiana delegates will back Mr. Truman at the Democratic convention starting in Philadelphia July 12, "if his name is placed in nomination."

In the Republican political camp:

Presidential Candidate Thomas E. Dewey consulted his foreign affairs adviser, John Foster Dulles, at Dewey's Pawling, N. Y., Farm. The GOP is expected to hammer hard at the way the administration has run foreign affairs.

The new chairman of the Republican national committee, Rep. Hugh D. Scott, Jr., came to Washington to meet his staff.

Host Pledges Support

Earlier, Scott said in a speech to the Philadelphia Republican committee he is getting daily "thousands of letters from Democrats pledging support to the Republican party candidates."

The former GOP chairman, Carroll Reece of Tennessee, said Dewey had asked him to help in the campaign. Reece told a reporter he's willing.

Democrats expect to make high prices a big issue. President Truman called the signals for that on his western trip last month.

Senator O'Mahoney (D), Wyoming, who will help build the party platforms at Philadelphia, told a reporter:

"High prices and the failure of the Republican Congress to adopt President Truman's program to combat them will be a paramount issue. And the Democrats are going to see that it is joined."

LOS ANGELES — (AP) — A Democratic anti-Truman bandwagon rolled Wednesday in California.

Although the state's 54 votes in the Democratic National Convention are pledged to the President, State Chairman James Roosevelt indicated a swing to another candidate was brewing—and stirring up plenty of interest elsewhere.

"The majority of our delegates, I believe, do not consider themselves bound by the pledge," said Roosevelt. "We agreed at our state meeting in San Luis Obispo last weekend to wait and see what the situation is in Philadelphia before acting."

Thur. 7-1-48

Party insiders said Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and Justice William O. Douglas were most frequently mentioned at the state parley.

"My phone has been ringing all day with calls from all over the country—Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and several Southern states," Roosevelt added. "Indications are that they're not unfavorable to California's viewpoint."

Backing from the possible switch came from Allan Carter, Pomona delegate and counsel for the state committee.

"There is nothing binding about the pledge except the individual conscience of each delegate," said Carter. "There are many of us who find certain handicaps in Mr. Truman's candidacy and frankly feel he is not electable."

Out in North Dakota, slow returns from Tuesday's primary gave Gov. Fred G. Aandahl a lead over Ervin Schumacher for the GOP gubernatorial nomination. Also leading were the state's two Republican congressmen.

And a proposal to forbid public school teachers to wear religious garb was out in front. The proposal stems from a controversy over the employment of nuns as public school teachers in some North Dakota communities that are heavily Catholic.

Friends Of 'Ike' Reiterate That He Is Not Available

By D. HAROLD OLIVER

WASHINGTON. — (AP) — Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, retired Army chief of staff, will not be available for a presidential nomination on any ticket, his friends said Wednesday.

This was in reply to demands from a number of Democrats that the five-star general be given the Democratic presidentia nomination instead of President Truman.

The general is now writing his memoirs before taking up the presidency of Columbia Universi-y in June.

Friends said the general is aware of recent moves to revive his name for the presidency in both Democratic and Republican quarters.

But they said his position was made known irrevocably last Jan. 23 when he wrote a New Hampshire Republican supporter that he "could not accept" a nomination and "my decision to remove myself completely from the political scene is definite and positive."

They said he may be forced to reaffirm that stand if reports continue that he has not "closed the door" entirely to a nomination.

Meanwhile, a Democratic Party stalwart, Senator Murray, of Montana, called on the pro and anti-Truman elements in his party to discard politics now and concentrate on national security and the public welfare.

Wrong Time, He Says

Murray said in a statement he had been asked whether any Westerners may line up with Southern senators in opposing Mr. Truman's nomination.

"I think the time to discuss any such matter," he said, "is at the national convention. I am confident that the American people today are worrying more about preventing another world war and stopping the spread of Communism and aggression throughout the world than they are in what man will head the ticket of either major political party in November." THE EISENHOWER FANTASY PERSISTS

Montgomery Advertiser

The Eisenhower fantasy is as durable as a gourd vine. Eisenhower makes a Shermanesque rejection of the Republican nomination. Then the Democratic Party in its extremity sells itself the notion that it was only the G. O. P. laurel that Ike declined to wear, that he is a natural born Democrat ready for the wars in its behalf.

340(1)

From the depths of their frustration, such Democratic agents as Senators Sparkman and Hill—and The Advertiser—have talked with longing of Eisenhower's nomination. After all, it is not more fanciful than Gessner McCorvey's talk of nominating Senator Byrd. Wed. 3-31-48

And now Eisenhower has responded by authorizing a spokesman to say:

"What Eisenhower said about wanting to have nothing to do with politics applies to the Democrats as well as the Republicans."

The Advertiser doubts that this statement will get any Democrat's mind off Eisenhowevr. It's easier with the Republicans, for they have numerous candidates to pick from. But with us semi-Democrats, it is Eisenhower or Truman and defeat.

Whipped by its sense of frustration and despair, the South could easily sell itself on Eisenhower. That the South doesn't know whether he is Democrat or Republican, for or against a Civil Disturbance program, appears no restraint at all on indulgence in the Eisenhower fantasy.

The South does not want Truman, the indicated standard bearer of the Democratic Party. The South does not want a Republican. The South does not want Wallace. The South does not want Folsom. The South either does not want Byrd or knows that it cannot get anywhere with him. The Democrats of the North do not want defeat with Truman. So North and South relieve themselves with daydreams of Eisenhower.

And as long as men such as the chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee talk about Byrd, The Advertiser will persist in the Eisenhower speculation.

Wherefore do we offer this counsel. Let not the Democrats consult or parley with Eisenhower about the nomination. That simply gives him an opportunity to decline it and perhaps to inform us that he, too, believes in a Civil Disturbance program.

Let the South and Alabama act in loco parentis. That is to say, let Alabama, first on the roll call of the states, simply place Ike's name in nomination as it did in the case of FDR and the Third Term, stampede the convention and punish Truman. For would it not be more appealing to punish Truman with Ike than to punish Truman simply by insuring the election of a Republican?

We know what's best for Ike. Let's take it out of his hands.

Bans Vote For Truman; Mandeville Urges 'Rights' Stand

Mon. 3-29-48

By ATTICUS MULLIN

Senator Lister Hill is outspoken for General Eisenhower as his first choice for the Democratic presidential nomination at the hands of the National Convention at Philadelphia.

Answering a query by The Advertiser, Senator Hill says he will not, if elected a delegate, vote for Truman and that he does not favor any phase of President Truman's civil rights program.

To The Advertiser's third query, "If you do not favor the nomination of Harry Truman, what candidate, if any, is your first choice for the nomination?" Senator Hill tersely answers "Dwight D. Eisenhower," without further comment.

John E. Mandeville, clerk of the Circuit Court of Mobile County, and candidate for delegate to the Democratic Convention from the First Congressional District, is very emphatic that he is tired of the South being traded off for certain minority votes in the North and East.

House-Cleaning

After answering the questions propounded by The Advertiser in regard to Truman, whom he is emphatically against as well as Truman's civil rights policies or any man favoring such policies, Mr. Mandeville writes regarding the third question pertaining to his first choice for the nomination as follows: Mon. 3-29-48

"Although I have not made up my mind definitely and finally on this particular question, I feel very strongly that now is the time for doing a little house cleaning of our party's national leaders, and to get our party straightened out once and for all concerning the question of 'state's rights.'

"I am one of many hundreds of thousands of Democrats who are sick and tired and fed up with this matter of the federal government attempting to take away our rights as states, and also the matter of the machine politicians of the East and North attempting to trade the South off for the votes of certain minority factions in the North and East. I will not have my vote traded on any such political basis, even if our action in the South means the defeat of the Democratic party for the presidency in the November general election.

"And too, in view of the grave world situation, I am inclined at present to lean toward the nomination of one of our great Southerners, such as General Marshall, Senator Byrd, Rayburn of Texas, or General Eisenhower. However, as I said in the beginning, I have not made up my mind definitely.

So far practically 30 per cent of the candidates for delegate to the Democratic convention have replied to The Advertiser's questions. While some have dodged, in no single instance has a candidate failed to say (except Baker of Troy), that he was against Truman, against his civil rights program and against any man who favored that program.

One man so far has declared for Folsom for president. So far no one has declared for Henry Wallace. It is believed that a number of Wallace men, however, are candidates. The Advertiser proposes to question all candidates for delegate once again in the near future, to determine if any of them will vote for Wallace at any stage of the convention.

General Eisenhower Doesn't Want Votes

Record

Dwight D. Eisenhower, general of the armies, is not a candidate for office although once the Republicans were all for drafting him for president, until he ruled himself out, and the Democrats, looking for a substitute for Truman, are now hot on his trail. [illegible]

Testifying the other day before the Senate armed services committee, in support of a revival of the draft and for universal military training, General Eisenhower was asked for his views on the army's policy of segregating white and Negro soldiers.

Two Negro witnesses, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, and Grant Reynolds, member of the New York state commission of correction, earlier in the week had protested against segregation in the army and had told the committee they would lead a "civil disobedience" campaign against the draft if segregation were not abolished, even if such a campaign would amount to treason against the United States. Tue. 4-6-48

General Eisenhower said that army segregation works to the advantage of the Negro troops. Columbia, S.C.

"In general," he said, "the Negro is less well educated than white men. Because of that, if you try to make a complete amalgamation the Negro will be relegated to the lower jobs and his chances of promotion will be less because the competition for promotion will be tougher."

The human race, he said, "may grow up" some day to the point where there is no race prejudice. The Record

But, he added, "when you try to pass laws to force someone to like someone else, you're going to get into trouble." Tues.

General Eisenhower was speaking out of both wisdom and experience. It is probably disappointing to the advocates of over-night abolition of segregation and racial prejudice that these things cannot be done overnight by enactment of law, but must be done by slow measures as the very considerable achievement toward this end has already been accomplished. Columbia, S.C.

General Eisenhower perceives the prohibition thinking in the so-called civil-rights program. He sees that more harm than good will come from any attempt to rush matters or resort to force. The pity is that the members of Congress could not also perceive it and avoid it. But General Eisenhower isn't looking for votes. 4-6-48

"Last week's column about General Eisenhower demonstrated once again how wrong I can be. I paid honest tribute to him, based on conversations with him in Europe during the war and in the United States since his return, as one who for both practical and idealistic reasons would never tolerate discimination and segregation. He proved me naive by his testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee advocating perpetuation of army segregation at the platoon level. I apologize to the readers of this column for having been deluded into acceptance of General Eisenhower's words at their face value. And for believing he had courage to tackle prejudice as valiantly as he did the Nazis. The fact, of which the Army boasts, that white and Negro soldiers fought ably and without friction during the critical Battle of the Bulge seems to have faded from the General's memory."

Carnley Named Adviser; Both Parties Attacked Over Liberties Battle

Bidding anew for support in his presidential venture, Gov. Folsom tacked the "states rights" label on the racial problem Friday and told the federal government to keep hands off.

He charged both major parties with making a "political football" out of the question of civil liberties, and predicted neither will gain votes by "such methods."

Folsom, who announced 11 days ago he would seek the Democratic presidential nomination, replied to President Truman's civil rights program in a statewide radio broadcast. He renewed his criticism of Mr. Truman's conduct of both national and foreign affairs.

Frankenstein

Asserting there already had been too much federal interference in local affairs, the tall Alabama governor criticized the national government as a "mechanical Frankenstein which feeds on the powers taken away from the various states." The Advertiser

Federal agencies even tell the states how to spend federal funds, he added, and to meet that he proposed that all such money be "granted to the legislature, to be appropriated as the legislature sees fit for the purpose granted."

Folsom warned that the nation is "in a pre-atomic rut" which is "carrying us down the road to another war" and called again for a housecleaning in Washington, particularly to put "peacemakers in the State Department who are more interested in working for peace than they are in working for a bigger Army and Navy." Montgomery, Ala.

He said he was opposed to peacetime compulsory military training "except when Congress declares a national emergency."

To Dixie Revolt

Immediately after his broadcast, Folsom left for the Southern governor's conference at Tallahassee, Fla., primed to tie his presidential ambitions, if he can, to a threatened Dixie revolt over President Truman's civil rights proposals. Sat. 2-7-48

A loud chorus of protests and talk of seceding from the party came out of the South when Mr. Truman asked Congress for legislation to abolish the poll tax, ban lynchings, do away with segregation, and create a fair employment practices commission.

As a possible indication of what he may attempt at the meeting of Southern governors, Folsom took his father-in-law, J. A. Carnley of Elba, Ala., along as his advier. 34a(1)

He told radio listeners about it and described Carnley, a former judge and one-time member of the legislature, as a man who "knows fundamental Democracy and states rights like no other man I have ever talked to."

In announcing his presidential candidacy, the governor said he was trying to "revive" Democracy in the party. The Advertiser Montgomery Ala Pres. 2-7-48

Discussing race relations in his radio address Folsom reminded the people of Alabama that he was sworn to uphold the federal constitution, but that "I am also sworn to uphold the constitution of the State of Alabama."

"And under it, there are certain rights which we are allowed," he declared, adding:

Court To Decide

"At any time the laws of Alabama are in conflict with the civil rights of our people as granted by the federal constitution, I believe that the United States Supreme Court will hand down decisions to that effect. I believe, too, that the people of Alabama and all other states will want to abide by the decisions of the highest court in the land."

Opposes Poll Tax

The governor has long opposed the poll tax, and he expressed hope again Friday that Alabama will abolish its $1.50 a year voting levy. The Advertiser

However, he asserted, "I do not think that this is a matter which the federal government should dictate to the states. It should be settled within the borders of Alabama or any other state." Montgomery, Ala.

Folsom said both Democrats and Republicans bring the racial issue up every election year but said the 1948 presidential race "will not be influence by such methods. Sat 2-7-48

"The thinking people of all races would be thankful if our party leaders in both parties would quit using these issues as a political football. These problems are fundamental, and they are problems to be solved by the states and their subdivision."

Reiterating his intention to seek the democratic presidential nomination as Alabama's favorite son delegate to the National Convention. Folsom said he "will accept the nomination from other states."

This was regarded as significant in view of the Southern Governor's meeting.

War Or Peace

Dismissing the racial question is not important to the 1948 election campaign, the Alabama executive declared the real issue is peace or war. "Without peace," he said, "there won't be any such things as poll taxes, rent controls and housing shortages."

He charged that the "gotrocks of Wall Street and the brass hat military men . . . war profits and (military) promotions" were responsible for wars, and said "we've had enough" of both. The Advertiser

"Everybody knows that the military men are out to promote military interests," he said. ". . . maybe they don't want war, but they certainly want a big military organization to tinker with." Montgomery, Ala.

On the matter of civil rights, Folsom said President Truman is "trying to solve local problems on a national basis. He is trying to destroy certain states rights which we regard as the foundation of our state government. If we lose these basic states rights, then we lose our democratic right to regulate our own lives." 2-7-48

Calls Government 'Frankenstein' In Bitter Broadcast

34a(1)

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 7—(AP)—It was Gov. James E. Folsom and his radio address on racial problems that set the pace for political news at the capitol this week.

Alabama's colorful chief executive had been silent on President Truman's 10-point civil rights program for almost a week. But in his Friday speech he made public his views on racial segregation, anti-lynching laws, the poll tax and fair employment practices.

His speech was delivered just before he left for a Southern Governors Conference in Tallahassee, Fla. He goes to the conference as an avowed candidate for the President of the United States.

At the Florida capitol it is expected he will find his fellow Southern governors in a rebellious frame of mind over the president's civil rights declaration. Some have urged an outright bolt from the party; others, including Folsom, want to fight such issues out within the party.

HE AGREED with the president on the poll tax question; both want to see it abolished. But on this and other matters he sounded the clarion of states rights and denounced federal "interference" in racial matters. The News

But peace, he said, is the important problem confronting the 1948 elections, not racial matters.

"Without peace there won't be any such things as poll taxes, rent controls and housing shortages."

Folsom announced his candidacy for the presidency several days ago in a speech critical of President Truman and the United States' foreign policy. He is expected to attempt to tie in his candidacy with the projected Southern party revolt.

Although critical of the president, Folsom nevertheless was on hand at the Union Station when Mrs. Truman, daughter Margaret and their party stopped off here briefly en route to New Orleans. Sat.

The Worker 34a(1)
New York, N.Y.

By Mary Southard

BIRMINGHAM.—On Jan. 6 one of the sharpest political battles in recent Alabama history came to a close, and the state's voters turned out to give Gov. Folsom a strong vote of confidence.

Sun 1-18-48

The issue was the self-starter amendment to the state constitution, which would have given the Legislature, stubbornly hostile to the Governor's program, the power to convene itself over the Governor's head. The amendment, according to latest available returns, was defeated by a vote of 91,193 to 59,782 (from 2,067 of a total of 2,363 boxes in the state).

Since the real issue in the referendum was the Governor and his program versus the Legislature, this vote represents a mandate from the people to the confusion of all the wishful commentators now engaged in belittling the Governor's victory.

AN ANALYSIS of the vote shows that the same loose coalition of small farmers, labor and the Negro people which elected Folsom in 1946 is continuing firm in support of his program today.

Folsom directed his main campaign to those counties populated mainly by small white farmers—counties which 50 years ago were the strongholds of the Populist movement. There, as in 1946, he won his most overwhelming support.

Of the 15 counties (out of a total of 67) which he lost, 10 were Black Belt counties, where the Negro people, though in the majority, are almost totally disfranchised. However, even here, there Black Belt counties supported him in this amendment fight against one in the gubernatorial election in 1946.

FOLSOM'S CAMPAIGN in the industrial centers was hampered by two things. First, his speeches were more closely geared to the needs and thinking of rural voters than to working people in the cities. Second, and much more important, the leadership of the labor movement, with a few honorable exceptions, took no initiative in rallying the wide pro-Folsom sentiment among city working people to support of the Governor in this campaign.

Folsom carried Mobile, second largest city, and most of the northern industrial towns, but lost Birmingham and Montgomery by narrow margins.

A look at the Birmingham-Jefferson County vote shows the line-up and the problem clearly. The Gotrocks' precincts voted overwhelmingly for the amendment. All of the predominantly working class precincts backed Folsom and voted against it. The two precincts with a majority of Negro voters went strongly for the Governor.

THE LABOR VOTE registered strongly for Folsom, in spite of the fact that shortly before the referendum the Birmingham News carried a featured article stating that labor had refused to endorse Folsom's stand. The article "overlooked" the fact that both the Textile Workers PAC and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers had publicly urged their membership to vote against the amendment. According to reports, it seems unfortunately true, however, that certain Social Democratic leaders centered mainly around Ben Gage and his henchmen in the Unitel Steelworkers here sabotaged any efforts to build up strong pro-Folsom support in the labor movement in the county. The workers voted for Folsom's program, but their backing was unorganized and their influence largely hamstrung.

The Negro vote in Jefferson County should be closely examined by all those genuinely interested in a progressive program for Alabama. This vote (there are only a few hundred Negro voters in this county with a Negro population of more than 180,000) showed an almost unanimous support for Folsom's program, indicating that if the Negro people had been allowed to register their full voting strength the county would have gone overwhelmingly for Folsom or for anyone else who put forward a progressive program.

CONVERSELY, in 10 of the 15 counties which Folsom lost, the majority of the people, who are Negro, are kept from the polls by the poll-tax and the Boswell Amendment and the brazenly undemocratic practices of the Boards of Registrars. If Negro citizens had been allowed to exercise their right to vote there, these 10 counties would have piled up substantial majorities in the Folsom column.

Folsom has won wide support in his fight to carry through reapportionment of the state Legislature. The Legislature has and will continue to refuse to budge on this question. The Black Belt planter—Big Corporation control of the Legislature is based primarily on the disfranchisement of the Negro people in 13 Black Belt counties and the disfranchisement of thousands of both white and Negro voters in other counties and industrial centers like Birmingham and Mobile. Such a Legislature will not easily relinquish its sranglehold.

The Worker
New York, N.Y.

It follows that the abolition of the polltax and the smashing of the Boswell Amendment must have first place if the victory of the people in this referendum is to be maintained and extended. Every white farmer, every working man and woman in the cities and towns will need the vote of every possible ally in the fights that are to come. And the biggest potential ally which labor and the farmers in Alabama have is the Negro vote. Sun. 1-18-48

Folsom Mum On Racial Issue; Press Airs Views Of Speech

Presidential Aspirant James E. Folsom outlined again Wednesday the issues he said the Democratic party must face "if it remains strong," but withheld commnet on the racial stand taken by other party leaders in the South.

Twenty-four hours after he announced his candidacy for the presidential nomination, the governor issued a statement which said the Democrats must decide whether they are for "the Wall Street gotrocks and the communists running the world, or . . . for democracy running it."

He remained silent on the action of the Alabama State Democratic Executive Committee in formally warning national party leaders that an anti-segregation policy in the 1948 platform might force the South to choose between party loyalty and Southern traditions. The Advertiser

Folsom previously had stated that he felt such issues "should be fought out within the party."

Asks Secession

Mississippi's Gov. Fielding Wright has urged a secession from the party if its leaders insisted on "anti-Southern legislation."

Folsom did not mention the racial question in his radio address Tuesday in which he asked Alabama Democrats to send him to the national convention as a "favorite son" candidate for president, and reporters were unable to get a statement on it Wednesday. Montgomery, Ala.

Instead they were told by Executive Secretary O. H. Finney to put their questions in writing because Folsom wanted to give careful consideration before commenting on any controversial matters at the present time. A query about the racial problem was among several submitted by the newsmen. Thurs. 1-29-48

Later, an aide told reporters the governor wanted to "study" the questions before answering them.

In his statement on other matters, the Alabama executive said "it is the duty of every Democrat to study the issues" and to debate them. He charged "monopolists, brass hats, grain speculators and Wall Street lawyers" were trying to "force" President Truman's nomination on the party without debate.

"In the end," Folsom declared, "every Democrat has got to decide this: The Advertiser

"He's either for reviving democracy all over the world and giving hope to the world, or he's against it. Montgomery, Ala.

"He's either for our nation handling out billions of dollars in bribes all over the world with one hand and carrying the sword of fear in the other — or he's against it. Thurs 1-29-48

"He's either for the United Nations handling the money and the battleships or he's for the United States and Russia fighting to decide which one is going to rule the world."

In addition, he continued, Democrats must choose between "turning our government over to professional soldiers and brass hats" or returning them to the army and navy; between a TVA for every river valley or no TVA at all; a social security program for all or for a few; equal old age assistance in every state or favoritism. ONLY CHANCE

Editor, The Advertiser:

The purpose of this letter is to show that there were a great many people behind Gov. Dear Sir,

I wish to commend you on your noble stand against the Civil Rights Bill and your walk-out protest against H. Truman.

Originally I came from New Jersey and have resided in Alabama (my adopted state and home) for the past six or seven years. Although I originally came from the North I still don't believe that this so-called Civil Rights Bill is right or legal. It is a monstrous and evil bill and would cause much strife and discord.

I am firmly behind your stand to nominate a candidate for president from the South or one that is loyal and fair to the South.

24b(1)

In my opinion the ideal presidential nominee for the South and of the South is Gov. J. E. Folsom. He is a colorful figure. True he may have made a few mistakes in his administration but then who doesn't make a mistake—is it not human to err? As I said before, Gov. Folsom is a colorful figure, known nationally, he would appeal to the Western States and to many of the Northern states. Personal differences should be eliminated and the good of the Southern Democratic Party considered first and last.

Jim Folsom, Grover Cleveland

The Constitution

Sat. 3-6-48

I see where, when "Big Jim" Folsom departed from the Nation's capital city that a throng of giggling young ladies waved to him, a few throwing kisses.

This, I assume, would annoy some of our citizens and inspire certain remarks about our times and our civilization.

Big Jim is under a paternity charge, a young lady in Alabama having charged that Gov. Folsom is the father of her 22-month-old child.

The Governor has said only that he is a candidate for office and anticipated such charges. The story is an old one, having been kicking around Alabama for some time. I recall hearing it more than a year ago, at which time it was said his foes were using the threat of it as a sort of blackjack.

There also are reported to be several pictures of the Governor and the young lady, the usual snapshots, taken on picnics and so on. They are not sensational, but routine. They reportedly are in the hands of a national magazine and may appear soon, for the edification of the public.

Jim Folsom is, if nothing else, an unorthodox person, both politically and personally. If I had to guess, I would wager he will, if the case comes to court, say that he does not believe the child is his, but that the child is the first consideration.

Coincident While I do not mean to compare the two, it so happens that Gov. Folsom is the first Presidential candidate since Grover Cleveland to be charged with fathering an illegitimate child. Warren G. Harding. while President, was so embarrassed, and after his death.

The Governor is not a formidable national candidate. He is running, so he says, to assure some sort of opposition to the Truman policies in the national convention.

3-6-48

But Grover Cleveland was a formidable candidate at the time the charges were made against him.

Cleveland had been nominated in July of 1884.

On July 21, a Buffalo newspaper published a story which also had been kicking about newspaper shops for some time, charging that eight years before Grover Cleveland had fathered a child by a Miss Maria Halpin.

The Republican press, led by the Chicago Tribune, maintained a false campaign of immorality, drunkenness and debauchery against Cleveland.

"Rum, Romanism—" It is likely James G. Blaine, who was involved in great political corruption of a sort proved by evidence, might have won had not a minister friend charged that the bond which held the Democratic Party together was "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion." This so enraged the Democrats, and disgusted further those already disgusted with Blaine, that Grover Cleveland won by a narrow margin.

It is interesting now to note how history does repeat itself. Today the charge is that the Democratic Party is one of many diverse elements, the party of left-wingers, labor and Southern conservatives. It has been, always, a party of many ill-fitting elements, which is why, perhaps, it merits the name, "Democratic Party."

The Constitution

Further Coincident It also is interesting, as a further link in the long reach of coincident, that Grover Cleveland married while President and his bride was Miss Frances Folsom, daughter of the President's law partner. There is no relationship with the Alabama Folsom family. Or, at least, none has been noted.

Atlanta, Ga

The slanderers followed Cleveland all his public career. He was a most temperate man, but the slanderers persisted with stories that he was an habitual drunkard. The gossip was merciless, and reached such proportions that the wives of some of his Cabinet members publicly and indignantly denied the stories of the mistreatment of his wife and of drunkenness.

This sort of cruel gossip seems part of our political life. Certainly it was equally merciless in slander of Woodrow Wilson, of Harding, and it reached a peak not attained since the time of Jackson, Lincoln and Cleveland during the Roosevelt administrations.

In each case, that of Cleveland and Folsom, the fact that the story was common gossip over the State for more than a year, seems to have made it take on the color of political persecution, whatever the truth, and thereby to be of little value to those who sought to use it politically.

LISTER HILL COMES THROUGH

34a(1) Pres.

Hill announced yesterday at the 11th hour that he was qualifying to run for delegate-at-large to the Democratic nominating convention.

Montgomery Advertiser

He could not have done otherwise without divorcement from respect, that of himself and that of his well-wishers.

Hill made a brief statement in which he repeated that he opposed Truman's Civil Disturbance proposals; that, as opposed to Wallace and Folsom, he believed in our foreign policy and the Marshall Plan.

Hill then said:

Montgomery, Ala.

"I continue my support of Harry S. Truman, the head of the Democratic Party."

Tues. 3-2-48

THE fact that Hill reaffirms his allegiance to Truman will surprise many. Certainly this allegiance is not expected by Hill to win support.

Of this we may be entirely sure. Senator Hill is in close touch with Alabama politics. He is completely aware that among Alabamians there is a furnace of wrath, to find the equivalent of which one has to go back to Reconstruction days. Hill knows that full well.

Therefore, inasmuch as Hill knows this and yet declares that he continues to support Truman, it is strongly indicated that Hill is thinking along lines which are not immediately obvious.

Hill's enemies, through his 20-odd years of unbroken political victories, have always called him a "shrewd opportunist." A shrewd opportunist is not one to grasp a smallpox cause when he is to come up for reelection in two years.

In that connection, it is notable that Senator John Sparkman, who is now running for reelection, has taken a similar line.

The Advertiser does not know what the two senators are thinking, but it is certain that they are thinking with the same apparatus of brains and experience that has made them politically victorious for 20 years.

We understand that Senator Hill plans a statewide radio address soon in which he will state the dilemma of Alabama and of the South and advance his plan for a course of action.

Until we hear from Hill, we will do well to reserve judgment.

Tues. 3-2-48

A POLITICIAN is entitled to his political considerations. The nature of our system compels this. From Senator Hill's personal viewpoint, we submit that he has done a wise thing by entering the race for delegate.

In 1950 Hill will be up for reelection to the Senate. He must know by this time that Folsom and his squalid band will gang up on him.

Folsom's band cherished Senator Sparkman for a time, but today Sparkman has opposition created by Folsom's pards. Half or more of Alabama still believes that Folsom is a good ol' country boy trying to get along, but the clear fact is that he is a penny-weight Caesar whose ego is in proportion to his carcass. He desires to bestride Alabama as Huey Long bestrode Louisiana.

Huey Long was serious about the White House, and Folsom wasn't smiling when he announced his candidacy to capture the office of George Washington and Woodrow Wilson.

Such a man has no appetite for rivalry with men of the caliber of Sparkman and Hill. He wants outlanders like himself.

A great many of Hill's friends, such as The Advertiser, which has supported him without lapse since he was a boy orator, have deplored his previous entente with Folsom.

We take it that Hill has it in mind to crawl the inexcusable Folsom like a Kilkenny cat.

Hill is one of this country's most knowledgeable and ardent internationalists, a man with a sound comprehension of world drift, a man who helped Roosevelt inform the country of the Hitler peril, a militant advocate of the Marshall Plan. Folsom is demagogic aggrandizer of ignorance who explains everything by saying it is a matter of "dumping billions" in Europe—a man who speaks the words of Henry Wallace in hill-billy idiom.

For Hill to have remained aloof would have been to acquiesce in the pestilential dishonesty of the Folsom demagogy.

Many of Hill's whilom enemies and disenchanted friends will be propitiated and reconciled now that he has tilted his lance. Certainly it has to be conceded that Hill has taken on a formidable adversary and that he is running some risks.

AND FINALLY it has to be considered that Alabama's circumstance in the potential abandonment of the Democratic Party is unique among the Southern states.

We in Alabama, in seeking an escape from Washington torment, must remember that we have not only the baffling questions of the contemplated revolt as such but the complication of Folsom's favorite son candidacy for President.

34a(1)

What if this state should decide to go along in a Southern bolt movement? What if the Alabama delegation walked out of the Philadelphia convention? Is it not possible that Folsom and such delegates as he can get elected or win over later with favors might remain as a rump delegation? Is it not possible that he may infiltrate Alabama's electoral college?

In short, we in Alabama have both Truman and Folsom to deal with.

For all of which, it is a time when the full participation of our senior United States senator is highly desirable. He will have much to give Tues. 3-2-48

To sum up, The Advertiser feels that we may profitably await a full statement of Hill's ideas about Truman. We think it will be seen that Hill has come through in a very creditable manner.

Party Leader Clashes With Folsom Views

Governor Opposes Bolt; McCorvey Declares Open Stand Essential

Fri. 2-27-48

By G. C. LONG

Governor Folsom, announced candidate for the presidential nomination, Thursday counseled Alabama Democrats to settle their squabbles "within the family" but, in this, he was contradicted by the chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, Gessner T. McCorvey, who qualified himself as a candidate for elector.

McCorvey, in commenting on Folsom's statewide radio address, said that "Alabama voters have a right to know where candidates (for delegate to the Democratic convention and presidential elector) stand on the President's civil rights program.

The Governor said Democratic party leaders in Alabama had no right to "dictate to candidates what they ought to stand for."

Marshall Plea

These statements were being made as a group of Marshall County lawyers urged that Alabama not elect delegates to the Democratic national convention.

At Mobile, Chairman McCorvey told the Associated Press:

"It was the idea of the State Democratic Executive Committee to request the candidates for delegate to our national convention and presidential elector to state where they stood on those issues which were so vital to our Southland in order that the voters could vote intelligently with their eyes open." 2-27-48

"If any candidate wishes to close his mouth and refuse to divulge what he stands for that is the candidate's privilege and he might pick up some votes b adopting this policy.

Pig In Bag

"It is my idea that the great mass of Democratic voters in Alabama would not care to buy a pig in the bag but would like to know the views of the candidates for whom they vote." 2-27-48

The Governor, in his radio speech Thursday, said he believed "there are no differences so great but what we can work them out within our party."

He said that bolting was not "the thing to do." The Advertiser

Reporting on his own favorite-son-for-president candidacy, Gov. Folsom said that mail was pouring in to him from all over the United States. Montgomery, Ala.

Claims Support

"Candidates are writing in from other states, saying they want to support me as a favorite son candidate at the National Convention," the chief executive stated. "Others are volunteering to run as candidates from other states." The Advertiser

Although his prepared text contained the program he stands for and the things he is against, Folsom did not get to give them over the air because of lack of time. Here is what he called his "7-11 program":

"1. I am for calling our army and navy home, and letting the United Nations police the world.

"2. I am for local responsibility in the government of all the people. Montgomery, Ala.

"3. I am for strong anti-trust laws.

"4. I am for putting a stop to promiscuous dumping of our sweat and resources overseas.

"5. I am for giving necessary overseas relief to needy nations through the United Nations Organization. Fri.

"6. I am for the control of all interstate rivers on a TVA basis.

"7. I am for all federal aid being appropriated to the various state legislatures. 2-27-48

"8. I am for someone besides 'Gotrock fancy panters' running our foreign affairs.

"9. I am for professional military men running military affairs only.

"10. I am for a lower tariff.

"11. I am for an ambassador to each church or to no church."

Against These

These are the things Folsom listed he was against:

"1. I am against sending guns and bullets to all nations. Such action is leading us down the road to another war.

"2. I am against the federal government dictating to the states on matters which should be solved locally.

"3. I am against peace-time conscription, unless Congress declares a national emergency, and in the event of such an emergency, I am for a strong democratic army and navy.

"4. I am against tax reduction for the big man unless the little man gets his share of tax relief.

"5. I am against the policies of the present national Democratic leader that has gotten us further and further away from the real principles of the Democratic Party.

"6. I am against a restricted social security program. I am for one that includes all classes of workers.

"7. I am against a high tax structure which takes our money from home where we need it for roads, schools and pensions."

As for these issues, the governor said "thousands of letters have poured in" from people who are interested in them.

His Job "First"

Saying that he wanted to impress on the people in Alabama that he was not forgetting the job he had to do here, Folsom called it "first and foremost."

He added that it was his duty as governor of 3,000,000 people to look after their interest on the national scene. Fri.

"We've got to drive the Wall Street money changers out of the Temple of our Democratic Party," the governor declared. "They just don't belong in our party because they don't have the interest of the people at heart. They are in there to root and grab all they can get and they don't give a hoot about what happens to the widow back on the branchhead." 2-27-48

Saying that there had been another convention at Philadelphia when the "finest charter the world has ever seen" was drafted, the governor stated that the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia in July would be the scene for the writing of the policies that would guide the party through the next four years.

Peace or War

"One thing is certain," he continued, "these policies will either lead us to a continued peace, or they will lead us to war. And if we are going to have lasting peace, then we have got to send delegates to Philadelphia who believe in peace more than they do anything else." Fri. 2-27-48

Speaking of his own candidacy as a delegate, Folsom said he was in the race because he felt the issues that face "us in our Democratic Convention are equally as important as the issues which faced the framers of the federal constitution in 1777."

Asserting that the campaign was not a "wishy-washy" one, the chief executive said any candidate who didn't come out and make a clean stand for the things he stood for and against was not worth voting for.

Plays "Dictation"

It is not the duty of the State Democratic Executive Committee to dictate to candidates what they should stand for, he said.

Folsom stated that the trouble with the party was that some of its members had "come out to support a candidate for the presidency who doesn't want any open debate." He said those party members were trying to force the candidate (President Truman) on the Democrats even before the convention is held.

The governor called on all who wanted to enter the race to qualify, and he said he wanted to see every candidate have "plenty of opposition." The Advertiser

"The more candidates who get into the race," he said, "the better candidates will be who are elected. Montgomery, Ala.

"I have faith that we can clean up the Democratic Party at Philadelphia, and I believe that there are a lot of people in the rest of the South, the North, the East and the West who will want to help out in this clean-up job." Folsom declared. 2-27-48

GUNTERSVILLE, ALA., Feb. 26. — (AP) — A group of Marshall County lawyers today urged that Alabama not elect delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

The proposal was in the form of a petition asking the state Democratic executive committee to withdraw an order calling for election of the delegates in the May 4 Democratic Primary.

W. C. Rabun, widely known Marshall County attorney, said the petition was signed by 11 lawyers at a bar meeting yesterday.

(Folsom)

Rabun said previously "we want to ignore the national convention."

"We don't want to have to bolt the party," he continued, "and that would be the case if delegates are sent there from Alabama."

Pres

If enough southern states ignore the convention, he said, it would be possible to "put a southern man in as president" by merely electing southern electors and throwing the election into the House of Representatives.

"Some of the western states might fall in line with us," Rabun said.

Gov. Folsom announces he will not accept the Democratic nomination for president under any circumstances. Does this mean a somewhat chastened Folsom, who is learning some very important things? Let us hope so. Thurs.

Of course, his candidacy for the presidency never was taken seriously. But it is something for a public official frankly to recognize a setback as Folsom seems to be doing.

It is something that he indicates a resolution to concentrate more earnestly on his official duties. 5-20-48

Folsom Enters Democrat Race For President

Asserts Speculators Hog-Tie Truman

By the Associated Press.

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 27.—Alabama's Governor James E. Folsom announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination today.

In a radio address he bitterly denounced American foreign policy and charged that President Truman is "not running" either the party or the nation. The Courier-Journal

Asking Alabama Democrats to send him to the national convention as a favorite-son candidate, Louisville, Ky. Wed. 1-28-48 the 6-foot-8 Governor declared Truman "has got himself hog-tied" by "the monopolists, the brass hats, the grain speculators, and the Wall Street lawyers" who "are trying to force his nomination on the party."

Twenty-six delegates to the Philadelphia convention will be elected in the May 4 Democratic primary, and Folsom entered his name as a candidate from the state at large. If elected, he said he would "challenge the present leader of the party."

Voted for Wallace In '44.

Folsom's opposition to Truman is not new. As a delegate to the Democratic convention in 1944, he bolted the rest of the Alabama delegation and voted for Henry Wallace for Vice-President.

The Courier-Journal

With the political exit of General Eisenhower, G.O.P. strategists have decided "to use Harry Truman's yen for the military as one of their most effective campaign weapons," Drew Pearson says on the back page of Section 2. Louisville, Ky.

Folsom's announcement took the Capitol by surprise.

Folsom told his listeners the Democrats must "wake up and get the power of our party back in the hands of people at the branchheads. Wed 1-28-48

"There ought to be 25 Democrats running for President today," he continued. "There's at least 25 Democratic leaders who would make a better party leader and a better President than the one we've got.

"But our Democrats in Washington are not even debating with the Republicans, much less each other. That's a shameful thing." Wed

Speaking of Truman, the 39-year-old Alabama Governor said: "He has been nice to me and I like him. But the cold, hard fact is that I don't know a single man or woman who has a real, deep faith in the man who inherited the leadership of the party.

"Once the monopolists, the brass hats, the grain speculators, and the Wall Street lawyers got hold of him, they decided to keep him. They are trying to force his nomination on the party, but they are afraid to let you and me debate the issue. Even our beloved President Roosevelt had opposition in the party. And I don't know anybody who would put our present leader in a class with Roosevelt." The Courier-Journal

Of American foreign policy, which he has criticized repeatedly since his election two years ago, Folsom said American agents are "running all over the world dumping billions on top of billions . . . trying to bribe foreign leaders to vote a certain way. They're carrying billions of bribes in one hand and a sword of fear in the other." 1-28-48

And in the very countries where American dollars are being spent, he added, "the Communists are getting stronger. The Kings and dictators are getting stronger. But the Democrats are getting weaker." Louisville, Ky.

Beeland, Stewart And Ard Are Qualified In Delegate Race

34a(1)

Florida-bound for a fishing trip, Gov. Folsom took a rap at "outside interference" in local government affairs Friday and labeled the race segregation issue as one that "should be worked out in each individual state."

Folsom, self-announced aspirant to the democratic presidential nomination, spoke his views in an interview in Dothan, while elsewhere in the state three more candidates qualified for delegate to the Democratic National Convention, and a fourth said he would. Delegates will be elected in the May 4 primary.

The governor spoke out on the racial issue after withholding comment for two days on a similar question submitted in writing by reporters at the capital.

Describing himself as a "states rightist in national affairs and a local optionist in state affairs," Folsom said the matter of racial barriers is "a states rights proposition." Sat. 1-31-48

"That is a question that should be worked out by each individual state," he added, but declined to comment on segregation as a Democratic campaign issue.

Because of Washington "interference" in state and local affairs and Wall Street interference in local economics, he continued, the governor has become merely an administrative assistant to some bureau head.

"I'm against it," he declared. "I'm for bringing local and state government issues back home, where they belong. That's the only way to safeguard the democratic way of life."

Folsom said the "outside interference" works this way:

"They just come in and tell you how to run your business."

He mentioned the industrial relations, highway and welfare departments in Alabama as among those in which Washington interference is overshadowing states rights. The Advertiser

Meanwhile, three more candidates entered the running for convention delegate by filing their papers with the secretary of state at Montgomery. They were Jess P. Beeland of Greenville, seeking election from the second congressional district; Probate Judge Winston Setwart of Coosa County, from the fourth district, and Waldo E. Ard, Ozark, third district. Montgomery, Ala.

And in Birmingham, businessman Joe Money announced his candidacy for delegate at large, the same race Folsom has entered. Money said he would support President Truman but would oppose adoption of any platform policies "that would prove detrimental to Alabama and the other southern states." Sat. 1-31-48

Neither is all a part of the present southern discontent over the administration's Negro policy that challenges Harry Truman. Sat. 2-7-48 Alabama's Governor Folsom is not a part of it at all, yet his nomination of himself for President is being mistaken over the country as incident to the so-called "southern revolt." We had Drew Pearson linking him with Mississippi's Gov. Fielding Wright last Sunday evening as a southern protestant against implications in the report of the President's civil liberties committee. Folsom is indeed one with certain southern leaders in methods and insincerities many of us call demagogic, but the nation needs to understand that he is a Henry Wallace man and careful to have nothing to say now on the Negro question. His only positive stand on taht was last year when he announced mildly against the so-called Boswell amendment requiring voters to be able to interpret the Constitution. The amendment is Alabama's device against mass voting by Negroes. It was passed in spite of opposition. Sat 2-7-48

At a meeting of the Alabama State Democratic executive committee a few days ago when resolutions against national Democratic leadership on the race question were passed unanimously, Governor Folsom appeared briefly but had no comment. He is distinctly not a party to the sort of revolt that is being talked now in Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina. The Record Columbia, S.C. The revolt indicated in his nomiation of himself for President has to do with criticism of Truman's foreign policy and his contention that the administration is sold out to "Wall Street monopolists." It was Wallace talk, and consistent. At the Democratic national convention of 1944 Mr. Folsom was an ardent champion of Wallace for the vice-presidency, forsaking Alabama's choice, Senator John H. Bankhead, for the Iowan. A few months ago he introduced Mr. Wallace when the latter spoke in Montgomery and won the latter's praise as the only Southern governor willing to appear with him in public. When Wallace announced his third party, Folsom declared himself still a Democrat, but his speech against President Truman has identified him with the familiar Wallace points of view and made many other Southerners suspect that his naming of himself for President was Wallace strategy. 2-7-48

Mr. Folsom capitalizes on prejudice, hate and ignorance. But he does not use the Negro for this, as other Southern demagogs in their times have done. He plays on dislike of the foreigner, especially imaginary title-holders, on grudges of country people against city ones, workers against employers, one section against another, those who work independently against those who work under a corporate name. He denounces the sending of money abroad, makes it seem as if it were all snatched directly from the farm people of his state to whom he promises pensions and road pavings without regard to the cost and as if he were the inventor. 2-7-48

It is interesting to note that an American public which has known of him from pictures in Life as Alabama's "kissing governor" and a showman who would stop at nothing to win attention has presumed that a demagog like this would be among those sounding off for the South about the Negro. Perhaps the mistake will suggest to this public now that (1) not all intent on race segregaion is demagogic in and about the South, and (2) not all is demagogic here that is determined on race segregation. Sat.

If Henry Wallace should inherit the earth someday, or this part of it, Mr. Folsom might find himself sitting pretty in spite of his failure to follow Henry out of the party. But as things are now, he is not sitting pretty at all, in spite of his recent success in persuading Alabama's farmers to vote down a proposed amendment letting the legislature call itself into session of special occasion. That vote gave him a planetary estimate of his importance, but the terms of his announcement for President leave him so much more kin to Wallace—and to Republican Senator Wherry—than to anybody else in sight, that he is a man alone insofar as either the South or the Democratic party is concerned. 2-7-48

Box Car Named Aspire

Shopping around, as in an election year true citizens will, among the worthies who exercise their right and yen and gall to put themselves forward as candidates for the Presidency, our conscience compels us to scrutinize the bargain counters as well as the figures featured in the show-windows.

Were this not our good democratic custom, we easily might stroll on past the newest exhibit, the name and claims of Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama, with only a casual glance.

Most of us who know of Big Jim at all think of him as a box-car-size clodhopper—the man who "takes off his shoes" and "kisses the girls."

Big Jim himself, who is not at all ashamed of this picture, blames the one-sidedness of it on the "lying press," and it's quite true that many of the newspapers of his own state, and of the rest, have shown more interest in Big Jim's feats of foot and osculation than in his political philosophy and legislative proposals. Thurs. 1-29-48

He is an unorthodox campaigner, even in a region in which to be bizarre is, not unfrequently, to be elected. His flagpole rough-cut mannerisms do invite caricature, and his suggestion that Alabama Democrats send him to the Philadelphia convention as a favorite son undoubtedly will be posted in all the comic pages. PM New York, N.Y.

And yet, Big Jim deserves better than a hurry-by. He campaigned for governor on a free-suffrage plank in a state in which the poll tax is supposed to be as assailable as the moon and stars, and won. He has had to slug it out with the big mules of Alabama politics, the black-belt planters and the Birmingham industrialists ernor's privileges by constitutional amendment, and won.

Big Jim is no simple gawk, his early mentor in politics was Georgia's liberal Gov. Ellis Arnall, who showed that you can cater to the decencies in the South and be upheld. It should be noted that the vegetables he has flung at President Truman and the "party leadership" are not the same as those scooped up last week by Gov. Wright, of neighboring Mississippi. Wright complains of reformist transgressions on the Southern "way of life," but Folsom rails at "Wall Street lawyers," "State Dept. fancy-pants," and at the Presidential use of too much military brass in offices that make policy. He hits the target where the liberals hit it, and warns of damage to "the party of the country" instead of to the feelings of the poll tax oligarchs.

Big Jim has something that offends the prudes and prissies (who'd've shed him long ago, if laughing off could do it) but something that the common people like. He's not a rabble-rouser in the sense, nor by the means, that Eugene Talmadge was or Huey Long. PM New York, N.Y.

But when he ambles round the county seats and tells Alabama plebes about their "sovereign rights in a democracy," they listen to him. And the big mules, who have his legislature, haven't found a way to hoot or boot him out of favor yet. [illegible] 1-24-48

I think there's little chance that we'll see at Philadelphia what we saw at the old Garden in New York in '24—when "Alabama casts her 40 (?) votes for Oscar W. Underwood" all but broke up the meeting. The big-mule faction in the state will break a trace to keep the delegation from going down the line for Folsom. All the same, the name could reach the floor and win—a smile, as it does now. . . . But when you smile, remember that it's not the fact that Big Jim has gone sockless on occasion that stirs up the ribaldry against him, but the fact that in his plodding fight for a new deal in Alabama his No. 12s have stepped on sacred toes whose haughty owners ran the show complacently before the steeple-topping governor came along.

FOLSOM AND OTHER EQUATION X'S

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Fri. 2-27-48

The Advertiser is everyday more aware of the extent, grimness and power of the revolt against President Truman. It boils up out of the streets.

But The Advertiser has also been frank to avow and declare its confusion over the course to a shore dimly seen. For that reason we have wished to make haste slowly.

34a(1)

Certainly this newspaper is not constitutionally daunted in the face of a bolt of the Democratic Party. It bolted in the time of Bryan, in the last century when only a handful of Alabamians were willing to bolt.

But the end and result of an Alabama and a Solid South departure from the Democratic party, with which they freed themselves from the Reconstruction ordeal by bayonet and infestation, are wreathed in question marks and bound by a warp of dilemmas and a woof of enigmas.

We have no ear for those who think there is a pat or sovereign way out for the South. Such ones seem to be thinking no further than the defeat of Truman and the election of a Republican.

As yet, we do not know who the Republican nominee will be. We do not know but that an F. E. P. C. statute will be enacted by the present G. O. P. Congress before the November election.

Nor do we fancy some of the company we would have to keep were we to join in the Southern drive to elect a Republican. Too many of these hoarse-voiced gents are those who loathe the progressiveness of the REA, TVA, AAA, SEC, Wagner Act, etc., more than they do Truman's Civil Disturbance proposals. The race issue is but the cloak for their reactionary rebellion lust. 2-27-48

WE would not wish to see the likes of Senator Harry Byrd — great though his capacities—in the White House. Despite many reservations, this is a Roosevelt newspaper, past, present and prospective.

The South profited enormously by the New Deal. The country believes in its essential reforms, and if that's not so, why hasn't this present overwhelmingly Republican Congress gone after votes by repealing them?

We haven't used the word liberal since we looked about and were abashed to behold the yo-yo gentry wearing the same label. Nevertheless, we will re-employ the word liberal again today to say, as a liberal, that we would be reluctant to flee the Democratic Party and find ourselves marooned with those known as anti-Roosevelt reactionaries.

The Advertiser

AS we say, the revolt course is dim and confusion has warrant. Far from the heat and concerns of the Deep South, for example, is The Kansas City Star. It remarks:

Montgomery, Ala.

> . . . The Republicans are determined to put the civil rights bills through Congress and they now seem to have the power . . . But this would leave the Republicans to obtain the chief credit for the enactment whereas that credit was exactly what Mr. Truman wanted. So the administration would have gained little or nothing politically and would have lost the Southern support as the outlook now appears. Fri. 2-27-48
> Meanwhile if the bills are made law they will become largely dead letters along with legislation of similar character and background. So the racial elements concerned would have gained little or nothing.
> It adds up to the impressive moral that if you want genuine reform in a field of this kind you shouldn't make that reform a political football. Progress has come without it and it may continue despite it if the political interference is not made too strong.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, one of this country's great newspapers, published in a border state, views it in a different light:

> Because the rebels have taken the course they chose, it is too much to hope that the civil rights legislation may now be debated on its merits. There is room for honest discussion of its practical aspects and its necessity in more than one detail.
> But the Southern politicians make inevitable the country's taking it or leaving it as it is. You would almost believe they were secretly for it, having made its enactment all but certain. Fri. 2-27-48

THOSE quotations bespeak some of the complexities of the desertion dilemma. We Southerners just haven't had time to think it out.

In Alabama, the South's dilemma is compounded by Folsom's candidacy for President. It seems to use that the McCorvey plan for aborting Alabama's participation in the Philadelphia convention and later withholding Alabama's electoral votes does not adequately reckon with Folsom.

Yesterday Folsom made a statewide radio address. It was the most gracious assist the bloody Stalin has had out of Alabama in a long while. It probably led to added merriment in the Kremlin over the Hitlerian rape of Czechoslovakia.

34a(1)

It affects the McCorvey plan in that the Folsom speech was chiefly a predicate for getting out a slate of Folsom delegates to the convention and possibly a slate of electors.

Pres.

The Advertiser

FOLSOM himself cannot—in all probability—be defeated for election to one of the six delegates-at-large positions. It is highly probable that some of the Folsom district delegates will likewise be sent to Philadelphia. And possibly the same will obtain in the case of electors.

If so, what will happen to the McCorvey plan? Montgomery, Ala

We do not mean to belittle the plan, but these questions must be answered as a practical matter. Fri.

It may be that, Solid South or not, Harry Truman is a goner. If so, Southern desertion would make no difference this time. 2-27-48

It may be that, despite a thousand uncertainties and an equation loaded with too many X's, this is a time when we simply have to strike out and trust to Providence we don't go wrong.

At all events, The Advertiser insists that we must think harder and clearer.

Dewey Is Leading In 30 States, Truman in 10, Full Survey Finds

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Oct 10-17-48

PRINCETON, N. J.—With but two weeks of the 1948 presidential campaign remaining, this is the picture of political sentiment throughout the nation as revealed by the Institute's cross-section surveys as completed in all 48 States:

1. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican candidate, has a substantial lead in 20 States, and Gov. Thurmond, States' Rights candidate, in four States. In this group of 34 States, Gov. Dewey has nearly two and a half times as many electoral votes as President Truman. In fact, he has virtually enough in this group of States alone to elect him.

By GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

2. In the remaining 14 States, where the lead of one candidate over the others is narrow, Gov. Dewey today has the advantage in 10, President Truman in three, and in one State, Minnesota, the present figures show an even split between the two major candidates.

3. Although indications from the present survey are that Dewey will have a large majority of electoral votes over Truman and Thurmond, his lead in terms of popular votes is fairly small. Latest Institute figures on the national popular vote show the following divisions:

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey	46%
President Truman	40
Henry A. Wallace	4
Gov. J. Strom Trurmond	2
Undecided	8

Oct 10-17-48

The last previous survey, reported by the Institute Sept. 24, showed Gov. Dewey getting 46½ percent of all votes; President Truman, 39 percent; Mr. Wallace, 3½ percent; Gov. Thurmond, 2 percent, and 9 percent undecided.

Today's figures reveal a decrease of one percent in the undecided vote, a slight loss for Gov. Dewey and a slight gain for President Truman and Mr. Wallace.

34a(1)

The following table gives the standings of the presidential candidates in those States where the lead of one candidate is sufficiently large to make it fairly certain that the candidate will carry the State on election day:

The remaining group of 14 States may best be described as the main battleground for presidential candidates for the final two weeks before election day. In these States the lead of one candidate over the others is not great. Later polls may show some of these changing position and, in fact, events and campaign strategy may shift some of these States from one candidate to another.

By JOHN N. POPHAM
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Aug. 31—Henry A. Wallace and his retinue of political associates headed for the deep south tonight after a turbulent day which saw irate Southerners continue to pelt the Wallace group with eggs and tomatoes until they reached this resort city in the western hills of North Carolina.

Wed. 9-1-48

Before boarding a train here, Mr. Wallace spoke to an assemblage of 600 persons in the courthouse square. The crowd jeered him slightly but threw no objects, so for the first time in two days he was able to make a completely audible speech.

The Times

Mr. Wallace was so obviously pleased with the sudden change in the temper of the crowd that he grinned broadly and asserted, "I want to thank you good people for this wonderful opportunity to democratically express my views and I want t oexpress my appreciation for all the fine people who have turned out to hear me throughout the state."

34a(1)

He added that he felt the people of Asheville would be pleased to know that a few hours before, in the town of Hickory, where he was the target of the thickest barrage of eggs and tomatoes in the enitre trip, he had been approachedl by a Baptist minister who told him, "Mr. Wallace, I want you to know that as a Christian I deeply deplore the things that have taken place in this community."

New York, N.Y.

Had to Give Up at Hickory

At the Hickory meeting, Mr. Wallace and a score of persons close to him were splattered with rotten eggs and overripe tomatoes. The barrage was so heavy that for the first time Mr. Wallace quit his talk abruptly and paraphrased a passage from Scripture for his tormentors.

"As Jesus Christ told his disciples, when you enter a town that will not hear you willingly, then shake the dust of that town from your feet and go elsewhere," Mr. Wallace said before turning on his heels and entering his automobile, parked a few feet away.

The orderliness of the Asheville meeting was attributable to adequate police preparations. Thirty city policemen and ten state highway patrolmen had been assigned to handle the crowd, and Charles W. Dermid, Director of Public Safety, said the police were ordered to arrest anyone they saw throwing objects of any kind.

Mr. Wallace boarded his train for Alabama expressing "happiness" at receiving a report that President Truman had deplored the throwing of things at Mr. Wallace as "a violation of the American concept of fair play."

"I am glad to see that the President has joined so many of the southern Governors in deploring events of this kind," Mr. Wallace said.

Asked which southern Governors he had in mind, Mr. Wallace replied, "Governor Cherry of North Carolina and Governor Wright of Mississippi."

Cherry, Wright Promises Told

A political attaché of Mr. Wallace's explained later that the Wallace group had received word that Governor Cherry had promised them increased police protection for today's trip across the state and that they "had heard" that Governor Wright, who is the Vice-Presidential candidate of the States Rights Democrats, had asserted that Mr. Wallace would not receive in Mississippi the treatment accorded him in North Carolina.

The Presidential candidate of the Progressive Party will carry his message of racial equality to the deep South tomorrow when he arrives by train at Decatur, Ala., with a scheduled stop at Birmingham.

It was at Birmingham last May that Mr. Wallace's running mate for Vice President, Senator Glen H. Taylor of Idaho, was arrested and fingerprinted and subsequently convicted of violating the city's ordinances providing for segregation of the races.

The Alabama visit will also provide a test of old political loyalties since the Governor, James E. Folsom, as a member of the Alabama delegation to the Democratic National Convention in 1944, bolted his group to support Mr. Wallace's candidacy for the nomination as Vice President.

Crowds Show Resentment

The Wallace party completed today an automobile tour across the state which, although it started and ended on pleasant notes, included some of the most violent displays of resentment in the South since the political campaign swing through the region got under way last Sunday.

The motorcade left Winston-Salem in the morning, with a state highway patrolman driving the lead car as part of the promise of increased police protection from Governor Cherry, it was said.

The Caravan passed through several towns on the way to Charlotte without any incidents except in Salisbury, where some one threw an orange that struck the door of Mr. Wallace's car a few inches below the window on the side where he was sitting.

The Times

The largest crowd of the trip turned out in Charlotte before the courthouse. It numbered about 2,500, although many persons kept arriving and departing when they were unable to get close enough to hear the speaker.

It was a good-natured crowd and the hecklers almost drowned out Mr. Wallace's words, but the police had it in control. Just before Mr. Wallace finished, however, a barrage of eggs and tomatoes came hurtling through the air, striking some of Mr. Wallace's group and also some of the spectators.

As he finished his talk in Charlotte, Mr. Wallace pointed to a monument that was erected in memory of the men who framed the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence in 1775, a Colonial move to throw off British control.

Wed 9-1-48

"Try to remember the Mecklenburg declaration," Mr. Wallace shouted, "and try to keep that kind of democracy in your minds."

During his talk in Charlotte, Mr. Wallace had pointed to a silver pin designed as an American eagle that was worn on the top of her dress by his political associate, Miss Mary Price, who is the Progressive party's candidate for Governor in North Carolina.

"That eagle there is an American eagle and it has left and right wings," Mr. Wallace said. "That is the way of American politics. It has right and left wings."

When Mr. Wallace and his group returned to their cars after being assisted by police through the milling, shouting mob, Miss Price discovered that her pin had been torn from her dress. She replaced it with a Wallace campaign pin.

The party then drove to Hickory, a small manufacturing town in the middle of the state, where about 500 persons assembled in the main street to greet the Wallace group.

There was a great burst of booing and heckling when Mr. Wallace first walked to the loudspeaker set up on the sidewalk. He asked for a chance to talk and suddenly the crowd became very quiet.

Day Of Reckoning Ahead?

The exercise of the franchise is a traditional American right and privilege

o merely vote to say you voted to my ay of thinking is much worse than not oting at all. In this election we have no hoice—by a combination of confusion nd legality we cannot vote for electors ledged to the National Democratic nomees the representatives of the [illegible] that is the only hope of the South traditionally and as a matter of actual fact.

The States' Right movement (Dixiecrats) is one founded on personal hatred (for Truman) bigotry and intolerance. Any movement so founded will surely die, but I surely would not for one moment deny the right of any citizen to vote for the Dixiecrats if he felt that was the thing to do.

Many of us can't see friend Wallace, or any of the other candidates. When you get right down to brass tacks this election regardless of all other issues reduces itself to the naked fact that it is either Tru- [illegible] Dewey, Democrat or Republican. [illegible] ocratic Party (National) I believe is the best one for the South and the nation. All of the deserters who have left the National Party (understand me it is their right and privilege to desert if they want to, and brother they deserted—they walked out, no one pushed them), are merely helping elect Tom Dewey who is now governor of the State of New York, which now has an FEPC law. All the diabolical schemes that are ascribed to Harry Truman (Roosevelt's choice) can be doubly ascribed to elusive Dewey. When Dewey gets in power and the big money boys get their mitts on the purse strings I don't think this States' Rights business is going to seem nearly so important as some other and very real problems that will come to live with us.

No, Mr. Editor, the ones who refuse to jump to the tune of the selfish or the bigoted and can find no candidate in the field they can honestly support, should not be ashamed. It takes a lot more innards to refuse to be swept along with any proposition that you honestly don't believe in than it does to drift along and be swayed by any thing that comes along.

There is no choice for thousands and thousands of good Alabamians next Tuesday. There will be another day and another election and possibly this whole mess will arouse the citizens from lethargy and inaction. My belief is that you will hear from "Tuesday's Fisherman" in a real and concrete way when we have a choice again.

PROUD OF FOLSOM

Editor, The Advertiser:

The close of the coming election has drawn into its final stretch. I wonder just how the poor electors feel that are pledged to the "States Righters?" They should have realized by now, as they will election day, the majority of the individual votes cast in the state will go to Mister Truman, which will prove that "misrepresentation" no longer controls the votes of a state.

Articles are printed in the paper stating the expenditures spent by the National Democratic Party and the Republican Party for campaigning and where the funds come from. There hasn't appeared anything giving a slight glimpse of where the States Righters campaign funds are coming from. Could it be they are scared to disclose the identity of the few corporations that allocate such expenses to try to make sure their party goes in the national capital, namely the Republican Party?

I'm proud, as the rest of the voting people of the state are, that Gov. Folsom has practically guaranteed us the opportunity to vote again for the National Democratic Party instead of going to the polls and not getting to cast a vote at all for our next president. The privilege of voting against a party with "prejudicial-effects in mind" will be a pleasure.

When the States Righters first started their campaign I anticipated a day would come when I would have the opportunity to write a letter with these contents. Our national security seems to be the least of Mr. Thurmond's and Mr. Wright's campaign speeches. Their main objective seems to be to convert "racial-discrimination" to "racial hate." They will soon realize the old custom of "you're red and I'm blue, so I'm better than you" no longer exists.

Dewey, Truman Swap Blows on Red Issue

34a(1)

Atl Constitution

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sat 9-25-48

Atlanta Ga

A top-rank—if long distance—debate appears to be shaping up between the Republican and Democratic candidates for President, with Communists and fellow travelers the topics at issue.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey said last night that some Communists and fellow travelers have "risen to positions of trust in our Government," said President Truman prepared to argue the issue.

Dewey said in a speech for a major Republican rally at Los Angeles that if present laws are not enough to cope with Communists who engage in illegal activities "we'll get ones which are."

In an obvious reference to Mr. Truman, Dewey said some people jeer at the problem of Communisim, "calling it a 'red herring'."

Other people, said Dewey, "get panicky about it."

"I don't belong to either group," the GOP nominee added.

Mr. Truman, traveling through Yuma and other Arizona points eastward to his next major address at Oklahoma City next Tuesday, was reported to have decided to bear down on the Communism issue then.

Sat 9-25-48

An aide on the President's special train said specifically that Mr. Truman's Tuesday speech will be directed toward Dewey's statements that Red influences are at work in the Administration.

Dewey said that the thing to do is to keep the people informed as to what the Communists are doing.

If they break laws against treason, he said, "they'll get traitors' treatment. If they engage in sabotage or any other laws, we'll jail them."

34a(1)

President Truman, on his way to Yuma, told a crowd at Oceanside, Cal., that he speaks the truth but that the opposition conceals its intent. He said:

"Try to find out where the rest of the people stand who are in opposition to me. See whether they will tell you or not. I don't think they will, because they are trying to make you believe one thing when they are really going to do another. It's a case of double talk.

Sat 9-25-48

"You don't have to find out what I mean when I say it. I say it so you can understand it. The record speaks for itself."

Mr. Truman's talk at Oceanside was the fifty-fifth of his intensive Western tour which is due to wind up with his return to Washington Oct. 2.

Henry A. Wallace, the Progressive Party candidate, also got into the atomic energy discussion. He said that if industry has too big a part it would hold back development of atomic energy in competition with established forms of power.

Speaking generally, Wallace told a Cleveland news conference:

"A vote for Dewey is a straight, clearcut vote for reaction, but a vote for Truman is a wasted vote because he talks one way and acts another."

This was in retort to Mr. Truman's Los Angeles plea that liberal voters not waste their votes on Wallace.

The Negro vote came in for discussion by Rep. Dawson, Democrat, Illinois) one of the two Negroes in Congress. Dawson predicted at New York that more Negroes will vote for Mr. Truman "than have ever voted the Democratic ticket."

In the South, where Mr. Truman's anti-discrimination proposals have stirred up many white Democrats, the Louisiana House voted to permit President Truman's name to be listed on the State's election ballot—but not as a Democratic candidate.

The Democratic State Committee in Louisiana two weeks ago declared Gov. Thurmond of South Carolina and Gov. Wright of Mississippi the official Democratic nominees for President and Vice President. They make up the States Rights ticket in the election.

Gov. Warren, the GOP Vice Presidential candidate, got in blows of his own against Communism. He told a news conference in Detroit that "I'd rather be defeated than have Communist support." Enroute to Detroit, he told a crowd at Marion, Ohio, that Communism would have no place in the Government under an administration headed by Dewey.

Courier Throws Full Support To Gov. Dewey

Pittsburgh Courier

Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 9-25-48

ALBANY, N. Y.—The Pittsburgh Courier will support the candidacy of Governor Thomas E. Dewey for the Presidency this year!

Announcement of this fact was made here Friday afternoon following a forty-minute conference between New York State's chief executive and Mrs. Robert L. Vann, president and treasurer of this newspaper.

34a(1)

Endorsement of the Republican nominee was carried over the radio and throughout the daily press of the Nation.

It will be recalled that The Courier supported the candidacies of the late Wendell Willkie in 1940 and Governor Dewey in 1944.

Sat. 9-25-48

Mrs. Vann's statement, which she gave to newspapermen following her conference with the Governor, follows:

"I have just told Governor Thomas E. Dewey that The Pittsburgh Courier will support his candidacy for President.

"Negroes are, indeed, fortunate in having all of the three major candidates for President, favorably disposed to the advancement and protection of their rights and interests.

34a(1)

"President Harry S. Truman and Henry Wallace have been dramatic in espousing the cause of Negroes, but Governor Dewey has been more effective in giving protection to their basic rights and well-being. He has achieved in New York, for Negroes, most of the objectives and has had enacted most of the laws which President Truman and Mr. Wallace have advocated for the Nation as a whole.

Sat 9-25-48

"Governor Dewey in the pursuit of these rights on a national level for Negroes and other underprivileged people will not have the uncompromising and bitter opposition of a large segment of his own party, which is certainly true of the Democratic Southern opposition to President Truman's civil rights program.

"Negroes cannot hope to have their civil rights protected and their interests advanced through the Democratic party so long as the South is in control of that party in Congress. At this very moment 105 of the 186 Democratic Congressmen come from the solid Southern States while twenty-two of the forty-five Democratic Senators come from these States. When Congressmen and Senators from some of the border States, which are Southern in their racial attitude are added to this number, the Democratic party is clearly under Southern domination when it comes to Negro rights and interests.

Sat. 9-25-48

"It is therefore evident that no Democratic President will be able to do anything on behalf of Negroes through the Democratic party, regardless of his sincerity and sympathy with the aspirations of Negro people.

"Politically, Negroes are dual personalities. They must consider candidates both from the standpoint of American citizens and as Negroes. It is when Presidential candidates are considered by Negroes, solely as American citizens, that the preference for Governor Dewey is decisive.

"He has demonstrated executive and administrative ability far superior to that of any other candidate. He has shown that he knows how to get things done. He has also shown a broad sympathy and understanding of the problems of all the people of the Nation.

"The Courier believes that the Negro people would have the best chance of winning 'equal citizenship status' and of having their national interests protected through the election of Governor Dewey.

"These reasons are briefly why The Courier, in the interests of Negro people in America, and in the interest of citizens generally, feels duty-bound to support the candidacy of Governor Dewey."

Knife Civil Rights Move to Unite Demos Behind Truman

Sun. 3-14-48

WASHINGTON.—The Democratic Party leadership this week announced that President Truman's hat is in the ring for re-election and immediately began making peace overtures to dissident Southern Democrats. With the party executive committee meeting Thursday and Friday, it was clear that Chairman J. Howard McGrath, by persuading Truman to make his open bid now, could not stop some demoralized Democrats from continuing to search the field for a different candidate. But the effect of this action was to discourage that quest and rally party regulars and the party apparatus behind Truman.

Meanwhile, Southern Democrats have been assured that while President Truman cannot afford to retract his Civil Rights message, the program will not be pushed by Truman Democrats either in Congress or the convention.

Sun. 3-14-48

AS A TOKEN of the administration's intentions, Truman Democrats absented themselves from the Chamber last Monday when the House voted on the Marcantonio amendment to restore in the Labor-Federal Security appropriations bills a proviso denying federal funds to states which discriminate against Negroes. Thus the Southern Democrats who attended in force, were able to defeat the proposal handily without a record vote. The Worker

The situation was summed up classically by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP-NY) one of the two Wallace men in the House, when in the debate he demanded, "Where are the Truman Democrats?"

McGrath's peace treaty with the Southern Democrats was accompanied by a declaration of war against Henry Wallace and the third party. Speaking at a forum in Philadelphia Tuesday night, the Democratic chairman said his candidate, Truman, had only two foes, "the Republicans on the right and the Communists and other third party elements on the left."

This reflected the conclusion of the Democratic topkicks that efforts to woo Wallace back to the fold were fruitless. It also indicated that the Democrats are seriously disturbed by information from privately conducted polls which reveal that Wallace supporters now number fifteen million.

Sun. 3-14-48

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of Gen. Douglas MacArthur that he is in the running for the GOP nomination is believed here to favor the chances of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-O). At this writing, the general is not conceded the possibility of copping the nomination, although he may come to the convention June 21 with a sizeable bloc of delegates. In the event of a deadlock between Taft and Dewey, it is believed that most of MacArthur's votes would go to Taft.

Despite this development, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg (R-Mich) is still given odds to emerge as the choice of the GOP convention if and when there is a deadlock.

The Michigander has the backing of strong Eastern financial groups who consider him the most competent operator to insure Wall Street the fruits of the Marshall Plan. These groups, whose opinions are reflected in the columns of Walter Lippmann, are offering a slate with Vandenberg in the top position and either Dewey or Stassen as running mate. Sun 3-14-48

The outcome of the New Hampshire primary Tuesday, which gave Dewey a six-to-one majority, would favor his prospects for the Number Two position, providing he is willing to accept the subordinate role.

The next primary is Wisconsin's on April 6. This is expected to give some indication of the relative strength of Dewey, Stassen and MacArthur. New York, N.Y.

The MacArthur candidacy has another significance quite apart from his chances to secure the nomination. Supported by the Hearst newspapers and radios, as well as by various anti-Semitic and anti-Negro organizations, his campaign will provide a banner to rally the cruder fascist elements in the nation. Out of that will come a stronger organized and openly fascist movement.

Both Truman, Third Party Cast Aside By CIO Official

The Advertiser 34a(1)

Montgomery, Ala

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—(AP)—The CIO is looking for a presidential candidate who shows a "superlative type of leadership," Jack Kroll, CIO political action director, said Thursday. Fri

In an address prepared for the CIO textile workers convention, Kroll cast aside President Truman and the Third Party. He said Sen. Robert A. Taft (R) Ohio, a Republican presidential candidate, "may be counted out" in next week's Ohio primary.

"It is Mr. Truman's misfortune to have succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt and what he does suffers by comparison with that great president," Kroll said.

Emil Rieve, textile workers' president, who called on President Truman earlier this week to eliminate himself as a candidate, "stated boldly the facts of the present situation," Kroll said.

"I haven't come here with any secret instructions," Kroll said. "The whole question of the CIO's position on the presidency is still to be decided." 4-30-48

Later he told newsmen the CIO probably would wait until July before announcing support of a presidential candidate.

Of the Third Party, Kroll said:

"I charge that these Third Party adherents are using the same tactics on the political front as the employers used against us on the economic front. They are attempting to divide us so that they can conquer us." 4-30-48

Kroll said the CIO's PAC is concentrating on congressional contests. He said a presidential candidate will be endorsed by the CIO after it completes a canvass of "the entire situation . . ." Realize that only a superlative type of leadership can take them out of the present crisis," Kroll said. The Advertiser

He called on the union to back CIO PAC in dollar contributions and in electioneering. Montgomery, Ala.

A message from President Truman read to the convention said the "pressure of official business" kept him from accepting an invitation to address the gathering.

"I am sure the textile workers of America, as they deliberate the policies which will keep their union strong and provide for the greater welfare of their own members, are conscious of their role as responsible citizens of America," the message said. The Advertiser

"I know that, like all good Americans, they are aware of the dangers that threaten the growth of democracy in many parts of the world, and that they will join in the common cause of maintaining and strengthening our democratic institutions at home." Fri. 4-30-48

The convention approved a resolution opposing the candidacy of Henry Wallace. The resolution also followed the line set down by Rieve. Montgomery, Ala.

The resolution predicted "Wallace and his adherents will not carry a single state and may insure the election of a Dewey, a Taft or a Stassen together with an anti-labor reactionary Congress." Fri.

The resolution also said "Wallace and his PCA can claim the support of only one organized group in America today, the Communist Party." 4-30-48

Truman or Dewey Can Garner Enough Electoral Votes Outside South to Win

Poll Gives Wallace 7% of Popular Vote; Civil Rights Implementation Our Concern

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The 1948 Presidential election will be decided by Northern and Western States, particularly pivotal States with large colored votes. As a matter of fact, it is possible and probable that the colored vote will be the deciding factor.

The South, even if it were solidly opposed to President Truman, which it isn't, cannot decide a national election.

On the other hand, either President Truman or Governor Dewey can garner enough electoral votes outside the South to win the election. Republican tickets have had to do so repeatedly, and the Democrats have done so occasionally.

Dixie Party Discounted

The "splinter party" which has nominated Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi for Vice President may not last until November.

If it does, it is not apparent that this ticket will carry more than two States—South Carolina and Mississippi. The others of the Solid South will give their electoral votes to Mr. Truman.

Wallace's Party Effective

The candidacy of Henry Wallace will have some effect on the election results. Public opinion polls indicate that he will receive 7% of the popular vote. 7-31-48

His campaign already has attracted a number of prominent colored persons and undoubtedly he will make inroads on the colored Democratic vote, but to what extent cannot be foretold at this early stage.

The Afro-American

We Are Fortunate

Colored voters find themselves fortunately situated. Both President Truman and Governor Dewey are excellent candidates. Mr. Truman has proved liberal, honest and sincere. Governor Dewey has shown himself to be liberal and a good administrator. His honesty is unquestioned. Sat

Both parties are committed to a civil rights program. As between the party planks on this issue there is little to choose.

This Is the Choice

So far as colored voters are concerned, therefore, the choice narrows itself down to a question of whether civil rights can be better implemented under a Democratic or Republican administration. Baltimore, Md.

One of the important issues on civil rights concerns itself with race and religious discrimination in employment. After he acceeded to the Presidency on Apr. 12, 1945, President Truman recommended to Congress legislation to make the Fair Employment Practice Commission permanent.

The Republican Party in its 1944 platform was unreservedly committed to "the establishment by Federal legislation of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission."

Full Choice In Florida

The News

The way has been cleared for Florida voters to vote for Truman, Dewey, Thurmond or Wallace in the November presidential election.

34(a)(1)

Eight Democratic nominees for elector had been chosen. But in this group sentiment was divided between Truman and Thurmond. Controversy developed, as in other states, over whether the nominees were bound to support the nominee of the national Democratic Party. A judge had held that electors were free to vote as they chose. The situation was badly mixed up. In response to a widespread demand, a special session of the Legislature was called to straighten out the tangle.

As a consequence, the voters will have an opportunity to vote for whichever of the four candidates they prefer. News

Names of the four main presidential contenders will be placed at the top of the ballot. Under the name of each a full list of electors will appear. The voter may merely make a mark in the circle under the name of his choice, thus voting for all the electors favoring that candidate. Or he may vote for each elector individually. 9-16-48

Four of the elector nominees who previously had been chosen by the Democrats will stand for Mr. Truman and four for Mr. Thurmond. Slates for each of these presidential candidates have been completed with the addition of four names on each. Dewey and Wallace slates also will be complete.

The Florida Senate approved by a vote of 25 to 9 an amendment to the election bill which gave the Wallace Progressive Party an equal place on the ballot with the other parties.

This action in Florida provides a sharp contrast to the situation in Alabama, where voters who wish to support Mr. Truman have no way of doing so.

An Alabama Supreme Court advisory opinion held that the electors have the right to vote for whom they wish. The candidates nominated by Alabama Democrats are all pledged against Mr. Truman and will support Mr. Thurmond. Truman supporters in this state have found no acceptable means of getting a slate of elector candidates on the ballot. The News

Sen. Joseph Langan, of Mobile, leader of these forces, has announced abandonment of efforts along that line and has advised voting for the regularly nominated elector candidates with a view to court action after their election to compel them to vote for Mr. Truman. Birmingham

Mr. Langan holds that custom and sound practice call for the Democratic elector nominees to vote for the candidates of the national party. Ala.

It is highly regrettable that in our own state a substantial number of voters are not going to have a chance to vote as they would prefer. News.

It is obvious that if strong two-party national government is to be served, state elector nominees should be on the ballot who will support the candidates of the national party. 9-16-48

IT SOUNDS FAMILIAR

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

As the presidential campaign gets under way, there is evidence that we are to witness the spectacle of politics being played in the realm of foreign affairs in attempts to curry votes with various minority groups in this country. Around election time, our candidates for president have a way of becoming acutely aware of wrongs inflicted upon the down-trodden Croats, Afghans, or what have you—always provided enough of them have migrated to this country to form a voting bloc worth courting. There is evidence that 1948 will be no exception.

(Geo)

It is happily true that so far there has been no indication of a break in the bipartisan foreign policy that has enabled us to present a solid front to the Russians, except for Wallace's rantings. But signs are already cropping up of sweet-talking European elements with sizable groups in this country. This practice has long been indulged in. It naturally impedes the carrying out of an intelligent foreign policy based on realities and tends to compromise us in foreign eyes when pre-election promises are not always backed by performance. Sat. 8-21-48

As an example, Gov. Dewey recently told an Italian-American group that he favors giving Italy control of her former colonies—Libya, Eritrea, Somaliland—under a UN trusteeship. There are independence moves afoot in those lands, but the Libyans, Eritreans and Somalis have not attained a foothold in this country and consequently are not likely to find a candidate-spokesman. The Italian vote is potent in some areas.

We distinctly recall, before and during the war, that the Italians were pictured as cruel, rapacious colonizers. We read that in Libya a favorite Italian stunt was to take the chief of a rebellious tribe up in a plane and drop him on his native village—without benefit of parachute. The Italians did not hesitate to use poison gas in colonial warfare, something the British and French refused to do, preferring to lick their natives fair and square and retain their respect.

Of course, all that was then and this is now. Italy has acquired a new look since she began to loom as a bulwark against communism, just as Germany is beginning to look different to some folks. It is claimed that Italy's former colonies will help solve her surplus population problem, and it may be that they should be given back to her. But decision in such matters should come through proper channels and not be swayed by embarrassing pronouncements from candidates making an obvious play for votes. 8-21-48

Truman's 32 Per Cent In Alabama

The Advertiser

Pres

THE Gallup Poll on the opposite page today is striking for two reasons:

1. In Alabama, 32 per cent of the voters would—if they could—vote for Harry Truman. Forty-three per cent want to vote for Thurmond, the Dixiecrat candidate.

34a(1)

2. Despite Truman and all that he is and isn't, Thomas E. Dewey leads him but 6 per cent—46 per cent to 40 per cent—in the national popular vote. In short, were the nominee other than Truman, a Democratic victory would be likely.

Montgomery, Ala

* * * *

THE Gallup Poll findings in the four Thurmond-Wright states are arresting:

ALABAMA—Dewey 16 per cent; Truman, 32 per cent; Thurmond, 43 per cent;

LOUISIANA—Dewey, 20 per cent; Truman, 28 per cent; Thurmond, 34 per cent;

MISSISSIPPI—Dewey, 5; Truman, 12; Thurmond, 66;

SOUTH CAROLINA—Dewey, 10; Truman, 26; Thurmond, 56.

We have no idea why Truman should have more strength in Alabama than in the other three states, nor why Mississippi is more overwhelmingly pro-Dixiecrat than South Carolina, whose own Gov. Thurmond is the standard bearer.

What we do believe more strongly than before is that there is backfire in the fact that 32 per cent of Alabama voters want to vote for Harry Truman—and can't.

We've been saying rather frequently that Alabama has a highly dubious distinction in being the only state in the Union where it is physically impossible to vote for Truman, nominee of the National Democratic Party. We've been saying that this is a circumstance that will not be quickly forgotten.

But in contending that Truman's name should be on the Alabama ballot we did so without any idea that 32 per cent of the people want to vote for Truman.

Our contention was that Truman couldn't get a nickel's worth of votes in Alabama, but that his name should appear on the ballot as a matter of principle.

But, on the basis of the Gallup Poll, we were wrong in a rather large way—but not nearly so wrong as certain others we might name.

* * * *

IT DOESN'T matter a hoot that the Alabama short ballot—the only one in the United States on which Truman's name doesn't appear—is the work of the people of Alabama. It was the people that voted so overwhelmingly in May to appropriate the Democratic Rooster to Thurmond instead of Truman.

It is true that it was possible for the Truman forces—they have to be called "forces" if they represent 32 per cent of the voters—to have qualified an independent slate of electors the same as did Wallace's Progressive Party and the Prohibition Party.

All of that is true. But that is the secondary fact. The primary fact was and is that the people are confused and have no clear knowledge of how the Alabama short ballot came to be.

As Folsom says, even the Republicans want Truman on the ballot.

Assuming the accuracy of the Gallup Poll estimate of 32 per cent for Truman in Alabama, we are certain that there is going to be a reaction in Alabama. It's going to be an unreasonable and unreasoning reaction, but no less formidable.

* * * *

THE question forthwith arises:

Is the Gallup Poll accurate?

It is difficult for us to believe that 32 per cent of Alabama voters want to vote for Truman. But if the Gallup Poll is wrong—it'll be the first time it's ever been wrong!

Both Gallup and Elmo Roper have for a decade and more been predicting all kinds of elections with unerring accuracy—with what may be validly termed "scientific accuracy."

Jun 10-17-48

That's the record. It's unassailable. There it is.

How can 32 per cent want to vote for Truman? The answer is that it is not for Truman they would vote—but for the nominee of the Democratic Party. That, we believe, is the sovereign explanation.

* * * *

TRUMAN'S strength nationally is arresting. An electoral landslide for Dewey impends, but only six per cent more Americans want to vote for Dewey than for Truman.

Plainly, had the Democrats been able to nominate a strong candidate for President instead of the pesky President Truman, the Democrats would have won this year despite the impediments of 16 years of power.

When one considers the profusely demonstrated infirmities and incompetence of Truman along with the fact that he is close to Dewey in popular strength, you have a glaring evidence of Dewey's lack of appeal.

The tip-off occurred in recent polls which showed, despite Truman's low standing, that Democratic nominees for Congress were running strongly. This clearly showed that the Democratic Party and what it now stands for—like it or not—have a wide and powerful appeal to the American people.

This is further noteworthy when it is considered that boom times find voters in a conservative frame of mind. It has been axiomatic that the country is "normally Republican," that it goes Democratic in distressed times when a leftward trend surges.

But today it is Dewey's 46 per cent to Truman's 40 per cent—six per cent difference. One speculates that the Vinson affair alone must have cost Truman 6 per cent.

When you make a roster of Truman's similar blunders, you at once realize that Dewey has had a mountainous good fortune in the identity of his opponent.

It would appear that it's a case of the country is going to elect Dewey as a means of preserving the country from the maladministration of Truman—but even so it doesn't like Dewey.

Political

South Unlikely To Hear Candidates

(34a)

WASHINGTON—Unless they shift their present strategy, neither President Truman nor Gov. Dewey will do much speechmaking in the South.

It was announced recently that President Truman will include Texas in his approaching coast-to-coast swing, but this was decided only after the victory of his supporters in the Texas Democratic Convention had made certain that Mr. Truman would hold the regular Democratic ballot designation in that State.

Previously it had been settled that the President will not go into any State where the Thurmond-Wright Civil-Rights ticket has usurped the Democratic column and in that category so far are Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana. And while Mr. Truman has not yet been ousted from the regular Democratic ballot position in Georgia he determined not to go into that State as soon as he learned that Herman Talmadge, a bitter opponent of his civil rights program, had won the Democratic nomination for Governor.

Mr. Truman has not replied to an invitation of the Young Democrats of Richmond to speak under their auspices. Gov. Thurmond previously had been invited and had accepted an invitation to address a State convention of Virginia Young Democrats on Oct. 8.

Aside from a great doubt whether speeches in which he would be compelled to defend his civil rights program would win Mr. Truman votes in the South, there is fear among his managers that he would be accorded the same rough reception Henry A. Wallace met with in that section.

In the nearer Southern States—Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee—the last thing most of the local Democratic nominees want is a visit by Mr. Truman. Democratic Congressmen from these States generally declared against the President's civil rights recommendations and they are hoping that the voters on that account will stick with them regardless of how they may feel toward Mr. Truman.

The Democratic National Committee has indicated that it has no intention of interfering where local Democratic candidates run on both the Truman and Thurmond tickets.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Truman scarcely could expect a warm welcome from his fellow nominees in the South.

Gov. Dewey likewise is doubtful that speeches in the South would help his cause, but his reasoning is different.

First, the Republican candidate is fearful that an active campaign on his part would tend to drive the warring Democrats back together. Second, as to the far South he is more than content with a situation that will divert 40 or more normally Democratic electors into the Thurmond-Wright column. Third, and perhaps most important of all, Dewey can't see how he can talk about civil rights in a way pleasing to Southern segregationists without exciting opposition by Negroes and other racial elements in Northern States whose votes he is even more anxious to cultivate. Gov. Dewey has put on the New York statute books the most effective law against racial and religious discrimination that exists anywhere in the nation. In all the big industrial States of the North and West this enactment is one of Mr. Dewey's most valuable political assets It is unthinkable that he would do anything to weaken the advantage thus derived in such vital States as New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and California to pursue a will-o'-the-wisp hope of capturing the South.

There are three Soutnern States—Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee—where any appreciable Democratic split might swing them to Mr. Dewey and he has a remote chance in Florida and Texas. The Republican managers, however, are turning to the opinion that their prospect in these States will be best promoted by keeping relatively quiet and leaving the Democrats scot free to fight each other.

A Warning To Democrats

The News

To the Editor of The News: Birmingham, Ala.

Don't be fooled or misled by the announcement of Big Jim that he is a candidate for president on the Democratic ticket. I say he is not a candidate on this ticket.

I am making a few predictions and I believe time will prove that I am right.

I say this is a scheme to distract attention from other parties who possess the power to really disrupt the South if given a chance.

Henry Wallace was at one time a Republican but he bolted that party and joined the Democrats to help radicalize the New Deal. He then carried his tactics so far the Democrats could not stand it any longer and made it so unpleasant for him that he bolted again and announced himself a candidate for president on an independent ticket. Now finds he has made a mistake for he cannot get anywhere on this ticket. Thurs 2-5-48

I predict that by the time we hold our national convention in Philadelphia in July, Mr. Wallace will bolt again and try to join the Democrats, Big Jim withdrawing in his favor and putting up a fight to nominate him for president on the Democratic ticket, and if this fails, try for the vice presidency, putting all the pressure possible on his delegates.

Big Jim could get far more delegates elected to support him in Alabama than he could to support Wallace but after they arrived at the convention, and Big Jim withdrew, he would have no trouble in getting them to stay with him. The News

I am anti-Wallace, Folsom, Arnall, Beech, Williams and anything they stand for. I am for Truman for president, a good strong, real Democrat for vice president, a platform that is acceptable to the South, especially Alabama. Birmingham, Ala.

Sparkman Suggests Sen. Lister Hill For Vice Presidency

Birmingham, Ala.

WASHINGTON, March 1—(AP)—The Truman administration tried today to deflect some of the heat of the Southern Democratic revolt by turning new fire on Henry Wallace's third party.

This strategy, as outlined by a party official, is to try to minimize intra-party differences over the president's civil rights program. Mon. 3-1-48

Many of the Southerners are as opposed to Wallace and what he stands for as they are against Mr. Truman's racial views. Thus on the Wallace score, at least, they think alike with the national Democratic organization leaders.

Sen. McGrath, of Rhode Island, the Democratic national chairman, sounded the new administration note in a week-end speech at Indianapolis. He said "A third party has as much place in American politics as does a third party on a honeymoon."

McGRATH ADDED that if Wallace goes on with his campaign he and his supporters "will either waste their votes or . . . give aid and comfort to reactionary candidates."

Administration supporters thought for a time they had a potent Southern ally in their new party strategy. Mon. 3-1-48

That was because Sen. Connally, of Texas, also aimed his main fire at Wallace and steered clear of the civil rights issue in the formal address he prepared for a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner at Raleigh, N. C. The News

But Connally, one of the few Southerners who didn't boycott the party dinner here last month which Mr. Truman addressed, apparently changed his mind on the way.

HE DEPARTED FROM his advance text to take strong issue with the president's call for anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and anti-job discrimination laws.

Declaring that Mr. Truman's civil rights program threatens a "lynching of the constitution," the Texas senator added: "We shall resist it. We shall not take it lying down."

Nevertheless, Connally was the only speaker at the Raleigh fund-raising banquet who mentioned the president by name. He said:

"President Truman has had to face more difficult and perplexing problems than any other man who succeeded to the presidency. I sympathize with him in his difficulties."

Of Wallace, Connally said the country is faced this year with his "hopeless and fantastic candidacy." The News

The rebelling Southerners went ahead with their plans, to chop away the Dixie political props Mr. Truman may need to win in November. Mon. 3-1-48

The South Carolina Democratic State Committee, meeting today, was expected to set in motion machinery which may result in the choice of independent presidential electors in that state, rather than those pledged to the party's nominee.

The Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee met at Jackson to pick a headquarters site for an eight-state "true white Jeffersonian" movement.

Sen. Sparkman of Alabama insisted that there is still "a lot of room for agreement." In an interview at Milwaukee Saturday Sparkman said:

"We wrote an acceptable civil rights plank for the party in 1944 and I think we can do it again."

Sparkman added that he thinks picking a Southerner as Mr. Truman's running mate would do much to quell the rebellion. His suggestion: Alabama's other senator, Lister Hill. Mon. 3-1-48

SUPPORTERS OF SEN. VANDENBERG for the GOP presidential nomination took heart at word that the Michigan senator has decided to quit trying to keep his name off the ballot in Nebraska's April 13 preferential primary.

Friends said Vandenberg's decision resulted from advice that he probably would have to resort to court action to prevent the listing of his name. The News

Another whose endorsement was made public by the GOP National Committee is Gen. Douglas MacArthur. The supreme Allied commander wrote from Tokyo: Mon.

"The Republican Party is peculiarly well-fitted vigorously to espouse this laudable purpose to further arouse in the youthful mind the all-important concept of public responsibility, for the Republican Party has never deviated from the proposition that all political power resides in the people." 3-1-48

Taft Amazes

The Record

"Sir, I had rather be right than be President . . ."

Senator Taft, it has seemed to me, tries to think he had rather be President but is forever being overcome by a cantankerous virtue that forces him, at risk of the Presidency, to be what he considers right. He was overcome that way last week when he voted against the proposed Fair Employment Practices Commission bill, declaring that the compulsory features would "do more harm than good in the end to the Negro race" and that race discrimination must be discouraged "on a voluntary basis through education, not by compulsory federal action." Imagine the reaction of Northern Negro leaders like Walter White to a statement like that from one of the two leading Republican candidates for President. With both parties, and opposing factions within both parties, hell-bent on winning the Negro vote this year, and with the civil liberties issue built to enormous size by present agitations, nothing but an absolutely irresistible itch for being right could have persuaded Bob Taft to say such a thing as this. Columbia, S.C.

Senator Taft is so disappointing sometimes with his too little awareness of our world responsibilities that it is good to be reminded of the thing he most offers his country, namely, high character in office. Tues. 2-10-48

There are three Southern revolts, not just one. There is the revolt against the administration's race policies. There is the long-standing revolt of Southern conservatives against the New Deal, represented by the so-called Southern conservatives who are re-invigorated now by reason of President Truman's New Dealing message to Congress. And there is the revolt of the Wallaceites whose thin remainders in the South are represented by Folsom, Aubrey Williams, Clark Foreman, etc., but could include again, if given a little success, many a time-serving politician and publicist who has run to cover for the present.

Add these three Southern revolts and you have something that mounts up. Even though the third group, the Wallaceites, has nothing affirmative in common with the other two, it does share the dissatisfaction with the Democratic party's present leadership. And the first and second groups have a very greatly affirmative thing in common, if they will realize it enough to join hands, to let Senators Byrd and George, for example, sit down with Governor Wright, Senator Maybank and other leaders against the President's civil liberties message. They have in common the oldest principle of the South, and the finest—state's rights.

There are one-time ardent New Dealers in the South who are putting an emphasis on states' rights now, too. Senator Lister Hill of Alabama, is one, I begin to believe. Once ranked with Claude Pepper for one hundred per cent New Dealing, Senator Hill is identified more and more now with the proposition that federal aids and benefits must be made through the states and under state control and that social reform, especially on the race question, must be achieved through state actions, too. The Record

And a funny thing is that this puts Senator Hill and Senator Taft together on many lists today. The federal aid to education bill, which would give the states the money and leave them alone, is the "Taft-Hill" bill. And when Taft voted with the Senate labor committee's minority against the FEPC bill last week, the name that stood beside his was Lister Hill's. Columbia, S.C.

There are too many other issues before America now to let the states' rights one be continuously dominant. But when you put Southern revolt talk on the high and true plane of states' rights, you include enough Southerners to make something menacing in revolt potential—and you lift a banner that has as many soldiers in the Republican party as in Democratic. Tues. 2-10-48

Even Governor Folsom of Alabama, has been forced to interrupt his Wallace talking with a states' rights speech for want of anything more forthright on the Negro question. Here's hoping Henry didn't hear him.

Henry A. Wallace says the public opinion polls on the November presidential election do not do justice to his third-party candidacy. Columbia, S.C. (gen.)

Many people who will vote for him, he declares, are afraid to tell the poll-takers so because of "terrifying pressures, threats." Fri. 2-20-48

On the other hand, Democratic leaders are saying—at least publicly—that the polls so far taken have indicated more votes for Wallace than he will get. The politicians insist that many persons who now intend to vote for Wallace will weaken after the Republican nominee is picked and as the campaign assumes more and more the atmosphere of a horse race between the two major nominees.

"Americans are more willing to throw their votes away in May than in November," they declare.

Most of the polls have come closer to estimating the popular vote in presidential elections than in predicting the electoral result. In 1940, Dr. Gallup's Institute of Public Opinion showed 18 states with 255 electoral votes as sure for Willkie or leaning toward him. Willkie won only 10 of the 18 with a total of 82 electoral votes. The 1940 Roper poll put the result somewhere between a Roosevelt victory by a subtantial majority, but not a landslide, and a Willkie victory by a narrow margin. It was a Roosevelt landslide, 449 electoral votes to 82. Fri. 2-20-48 The Record

In 1944 the Gallup poll indicated 292 electoral votes for Roosevelt, 239 for Dewey. Roper predicted Roosevelt would win by a "comfortable" majority. The Crossley poll gave Roosevelt 352 electoral votes to Dewey's 177. The result was Roosevelt 432, Dewey 99. Columbia, S. C.

WASHINGTON—The white supremacy Southerners in Congress are now talking among themselves about placing either Sen. Walter F. George of Georgia or Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia in nomination for the presidency against Harry S. Truman. This underground discussion neatly balances the overt plan of the West Coast left-wingers to put forward Henry A. Wallace as a suitable Democratic nominee.

One thing is already clear. This year's Democratic convention is likely to resemble one of those awful children's parties, at which large numbers of the dear little guests gang up to kick the stuffings out of the brave but tearful host. In his role as universal nursery maid to his party, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Sen. J. Howard McGrath, is going to have a pretty ghastly time preventing public mayhem. And this will be true, even though the Southerners do not carry out their threat to support a candidate of their own. Sun 2-15-48

Rebel Strategy

Birmingham, Ala.

OVERT SOUTHERN SUPPORT for a rival to Truman, even if limited to the convention, would almost certainly be going further than the Southerners desire. The Democrats have been in so long that the Southern leaders have almost forgotten the hungry misery of dwellers in the political wilderness. But some faint recollection of this horrid state still lingers in their minds. They are still reluctant to destroy their party's chance at the election. This is what may be expected to nip the over anti-Truman movement in the bud, although the plant may be expected to be watered with quantities of the same sort of Northern money that used to finance Gene Talmadge. The News-Age-Herald

On the other hand, the strategy which the Southerners appear actually to be adopting will be almost as difficult for the White House to handle. As of today, it seems probable that the Southern states, including as a minimum South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and Tennessee, will send uncommitted delegations to Philadelphia. The uncommitted delegations will be used to wrest from the platform committee a weasel declaration on the civil and human rights issue.

In the past few days, there have been anxious negotiations between Southern leaders and White House representatives. The Southerners dropped hints that if the White House continued so scornful of the South, the more violent expedient of sending over anti-Truman delegations to the convention would have to be resorted to. Sun. 2-15-48

Compromise

The News-Age-Herald.

THE PRESIDENT MAY DENY the intention of conciliation until he is black in the face. He may personally have no such intention. But his representatives respond to the hints of the Southern leaders, by hinting in return that the president would in the end approve a compromise on the platform's civil and human rights plank. The Southerners intimated that if such a compromise were forthcoming, they would then content themselves with holding a post-convention rally, as they did after the Wallace nomination in 1940. At this rally, they promised they would give free rein to their propensity for oratory, but would end by resolving that much as they detested Truman, they hated the Republicans even more.

It is symptomatic of the state of the Democratic Party that in these dubious circumstances, the White House political strategists are breathing audible sighs of relief. They are thankful for very little, these days. The arrangements outlined above are very little to be thankful for, because of two obvious drawbacks. Birmingham, Ala. Sun. 2-15-48

Weasel Words

The News-Age-Herald Birmingham, Ala.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, any weasel words in the civil and human rights platform plank will enrage and alienate precisely the groups in the North at whom the president's civil rights message was aimed. Yet if the weasel words are not spoken, the uncommitted Southern delegates will still be able to put forward their own man. In the second place, the present arrangements may be upset even before convention time, if the fair employment practices act becomes law at last.

House passage of FEPC is a foregone conclusion. So is Senate passage if cloture can be applied. Application of cloture turns upon four or five Republican votes, including Sens. Robert A. Taft, Harlan Bushfield and Albert Hawkes. Taft, it is known, will vote to approve cloture, although opposed to the FEPC bill. Hawkes is in a hard reelection fight in New Jersey, and the other waverers will be not uninfluenced by the fact that this is an election year. If FEPC passes, the Southern fat will really be in the fire. In the ensuing bitterness and recrimination anything may happen, and quite probably will.—©

OKLAHOMA CITY—Just when Democrats here, under Governor Turner, were planning to string along peacefully with Truman on a basis of Editor Gaylord's advice in The Daily Oklahoman that this is a border, not a Southern state, and "not to be dominated by memories of something that happened a full generation before Oklahoma was born," Senator Elmer Thomas comes home from Washington and proposes Eisenhower. Immediately there is a new face on affairs here. The Eisenhower name is like that. Whether he would run as a Democrat after refusing as a Republican, he is probably the only man capable of leading the Democratic party to victory this year, and politicians count that first.

Senator Thomas, too, warns against the Southern revolt, pointing out that Oklahoma is a doubtful state and any break in Democratic ranks would imply giving it to the Republicans. It has probably been given already, and part credit or blame will go to the civil liberties issue against which enough Democrats here are bitter to swell the Republicans ranks. They don't need to withhold electoral votes here. In a doubtful state like this, those who don't feel Democratic simply vote Republican.

What would happen to the Southern revolt, and the Wallace Third party, if Eisenhower were the Democratic nominee? The latter would fold up, undoubtedly. Would the South? Eisenhower is probably for the civil liberties program much more sincerely than Truman. If he became the Democratic candidate after having refused to be considered as the Republican one, would the issue of the campaign be "liberalism" against "conservatism," with every effort made to identify the general with positions leftist enough to gather all the ranks that once were Roosevelt's, or would the campaign be for national unity under him as a greatly appealing non-political figure?

Thurs. 3-11-48

This country wants someone to love. Eisenhower is just about the only one in sight. So much does it want some one to love that it might forget all the issues, decisions, and tasks before it just for the joy of falling in love. Newspapers in Texas and Arkansas were repeating last week what so many of us have said in recent troubled, hate-filled years. They began saying now the country misses that great Oklahoman, the late Will Rogers. Last night a nationally-known oil man here and a petroleum geologist told me all about how the oil shortage is the government's fault—the price policy during the war and the favoring of Arabian oil fields now with steel allocations needed for new production. They think we are just building up oil production and transportation facilities in the Near East for Russia's benefit when she takes them over. When you speak of the need of conserving American oil resources, they say the estimates of petroleum remaining underground in this country are about to be made meaningless by the digging of much deeper wells to find oil in both new and old places in quantities untold. It seems to me that this is a question which needs to be settled quick. If there is plenty of oil, maybe we won't have to have a war with Russia. The need of oil reserves for war is one of the great present incitements to war. If there really is enough oil for all on Planet Earth we might even get Palestine partitioned, or calmed. Truman Tempted To Weaken SEC

[illegible] Sat. 2-14-48

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—Boss of the Bronx Ed Flynn, who had a great deal to do with picking Harry Truman for vice president at Chicago, has a queer complex about liberalism. He has repeatedly urged Truman to appoint a Negro as federal judge in New York in order to attract the Negro vote, yet he turns round and tries to undercut a government agency which protects the economic welfare of both Negroes and whites.

This is what the charming Ed was up to when he visited at the White House this week.

His visit was aimed at persuading Truman to appoint Paul Rowen, of Boston, to the Securities and Exchange Commission, and simultaneously to make Ed Hanrahan, of New York, chairman. Sat. 2-14-48

On the surface, this sounds innocent enough. But below the surface, it happens that Hanrahan, already a member of the SEC, has come under the influence of Wall Street to such extent that it's a foregone conclusion that as chairman he would try to throw overboard the holding company act, one of the greatest landmarks in F. D. R.'s battle against the big utilities.

It also happens that Rowen is pledged in advance to vote for Hanrahan for chairman.

Finally, it happens that Ed Flynn's law firm represents some of the best-paying firms along Wall Street. Sat. 2-14-48

Only other thing to do is watch and see whether Truman follows Flynn's advice. Inside word is that he's inclined to do so.

ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH, Bob Taft's best socialite booster, has a new word for Dewey. In 1944 she called him "the little man on the wedding cake." Now she says: "Dewey is a souffle. He never rises twice."

It was Alice who said of Calvin Coolidge: 'He must have been weaned on a pickle."

Biggest wearers of Wallace buttons are the colored people. That's why Democratic leaders privately have virtually given up New York state as lost, especially if Dewey runs. Wallace, they figure, will swing all the Harlem vote, and Dewey would take most of the New York Jewish vote. Also, Wallace will carve out a sizable hunk of the New York City labor vote. Tammany leaders are so glum about Truman's prospects in New York state that many have already decided to sit it out. They're more interested in 1949—the election for mayor of New York. Sat.

Jim Farley is all for the Republicans when it comes to the income tax and the Taft-Hartley bills. That's one reason he says he can't make too many political speeches now—it might be embarrassing.

Democrats' Choice '$64 Question'--Kerr

The Constitution Tues. 3-23-48

Who the Democratic presidential candidate will be this year is "the $64 question," but whoever he is, he will win—so said former Gov. Robert Kerr, of Oklahoma, as he arrived in Atlanta Monday night to deliver the Jackson-Jefferson Day Dinner address. Atla.

Georgia Democrats will gather at the Ansley Hotel at 7:30 o'clock. Kerr's address will be broadcast over Radio Station WCON and a statewide hookup at 8:30 p. m. The dinner, staged by National Committeeman E. D. Rivers, will be attended by Acting Gov. Thompson, former Gov. Arnall, and a number of former gubernatorial candidates. It will be boycotted by Herman Talmadge and State Democratic Chairman James Peters. 3-23-48

"The Solid South could insure the renomination of President Truman," Kerr told reporters. "If the South were to oppose Mr. Truman's nomination solidly and were to back some other strong candidate, I couldn't say for certain who would win the Democratic nomination."

Asked if he would discuss the President's Civil Rights program tonight, Kerr replied: "I shall talk of human rights and States' rights."

The Republicans will nominate either Sen. Taft or Gov. Dewey "if they are feeling overconfident at convention time," Kerr predicted. However, if they are looking for a candidate with whom they will try to win, they will nominate someone else, Kerr added.

Henry Wallace's Third Party candidacy won't affect the outcome of the election, Kerr, a candidate for the U. S. Senate in Oklahoma, remarked. If he should take a maximum of five million votes from the Democrats, he would be getting less than 10 percent of the Democratic Party's votes. Since Wallace's tie-up with pro-Russian groups is intensifying the opposition to Wallace, more Democrats will turn out to vote this year, Kerr said.

Wallace and the Democrats

The Courier-Journal

I wish The Courier-Journal would really go all-out in denouncing Wallace. You still seem to believe he is sincere. Wallace is the late Franklin Roosevelt's gift to fame, his Secretary of Agriculture, Vice-President, and Secretary of Commerce. This Wallace is the same old pig-murderer, and not one whit different than he was when he plowed under the wheat. The New Deal made him, and he will cause Truman's defeat, but what's wrong with fumigating the Roosevelt-Democratic Party? 34a(1) (gen.)

The real Democratic Party was born in the South, and if it dies, it will be down South. National control of our party has long since passed into the hands of big-city bosses. Truman knows millions of Negroes have moved North, and that they control 151 electoral votes in five Northern States, while the 14 States from Virginia through Texas only have 148, few of which will go to the Republicans. Louisville, Ky. 3-14-48

I think you are unduly alarmed at the recent selection of Isacson to represent the Bronx in the House of Representatives. At least, you seem so in your tearful editorial, "The Bronx Election Packs a Big Wallop." As that district contains our highest per cent of voters of mixed racial strains, the result was but natural, to me. The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

I am glad Henry Wallace and Taylor are running, for next November we will find out where most of our adult screwballs live.

EDITOR, The Advertiser: I read in Grandma's column one day last week that Mr. R. E. Seibels asked that you publish a list of candidates who wish to go to the Democratic Convention, separating the ones who are for Mr. Truman and the ones who are against him. Tues. 3-30-48

I think that this is a good idea but I think you should go a little farther as I am sure that we have some candidates who feel very kindly toward Henry Wallace. We also have some candidates who have criticized Mr. Truman very severely because of his foreign policy. They also say he is controlled by the Wall Street group, but I've never heard of any candidates criticizing Mr. Truman for his political and civil rights for the Negro. They may claim they are for states rights, but you know a candidate can criticize Mr. Truman for his foreign policy and claim he is for states rights and at the same time be for political and social rights for the Negro. I think that this point should be brought out. Montgomery, Ala.

I have never voted anything but a Democratic ticket. I am not going to vote for Mr. Truman, but I had rather have Mr. Truman any time than Henry Wallace as a man who is trying to hide behind states rights. The Advertiser

34 a (1)

PM New York, N.Y.

I am not, as I've noted before, an expert in political analysis. However, having expressed myself in disfavor of the creation of the Wallace third-party movement when it was announced, I feel my readers might like to know how I view the present political situation as a citizen, now that the third party is a fait accompli and a definite force in the Presidential campaign. Tues. 3-9-48

Deutsch

I shall not vote for any Republican Presidential candidate now presented for nomination. Barring some miracle between now and November that would convert Harry S. Truman from a talking liberal to an acting progressive, I shall not vote for him. Should Truman bow out and should Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas become the Democratic Party's Presidential candidate, I shall enthusiastically cast my ballot for Douglas. If, by some fantastic turn of fate, Gen. Omar Bradley is drafted as the Democratic nominee, I would vote for him. Bradley has demonstrated, in impressive degree, his ability to administer a civilian agency on a democratic, enlightened basis. I might vote for Chester Bowles under similar circumstances. If President Truman runs, I shall vote for Henry A. Wallace.

At the 1944 Democratic Party convention, it will be recalled, President Roosevelt approved three men as acceptable running-mates—Truman, Douglas and Wallace. The convention chose Truman. One wonders how different might have been the course of postwar world history if Douglas had been chosen then, granted that Wallace hadn't a chance.

Liberal Sentiments Outweighed By Illiberal Actions

PM

I hold no personal animus against Mr. Truman. He did try, at first, to carry out the policies of his departed chief. But he lacked the vision, the essential statesmanship—the freedom from fear—to chart a true course or hold the helm firmly through the stormy political seas whipped up by the winds of war. Truman just didn't measure up to the great challenge of unprecedented demands. Men of small stature sometimes, through a fortunate configuration of circumstances, ride the swell-tides of history to success in high places. Truman was not fated to get breaks of history after being catapulted by a tragic circumstance into the Presidency—an office he wasn't prepared for and which he feared at first.

New York, N.Y.

Truman had been an efficient Vice President, with an impressive record as U. S. Senator before that. He wasn't cut out for the role of Chief Executive of the earth's most powerful nation, and circumstances haven't favored him. 3-9-48

It would be foolish and unfair to overlook Truman's laudable deeds in office. He did appoint General Bradley as Veterans Administrator; he did enunciate a splendid national health program; he did make several important pronouncements on civil rights as they affect racial and religious minorities. But his liberal sentiments and acts have been enormously outweighed by his illiberal deeds.

Truman drove many of the most enlightened public servants out of Washington. He has surrounded himself with assorted mountebanks, mediocrities and self-seeking schemers. Under his regime, the Pentagon has moved over the Potomac and Washington has become a key branch of Wall Street. His attitude toward organized labor has oscillated between lukewarm friendship and outright hostility—witness the gross betrayal of the railway brotherhood unions in 1946. He has brought the country nearer to a police state than it ever was before, even in wartime. He has done much, by word and deed, to spread the witch-hunting hysteria now epidemic in the land. The disastrous Truman Doctrine, instead of checking the encroachments of Communism abroad, has aided fascism and reaction and weakened democracy. The current news from Greece describing the medieval savagery of the government we are supporting militarily forms a terrible epitaph to the democratic pretensions of Truman's foreign policy.

Douglas's Record of Consistent Liberalism

Justice Douglas, on the other hand, has remained faithful to the fundamental precepts of the Roosevelt philosophy. He has a world perspective and is not lacking in courage or integrity. He has confidence in the strength of American democracy; he is not haunted by red phantoms; he is relatively young and certainly robust in outlook. He was an able executive and a consistent New Dealer in the Securities Exchange Commission; his record of opinions and dissents on the Supreme Court bench is almost flawless in essential liberalism.

PM New York, N.Y.

Douglas, it strikes me, is the ideal man to reweld the badly broken liberal ranks and forge a unity that could sweep a liberalized Democratic Party to power in 1948, both in the executive and legislative branches. I don't know what Wallace would do if Douglas were nominated; I believe he would manifest the wisdom and patriotism to withdraw and throw his weight behind the Justice. As Max Lerner put it pithily: "Must it be Truman?" There need be no inevitability in Truman's nomination if true liberals would fight hard enough for an alternative like Douglas. Tues

As for Wallace against the others, these are my present sentiments: I still feel the third party was organized unwisely when and as it was. But I still believe that Wallace, as a man, represents the foremost exponent of progressive democracy; he has made the democratic conscience articulate. None can overlook the fact that, if the Wallace candidacy was an act of disunity, there have been even greater disruptive forces in the liberal ranks. My fears that the Wallace candidacy might hurt the fight for a progressive Congress have been in large measure allayed by the Bronx incident and by the arousal of progressive citizens elsewhere through the new hope that Wallace has created in the breasts of men. Wallace has already forced the national Democratic Party far further to the left, on domestic issues, than any dared hope. Nobody questioned the nomination of Truman until Wallace's popularity became apparent even to hidebound politicos. I don't agree with everything the man says; I am disturbed by some third-party attitudes, such as the failure to support Paul Douglas against the insufferable Senator Curly Brooks in Illinois. 3-7-48

But I neither seek nor expect perfection. As of today, I'm prepared to vote for Wallace, with Douglas as the only foreseeable alternative.

Disregards Threats of Bolt From Party

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Apparently unperturbed by threats of southerners to quit the Democratic Party and put up their own candidates for President and Vice President, President Truman last Thursday declined to comment on the threatened revolt.

Reminded of the violent reaction of southerners to his special civil rights message to Congress, Mr. Truman told newspapermen at his press conference that comments were being made in the press itself. Sat. 2-14-48

Despite the angry tirade the press reports to be directed against the President's blanket demand for antilynching, anti-poll tax, anti-jim crow and other legislation banning discrimination against colored persons, only three concrete suggestions of reprisals were made by Southern Congressmen.

Baltimore, Md.

Southerners Air Threats

One was the recommendation telegraphed to Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi by Reps. Thomas G. Abernethy and John Bell Williams, that the Governor, at the Southern Governors' Conference, call for a show-down on the issue with party leaders in Washington.

The second was that the 11 States of the "Solid South" call their own convention to nominate a candidate for whom they could cast their electoral votes and thus throw the election into the House of Representatives.

The third recommendation was that Southern Congressmen back the resolutions now in the House judiciary committee to abolish the electoral college and electors and divide the electoral vote of each State in proportion to the popular vote cast for each candidate for President. Sat. 2-14-48

"The Congress should immediately pass such a resolution," Rep. Ed Gossett (Dem., Texas), declared, adding, "Then and then only will Presidents stop appealing to the minorities' passions and prejudices for the sake of votes."

Tempest in Teapot

Well-informed circles here believe that the reaction of the southerners is no more than a tempest in a teapot—a bold front put up for political purposes, for none of the threatened actions would aid the southerners politically.

If the threat were to become serious enough, some southerners believe, they might induce the Democratic Party leaders to choose one of their number as a running mate for President Truman.

The fact that Mr. Truman is from a border State eliminates the possibility of any southerner getting on the ticket with him. The Democratic Vice Presidential candidate in all likelihood will be an easterner or a westerner—one who will bring strength to the party ticket.

South Can't Expect Favors

As the South realized, its electoral votes are already in the Democratic bag.

It finds itself in the unenviable position of nobody bidding for its favors because of its solidarity in voting the Democratic ticket ever since the Civil War for the purpose of keeping colored citizens down. Sat. 2-14-48

Colored people are now political factors in pivotal States, some of which a party must carry to win a Presidential election; and both major parties, as well as the third party movement of Henry Wallace, are making strong bids for the colored vote in these pivotal States.

Meanwhile Republican leadership in Congress is playing its hands close to its vests on the civil rights legislation issue.

In discussing the President's request for progressive legislation for minority groups, Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (Rep., Neb.), the party whip in the Senate, said:

"We should go as far as we can to establish equal justice under the law for all. But I think Mr. Truman has dumped into the laps of the Democratic Party legislation that will split the party wide open and make the legislation most difficult to pass."

The Senator expressed belief that an antilynching bill had the best chance of passage this year, "if we can break a Democratic filibuster."

Wright Calls For Break With National Faction Unless Ways Change

Sabotage Charged

Delta State Governor Says Leaders Trying To Wreck The South

JACKSON, MISS., Jan. 20.—(AP)—Gov. Fielding L. Wright Tuesday asked an end to Mississippi's unique secret police force and urged a southern bolt from the Democratic Party if the "anti Southern" trend continues.

The secret police force, whose members are known only to the governor, was set up last November during a protracted strike involving Southern Bus Lines, Inc. The force is scheduled to go out of existence in July, and Wright called for a uniformed state police body to replace it. 1-21-48

In his inaugural address as Mississippi's 50th governor, Wright accused Democratic leaders of aiming to "wreck the South and our institutions." He declared the South "will no longer tolerate being the target" for legislation "which would not only destroy our way of life, but which, if enacted would eventually destroy the United States."

Wright referred to the southern record of adherence to the Democratic Party, but said that "when the national leaders attempt to change those principles for which the party stands, we intend to fight for its preservation with all means at our hands."

Regret To See It

"I would regret to see the day come when Mississippi or the South should break with the Democratic Party in a national election," he said, "but vital principles and eternal truths transcend party lines, and the day is now at hand when determined action must be taken.

"We must make our national leaders fully realize we mean precisely what we say, and we must, if necessary, implement our words with postitive action."

Wright claimed southerners are solving the race problem "in a wholesome and constructive manner," and said:

"Here in Mississippi and the South may be found the greatest example in human history of harmonious relationships ever recorded as exising between two so different and distinct races as the white and the Negro, living so closely together and in such nearly equal numbers." 1-21-48

Wright was elected lieutenant governor in 1944 and became the state's chief executive when Gov. Thomas L. Bailey died 14 months ago. He was chosen to a full term in the higher office last November. The Advertiser

Wright asked also for repeal of the state's "black market" tax on illegal sales, which has been applied only to the liquor traffic. He repeated a campaign pledge that he would not support any effort to repeal the Mississippi prohibition laws. Montgomery, Ala.

Lambasts Committee

In his remarks on southern traditions and the race problem, Wright attacked the President's committee on civil rights and declared its proposals "are deliberately aimed to wreck the South and our institutions."

How Much Damage Can Wallace Do?

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—The die has been cast insofar as Henry A. Wallace's third party candidacy for the Presidency is concerned.

There is hardly any likelihood of the conditions he imposed on his withdrawal from the race being met. At a news conference following his Monday night broadcast he said he would withdraw from the Presidential picture "should either of the major parties become definitely a peace party before the election."

It is a matter of what may be considered to be the basis of a peace party. Fri. 1-2-48

Nor is there any likelihood of the Wallace third party campaign lagging from any lack of funds. The Republicans, we may assume, will see to it that he is provided with all the campaign contributions needed to keep the movement alive.

It will be to the Republicans' advantage to divert as much money to the Wallace campaign as possible. For every dollar spent in promoting the third party will be an indirect investment in a Republican victory.

Support What remains to be seen is how far Wallace will be able to go in corralling liberal support which otherwise might be expected to go to the Democratic ticket. On this question opinion is still divided, though the weight of the argument is on the side of the Republicans. The Constitution

The best evidence of this was found in the reaction to the Wallace announcement which came from the two major party camps. Republicans on the whole were highly jubilant, whereas the Democrats were more sullen. Atlanta, Ga.

Whatever it may mean, the Republicans have made no effort to conceal the satisfaction with which they received the Wallace announcement. Generally, they look upon it as offering a decisive factor in the coming campaign. Fri. 1-2-48

Everyone agrees that Mr. Wallace has absolutely no chance of being elected. It is highly improbable that he will eyen come close to carrying a single state.

But it is not beyond the realm of possibility that he will pile up a considerable vote in some of the states. He might, for example, poll from five to 12 percent of the vote in states like New York, Illinois and California. In a close election that could mean the defeat of the Democratic ticket.

Solace The chief solace to Democrats in the situation is the feeling that if President Truman wins at all he will win by a comfortable margin—enough to absorb any defections to Wallace without affecting the outcome.

It is a feeling based on the history of all Presidential elections since the advent of radio as a vehicle for dissemination of public information. Radio has made it possible for people to sit in their homes and hear the issues of a campaign discussed personally by the various candidates. Fri. 1-2-48

Since it was first brought into general use there has not been a single close Presidential election. The tendency has been for the country generally to veer in much the same direction, probably the result of the people being able to hear all of the major speeches delivered by the respective candidates.

Mass Appeal Whether this is the cause or not, it is interesting to note that since the introduction of radio as a common piece of household equipment every winning candidate for the Presidency has won by a landslide. It may be taken to mean that a great majority of the American people are capable of thinking pretty much along the same lines, when the issues are brought to them personally. Fri. 1-2-48

If this condition holds true in the 1948 election, Democrats reason that Mr. Truman, as the party nominee, will either be elected by a big majority or will be defeated by what will amount to a Republican landslide. In either case the vote polled by Mr. Wallace would not be a decisive factor.

THE GENERALS ARE IN 1-A

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs. 4-1-48

The generals are in great demand today as candidates. As presidential draftees, three of them are in 1-A.

Two of them are conscientious objectors, but the third is ready for mobilization.

Hearst and McCormick want MacArthur. MacArthur wants MacArthur.

Eisenhower does not want to run, but the country isn't taking no for an answer. He was deferred from the draft when, some weeks ago, he said he positively could not be drafted. But the draft board is after him again.

Roy Roberts, newspaper publisher and the most potent of Landon supporters in 1936, tried for a time to advance Eisenhower as the Republican nominee. But Eisenhower's statement convinced Roberts, an intimate of both Ike and his brother Milton, that Ike meant it. The Republicans accepted Ike's word.

Now those double-dealing Democrats are talking of nominating Ike without consulting Ike—something the Republicans didn't think of. The prospect of Ike purloined by the Democrats is driving Roberts daffy. He bellowed yesterday across the Kansas plains that Ike could no more be drafted by the Democrats than by the Republicans. Roberts sounded frantic. Too bad. The Republicans made the mistake of asking Ike.

While Roberts huffs and puffs in his Dust Bowl, Ike's original sponsor in New Hampshire, the state which gave us the Democratic president Franklin Pierce, has revived his Eisenhower agitation.

AND from feverish Mississippi is raised the voice of a congressman who suggests that frustrated Democrats and frantic Republicans compose their differences by a joint nomination of Ike! 4-1-48

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Thurs.

That smacks of the ancient suggestion of the desperate John C. Calhoun that the constitution be amended to provide for two presidents serving together, one from the North, one from the South.

Thus in the case of 1-A Ike, it is not one draft board, but two draft boards, that are after him.

General George Marshall is likewise a conscientious objector. One senses that he meant it even more unreservedly than Ike when he declined to be considered a candidate for anything.

But yesterday the chairman of Alabama's State Democratic Executive Committee, said in a statement to The Advertiser that Marshall would be his idea—rather than Byrd, who is manifestly a lemon in other sions—of a substitute for Truman.

In naming Marshall, Chairman McCorvey was very disarming. He remarked Marshall's great and demonstrated gifts as leader and statesman and the fact that he is a Virginian. Then McCorvey touched the most sensitive of all possible spots in any Southerner:

"A splendid young officer who served in the office of the Chief of Staff under General Marshall during the war remarked to me . . . that he thought General Marshall, in his personal character, came nearer to exemplifying the spotless character of General Robert E. Lee than any man who had appeared in public life in America in the last three-quarters of a century."

Times

4-1-48

NEITHER the South nor any other grateful section of this country fails to appreciate the splendid gifts and character of George Marshall. The comparison with Lee is acute; it is handsomely valid. The Advertiser can even imagine Marshall pulling George Washington's load in the borning days of this country.

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala

But in employing the Robert E. Lee comparison, McCorvey has undoubtedly struck a chord that will make it tougher for Marshall to avoid consideration.

For a year this country has talked of three generals — MacArthur, Marshall and Eisenhower — as candidates for President. Despite earnest renunciations by two of them, they are in evident danger of draft.

It is a symptom of the frightened and despairing times, of fear of war with Russia. The Advertiser

It is fantastic that there should be enthusiasm and demand for three generals in both parties when nobody even knows their party allegiance or how they stand on a half dozen issues. For example, there is no more reason to assume that the Southerner Marshall is against F.E.P.C. than Truman, for Truman has a Southern background and is the grandson of a Confederate soldier. Montgomery, Ala

Theirs

But one thing is clear: a stampede more unlikely than Willkie's may take place in a few weeks in either or both parties. 4-1-48

Democrats' Plight

WITH the election still seven months away, commentators to a man are virtually counting President Truman out. Revolt in the South and the Wallace defection get the longer news columns, but there are also unfavorable historical precedent and the dwindling Democratic popular vote—both pointing in the same unmistakable direction. The gist of the prognosis is that without Southern or Wallaceite defections only a strong Democratic candidate could win; Mr. Truman is not a strong candidate; therefore The Commercial New York N.Y.

But what are the issues on which the President has lost so many followers? His Civil Rights program is hardly a new makeshift. It was fourteen months ago—well before the Wallace candidacy—that Mr. Truman appointed his distinguished national committee of fifteen to draw up a detailed diagnosis of the second-class citizenship situation in these United States. His February 2nd message on the subject was a logical consequence of their recommendations. There was grumbling at the time, but now that the President's position has become so precarious and he has refused to back down in his espousing of the basic civil liberties for all Americans, Southern fire-eaters have been piling it on. Boss Crump of Tennessee has been the most sanctimonious about it, with politicians from Virginia, South Carolina and Mississippi also in the van. Whether they persevere in their extreme hostility to the President right through the convention or not, their present furor is sufficient to damage Democratic morale irreparably. For what is the Democrat Party without the solid South?

The other party pillar, the big city machines (except for Philadelphia), also shows signs of tottering. In the cities where Negroes are a political factor the Wallace forces will seek to counter Mr. Truman's pronounced stand on civil rights by running Negro candidates for Congress. And, of course, in unions and urban districts where the Communists are strong, Wallace will pull votes away from Truman. And what is the main question at issue in this sector? Further appeasement of Russia. This is discussed elsewhere in these pages, but here again it suffices to say that Mr. Truman has the logic on his side.

The lack of enthusiasm he inspires, his inability to carry things through—however just his sentiments—and the slightness of the current impact on the public consciousness of the policies Mr. Truman advocates are other matters. And they are important when qualifications for candidacy are in the balance. But overt opposition to Mr. Truman as standard-bearer stems primarily either from enemies of civil rights or opponents of our firmer bi-partisan foreign policy.

None of the Southern bolters can have any illusion that an anti-civil-rights regional candidate of theirs would get anywhere in a national election. Nor can Mr. Wallace in his most sanguine moments hope to do much but deliver a certain number of districts to the Republicans. Both groups are heedless of the effects of their activities on the hard-pressed Democratic Party; they appear equally oblivious of the results as far as the nation is concerned. 3-12-48

Too Quick Of Promises

The News

There is an old saying that those who are quick of promises are generally slow to perform. Twenty-one of the state's 28 candidates for presidential elector have already promised that they will not cast electoral votes for President Truman. That promise takes no account of what may happen between now and the time for them to vote.

It is only a little past mid-March. The general election will be held in November. The electors will meet several weeks later to cast their official ballots for president. That means that nine months will pass between the time of making the promise and the time for its performance.

Many things may happen in those nine months. There is a nominating convention. President Truman is likely to be the nominee. A Democratic Party platform for 1948 must be adopted. That platform may contain a plank on civil rights which is satisfactory to the South. If President Truman runs on that platform, he will be bound by it should he be elected president. The Republicans may nominate a candidate and adopt a platform wholly out of line with Southern sentiment.

The News

Such a situation seems more of a possibility than that President Truman will put his civil rights program through a Democratic Congress. Suppose, then, that Alabama's electors late next November find themselves with a choice of electing Truman or making sure that a Republican is elected. Will they then want to stick by a promise made in March? Will they deliberately put into office a Republican president pledged to federal intervention in civil rights?

Birmingham, Ala.

The idea is questionable on strong counts. And yet that is what 21 elector candidates have pledged themselves to do. They stand committed to a course that might be highly objectionable to them when the time comes.

It is wiser not to make such blanket promises about the distant future in a time so rapidly changing as this one. In politics, as in marriage, one may act in haste to repent at leisure. Sat 3-21-48

For Truman Or For South, It Can't Be Both, Says Givhan

Montgomery Adv

By ATTICUS MULLIN

Walter C. Givhan, member of the Alabama Legislature, from Dallas County, vice-president of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, and president of the Dallas County Farm Bureau, has qualified for delegate from the Fourth Congressional District, and a presidential elector from the state at large, and he is running on a platform of preservation of the ideals of the South.

"A man can't be on both sides of this issue," said Mr. Givhan. "If he is for Truman, he is for what Truman stands for, and that means destruction of everything the South, and particularly Alabama, holds dear. If he is for the South, as our forefathers made it and preserved it, he can't support Truman in the Democratic convention in Philadelphia. And he can't advocate the nomination of any other man who runs upon a platform advocated by Truman.

Montgomery Ala

"The time has come for us to stand up and be counted. We can't be half white and half colored. The South is proud of her traditions. We don't want a doctrine promulgated by gangster political machines of the North and East, made up mostly of foreigners or men of foreign extraction, to tell us how to live.

"If I am elected a delegate, I promise the people I won't vote for Truman at Philadelphia, or any other man who advocates what he does on racial equality. And if I am chosen a presidential elector, I will withhold my vote in the electoral college from any man who advocates what Truman does, and seek the selection of a Southerner, who is true to the ideals of his section and who opposes the Truman ideals."

Word in Montgomery, Monday afternoon, was that an emissary of Gov. Folsom would leave at dusk for Mobile, with qualifications of a number of men for delegate-at-large, and for presidential elector. Things were shaping up, it appeared, for an all-South ticket for delegate and elector a Folsom-Wallace ticket for delegate and elector, and a Truman ticket for delegate and elector, with the Truman ticket sadly

Applause for Wallace Makes Powell Shift Tune

Tues. 1-6-48 34a(1) Pres (Gen) Daily Worker New York, N.Y.

Applause for the name "Henry Wallace," mentioned by Representative Adam Clayton Powell in a speech last Sunday in Harlem, visibly upset the Harlem congressman and caused him to depart from his prepared text. Congressman Powell (D-ALP, NY), in his prepared address to be delivered to a mass meeting called by the People's Committee, of which he is chairman, criticzed Wallace's candidacy as "unwise." Truman and Dewey were attacked in his speech as unwanted candidates. His political strategy for 1948 was given as campaigning for a man "like Eisenhower" on the Republican ticket, implying that the people could expect nothing from Truman and the Democrats.

Tues. 1-6-48

DEPARTS FROM SPEECH

Obviously affected by the warmth for Wallace shown by the crowd, Representative Powell departed from his prepared speech at that point. "I know that a lot of you won't agree with me in what I am going to say," he stated apolegetically. Daily Worker

Continuing, he reaffirmed his great friendship with Wallace and outlined his policy for Republican nomination of Eisenhower. The major hope of the Negro people, he said, was in the two old parties, but since Truman was out of the question, he advised the Negroes to look to the Republicans for a candidate like Eisenhower.

The temperature of the unheated Golden Gate Ballroom was matched by the cool reception in the audence gave to the political strategy outlined. The congressman's listeners remained quiet while he told them his intentions of campaigning until the Republican convention next summer for "a great American like Eisenhower whom I am ready to support 100 percent."

Warmth returned to the audience only when he told them that in case he lost the faith for Eisenhower he "would have to follow my conscience" and support Wallace.

Abernethy Opposes Vote For Truman Or Others With Similar Viewpoint

By ATTICUS MULLIN

The revolt against President Truman and the un-American "gangsters" of the big western and eastern cities—who control the Democratic Party organization—reached the point in Alabama Saturday where a candidate for presidential elector asserted that, if elected, he would "never vote for one of them" and a candidate for Congress, who also is a member of the State committee, called on Chairman McCorvey to call the committee together "to DO something!"

Tom Abernethy, a young man of Talladega who filed for presidential elector, made the plain and unequivocal statement that he would not vote for Truman or "any other man with identical racial views" if the people of Alabama chose him as an elector.

Asks Definite Stand

Frank Mizell, Jr., member of the State committee and candidate for Congress, called for a meeting of the State committee to make it certain that Alabama would not cast a single electoral vote for Truman or any other man running for President on the proposed Truman civil rights platform. The Advertiser

Abernethy said:

"I have qualified as a candidate for elector because I believe it the duty of Southerners to do whatever they can to protect their country and their section from attack upon constitutional government which has been deliberately begun by President Harry S. Truman.

"It is my sincere hope that the National Democratic Convention will repudiate Mr. Truman and his views and nominate for the presidency some individual whose concept of government is not twisted by hatred of the South and its traditions.

"If Mr. Truman is nominated at Philadelphia, and if I am chosen as an elector from Alabama, I will not cast the electoral vote in my keeping for him or for any other person with like views on the so-called civil rights legislation. Montgomery, Ala.

"If I am elected I will not accept as satisfactory some futile compromise which would give the party a lukewarm civil rights plan in its platform while the head of the ticket leaves on the record words which have already set in motion the machinery for the passage of un-needed anti-lynching legislation and unwise laws to abolish the poll tax. The blow has been struck. The damage is done. Sun 2-29-48

GOP No Help

"Should Mr. Truman or someone who thinks like him be the party nominee, I would not cast my vote for the Republican nominee. I see no gain for the South in choosing between two factions of demonstrated hostility to our way of life. If those circumstances arise, I will cast my vote for some Southerner who has proved through the years of public life that he will not sell the South down the river for the sake of personal or political advantage. On this platform, I seek the vote of my fellow Alabamians for the post of presidential and vice-presidential elector.

Frank Mizell, candidate for Congress in the Second District, and also a member of the state committee, said among other things in his statement:

Mizell's Proposal

"All that is necessary, in my belief, is for the State Democratic Executive Committee to meet and adopt, either in the form of resolutions or amendments to its rules a statement providing in substance the following: Sun 2-29-48

1. That the delegates to the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia be instructed not to vote for (a) adoption of any platform for the Democratic party which would favor federal enacted laws setting up a FEPC, a permanent civil rights commission, a civil rights division in the Department of Justice, a joint congressional committee on civil rights, or which would favor Federal anti-lynching laws, federal anti-poll tax laws, or federal anti-segregation laws (those propositions hereinafter referred to as anti-Southern laws); (b) and not candidate who favors the enactment of any such laws. Sun 2-29-48

2. That presidential electors nominated at the Democratic primary election of this state and subsequently chosen in the general election shall not (be bound) to vote for a nominee chosen at the Philadelphia Democratic convention, if such candidate or nominee favors federal enactment of the laws above mentioned, but that such electors shall be free, so far as the Democratic party of Alabama is concerned, to vote for any Democrat known to oppose the adoption of the above mentioned anti-Southern laws, and his action in so doing is not to be

But This Time State Finds It Has Candidates Galore

The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun 2-29-48 34a(1) Pres (Gen)

By MERCER BAILEY
Associated Press Writer

Many times in the past Alabama has had to draft candidates for national convention delegates and presidential electors. This year she has many more than there are posts to fill.

Several things have worked together to bring this unusually large number of candidates into the field, but probably the two major factors were:

1—President Truman's civil rights proposals which have brought a storm of protest from Southern Democrats.

2—Gov. Folsom's continual insistence that every candidate should have a lot of opposition so the issues of the race will be brought clearly into focus.

And the number of candidates probably will continue to swell until the Monday midnight qualifying deadline for the May 4 Democratic primary. This primary is all-important in Alabama because of the one-party system here.

Midnight Monday

All qualifying papers must be in the hands of Party Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, of Mobile, by midnight, Monday. Candidates then have an additional five days to file with the secretary of state.

The South's antagonism to President Truman's civil rights proposals has pushed the offices of presidential elector and national convention delegates to a rare prominence. The Advertiser

Already 19 candidates have filed to run for the eight delegate-at-large posts. Twenty-one men have tossed their hats in for the 11 presidential electors positions.

Old-time political observers readily recall past instances when party leaders had to draft candidates to fill these two usually routine, taken-for-granted posts.

Fifty-three candidates are seeking the 18 district delegate posts. The biggest election battles in the district are shaping up in the Fourth, and Sixth Districts. Each Congressional District is allowed two delegates. The fourth has seven candidates and the sixth has eight. Montgomery, Ala.

Seek Reelection

Alabama's nine congressmen and U. S. Senator John Sparkman also are seeking reelection. All have opposition with the exception of Freshman Representative Robert E. Jones, Jr., of Scottsboro, from the Eighth District. Montgomery, Ala.

A big political fight is expected, too, in the race for delegate-at-large. Gov. Folsom, Former Gov. Chauncey Sparks, and Former Lieut. Gov. Handy Ellis are among the 19 candidates from the state at large. The Advertiser

Folsom and Sparks have differed on political views in the past, and the governor defeated Ellis in the gubernatorial runoff in 1946. Sun 2-29-48

Another factor coloring the political picture is Folsom's announced candidacy for the presidential nomination. The governor in recent speeches has been very critical of President Truman and U. S. foreign policies. He said if sent to the Philadelphia nominating convention as a favorite son candidate he would challenge Mr. Truman for the leadership of the Democratic party.

Fuse Is Lighted

Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals, which lit the fuse under a restless Southland, have prompted some candidates to announce they would not support the president for reelection.

State Rep. Norman Harris of Decatur and Tom Abernathy, member of the State Democratic executive committee, said if chosen as presidential electors they will not vote for President Truman. 34a(1) Sun 2-29

Party leader McCorvey predicted Alabama would send to the national convention "unpledged candidates who will refuse to vote for Truman or any other candidate advocating the civil rights bill."

Thus far the delegate and elector races have overshadowed the other political contests.

Sen. Sparkman is opposed for reelection by Thomas H. Maxwell of Tuscaloosa, who runs for some post in almost every election. Speculation has been, and still is, high on whether Gould Beech of Montgomery, close friend and adviser to Gov. Folsom, would come out against the senator. Beech has declined to say one way or the other.

Two Opponents

President Gordon Person of the Alabama Public Service Commission has drawn two opponents so far. They are M. J. Williams, Jr., of Anniston and Mack R. Heatherly of Cullman.

Six circuit judgeships are contested. Broughton Lamberth of Alexander City, Folsom lieutenant, is seeking to upset National Committeeman Marion Rushton of Montgomery. National Committeewoman Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Montgomery is unopposed. The Advertiser

Thomas S. (Buster) Lawson and Robert T. Simpson, both of Montgomery, are unopposed for reelection as associate justice of the State Supreme Court.

Poll Claims Truman Is Stronger Than F. D. R. In South Despite Revolt

BY GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 20—The Southern Democratic revolt against President Truman will have to go a long way before its affects voting sentiment in the South.

President Truman is as popular with Southern voters as Franklin D. Roosevelt was in the early days of his administration, and more popular than Roosevelt was during his last term of office.

When Southern voters were questioned during January and February on their preference in various "trial-heat" races for the presidency, the vote for Truman ranged between 74 per cent and 76 per cent. This compares with a vote of only 69 per cent for Roosevelt in the South in 1944.

A number of Southern governors have threatened to withhold electoral votes from Truman unless he modifies his demands for civil liberties reform in the South.

It is possible that these threats may influence Southern voters against Truman. But a somewhat similar revolt in 1944 against the Roosevelt administration fizzled out long before election time, except in Texas, where an anti-Roosevelt movement known as the "Texas Regulars" polled approximately 12 per cent of the vote.

The problem facing any anti-Truman movement in the South can be seen from the following indications the president's popularity there in "trial-heats" against Thomas E. Dewey, Harold E. Stassen, and Sen. Robert A. Taft, and against Henry A. Wallace on a third ticket.

Birmingham Ala

Truman	74%
Stassen	19
Wallace	2
No opinion	5

2.

Truman	75%
Dewey	19
Wallace	1

3.

Truman	76%
Taft	16
Wallace	2
No opinion	6

This compares with recent elections as follows: in 1944 the Democratic presidential vote was 69 per cent in the South, in 1940 it was 72 per cent and in 1936 it was 76 per cent. Fri. 2-20-48

MANY SOUTHERN LEADERS have deplored the one-sided party situation in the South, claiming that the South would be better off if it had two strong political parties. It would then be in a better position to bargain for favors in Washington, runs the argument, whereas now the national heads of the Democratic Party tend to take the South's support for granted.

On several occasions in recent years the Institute has polled Southern opinion on the idea of two strong parties. Widespread support was expressed.

In 1939 57 per cent of all eligible voters with opinions said they thought the South would be better off with two effective parties. In 1943 the percentage rose to 59, and in 1944 to 64.

However, the second party would have to carry a different label from that of the Republican Party. Except in border states such as Oklahoma and Kentucky and parts of Tennessee, most Southern whites will usually not vote for anything that is called Republican.

The name for a new party which would have the most popular appeal in the South, judging by a 1943 survey, would be "Southern Democratic Party," with "Jeffersonian Party" and "Independent Democratic Party of the South" close seconds.

How To Put Southerner In White House Told

The Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Fri 1-30-48

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 29—(AP)—Sen. James O. Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi, predicted Thursday that if Southern Democrats withhold from the Democratic Party their electoral votes, "a Southern man would emerge as President of the United States."

He told the Mississippi Legislature the matter would work out this way:

The South, with 127 electoral votes, could throw them to a "distinguished Southerner." That would deprive the other parties of enough votes to "throw the election into the House of Representatives."

The United States Constitution provides that the top three candidates shall be considered by the House.

Republicans of the South, he said, would take a Southern Democrat before they would take a Northern Republican.

In the election in the House, each State would have but one vote and, he predicted "a Southern man would emerge as President of the United States."

STASSEN "REGULAR"

PORTLAND, Me.—(UP)—Harold E. Stassen said Thursday night he differed "to a major extent" with the political views of Sen. Robert A. Taft, Republican, Ohio, but promised he would labor for a Republican victory in the Presidential election regardless of who might be the nominee.

The former Governor of Minnesota, conducting a six-day tour of New England to gain support for his candidacy, told the Young Republican Club of Maine that he:

1. Would indulge in no personal attacks on opponents in the contest to secure the GOP nomination. The Constitution

2. Would "abide by the decision the Party and voters make in primaries and caucuses" and support the Republican nominee elected at the National Convention at Philadelphia. Atlanta, Ga.

3. Would endeavor to convince the Republican Party that its best chance of success was to meet issues "openly and frankly" and without any "behind-the-scenes" negotiations. Fri. 1-30-48

4. Would oppose the "reactionary and isolationist elements" within the Party.

S. C. DEMOS SORE

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(AP)—Forty-nine South Carolina legislators Thursday denounced the National Democratic Party for "concessions" to minority groups advocating ideas "flagrantly repugnant to the South." The Constitution

Because of this, they said, South Carolina Democrats should be called into convention to "reconsider" the "increasingly serious problem" of their position in the national party.

Saying they were writing as individual Democrats rather than as part of the 170-member State General Assembly, now in session, the letter signers explained:

"The South's distaste for some acts of the National Party has mounted until it now has reached the point that we should reconsider our position in the National Party. Atlanta, Ga.

"We emphasize that this is not a suggestion for withdrawal from the National Party. It is, however, a direct admonition that we take stock and review our position in the light of these elements.

"The question is this: . . . Is there now a sufficient divergence of the policies of the National Democratic Party on the one hand, and the policies for which our State stands on the other, to warrant that our State Party review its position to determine the best interests of our State Democratic Party?" "As a lion, creeping nigher,
Glares at one that nods and winks
Behind a slowly dying fire . . ."

Wed. 3-10-48

The lion has crept into Czechoslovakia. It has set its puppets in Korea, its guerillas in Greece. It is pushing at the Dardanelles, crawling broad-bellied over Italy. It has licked up little Finland. It is chewing its great jaws in Berlin.

In the special lexicon of Columnist Tom Stokes, the South is dividing our country in the face of this dramatic creep across the sea. Scoffing at Governor Thurmond's plea against "highly controversial civil rights legislation which tends to divide our people," my brave but prejudiced colleague says it is "a few noisy southern politicians and a minority of the southern people" who are dividing the country. Relieved of his prejudice, Tom Stokes is honest and intelligent enough to see that the burden of proof is the other way, that those who propose to reform a country, to change its institutions and ways in a manner revolutionary to certain parts, are the divisionists, not those who resist the changes as the South is doing.

Mr. Stokes reminds me of Bishop Oxnam, who says "the best way to destroy dictatorship abroad is to establish democracy at home," when it simply isn't so. He reminds me of Ellis Arnall who says we must "get tough with Russia but first improve democracy here," when it is just not true.. Much remains to make democracy perfect, but we have more than any other land, and certainly enough to face the world in crisis. The ones who woefully hurt their country in this circle are not those who resist revolutions at home but those who go around demanding as a pre-requisite to carrying on abroad crusades here that confuse, interrupt and divide our people. Wed. 3-10-48

Claude Pepper, as smart a gentleman as ever went wrong and wrong and wrong, is entitled to attention when he speaks against any denial to Southern voters of a freedom of choice in the coming Presidential election. Unlike Alabama's Jim Folsom, who just wants to keep the states' rights issue from obliterating his own, Pepper is talking sense. What the southern states do in this fateful moment must represent the will of southern voters or be worthless. These voters must have perfect opportunity to express that will as regards the presidency. That means that, by one device or another, they must have a chance to express themselves on the real issue raised. That issue is not civil liberties, for most of us are of one mind on that. It is how far to go in protest. There must be a chance to vote on (1) carrying protest to the national convention but abiding by the convention's decision and nomination, and (2) not abiding by the decision and nomination.

Wed. 3-10-48

That should be the issue in naming electors, it seems to me. It should be between electors who will be bound, and electors who will hold themselves free. If, to accomplish this, it is necessary to do as Governor Tuck asks and keep the national nominee's name from the November ballot, there should still be a chance to vote for electors who will be bound and ones who mean to be free. The Record

That funny noise from my state is our governor trying to do a Bronx cheer and a rebel yell at the same time. It's all in a demagog's day. But while Mr. Folsom talks of "fancy pants" and dreams he's Huey Long, while his childish mentors tell him he can mix communism and states' rights, while he dodges real contact with states' rights on the race question or anything else—a lion is creeping nigher.

The thing is, of course, beyond imagining.

It Looks Like Ike Will Be GOP Choice

Sat 1-17-48

Atlanta, Ga.

The political stage is filled with Hamlets—"Will Eisenhower run or not? That is the question."

Presumably, only Gen. Dwight Eisenhower himself is the one person not engaged in a Hamlet-like soliloquy in picking daisy petals off the stem while muttering, "I will, I won't."

It is a great opportunity for the political seers, and they are making the most of it.

One of them reports that within a few days Gen. Eisenhower will issue a disclaimer which will make the late William Tecumseh Sherman's seem downright doubtful. (Said Sherman, "I will not accept if nominated. If elected, I will not serve.")

There are others who say the General's continued silence indicates that he is letting the chips fall where they will and that while he does not believe in fortunetellers, he is taking no action against those who are gazing into their crystal balls and seeing a fellow whose last name begins with "E" in the White House.

Primaries One does not need a crystal ball to see that the General's candidacy is gaining strength. The Chicago Tribune, which wants MacArthur, is obviously angry about the growing Eisenhower strength and thinks it is a bad thing.

Sen. Charles W. Tobey, of New Hampshire, who is that rare personality, a genuinely liberal Republican, has given genuine substance to the Eisenhower boom by putting him in his State primary.

Until that happened, the Eisenhower boom was a sort of political ectoplasm, wandering like a mist across the political fields, scaring the daylights out of all rightist Republicans, such as Taft, Reece and Taber. The Constitution

Now it is no longer a ghost seen at the windows of the "sound" Republicans. It is walking about and kicking up dust.

The General's name will be entered in the Georgia Republican preferential primary and, before that, in the Arkansas primary. These two GOP tests, the first in the South since Reconstruction days, certainly will see Gen. Eisenhower as the winner, unless the Taft forces, which have had the Southern delegates in their pockets since the days of Mark Hanna, with one or two exceptions, count the primary votes. Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 1-17-48

Truman The fact is, Harry Truman has a chance to be elected against almost any Republican choice save Eisenhower. The chance admittedly is not a good one. It is not one to inspire a gambling man to wager heavily. But it is a chance.

The Republicans want to win. They also need to win.

Therefore, if the Eisenhower boom begins to snowball, they will take him and like him.

Taft is the man Truman most certainly could defeat. Dewey likely would win, as would Vandenberg. Stassen would have a chance. But any of these would find the Republican factions split and sulking in their tents. Sat. 1-17-48

So, they will take the General with three rousing cheers. He is the one man they apparently can get who would arouse the rank and file of the Republican Party to enthusiasm. Taft certainly can't.

Wallace It is interesting to note that the recent Gallup Poll revealed that Mr. Truman would win over Taft, with Wallace running a good independent race. The same report reveals Gen. Eisenhower could win over Mr. Truman with or without Wallace. The GOP will mull over that—furiously. But it will mull.

Wallace's candidacy helps any conservative save Taft, who hereby is revealed to be what he is—no conservative, but a highly intelligent man who for some distressing reason insists on trying to turn back clocks. The Constitution

The GOP also has discovered that while it will, by and large, get the Negro vote in the Eastern and Middle Western key States, it will lose quite a few of these votes to Wallace. It begins to shape up more and more that Wallace is not really going to hurt anyone. He will take from both parties about the same votes—the left-wing ones from the Democratic and Republican progressive groups. With him also will go the Communists and the crackpot fringe. Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 1-17-48

The big cities and labor will be important in the key States and labor has not yet got its machinery going. It won't go to Wallace

Hero Could Win Without Party, Many Think; What Did Mrs. Thomas Say In Washington?

The News BY FRED TAYLOR Birmingham, Ala.

Each day must bring new elation—and humility—to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower. Wed. 3-24-48

If he hasn't become the new political Messiah—apparently he still refuses to become one—he is just about the most popular figure this country has produced in many a day.

TAYLOR

First, the Republicans tried to thrust the presidential nomination upon the war hero president of Columbia University. Virtually everybody agreed that if Ike had decided to run, his election would have been a cinch. He could have overwhelmed all the GOP aspirants combined with President Truman and Henry Wallace thrown in.

But he turned the Republicans down cold.

FALL BACK ON IKE—Now, as more and more professional and amateur politicians in both the South and North fall off Truman, they try to fall back on Ike. The News

A Brooklyn Democratic leader says that two party clubs in his heavy voting Brooklyn district would repudiate Mr. Truman and announce their support of Gen. Ike.

Incidentally, this momentous development may cause the president to change his mind. The Southern rebellion over his "civil rights" proposals has made Mr. Truman all the more determined to pursue the course on which he embarked, it has been emphasized again and again from Washington. Wed.

But the Brooklyn defection is not to be dealt with lightly, we very probably will be told. It is the sort of thing that party bigwigs will consider nation-jarring and soul-jolting. 3-24-48

As for Gen. Ike, both Democrats and Republicans would like to have him become their standard bearer. Both parties need him. Birmingham, Ala

But would Ike need either party, if he decided to run? Apparently not. Most folks think he could win without a party!

MRS. THOMAS AND THE PRESS—Just what did Mrs. Lennard Thomas, Alabama Democratic national committeewoman, say in Washington, after having lunched with other committee members with President Truman at the White House?

Her statements, reportedly dealing with Mr. Truman's "civil rights" program and the South, were "misrepresented" by Washington newsmen, she said after returning to Montgomery.

The usually reliable Washington Post said that Mrs. Thomas became convinced that Mr. Truman, despite his unyielding stand on the "civil rights" proposals, meant no harm to the South. The paper quoted her as giving this advice to the people of Alabama and the rest of the South:

"My advice to the South," Mrs. Thomas told reporters, "is to forget the revolt, to get busy and raise funds for the Democratic Party, and to stand solidly behind Harry S. Truman."

After Sen. Lister Hill repudiated President Truman, Mrs. Thomas said Hill "expressed my sentiments perfectly. Now we can really pull together and get some work done. That is also what I said in Washington two weeks ago when I was misquoted by reporters." The News

Now Mrs. Thomas is being [illegible]d to resign as national committee woman and withdraw as a candidate for the post, which she has held for eight years. One of those who called on her to step aside was Brewer Dixon, Talladega attorney and State Democratic Executive Committee member. Birmingham, Ala

A supporter of Mrs. Thomas in her previous races, Dixon said he was "shocked and disappointed" by Mrs. Thomas' statements in connection with the president's "civil rights" program. Wed

Mrs. Carolyn P. Coots, Attalla, vice chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, also asked Mrs. Thomas to resign because of her "on again, off again" attitude. 3-24-48

Mrs. Thomas is unopposed for committeewoman. Mrs. Coots, who entered this race and withdrew, told Mrs. Thomas the only reason she did not have opposition for reelection was because of her strong stand taken before the state committee on the very same "civil rights" proposals.

It Still Looks Like Dewey

The News

Although the belief still is strongly dominant that this is a Republican year, that Gov. Dewey will be elected, it is evident that some elements of uncertainty as to the outcome have been underscored by recent developments.

President Truman's fighting acceptance speech, vulnerable as it was in some respects, particularly in his announcement in this way of his intention to call a special session of Congress, nevertheless rallied a party and convention that had been very low in spirit under the weight of internal dissension and national sentiment for a change.

Mr. Truman obviously does believe that his party has a strong case; Sen. Barkley did an effective job in presenting it. And unquestionably the president believes he has a powerful case against the present Republican Congress—and against the Republican record in other recent years. This aggressive, confident attitude on the part of Mr. Truman has made it evident that at least there is going to be a real battle—that the election is not going by default.

Mon. 8-9-48

* * *

Recognizing the efficiency of Gov. Dewey and his organization, it is apparent that there is no great popular enthusiasm for him personally. If the underlying trend for a change were not so strong, that weakness in personal appeal might be a critical handicap for the New Yorker. But his advantages are so strong that he may win comfortably despite that consideration. Still it may mean a good deal in cutting down his support. And that would be another factor of encouragement for Mr. Truman.

Birmingham, Ala

The "States' Rights" movement in the South is making it plain that it is not aiming to help Dewey, that its objective is to throw the election into the House of Representatives and defeat both Dewey and Truman. In the South this appeal will undoubtedly divert to Thurmond many votes that might have gone to Dewey.

If the election is thrown into the House, however, its choice, with one vote for each state, must be made from among the three candidates who received the highest votes. It hardly seems likely that, in such an event, Gov. Thurmond would be selected over both Gov. Dewey and President Truman. However, it also seems quite unlikely—though not impossible, of course—that no candidate will fail to win the necessary majority for election of 266 electoral votes.

Mon. 8-9-48

* * *

Arthur Krock, writing recently in The New York Times, reports that some of the politicians who a few weeks ago were saying Mr. Truman had no chance, are now saying he has at least a "fair" one. But events of recent days, he added, had not altered the view of most newspaper men and visiting state and local politicians in Washington that Mr. Dewey will be the next president. For the time being, at least, that remains the strongly predominant prospect.

RALPH McGILL

The Constitution

'Not Much Heat, Not Much Light.'

Thur 9-23-48

Atlanta, Ga

It is a curious presidential campaign, this one we are in.

It has not much heat, not much light.

Gov. Dewey, in the favorite's position, carefully let Gov. Warren pitch the campaign. Gov. Warren found something good to say about both parties.

Gov. Dewey, with equal care, let his former rival, Harold Stassen, of Minnesota, reply to President Truman's opening blasts at the record of the Republican Congress. It is not without significance that he did not ask Sen. Robert Taft, the party leader in the Congress, to do that task.

Strategy Now Gov. Dewey has opened with his own guns. He will not make a "personality" fight of it. The late Franklin D. Roosevelt blew Dewey out of a similar position with his famous speech in which he deplored the attacks on his little dog Fala, saying he did not mind attacks on him and his family, but he thought it very underhanded to attack a defenseless dog. The angered Dewey came back with a personal attack on Roosevelt. This took the minds of the people off issues. More persons like Roosevelt than Dewey. Dewey destroyed the image of himself which he had created. He will not make that error again.

Therefore, the campaign has little heat and less originality. President Truman talks about the "Gluttons of Wall Street." His phrases are as mild as an after-shaving lotion compared with the acidulous phrases with which Mr. Roosevelt sprinkled the "Economic Royalists," causing them to wince and leap and squeak with anguish. There isn't much hate in the race. Most of the dislike of Truman is directed at him because of Roosevelt.

Heat What heat there is exists in the South. Those States which haven't fallen for the highly-perfumed, richly-clad, well-kept political fourth party called the Dixiecrats, now soliciting in the political streets, but who still wish to see Truman defeated, have begun to think about a possible "out."

Thur 9-23-48

The Dixiecrats are out to destroy the Democratic Party. Many Democrats wish to keep the party but to get Truman out of office. Therefore, the device of withholding the electoral votes and casting them for some other Democrat has been planned in the event it is necessary to defeat Truman.

But, goes the newest argument, if Harry Truman is badly defeated anyhow, he will have been removed, and the electoral votes could then be cast for the party, since Truman would already be removed by the people's votes--and the desired end achieved.

There is no lessening of the determination to defeat Harry Truman. There is more and more wish to help preserve the party with new leadership. That explains the slowing down of bolts from the party to the fourth party.

For those who do not wish to remain Democrats, there still is the Republican Party and the need of a two-party system in the South.

The Senate There is little Democratic hope of electing Harry Truman. There is a great deal of hope the party may hold a slight lead in the Senate. Much of the party campaign is being centered in this field.

The Republicans now hold the Senate by a small majority of three seats. With 49 needed for a majority, they have 51 Senators to 45 for the Democrats.

This year the Democrats, because of their strength in the South, are forced to defend seats in only four doubtful States, Montana, New Mexico, Colorado and Rhode Island.

The Republicans have a fight in seven States. The doubtful Republican contests are between Sen. Joseph H. Ball, Republican, and Hubert Humphrey, Democrat, in Minnesota; Sen. George H. Wilson, Republican, and former Sen. Guy Gillette in Iowa; Sen. E. V. Robertson, Republican, and Lester Hunt, Democrat, in Wyoming; Ross Rizley, Republican, and former Gov. Robert Kerr in Oklahoma; Sen. C. Wayland Brooks, Republican, and Dr. Paul Douglas, Democrat, in Illinois; Sen. Chapman Revercomb, Republican, and former Gov. Matthew Neely, Democrat, in West Virginia, and Sen. John S. Cooper, Republican, and Virgil Chapman, Democrat, in Kentucky.

Of these, the Republicans believe they are in the most dangerous position in Oklahoma, West Virginia, Wyoming and Minnesota.

Needs In order to win control of the Senate, the Democrats would have to hold their present 45 seats and win four more. There is a possibility they can win four of the seven listed. But this is countered by the fact the Democrats will have real trouble in three of the Senate seats now held. There is a real fight in Montana, New Mexico and Colorado. In New Mexico, former Secretary of Agriculture Clinton Anderson, is having a hot campaign with Pat Hurley. In Montana and Colorado, incumbent Democratic Senators James Murray and Edwin C. Johnson are doubtful winners.

Therefore, while on the face of things it would appear that the Republicans might win the presidency, they may also lose the Senate. But that is a probability only if Dewey fails to catch on. If he builds up momentum he will carry in enough Senators to hold a slight edge.

That is why the political heat is not up in the torrid fig

The heat is localized.

Two Candidates in One Day

About MacArthur

34a(1)

WASHINGTON, March 8—(UP)—Rep. A. L. Miller, Republican, Nebraska, said Monday night the announcement by Gen. MacArthur that he was a candidate for the presidency was "the green light for his friends really to get to work."

Miller, an original MacArthur-for-President booster, said MacArthur "is one man who can be nominated and, if nominated, certainly elected."

Sen. George, Democrat, Georgia, hailed the General as "one of the outstanding military men of World War II and certainly one of the greatest administrators."

The Constitution

Sen. John H. Overton, Democrat, Louisiana, hailed MacArthur as a "great General" and a a "very great administrator."

One Southern Senator, James Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi, hailed MacArthur as a "great American who is above Party and above partisan politics."

Atlanta, Ga.

The Democratic National Committee declined comment on MacArthur's announcement, as did Senate President Arthur H. Vanderberg, Republican, Michigan.

Tues. 3-9-48

Vandenberg, chief Republican spokesman on foreign policy in the Senate, is considered a likely compromise candidate if the Republican Convention should be deadlocked.

In Albany, N. Y., Gov. Dewey's press secretary said Dewey also had "no comment."

Sen. John L. McClellan, Democrat, Arkansas, said he had great admiration for MacArthur, but "I don't know him well enough to know what he stands for."

MacArthur's statement came as no surprise here. His statement on China aid to the House Foreign Affairs Committee last Wednesday was interpreted in some quarters as indicating that he would run.

Sen. Homer E. Capehart, Republican, Indiana, said he always had been a "great admirer" of MacArthur.

Harold Stassen and Speaker Joe Martin, Republican, Massachusetts, other Republican presidential possibilities, also declined immediate comment.

Sen. W. Lee O'Daniel, Democrat, Texas, said: "The MacArthur announcement offers hope to a hopeless world—and a stop sign for Stalin."

Virginia Assembly Adopts Substitute Anti-Truman Bill; Dewey Dishes Blast

Thurs. 3-4-48

By The Associated Press

Rebelling Dixie Democrats today received a setback in their drive to keep President Truman's name off Southern ballots. But from the North came fresh support for a change in party standard bearers.

Virginia legislators yesterday threw out a bill to bar Mr. Truman's name from the ballot. But they kept another weapon to use against him.

At the same time, three New England Democrats — including Boston's long-time Mayor James M. Curley—urged Gen. Douglas MacArthur as their party's presidential candidate.

Curley, who last Thanksgiving was granted a presidential pardon after serving five months of a six-to-18-month mail fraud sentence, declared the nation is demanding that Mr. Truman stay out of the race.

The News

He joined former Govs. Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts, and Francis P. Murphy, of New Hampshire, in proposing the supreme Allied commander of Japan as the Democratic nominee.

CURLEY WAS ASKED whether he plans to start a move at the Philadelphia convention to substitute MacArthur to Truman.

"I don't think it will be necessary," he replied to a reporter. "The country is doing it now."

MacArthur has been mentioned frequently as a possible GOP nominee.

Birmingham, Ala

* * *

IN THAT CONNECTION, a campaign committee was organized in New York yesterday "to boom MacArthur to the end that the people demand he be nominated for president."

Thurs. 3-4-48

Warren Wright, of Chicago, acting leader of the group, said no pledged delegates will be sought. Instead, he added, the committee will rely on a nation-wide poll three weeks before the GOP convention to convince party leaders that MacArthur is the people's choice.

In Virginia, Gov. William M. Tuck approved a complete substitute for his "anti-Truman" election law bill.

The revised measure would permit the president's name to appear on the state's ballot, but would require presidential electors to vote as the Virginia party convention orders.

'Mac' Can't Do Much About It

Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON—When a fellow offers himself for public office he finds out suddenly that lots of people disagree with him, many challenge his claim for office, and he even discovers that some people he didn't suspect don't even like him. Some of this, of course, is a surprise. But it's what we call the American way, and the average person becomes inured to it, even if some never do exactly like it.

Atlanta

Now we have a case, in the higher echelons, public office for the first time at a late stage in his career. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who's been a professional soldier all his mature life, says he's willing to be President of the United States.

Wed. 3-17-48

As is usual in the case of such a man who has achieved an eminent peak in his career, Gen. MacArthur is surrounded by some lesser officials who bask in the reflected glory and take it upon themselves to protect their chief. They have done that already to the point of arousing quite a storm among newspaper reporters who are assigned to cover Gen. MacArthur's administration in Japan.

Now that Gen. MacArthur has become a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, they are getting even more dictatorial and meticulous on his behalf. They objected to radio news broadcasts carried over the Armed Forces' radio about the organization of anti-MacArthur veterans' clubs in this country and, as well, censored some editorial reaction in this country to the MacArthur candidacy.

Hereafter, it was decreed, only the "facts" about the General's candidacy can be disseminated in Japan. His public information officer, Col. Marion P. Echols, invented a new classification of forbidden news matter—"controversial conjecture," whatever that may mean. It seems sufficiently vague. If the organization of anti-MacArthur clubs by veterans in this country isn't a "fact," then what is?

Gen. MacArthur's aides should have known that as soon as he offered himself for public office he would, like any other man, become a subject for discussion and controversy, and properly so. His uniform can't protect him. That is our way, and we hope it continues to be our way. He can't do much about that—at least, we hope he can't.

Somebody suddenly woke up to this, possibly when the reaction to the Echols censorship was discovered. For, subsequently, Col. Echols announced that the General had issued an order that no form of censorship should be used to protect his name as a political figure. The public information officer said the General did not know about the censorship until informed by him.

Aside from the fact that such censorship in Japan would screen political news for thousands of Americans, both in the Army and civilians, who are absentee voters, it also shows once again the virulency of the censorship spirit among some of our top officials at this time. It is an ever-present danger and calls for constant vigilance.

It bobs up all around. Here in Washington there is a Security Board composed of top-level civilian, Army and Navy officials, which drafted a set of security regulations some time back classifying information for the press. Some of it was absurd and ridiculous censorship that would have been believed impossible.

One energetic newspaper correspondent here, Nat S. Finney, found out about these regulations when they had been put into effect in one agency, the Veterans' Administration, and exposed them in a series of articles for his newspapers, the Cowles newspapers in Des Moines and Minneapolis. Once he had pioneered, other newspapers and newspapermen took it up in new stories and editorials with the result that the regulations were modified. It was a fine piece of journalistic enterprise.

Wed. 3-17-48

Yet when a committee of newspaper editors voted the annual Raymond Clapper award to Mr. Finney, President Truman took the occasion of its presentation to criticize the award and minimize the situation on which the reporter had turned very much needed light. The President's failure to appreciate the censorship threat shows how far the acquiescence in the censorship philosophy and habit can go, of which the MacArthur episode is another example.

Another is the current proposal of Secretary of Defense Forrestal to set up some sort of a censorship—voluntary or otherwise—on what seemed to some of the newspaper representatives he recently called into consultation to be a flimsy pretext. This matter is still unsettle

FREEDOM TRAIN

o the Editor of The News:

It seems to me the major point in the Freedom Train fiasco is being missed entirely. Of course, I disagree with Green, Connor and Morgan, whose handling of the situation was wobbly, to say the least. Cooper and Jimmie have long been fence-straddlers and I still remember, as a newspaper reporter covering the Southern Conference of Human Welfare back in 1938, the spectacle of good ole Bull Connor running up and down the City Hall corridors exclaiming, "Long as I'm the po-leece commissioner in Birmingham, the niggers and white folks ain't going to segregate together!"

Personally, as an old Pickens County boy—born and reared—I will be delighted to stand in line with any colored man, anywhere, any time, to see the precious bits of Americana carried by the Freedom Train.

Tues 1-6-48

But as I said, the matter of segregation is a minor point. The question I raise is just exactly to whom does the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and the other documents of this Freedom Train, belong? I always had an idea they were the property of those who made them what they are today and that those persons had a right to see them anywhere, any time, under any circumstances whatsoever. I had an ancestor who fought Indians in Virginia 300 years ago and another who dropped his plow and ran off to join the colonists back in 1776 when the Redcoats came into view, and I myself got sucked in on the Okinawa-Philippines deal two or three years ago, which was no picnic. Incidentally, there were a lot of good colored boys in on that deal named Sam and Will and Mose, and there were some 77,000 fellows named Smith and about 35,000 named Jones in on it also. It has been my understanding these documents, after a fashion, belonged to me and Sam and Will and Mose and the Smiths and Joneses and a few fellows named Cohen and Washington and Tannenbaum, who might well question just what right a group named the Heritage Foundation—or for that matter

Harry Truman or Tom Clark or anybody else—has to tell us we can't see these documents unless we see them under rules made up by the said foundation? And another thing—just exactly who pays the salaries of that battery of spit and polish Marines guarding the train?

Frankly, I'm getting a little tired of being pushed around by the left-handed boys. As far as I'm concerned, they can turn their little Freedom Train around and take our documents—mine and Sam's and Will's and the Smith's and the Jones'—back to Washington and put them right back where they belong and stop making up rules about who can and who can't see them and under what circumstances. Incidentally, why are all these "Americanism" projects under the direction of people named D'Arcy something-or-other, Spaatz, Hovick, etc? Wouldn't it be nice to see just one Jones or Smith on such a committee? If these sentiments make me a reactionary—okeh, I'm a reactionary.

As We See It---

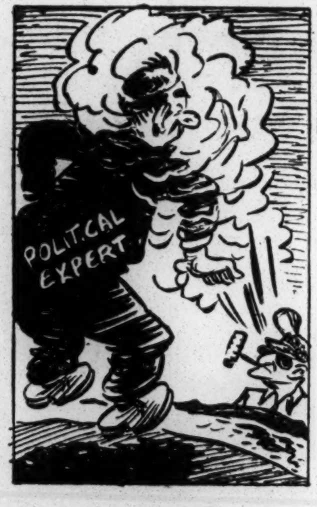
GEN. DOUGLAS MacARTHUR has gone and dried up what could have been a veritable fountain of speculation for the political experts to splash about in.



He was asked by the Senate Appropriations Committee to come home and explain about Japan to it.

2400

The Democratic minority on the committee voted to a man to have Doug brought home. This was instantly construed as a trick to confuse things for the Republican Presidential candidates. Commentators could have written columns on what the effect would be.

Sat. 5-29-48

However, all but three members of the Republican majority also voted for Doug's return—and one of that trio declined to express himself either way. Surely Messrs. Vandenberg, Taft, Dewey and Stassen must, together, have enough friends on the Committee to forestall Doug's homecoming if it was going to mean anything so far as next month's GOP convention?

Any dopester worth his salt could get still more columns of speculation out of that aspect.

Detroit, Mich.

But now Doug has gone and killed off the whole thing. He says he won't come home until AFTER the convention because his motives might be misunderstood. It's that kind sincere, honorable behavior by men in the public eye which makes the analytical prognostication industry such a tough racket.

Marshall Is Man For Presidency, Says McCorvey

Believes Dixie Demos Will Rally Around If He's Nominated

MOBILE, Ala., March 31 — (AP) — Alabama's Democratic Party Chief Gessner T. McCorvey today urged the nomination of Secretary of State George C. Marshall for president.

McCorvey, who previously had repudiated President Truman because of his civil rights stand, said he believed Southern Democrats would rally around Marshall.

"I AM OF THE OPINION that it would be best for the Democratic Party and best for the country, for the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia to nominate for president Gen. George C. Marshall," McCorvey said.

"He is one of our great Americans of our era, and has the confidence of all classes of our people, and knows more about our international affairs than any other living American."

The Alabama party leader said Marshall's family had a Virginia background. While his parents had moved into Southern Pennsylvania, he said the secretary of state was born "only about 16 or 18 miles north of the Mason and Dixon Line."

Wed. 3-31-48

"ALABAMA OCCUPIES a very important place at the national convention, being first on the roll-call of states," McCorvey said.

"If our Alabama delegation decided on Gen. Marshall, I believe many other Southern states will join us, as most Southerners are groping around trying to find someone we can support."

McCorvey, a candidate for Democratic convention delegate and presidential elector, said he was speaking his personal views and was not speaking for the state committee which he heads.

By RALPH McGILL

CONVENTION HALL, Philadelphia, July 14—Well, I stood there on the press bench and heard it and saw it, and there was a certain grandeur about it which made one's eyes burn a bit.

Charlie Bloch, of Macon, was putting Sen. Richard B. Russell, of Georgia, in nomination for the Presidency of the United States. Alabama had yielded. So, on the hot, heavy night with a rain storm raging outside, it was Georgia that opened the Democratic National Convention.

Charlie Bloch made a fine speech. It caught the delegates who were impatient and angry and were contemptuous of Georgia and the Southern States. It caught them, and it held them. Charlie Bloch laid it on the line. He told them his faith and the State's faith, and it'll be in a minority position and if they jest about it here at this Convention, where the old Democratic Party has disappeared and another one is emerging, it still is their faith. So, he held them with the sincerity and the emotion of his words.

So, Charlie Bloch told them in plain and simple, yet eloquent, words. And when he had finished, there was a demonstration. It began slowly. In the first place the aisles were packed with persons holding great pictures of Harry S. Truman for a demonstration when Arizona yielded to allow Missouri to put his name in nomination. It was difficult. Also there was no music for the first minute of it, but Sam Rayburn, the Chairman, spoke a word and a big organ boomed "Dixie."

Jour. 7-15-48

The State delegation fought its way into the aisles. All of a sudden there was a recognition of the fact that Georgia had played a man's game here, and a Democratic game. Georgia is against Truman. But the Georgia delegation was not owned by oil companies and it was not controlled by Washington officials. It did not have in it any man trying to elevate himself at the expense of the South's position, as did Arkansas, Mississippi and South Carolina. Georgia was honest and Democratic. Charlie Bloch and Jim Peters had played a straight, honest game.

This afternoon at about 5 o'clock all the plans of the so-called revolters fell to pieces. Arkansas' Ben Laney withdrew as a candidate after stirring all week and claiming more than 100 votes.

The Mississippi crybabies walked out, and half the Alabama delegation walked out like crybabies, too. But Georgia had come to the Convention and Georgia wasn't going to quit, but was going to see it out.

So, when Charlie Bloch came up there on the platform before the great crowd, ahead of the President of the United States by courtesy of the half of the Alabama delegation which had some courage left, they heard him.

With Georgia there came Virginia, Tennessee, South Carolina, Texas, Alabama, Florida—and to the surprise of all—the South Dakota banner.

Note that for a moment in the beginning, it was Harry Byrd, of Virginia, who was going to handle the Southern revolt. There was South Carolina's Olin Johnston and Strom Thurmond who were kicking up a lot of dust. And there was Laney, of Arkansas, who was going to be run himself. Texas had its men who were going to do big things.

They even had a great meeting at Tallahassee, Fla., and another at Washington and finally, one at Jackson, Miss. At Jackson, Georgia's Chairman, Jim Peters, smelling oil and worse, withdrew the Georgia delegation and held them there as observers. The Atlanta Constitution called him wise at the time, tonight's events proved it so.

Tonight, with Jim Peters and Charlie Bloch, the State of Georgia was the only Southern State left with a protest against Harry S. Truman. The others had failed or quit and run because they had made fools of themselves. But, in the end, it was Georgia and only Georgia that stood up to be counted. The Georgians hadn't quit, and they hadn't run.

So, the great organ boomed and the banners of the States that had come at last to follow Georgia moved about the aisles. It was a stirring moment and a big one in its own right. No one was fooled by it. Everyone knew it was a lost cause. Everyone was aware of the fact it was not presented as any real chance to beat Truman. But Georgia, of all the opposition states, had come through with opposition.

I noted a writer near me tapping out his lead. It began this way: "Georgia," he began, "followed by six other Southern States, nominated Sen. Richard B. Russell and began a futile demonstration in behalf of a futile hope."

Well, that was true. But the man didn't quite understand. The fact was that Georgia, not listed with the crybabies or the quitters, had stood up to be counted when the chips were down. And sharing full credit with her were the 13 Alabamans who wouldn't quit or run either, but stayed to yield to Georgia for the show.

So, the organ played on, with Rambling Wreck and Glory to Old Georgia and Dixie.

South Dakota's banner was in there because a kid in the delegation, moved by Charlie Bloch's eloquent speech, grabbed it and paraded on the theory that all Southern States ought to stick together and South Dakota was south of North Dakota. Arkansas didn't join in. And yet it had been Ben Laney, of Arkansas, who kept the spotlight on himself all week as the leader of the opposition.

So, whatever you think of the opposition, Georgia must be given a full hand because while the others talked and got themselves headlines only Georgia was able to act when the blue chips were down.

It was a demonstration meaning more than just opposition to Harry Truman by the South. Not many persons realized it, but what happened here today was that the Democratic Party of many parts—the Party we have known in our time—died. There is developing a new party. It will be based on strength in the cities. I am willing to predict that within 10 years it will have shaken out of it all the rural strength not merely of the South, but the other sections as well. The Democratic Party that inevitably must develop out of this convention of 1948 is going to be an urban party—one farther left than the one of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The death of the current Democratic Party and the birth of a new and different one will pose many problems. Sen. Alben Barkley and his associates may be able to make it into one which much of the South can support; but, that is in doubt. There will be no sudden change, but it is coming.

The scene this afternoon was a tense, wet, hot one. Hair was plastered on sweating heads. Coats and shirts were wet. Neckties were so soaked it was difficult to untie the knots for a change of shirts after the recess.

In this heat the Democratic platform came before the Convention. It had a stronger plank on civil rights than the Republicans had voted. The South offered minority-report amendments. The best of them was by Cecil Sims, of Tennessee. He made a commonsense, even eloquent speech for a reaffirmation of States' rights as reserved by the Constitution. He did a really masterful job, and the pity is he was not the only speaker on that side. Worse was the fact that Dan Moody, of Texas, made the opening talk and got the first vote. His resolution was defeated by a heavy majority.

Then came votes on the proposal advanced by Andrew Biemiller, of Wisconsin, and Hubert Humphries, of Minnesota, for a specific civil rights plank, listing all the items in the Truman report.

It was complicated by the fact that some States wanted to support the Committee report. I say that because, except for the fact I believe the civil rights victory would have been by an even wider margin, it is important to know the truth about these things.

The vote was 651½ to 582½. But had it not been for the try at supporting the Platform Committee, other states would have made the civil-rights program wider. It was not as close as the vote indicates.

It is important that the South know it had no friends here. It is important for the South to realize that the thinking of the Nation differs from their thinking. Here today the Western states joined with the East emphatically and even angrily to defeat the Southern position.

I am not here attempting to debate the issues but to let it be made crystal clear that the South has no friends in this fight. It will be a great mistake if our writers and our politicians do not let the people know it, and more important, know it for their own thinking and speaking and planning for the South. Opposition is not enough.

So tonight was just a climax. It was not as late as first seemed inevitable. The civil rights matter was banged through with bludgeons.

Tonight, after Sen. Russell was nominated, they brought on the Truman nomination and the big Liberty Bell in flowers and the hired demonstrators—and the show ran on to an end.

11 States Support Georgian

Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Jour. 7-15-48

By M. L. ST. JOHN
Constitution Staff Writer

PHILADELPHIA, July 14—(Thursday)—Eleven Southern States cast 263 votes for Georgia's Sen. Russell for the Democratic Presidential nomination shortly past midnight as they went down in defeat, protesting to the last against President Truman and his so-called civil rights program.

Voting for Russell and denouncing the civil rights program were: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

Sen. Russell explains use of his name as States' Rights candidate at Convention on Page Three.

Sen. Harry Byrd cast Virginia's 26 votes for his desk-mate, Russell.

Alabama later placed Russell's name in nomination for Vice President.

Texas, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, Virginia and South Carolina fell behind Georgia in a 30-minute parade and demonstration on the floor, following a dynamic speech by Charles Bloch, of Macon, boosting Russell for the Presidency.

Alabama's Atty. Gen. Albert Carmichael seconded Russell's nomination. He lauded Russell's fight in the Senate for agriculture, free school lunches and Federal aid for education and his work on the foreign policy.

Some newspaper people said the demonstration for Russell was more spontaneous than anything the Republican Convention offered for any candidate, including Dewey.

The South Dakota banner was in the parade for a time. However, Chairman Lynn Fellows said it was unauthorized since the delegation was pledged to Truman. He said "some kid jerked up the banner of an alternate delegate" and "joined in the parade for Russell until other delegates stopped him."

The band played "Dixie" and "Rambling Wreck," and cowbells and horns sounded as the parade progressed.

Russell's name was the first to be placed before the Convention, and he replaced Arkansas' Gov. Ben Laney as the choice of some Southern States who had considered quitting the Party. Bloch made it clear, amidst cheers from the Hall, that Georgia would not bolt the Party, but would stick to Russell to the end.

Georgia was enabled to let Russell's name lead the roll call when Sen. Lister Hill yielded Alabama's turn to Georgia.

One of the highlights of the Convention was Bloch's fiery nominating speech which was frequently interrupted by cheers—and boos—as he demanded protection of States' rights.

All cheered when he said Georgia would stay in the Party, just a few moments after Mississippi and half of Alabama had started a walk that is scheduled to end in a Birmingham "Fourth Party" Convention soon.

Handy Ellis, Chairman of the Alabama Delegation, announced the walkout move. He said Alabama electors were under pledge they would never cast their votes for Harry S. Truman. He said the Alabama delegation to the Convention was under pledge to walk-out of a Convention which adopted a civil-rights platform such as this Convention had.

The Georgian's candidacy received a decided boost when Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, withdrew as State's-rights candidate, releasing some 104 votes which his backers say were pledged to him.

Russell, the Southern leaders predicted, would receive a good share, if not all, of these newly released votes. These, added to votes already pledged the Russell backers, would thrust the Georgia Junior Senator into a sure-fire second spot in the Presidential balloting.

In a bristling warning that the South "will not be crucified on the cross of civil rights," Charles Bloch, of Macon, in a prepared speech asked the Convention to pick for its standard bearer a Senator who prevented any such program from being "crammed down the throat of the South at the behest of well-organized minority groups."

Bloch invited delegates from other states to ask their own senators for indorsement of Russell's record in the Senate.

In urging Russell for the presidency, Bloch said: "I want to say to this Convention that we delegates from Georgia are not bolters. We came to this Convention to participate in its deliberations as Democrats—as Georgia Democrats. We sit over there 72 strong—and we shall be sitting over there when this Convention shall adjourn sine die—and we shall then and there be opposing the nomination of any candidate who advocates the interpretation placed on the 1944 platform of this Party, such as the so-called civil rights program.

"We shall be opposing the nomination of any candidate, be he President of the United States or not, who advocates, openly or tacitly, such proposals as have been made here today in the platform of this Party.

Bloch quoted excerpts from one of Russell's speeches against FEPC and against encroachment by the Federal Government on the State government, and declared:

"You Democrats of the South—and of the North and the East and the West who are seeking a leader who will preside over the Government of the United States under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, have found one in the person of Richard B. Russell—true and tried.

"We from Georgia who have served with him for the common good of our State and Nation these past 25 years can add our testimoney to that of your own Senators who know him well. From 1921 to 1931, he served in the General Assembly, the last four years as speaker. In 1931 and 1932 he was Governor—an administration of the affairs of our State which has never drawn anything but praise. During his administration he led to the Chicago Convention of this Party a delegation committed to the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt for the first time. In January of 1933, he took the oath of office as Senator from Georgia. Re-elected in 1936 and 1942, he will be re-elected this Fall unless you call him to higher duties.

"In presenting him to you—I say to you delegates from all parts of the Nation here assembled—you know, or if you do not know you can learn here and now—you cannot longer take the South for granted. The South is no longer going to be the whipping boy of the Democratic Party. And, you know, or if you don't you can learn here and now, that without the votes of the South you cannot elect a President of the United States.

"I do not mean to suggest yet secession from the Democratic Party. But I do mean to say to you Democrats of the North, West and East—paraphrasing the language of the Great Commoner of a generation ago—you shall not crucify the South on this cross of civil rights," Bloch warned.

Bloch reminded the delegates that but for the votes of the South four years ago, Henry Wallace would be sitting in the White House today.

"Our thanks for that blessing to our Nation has been the infliction upon us of the civil rights program," he commented bitterly. "We propose to remain the last bulwark of a real democracy.

"Typical of that real democracy is Sen. Russell. Georgia offers her beloved son—her true Democrat—her patriot in times of peace and war—to the Nation," Bloch concluded.

During the afternoon, the Georgia delegation voted in favor of several resolutions designed to replace the so-called Civil Rights platform with States' rights proposals. It was defeated on these moves.

Earlier on the Convention floor, the Northern Democrats riveted an indorsement of President Truman's civil-rights program into the 1948 Party Platform in a stinging triple defeat for enraged Southerners.

The Truman-Barkley team will have to hit the campaign trail against the Dewey-Warren Republican combination with none of the comforting assurance of past years that all Dixie is firmly behind the ticket.

The struggle was over an old but flaming issue—racial and civil rights, and President Truman's stand for laws against lynching, poll taxes and racial discrimination in employment.

The South said those were things that should be left to the States. Attempts to write States' rights into the platform were defeated.

However, the voting power of the North hammered into the platform a declaration that:

"We highly commend President Harry Truman for his courageous stand on the issue of civil rights.

"We call upon the Congress to support our President in guaranteeing these basic and fundamental American principles—the right of full and equal opportunity of employment; the right of security of person; and the right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our Nation."

The final roll-call count was 651½ to 582½.

Representative Hugo S. Sims of Orangeburg, announced candidate for Congress, seems to be conducting a sort of xenophobic campaign, with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples, which isn't even a South Carolina organization, as his immediate target.

The salvation of the South, Mr. Sims declares, lies in organizing and bargaining with the Democrats and the Republicans in the 1948 presidential campaign. The South, his argument is, should convert itself into a minority group and so win for itself the recognition that other minority groups—the Negroes for example—have won from both parties. Record

The idea is not Mr. Sims'; it is imported from the Charleston News and Courier. The basic trouble with it is that it would not work.

If the Southern states had adopted this plan of divorcing themselves from party affiliation and bargaining with the two parties for their support they could have done their bargaining in only three elections in 70 years. For in only three elections since the election of Rutherford B. Hayes in 1876 have the electoral college votes of the South been decisive—the two victories of Grover Cleveland in 1884 and 1892 and the second election of Woodrow Wilson in 1916.

Harding, Coolidge and Hoover were elected without the support of the South and Roosevelt could have been elected for his four terms without the South's support. Every one of these elections would have been over, so far as the South was concerned, the day of the election and there would have been nothing for the South to bargain with and nothing, therefore, to bargain about. Columbia, S.C.

A South, committed to any independent party, would have simply deprived the Southern members of Congress of their seniority in the Democratic party and of the committee chairmanships which have enabled them to exert no inconsiderable influence on legislation, certainly during Democratic administrations. In addition the South by adopting the Sims proposal would deny itself the influence it has exercised in the Democratic conventions. Man. 1-5-48

The result of the adoption of the Southern bargaining unit plan would therefore have been and will be a net loss to the South.

Mr. Sims had better reconsider and give the idea back to The News and Courier. It is as unrealistic as one of Henry Wallace's schemes.

Truman Visit to Southland Is Indicated to Solons

BY EDGAR POE

(The Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

Washington—For the first time in a "blue moon" the Deep South apparently is going to see a candidate campaigning for president of the US. In bygone presidential years such a political oddity has been about as scarce as hen's teeth. New Orleans, La

This week President Truman indicated that he is going to do a little political courting down in Dixie along about golder rod time. He is going to Louisiana. The when and where in the state is yet to be determined. Sun

Chieftains of the Democratic party here, in accordance with recommendations that have already been submitted, said the Louisiana trip—assuming he is nominated at Philadelphia about seven weeks from now—means a swing through the Solid South that's got a few cracks in it.

5-30-48

See Way to Help

Sen. Allen J. Ellender and his new interim colleague, Sen. William C. Feazel, went to the White House during the week and submitted the invitation, and the president said he would include Louisiana this fall. He expressed doubt that he could make it on his way back from his Western trip next month.

The Louisiana trip, which undoubtedly will include New Orleans, will naturally mean that he will travel into other Southern states either on his way down or back to Washington.

The projected Louisiana trips fits into talk by some Democratic higher-ups. They have talked informally of such a tour, expressing the belief that a few rear platform appearances and extemporaneous chats would have a good effect in some of the states that appear ready to kick over the traces. Sun

Democratic presidential candidates have never "wasted any time" with the South, because the South has always been in the bag. The Republican candidates likewise have "wasted" no time in that sector. 5-31-48

Incidentally, the Democratic chieftains last week went Southward in picking as assistant to Sen. J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic national committee, William J. Primm, Jr., 38, of Montgomery, Ala., and Washington, D. C., was given the post.

Fits the Trend

Formerly associated with the late Alabama governor, Bibb Graves, Mr. Primm came to Washington in 1943 as an assistant to Sen. Josiah W. Bailey of North Carolina. He married Sen. Bailey's eldest daughter, but left the employ of the Senate in 1945 to return to private business. Primm is Young Democratic national committeeman from Alabama. 5-30-48

His appointment also fits in with another southward trend of late Sen. Alben W. Barkley, minority leader from Kentucky, a "border state," and ex-House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Texas have been named Democratic national convention keynoter and permanent chairman, respectively. The Times-Picayune

Meantime, the Republicans in Congress during the week suddenly awakened with a lot of headaches. With the Republican convention opening on June 21, they are disturbed about a lot of important legislation that apparently will die in committees.

After the president's "civil rights" message, GOP leaders said they would pass some sort of civil rights program. The FEPC was junked more than two months ago. They then turned to the federal anti-lynch law, but as the week ended, the bill still remained locked in the Senate judiciary committee. The anti-poll tax bill, which would affect seven Southern states, including Mississippi and Alabama, was passed by the House last year and still remains in Senate committee.

Sen. Homer Ferguson, R., Mich., and some other Republican senators, said during the week that the Republicans planned to press toward enactment of one or more of the bills. The Republicans in their 1944 platform went on record in favor of a civil rights and special welfare program. The welfare program embraced housing, federal aid to education, expanding the social security program and raising the minimum wage of 40 cents an hour.

The Times-Picayune

Above Minimum

The original plan was to raise the minimum wage to 60 to 65 cents an hour, but now they point out that most people in the lower wage brackets are getting more than 60 cents an hour minimum. New Orleans, La

Among the other major proposals staring the Republican leaders in the face now are selective service, Housed-passed oleomargarine, displaced persons, tidelands legislation, a farm program, recoprical trade and the Taft-Ellender-Wagner public housing bill. Several of these proposals appear likely to die in the 80th Congress. Sun

A series of major appropriation bills is yet to be acted upon, including flood control, rivers and harbors. 5-30-48

South Needs Two Parties, Says Stassen

The Record

34a(1)

Columbia, S.C.

Southern Democrats today might set a wary eye for a possible Republican penetration of Dixie, according to Harold E. Stassen, currently booming in Mid-western preferential primaries as the popular GOP nominee for president.

Stassen, in Columbia last night enroute to Miami said his party is "developing some support among Republican delegates of the South —and also plans to do some speaking in the South before the June (Republican party in Philadelphia) convention." Sat. 4-17-48

The former Minnesota governor left Columbia early today by plane for Miami where he will address a Republican delegation and a convention of the Variety Clubs of America.

Although declining to expand on his reference to a campaign in the South, Stassen touched on the lack of a two-party system below the Mason and Dixon line.

"I have found many indications that there should be definitely a two-party system in the South," he remarked in connection with the possible cultivation of a greater political following in the South in view of the present rift between President Truman and Southern Democrats.

He said the Democratic party has "ignored the South and taken it for granted" and that the Republicans have "ignored the South because they thought they couldn't get them anyway."

Stassen recently practically made clean sweeps of preferential primaries in Wisconsin and Nebraska where he easily outdistanced other leading contenders for the Republican nomination. He will make a bid in early May for a portion of Ohio's 53 delegates before turning his attention to Oregon where he will again meet New York's Thomas E. Dewey head-on in primaries May 26. The Record

Although indicating his present trip South would be brief, the Republican presidential hopeful hinted that his party might make a stand in the South to work on dissatisfied Truman Democrats.

Stassen declared that it was "too early to judge how the Truman vote would be affected" by Dixie Democrats' opposition to the President's civil rights proposals.

"I hope to find out something in Florida," he added.

Stassen also told reporters that:

His victory chances in the coming Oregon primary "look pretty good."

He "hopes to beat Mr. Truman" this fall. Columbia, S.C.

Stassen Talks Human Rights

The Washington Post

Miami, Fla., April 17 (U.P.).—Harold E. Stassen made a new bid for the support of Florida's 16 delegates to the Republican National Convention today with a plea for "balance between States rights and human rights" throughout the South. 4-18-48

Speaking at a Republican luncheon in a one-day stand in Florida, Stassen told Southern Republicans that "force and violence" will not bring progress in the South but that he favored national legislation "in matters of lynching and the poll tax." Sun.

In a full schedule which wound up with a speech tonight before the annual convention of Variety International, show business charity organization, Stassen held almost continuous talks with Florida Republican leaders, including the two candidates for governor—perennial Bert Leigh Acker of Miami and John L. TAFT PLEDGES GOP FOR CIVIL RIGHTS

His Overflow Cleveland Rallies Lead Backers to Feel That Stassen Wanes in Ohio

New York, N.Y.
Mon. 3-1-48

By WALTER W. RUCH

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 29—Senator Robert A. Taft finished a two-day swing through this city and its environs today with repeated demands for a slash in Federal taxes. Also, he promised that the Republican Congress would do everything possible to make an immediate reality of the civil rights program which has threatened to split the Northern and Southern Democrats.

Received with enthusiasm and by overflow audiences in three appearances this afternoon, Senator Taft conceded that Henry A. Wallace might garner 10 per cent of the popular vote next November, or about 5,000,000 votes—"and that's enough to swing an election."

Mr. Taft addresed crowds in Lakewood, a predominantly Republican suburb; in the heart of the Negro section of Cleveland and in University Heights, another Republican-dominated area. He spoke extemperaneously at each meeting, referring occasionally to penciled notes on the back of an envelope.

Urges Tax Cut First

The Times

Only by cutting taxes, and thus reducing the income of the Government, Senator Taft said in Lakewood, could the electorate hope to effectuate a cut in Federal expenditures. Congress was not by nature, he added "inclined to be a very economical body."

Federal and other tax receipts would aggregate about $60,000,000,000 this year, the Senator declared, or about one-third of the national income, which meant "that each of you works three of every ten days for the Government and only seven for yourself."

Then, in the city, at the Central Young Women's Christian Association Building, more than 400 persons, almost all Negroes, jammed an auditorium and adjoining corridors to hear Mr. Taft criticize the Democrats for promising civil rights and not fulfilling their pledge. Only the Republicans could mean what they said on this issue, he declared.

As quickly as Congressional consideration of the Marshall Plan for European recovery were out of the way, he continued, a GOP caucus would be held to decide which of several vicil-rights measures, as backed by the Republicans, should receive first attention.

New York, N.Y.

Sees Anti-Lynching Success

He intimated that the Republicans could get together sufficient strength to pass an anti-lynching bill at this session—a move he said he would favor and promote—and keep activated their plans for housing, non-discrimination in all fields, a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission and other problems related principally to the right of minority groups.

Relative to taxes and civil rights, however, Senator Taft said, repeatedly, that the Republicans could not do the job unless they had a Republican in the White House.

"I'm not so sure it was a good thing," he continued, referring to Republican control of both Houses of Congress as a result of the elections in 1946, explaining that many voters had now got the notion that everything which had happened in a legislative way since then was attributable to the GOP. 3-1-48

He said that under the United Nations, the President now had the power to take the nation into war without prior approval by Congress, and that through other Constitutional or statutory powers could consummate reciprocal trade agreements and initiate treaties.

"Most of our foreign relations," the Senator maintained, "consist of lending other people money."

President Truman, he continued, "wholly opposed to tax reduction," saying that the nation had to get its spending "sights down."

TAFT BIDS SOUTH HOLD TO TRADITION

He Hits New Deal 'European Theory' of Control Through Centralized Government

New York, N.Y.

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOIR, N. C., June 5—Senator Robert A. Taft urged the South today to preserve its sectional tradition of "individual liberties free from outside interference" by forswearing allegiance to the New Deal and "its European theory of control by centralized government." Sun.

"This is no time to abandon the system given us in the various declarations of principles made in the days of our colonial history and to adopt these foreign theories of central control that have failed everywhere they've been used," the Senator declared.

Mr. Taft brought his three-day southern campaign tour to a close with an address to a crowd of farmers and town folk. He spoke from a platform erected under shade trees facing a Confederate army memorial shaft in the public square of this manufacturing center in the western hills of the state. 6-6-48

The Senator asserted that the present Democratic administration was responsible for "letting Communists get into the national government" and added that President Truman was no[illegible] asking "for $50,000,000 to be us[illegible] get them out."

He scored Henry A[illegible]lace and the late Harry Hop[illegible]nfidential adviser to Preside[illegible]osevelt, as men who "believe[illegible] many of the features of com[illegible]unism and who hailed that totalitarian philosophy as just another form of democracy."

Without referring to President Roosevelt by name at any time, Mr. Taft declared that "it was the New Deal President whose soft attitude at Yalta and Teheran brought on the present world condition in which Russia is the greatest threat to peace and security."

"Even Secretary of State Marshal seems to think the Chinese Communists are all right," Mr. Taft asserted. "He won't insist on getting the Chinese Communists out of the Government."

A primary aim of the European Recovery Program is to stem the advance of communism, he continued, and added:

"It isn't so much the war damage that is holding down European production as it is the theories of central government control that have strangled freedom and justice. The Germans should be on the way to making their own living by now instead of costing the United States taxpayers billions of dollars for subsistence."

Senator Taft said that the first issue before the American people today was that of "spending and spending and whether to go on dishing it out to anyone who asks for it."

He praised the results of the Taft-Hartley Law and declared that it had "restored justice and equality in labor relations as never existed under the New Deal."

Tells Father's Visits to South

In opening his talk Mr. Taft recalled that his father, William Howard Taft, former President and Chief Justice, had frequently visited the South and had served as a Federal judge in a Circuit Court that embraced Tennessee and part of Kentucky. The Times

"My father often said that Southerners were the finest friends he had," the Senator declared. "He said that Southerners would do anything in the world for him except vote for him." 6-6-48

While Mr. Taft was criticizing the Democratic party for vetoing tax reductions and seeking a return of wartime controls, two lusty "booes" were heard from the crowd. New York, N.Y.

"I see we have several recalcitrant new dealers with us today," Mr. Taft said quickly as the crowd drowned out the hecklers. Sun.

Mr. Taft referred twice to President Truman by name. Once he said that Mr. Truman's present western trip was "essentially a campaign trip" and the other time he referred to President Truman's recent assertion that communism must be met by improving democracy at home. 6-6-48

"I approve making improvements at home and I have introduced legislation to that effect, bills for housing, education and medical welfare," Mr. Taft declared. "But the answer to Communism is not in what we are going to do. It is in what we already have done in achieving the greatest country in the world with principles that have been our guiding star since 1776." Sun.

Mr. Taft is spending the night in Lenoir at the home of J. Ed Broyhill, Republican national committeeman. He will return to Washington tomorrow.

NEW PLAN TIGHTENS CONTROLS OF 'VOICE'

WASHINGTON, June 5 (AP)—The State Department is getting ready to revise and tighten its whole system of farming out overseas programs to commercial networks. Officials said today that new "Voice of America" contracts with the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System would provide these things:

The State Department will write and control, through an expanded staff, all official news and commentary beamed to foreign listeners.

Entertainment and special features such as the travelogue series in Spanish for Latin America which backfired in Congress, will be contracted for individually. They will be tailored to official specifications and carefully reviewed, much as a radio sponsor goes over a domestic commercial program in advance.

"We're giving top priority to means of assuring adequate controls and a high standard of quality for all programs," Assistant Secretary George V. Allen said.

Taft: The 'Good' And The 'Bad'

The Record

If the members of the United States Senate had their choice in selecting a Republican candidate for President, most of them would vote for Robert Alphonse Taft.

This is because they like him, consider him a square-shooter, a man who always keeps his word. And this goes for a lot of Democrats too. Even when they disagree with Taft, they pay tribute to his honesty and courage.

This, in a body where men live cheek-and-jowl, know each other's faults and failures, is no mean compliment. Columbia, S.C.

It is also said in the Senate, even by those who like him, that: "Bob Taft is always right the second time." Wed. 6-16-48

And a friendly examination of his record indicates that this is true. Sometimes, in fact, Bob has had to wait for the third or fourth round to get right.

In 1943, for instance, Taft led the fight against the Roosevelt aid-to-education bill, and defeated it. This year he is leading the fight for it. n explanation he frankly states: "I had to give the problem a lot of study and saw there was a re need."

But it took five long years for Taft to wake up to that need—five years during which schoolhouses bulged, new war babies grew up, and the literacy rate in the United States dropped to a level comparable with Russia's.

Two years ago, also, Taft was leery of veterans housing. Now he has led the fight for long-range housing, including help for veterans housing. Two summers ago he was blasting the OPA and on July 1, 1946 flatly predicted: "The President's figures on possible price increases are a wild guess and for the most part dead wrong."

Prices, of course, have been going up ever since. And today, June 16, 1948, prices are much nearer the figure set up by Harry Truman than by Bob Taft. Wed.

In January, 1947, Harry Truman sent to Congress an economic recommendation for the nation, which didn't go down with the Republican Senate at all. But in September the same year, Bob Taft, speak- before the Commonwealh club San Francisco, outlined the same general program. 6-16-48

Once again Bob Taft was right the second time.

Taft Appraises Self

It is doubtful if Taft had his own changing social and economic views in mind, when, back in 1939, he remarked to a friend:

"They say I've improved since I've come to the Senate, but I'm just the same as I ever was."

However, it is a fact that Taft has improved. He is still just as brusque, just as frank, just as inclined to step on people's toes—though with such open-faced honesty that you have to admire it. But Taft has changed when it comes to policies—and changed radically. He has become more liberal.

For a man of Taft's background, this is a revolutionary change. For you have to remember that he springs from a family that put one grandfather in the Grant cabinet as secretary of war, sent another grandfather as ambassador to Russia, elected one President of the United States; and that the Taft family, owners of utility stocks, real estate and a prosperous Cincinnati newspaper, is one of the wealthiest in Ohio. Wed.

The tax laws that Taft sponsored while an Ohio state senator, for instance, in no way hurt the family fortunes. Nor have the tax revisions voted by the Republicans at this session of Congress been much different. However, those who watch Taft daily detect a steady shift away from the rank reaction-arism of House Republicans who would dump everything in the lap of big business, and predict that, one year hence, Taft will be proposing just as heavy high-bracket taxes as Harry Truman. 6-16-48

Once again, they say, Bob Taft will be right the second time.

Taft The Isolationist

In these difficult days, however, a President of the United States has to be right most of the time, the first time up to bat.

Especially he has to be right on foreign policy. And, although some islationists still consider Taft right, the majority of the nation and Congress has voted him wrong on the most vital foreign problems facing the nation. The Record

Before Pearl Harbor, for instance, Taft opposed every single major defense issue. If Congress had followed his leadership we would have been so miserably prepared that the Axis could hardly have been defeated.

Since the war, Taft has also been opposed to most of Vandenberg's foreign-affairs leadership. He was strong for curtailing the Marshall plan—if passed at all. And even after the Russians moved into Czechoslovakia, the Republican leader of the Senate charged that Truman was merely using the Russian bogey to stir up a war scare.

Anyone who looks up the written record can see that this was pretty much what the Senator was saying a few months before Pearl Harbor. "The situation," Taft told the nation in August, 1941, "looks infinitely safer." Columbia S.C.

All of which raises the question as to whether the American people, faced with urgent, unpostponable problems at home and abroad, can wait a year or two for the man in the White House to change his mind. This is something G. O. P. delegates to the Philadelphia convention will want to consider most carefully. If they don't, then the people who do the final selecting next November will be faced with the difficult problem of choosing between the present incumbent who makes snap decisions—sometimes wrong—anad a man who waits a couple of years to be right —the second time. The Record

Taft Merry-Go-Round

Vivacious Martha Taft, a great political asset to her husband, is sometimes given credit for the Senator's isolation. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, Washington's high priestess of isolation and a close friend of the Tafts, sometimes hints that she does a little isolationist proselytizing through Martha. . . Though drifting toward the liberal side, Taft still has an undying antipathy for New Dealers. Perhaps it's the trade mark. Though he has adopted some of their ideas, he dislikes their brand. To this is attributed his battle against Atomic Energy Chairman David Lilienthal, former administrator of the Tennessee Valley authority. . . . Taft even went up to New Haven to vote against Tom Emerson as a member of the Yale faculty, because he considered Emerson a New Dealer. . . . Taft has a well-oiled political machine in the South, has helped keep Mississippi's Negro delegates in line by giving a job in the Senate post office to the son of Perry Howard, Negro boss of Mississippi's G. Appeal for Negro Support Marks the Close of Primary Drive in Northern Ohio

New York, N.Y.

By JAMES RESTON

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CLEVELAND, May 2—Senator Robert A. Taft ended his primary campaign in the industrial north of Ohio today with an appeal to the Negro voters of southeast Cleveland.

Seeking to make good his prediction that he would take at least fifty-two of the fifty-three delegates in Tuesday's Republican Presidential primary election, he appealed to Negro voters on the basis of the Republican party's policy on education, housing, the poll tax, the anti-lynching bill and fair employment practices legislation. Mon. 5-3-48

He started this tour this afternoon in the Eleventh Ward at the Western Reserve Club, a vast dingy building at East Fifty-fifth and Cedar Avenues. There he declared that the Republican party had written the principle of fair and equal employment into its 1944 platform and that it was the Republican party's policy to provide better housing, better education and better protection for Negroes through its support of anti-poll tax and anti-lynching legislation.

At this meeting were sixty-one persons, including children and the speakers.

Discusses Bilbo Exclusion

Senator Taft then went on to the Twelfth Ward, where he repeated the claims and promises before about 250 persons at the "Paradise Bar." He added that it was mainly because of the efforts of the Republican majority in the Senate that the late Senator Theodore Bilbo of Mississippi had been barred from taking his seat.

He offered a detailed explanation of how the Republicans had kept Bilbo from entering the Senate chamber after the last "election" in Mississippi and his story of those proceedings was received with wonder and appreciation.

At the St. James Methodist Church Ohios' favorite son candidate took part in a "literary forum." Members of the audience asked him questions, listened to his broadcast on the Taft-Hartley Act and recited "quotations," one of which dealt with the death of Senator Bilbo and another with the thesis that "a wise man changeth his mind sometimes but a fool never." Mon

In his broadcast from this forum, Senator Taft said that the Taft-Hartley Act had restored a balance in the nation's labor relations and criticized those who had attempted to label it a "slave-labor" act. 5-3-48

It was notable, he asserted, that no objective critic had called for the repeal of the act. If it did need any amendments, he concludeed, a committee had been established to consider suggestions from any one.

Asks Vote of Confidence

~~The Times~~

The Senator went this evening into the suburbs of Cleveland, where the Republican party has considerable strength, and addressed rallies with Representative George H. Bender and Representative Frances P. Bolton, who, along with Governor Thomas J. Herbert and Senator John W. Bricker, have been speaking for Taft candidates for delegates to the national convention. New York, N.Y.

Senator Taft attacked New Deal bureaucracy and called for a vote of confidence, his statements being well received. Mon.

He took the overnight train for his home in Cincinnati, where he will complete his campaign with a speech and two radio broadcasts tomorrow. 5-3-48

Before leaving Cleveland Senator Taft told friends that he would be "very disappointed" if he lost more than six delegates to Harold E. Stassen, who is seeking 23 of the state's 53 delegates. Yesterday he told reporters that he thought Mr. Stassen might get one delegate because to the complexity of singling out the one Stassen candidate for delegate-at-large from the nine Taft candidates for delegate-at-large.

It is unlikely that any large "beat Taft" movement will be organized by union leaders as was freely predicted when Mr. Stassen decided to challenge Mr. Taft in the Ohio industrial areas.

Several factors seem to explain this. The first is that Frank J. Lausche, former Democratic governor and popular with the workers, is running for the Democratic nomination for governor against Ray T. Miller, who has strong organization backing.

It is possible in Ohio for a Democratic voter to ask for a Republican ballot on Tuesday and vote in the Taft-Stassen race, but to do so the voter would risk the chance of being challenged and would also miss the opportunity of voting in the Democratic primary. For this reason the "switch voters" are likely to be few.

A second reason is that Senator Taft has made a strong campaign in the last two weeks and undoubtedly has wide "favorite son" and organization support. N.Y.

A third reason is that, while many labor union leaders are hostile to the Taft-Hartley act, many workers do not feel any sense of personal outrage about the law.

Stassen Backers Dubious

~~The Times~~

It may be that Mr. Stassen will continue his primary success here on Tuesday, but events since the former Minnesota Governor decided to enter the Ohio race have made many of his supporters wish that he had stayed out.

These supporters, admittedly with the benefit of hindsight, take the view that Mr. Stassen's victories in the Wisconsin, Nebraska and Pennsylvania primaries made his campaign in Ohio unnecessary. If he does well here he will merely "keep the string going," while if he loses the cry will go out that he has been "stopped." Mon.

As it has turned out, in fact, Tuesdays voting gives Senator Taft a chance for a come-back, which he probably would not have had after the Nebraska defeat if Mr. Stassen had stayed out of Ohio. That, at least, is one thought that is running through the minds of Mr. Stassen's supporters tonight, and it does not cheer them very much. 5-3-48

The former Minnesota governor is due here tomorrow and will make a last-minute broadcast appeal to the voters. More than 200 Stassen-for-president cars, operated by volunteer supporters, will be touring the disputed areas for the next two days. They will distribute leaflets which proclaim that Stassen is the "man America needs" and what is important in this election, explain precisely how to mark the complicated Ohio ballot.

GOP Chilly About Recall Of Congress

Washington D.C.

Philadelphia, June 20.—If the Eightieth Congress is called back into session to consider housing legislation or anything else, it will have to be President Truman who calls it. Mon. 6-21-48

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), sleepy-eyed from the Senate's 44-hour footrace to adjournment, practically said as much on arrival here today.

"I see no reason for Congress to be called back," he told reporters.

"We have some long-term problems left over, but they are elaborate and complicated. They can best be handled in January."

Only in "Emergency"

Congress adjourned Sunday morning subject to recall at any time by Republican leaders. The President, of course, has the constitutional right to call Congress back whenever he sees fit.

Taft, interviewed by the press under lights after a round with news photographers and a trunk-shaking bout with a live elephant, made it plain Republican leaders will take up their own option only in an "emergency."

He said he saw no particular point in returning to consider the Taft-Wagner-Ellender long-range housing measure "because the House has rejected the bill." Taft added he regarded that as an "unfortunate mistake" but a special session wouldn't necessarily remedy it. 6-21-48

A reporter asked the No. 2 GOP presidential contender what he would do about the civil rights program if he were elected.

"Will you have any more luck with it than you did as Senate leader?" was the query.

Taft replied that the civil rights program failed this session because filibuster threats posed the practical problem of "taking out a month of the Senate's time" to pass the bills.

"We weren't able to sacrifice that much time," he said. "The best time to develop a civil rights program is at the beginning of a session." The Post

Ohio's favorite son at this convention said he hadn't yet had a glimpse of the preliminary draft of the Republican platform, but added: Washington, D.C.

A reporter asked if he favored a platform commitment for "further aid to Europe."

Taft said he'd rather not comment on that offhand.

Taft, interviewed by the press under lights after a round with news photographers and a trunk-shaking bout with a live elephant, made it plain Republican leaders will take up their own option only in an "emergency."

He said he saw no particular point in returning to consider the Taft-Wagner-Ellender long-range housing measure "because the House has rejected the bill." Taft added he regarded that as an "unfortunate mistake" but a special session wouldn't necessarily remedy it. 6-21-48

A reporter asked the No. 2 GOP presidential contender what he would do about the civil rights program if he were elected.

"Will you have any more luck with it than you did as Senate leader?" was the query.

Taft replied that the civil rights program failed this session because filibuster threats posed the practical problem of "taking out a month of the Senate's time" to pass the bills.

"We weren't able to sacrifice that much time," he said. "The best time to develop a civil rights program is at the beginning of a session." The Post

Ohio's favorite son at this convention said he hadn't yet had a glimpse of the preliminary draft of the Republican platform, but added:

Washington, D.C.

"I think it will uphold the record of the Republican Congress. It may add other points we haven't dealt with." Mon. 6-21-48

A reporter asked if he favored a platform commitment for "further aid to Europe."

Taft said he'd rather not comment on that offhand.

A Light Has Dawned On Strom Thurmond

7-21-48
The Courier-Journal
34a(1)

SOUTH CAROLINA'S Governor STROM THURMOND, the rebel States Rights Democrats' choice for President, is plainly troubled. At the Birmingham conference where he was nominated, he must have seen many a sign that everybody there did not stand on the high ground of constitutional principle which he claimed as his base.

The signs were everywhere. One of them was the small, hard core of the meeting's control. The thousands of visitors and "delegates" in the hall, mostly home-towners, cheered the Confederate flags and the impassioned reminders of Reconstruction and of recent slights at Philadelphia. But a handful of men behind the scenes ran the works, wrote the resolutions, picked the candidates, gave the cues to arise, shout and parade. They were easily to be identified as representatives of large interests of which Birmingham is a citadel.

Louisville, Ky.

There were signs, too, in emotions easily aroused to a kind of screaming hysteria, that the gathering was less concerned with principle than with native legend and prejudice. The cult of White Supremacy ran riot. And hovering at the edge was the sharp-eyed GERALD L. K. SMITH who, after everything was over, gave his blessing to the movement and his own notion of its meaning. "Our followers," said he, "believe that the Negro and the Jew are exerting too much pressure in American politics."

Ind.

Now back home in Columbia, Governor THURMOND adds up the score and is impelled to speak his mind. He wants to keep the movement respectable and Southern in the classic sense—in the sense of JOHN C. CALHOUN and WADE HAMPTON, who came out of the same soil as he; not in the sense of "Cotton Ed" SMITH, another South Carolinian. This surely means that he already has become doubtful. He finds it necessary to say that he is "not one whit interested in white supremacy." 7-21-48

True, Governor THURMOND is himself partly to blame for the turn which he deplores, and for the necessity of disavowing GERALD SMITH. His speech after he found himself stuck with the nomination had its own incendiary passages. He brought his listeners to their feet amid a vivid flutter of the Stars and Bars with his shout that there are not enough troops in the country to break down segregation in the South. His reminders that he had proposed repealing South Carolina's poll tax, that he stands for equal (though separate) facilities for Negroes, were lost in the thunder of cheering for his more defiant words, both in Birmingham and at the Philadelphia convention.

Governor THURMOND was also to learn afterward that Governor LANEY of Arkansas, one of the triumvirate with himself and Governor WRIGHT of Mississippi who were engineers of the movement, had pulled out of it and was counselling Democratic unity and regularity. It could be that still another obvious truth came more clearly into light at Birmingham. This was that behind all the tumult, the shouting and the hotspur incitement, the movement is mainly a fight to win control of Democratic party organizations in the States and the nation. In the States where the shouting is loudest, conservative groups have come into dominance for the first time since 1932, and mean to stay there. The formula of racial division is tried and true.

And so Governor THURMOND tries hard to get the thing back on to high ground. He sounds a bit disillusioned, as if he fears he cannot do it. 7-21-48

Thurmond Resigns From Executive Committee

34a(1)

Governor J. Strom Thurmond has recognized the incongruity involved in the acceptance of the job of national Democratic committeeman, to which he was elected by the state convention, when instead of promoting the election of President Harry Truman, the party's nominee, he is working to accomplish his defeat. He has resigned the executive committeeship.

The Columbia Record

This incongruity which The Record pointed out at the time has existed ever since the state convention served notice upon the party that its electors would not vote for Truman or any other candidate of the same mind on civil rights, so called, and the national convention nominated Truman on a specific civil rights issue. 7-22-48

It exists also so far as the executive committeewoman from South Carolina, Mrs. Anne Agnew, is concerned, unless she doesn't expect to go along with the South Carolina party in opposing Truman.

For the incongruity grows out of the fact that the Democratic party of South Carolina proposes to bolt the national organization and served notice upon it by formal resolution of its intention. Governor Thurmond has added nothing to this intended bolt by becoming the "suggested" candidate of the Dixiecratic party.

Columbia S.C

South Carolina's Democratic party is not to be a part of the national Democratic party this year and it should in honor sever all its ties with the national Democratic party, if the convention decision to bolt stands. 7-23-48

Thurmond Says His Only Plank Is States' Rights

Rebuffs Southern Advocates of 'White Supremacy,' Insists He's Progressive

By David McConnell
A Staff Correspondent

New York, N.Y.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 19.—Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina rebuffed Southern advocates of "white supremacy" today with the assertion that he is an "open progressive" Southerner who will campaign for the Presidency on a single platform of states' rights.

By telephone from the Governor's mansion in Columbia, S. C., the states' rights candidate for the Presidency told reporters that he will shun the "white supremacy" question when he starts a south-wide campaign against President Truman and his strong civil rights program. Governor Thurmond was named the candidate for the Presidency and Governor Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for the Vice-Presidency at a convention held here Saturday by Southerners protesting against President Truman's civil rights program.

Openly irked by the repeated stress placed by some of his Southern followers on the "white supremacy" issue, Governor Thurmond asserted that "I have no feeling against the Negro people." He explained that he has advocated better facilities for the Negroes and emphasized that when he wase inaugurated as Governor two years ago he announced in favor of repeal of the poll tax.

Disturbed by Speeches

The Governor's concern over the racial question arose from tub-thumping talks given at the convention here. Such speakers as "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, former Governor of Oklahoma, ignored the states rights issue to stress the racial question with such assertions as "Christian principles and white man's brains have made this country great."

New York Herald

In reviewing his "Southern liberalism," Governor Thurmond explained that it was he who received national praise by ordering police to bring suspects in the Greenville, S. C., lynch case to trial in April, 1947. It was at his insistence that a special prosecutor was assigned to try twenty-three defendants.

Declaring that "I am not interested one whit in the question of white supremacy," Governor Thurmond promised that in a short time he would start campaigning throughout the South in an effort to capture at least 127 Electoral College votes for the Presidency.

July 7-20-48

Other sections of the South still were looking askance at the states rights revolt against the Democratic party, traditional voting vehicle of southerners since the Civil War.

Former Governor Ellis Arnall, of Georgia, was inclined to scoff at the Birmingham convention and its fourth-party ticket, while other Georgia observers forecast that if the Thurmond-Wright ticket gets on Georgia's ballot in the November election it will make little headway. James S. Peters chairman of the Georgia State Democratic Eexecutive Committee, said however, that his group would take a stand "at the proper time."

New York, N.Y.

Some states' righters were contending today that by corralling a sizable protest vote in such states as Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina and Maryland they could effectively stop President Truman and possibly throw the states into the Republican column this year.

New York Herald

In [illegible] of the states there is a growing Republican organization. Maryland, a border state, cast 51.9 per cent of its vote in 1944 for the Democratic ticket, while Tennessee showed 39.4 per cent of the voters in the Republican column that Presidential year.

Kentucky in 1944 voted 54.6 per cent Democratic to 45.4 per cent Republican, a narrow enough margin, states' righters contend, to upset the Democrats should their Thurmond-Wright slate go on the ballot and receive support in the state. Virginia voted 62.5 Democratic in 1944 to 37.5 Republican.

7-20-48

Rejects Gerald Smith Aid

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 19 (UP).—Governor Thurmond spurned today the offer of support of Gerald L. K. Smith, director of the "Christian Nationalist Crusade.

"We do not invite, and we do not need, the support of Gerald L. K. Smith or any other rabble-rousers who use race prejudice and class hatred to inflame the emotions of the people," Governor Thurmond said when he learned that Mr. Smith had offered to help the states rights' movement.

"We are interested solely in protecting the rights of states to manage their own internal affairs, which is a fundamental guaranty of the Constitution of the United States."

New York N.Y.

The Governor said he was unaware that Mr. Smith was at the convention Saturday.

In Birmingham, Horace Wilkinson, chairman of the convention's resolutions committee, said "we're not going to fool with a bird like Gerald L. K. Smith."

Meanwhile the states rights people got support of a more welcome sort. The community of Inverness, Miss., notified Governor Wright that a campaign check for $3,500 was on the way.

Gov. Thurmond Scored By Own S C Supporter

[illegible]

Copies of letters from a native South Carolina white man rebuking Gov. J. Strom Thurmond Dixiecrats' nominee for President, for anti-Truman civil rights stand at the National Democratic Convention have been received by Atty. George Vaughn. The letters were signed by Charles Britton, Charleston, S. C.

In one letter addressed to the governor, he stated in part:

"When I read of your response to a question put by Asst. Atty. Gen. George L. Vaughn, of Missouri, I was both shocked and ashame.

"In fact, your attitude toward the entire convention, with paticular reference to the civil rights issue, has been un-American, un-Democratic and un-Christian.

"I must confess that I made the mistake of voting for you in your race for governor. In my opinion you have made South Carolina the laughing-stock of the entire nation."

In his letter to Atty. Vaughn, Britton stated:

St Louis Mo.

"My hearty and sincere congratulations are extended to you for your efforts in behalf of human rights. I am not a Negro, but I have many friends who are, and as a citizen of a free country, I have a firm belief and abiding faith in the brotherhood of man.

"It is downright stupid for us to think in terms of states' rights when we should be thinking in terms of one world."

And Where Will South Carolina Go Now?

Columbia Record

Governor J. Strom Thurmond has never been, in any realistic sense, a candidate for the presidency, although he may have had some hopes, at one time, of receiving the votes of two Southern states—Mississippi and South Carolina.

Columbia S.C.

The South Carolina Democratic (Politicians') party at its May convention passed a resolution, which was not submitted to the resolutions committee as all resolutions are supposed to be, indorsing Thurmond for the presidency and pledging him the South Carolina votes so long as he has a chance. The anticipated Mississippi support did not develop.

Tues. 7-6-48

The Governor announced Saturday that he would release the South Carolina delegates to allow them to vote for General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Actually no release was necessary. The instructions to the South Carolina delegates are to support Thurmond so long as he has a chance, but no longer. They are free, therefore, to vote as they please on the first ballot, except, of course, they cannot vote for Truman or any other advocate of his so-called civil rights program.

And the Eisenhower boom continued to gain momentum until the general himself pricked the big balloon of the politicians' hopes by declaring that his "No" meant No. James Roosevelt, California state chairman, Mayor William O'Dwyer of New York and others have called a caucus to meet July 10 at Philadelphia prior to the convention "to achieve an open and free Democratic convention," which is their way of saying to find a candidate with whom the party hope to win as it cannot with Harry Truman.

Eisenhower was their choice. And it must be conceded that the general was as good a choice as could have made.

7-6-48

But with Eisenhower declining to be a candidate who will be the caucus' second choice? And where will the South Carolina votes go?

Free Elections, Secret Ballot In South Carolina

The Columbia Record

Governor J. Strom Thurmond, States Rights nominee for president, wants a "free election" in South Carolina.

"I want the people of South Carolina to have free elections," he told a press conference Tuesday," to vote for whom they want in this presidential race.

Thur 8-19-48

"If there is any sentiment for the other three major candidates," the Governor modestly went on, "meaning Dewey, Truman and Wallace, then their supporters will see to it that their ballots are at the polling places in this state on election day.

"If their ballots aren't distributed then I would say that is pretty conclusive proof that there's not much sentiment for them."

Columbia SC

This declaration seems to indicate that the Governor, although he still gives lip service to the Australian ballot, has abandoned the secret ballot for this general election year.

And the Australian ballot is the only way to give South Carolinians the real "free election," which the Governor advocates.

Under the antiquated general election system now prevailing in South Carolina elections are not actually free. The voter can not make a choice except at the cost of considerable trouble and frequently some expense.

If for example a Republican who voted in the Democratic primary—and always some Republicans at heart have voted in the Democratic primaries for local, state and federal officers, if they desired to vote at all—wants to cast his ballot for the primary nominees and at the same time vote for the Republican electors he cannot do it, unless he prepares his own ballot and brings it to the polls with him.

If the Democratic party of South Carolina, committed this year to the States Rights nominees, fails or neglects to prepare ballots and get them distributed—and barring a catastrophe or printers' strike this will not happen—no States Rights votes in South Carolina could be cast except by voters preparing their own ballots in black ink on white paper of proper width and length.

If the loyal Democrats, committed to the national party, do not pay for and get ballots printed containing the names of electors desiring to vote for Truman and Barkley—and there can be nothing on the ballots except the names of the candidates for electors to distinguish them from the States Rights Democratic ballots—no Democrat who wants to remain a Democrat can vote, unless he prepares his own ballot.

If the Republicans fail to get their ballots distributed at the polls—and there have been such failures in the past—no Republican votes can be counted, unless the voter prepares his own ballot.

And so also for the Progressive party, if any, in South Carolina.

Section 2304 of the code, governing the conduct of general elections, describes the general election ballots in legal, which is to say not exactly understandable English:

"There shall be three separate and distinct ballots (for each party), as follows: one ballot for United States Senator, Representatives in Congress and presidential electors; and one ballot for Governor, lieutenant governor, state officers, circuit solicitors, members of the House of Representatives, state Senator, county officers and one ballot for all constitutional amendments and special questions, each of three said boxes to be appropriately labeled; which ballots shall be of plain white paper and of such width and length as to contain the names of the officer or officers and question or questions to be voted for or upon, clear and even cut, without ornament, designation, mutilation, symbol or mark of any kind whatsover, except the name or names of the person or persons voted for and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen, and all special questions, which name or names, officer or officers, question or questions shall be written or printed or partly written or partly printed thereon in black ink; and such ballot shall be so folded as to conceal the name or names, question or questions thereon, and so folded shall be deposited in a box to be constructed, kept, and disposed of as herein provided by law, and no ballot of any other description found in either of said boxes shall be counted."

Thur 8-19-48

To make this a secret ballot a voter may adopt one of two procedures. He may, as the Governor suggests, pick up one copy of each ballot, which wouldn't fool anybody in any normal year, vote the one he wants and "pocket the others." Or he may bring his own ballot to the polls, ask for a Democratic, i. e. States Rights, ballot, palm it and vote his own.

Both of these procedures border on legerdermain and should not be required of self-respecting voters by any self-respecting state.

Contrast this with the Australian ballot procedure, under which the names of the candidates of all qualifying parties are printed on one sheet of paper, which the voter takes into the voting booth, marks as he sees fit and then deposits in the proper box. He may vote for the Republican electors and for the Democratic candidates for Congress. He may support a Republican for Governor and Democrats for the House of Representatives and the state Senate.

If the Governor wants a really "free" election, a real secret ballot he should issue the call to the General Assembly to meet in special session to enact an Australian ballot law, as requested by him and as advocated by the state Democratic convention.

THURMOND: WHITE SUPREMACY

Editor, The Advertiser:

The Advertiser

Recent issues of The Advertiser seems quite confusing. Your paper of the 9th of September seems to be contradicting itself.

On page 1, bottom of column 5, you gave a slight description of the so-called states rights Democratic presidential nominee's speech given in Dallas, Texas, Wednesday night, 8th of September. By process-of-elimination, I can only interpret his speech in one category. Namely, "White Supremacy." Yet on page 4, column 5, in the same paper, in your editor's note to a letter from a fellow writer, you distinctly say Gov. Thurmond "will have no part of a 'White Supremacy' campaign."

Can you explain this "contradiction." Please don't blame the Associated Press. You see the main part of the speech was in quotation marks.

Shortly after the Birmingham convention, Gov. Thurmond said pointedly that he was "not one whit interested in the question of White Supremacy." He said that first to The New York Times, and subsequently repeated it to the AP. Thurmond is intelligently campaigning in the name of State Rights.—Ed.

Thurmond ights for irginia's Votes

Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 6.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina tonight launched his campaign here to win Virginia's 11 electoral votes in his States Rights campaign for the presidency.

Governor Thurmond, speaking to about 600 persons in the American Legion auditorium, renewed his attack on his three major opponents for their support of a Federal civil rights program.

Virginia sponsors of the States Rights campaign are counting on Governor Thurmond's swing through the State this week to add thousands of new supporters. An estimate of his strength in the Sixth Congressional District where Roanoke is located runs as high as 40 per cent of a vote which may total around 50,000.

Republican leaders here, however, question whether the States' Rights group will poll more than [illegible] the vote. They expect Dewey to carry the district, but believe his major competitor will be President Truman.

Governor Thurmond arrived at the Roanoke Airport about 7 p. m. from New York, where he spoke at a luncheon. With him were his attractive wife, Jean, 22, and J. O. Emmerick, publisher of the McCmob (Wis.) Enterprise Journal. From Roanoke, the Thurmond campaign party will go to Lexington and Charlottesville for speeches Thursday. Thurmond will speak twice in Richmond on Friday. On Saturday he will attend the football game between Virginia Military Institute and William and Mary College at Norfolk. He will speak at Williamsburg Saturday night.

raino Washington D.C.

Governor Thurmond was warmly applauded at the Roanoke rally. He said Truman, Dewey and Henry Wallace, the Progressive candidate, by their support of the civil rights program, are "committed to an unconstitutional and un-American program." Thu. 9-7-48

Thurmond struck especially hard at the Fair Employment Practices Program which has been set up in Governor Dewey's home State. He said the New York law makes it unlawful to ask a man his birthplace or to show a birth certificate, to ask about his religion and excludes many other questions. He renewed earlier charges that Communists could use a Federal FEPC law to force saboteurs "into all the secret places of our defense program, including the atomic laboratories." 9-7-48

Earlier in the day in New York Governor Thurmond said that if the South's lynchings need the remedy of a Federal law so do the North's gangster slayings.

The Governor made his sinble Northern campaign speech at a luncheon of the Overseas Press Club. He predicted his party will get more than 100 electoral votes.

"The fight we are making si not motivated by racial prejudice," Thurmond said. "Neither the people of New York nor those of South Carolina approve murder. Lynching is murder, just as gangster killing is murder. We had one lynching in the South last year. You have had more gang murders in New York in five years than we have had lynchings in the South in 50 years.

"If we need a Federal law for murder by lynchings, you need a Federal law for murder by gangsters. I believe you feel that the crime of murder is one for the State courts."

Thurmond's Campaign Speeds Up

The Record

Columbia, S.C

Headquarters Leaders Picked

Thurs. 7-29-48

Up to his neck in campaign correspondence, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond will be relieved of States Rights routine business Aug. 9 with the opening of headquarters.

As presidential nominee, Thurmond announced that the Dixiecrats, speeding up their campaign, will maintain headquarters in Jackson, Miss., and that Judge Merrit Gibson of Longview, Tex., will be campaign director.

Thurmond has been swamped with mail from "about every state in the Union" since he was chosen to lead the rebellious South in Birmingham July 17. His office reported that he has averaged working 15 hours daily.

Flood Of Letters

Even comely Mrs. Thurmond, first lady at the executive mansion, has pitched in to help answer the flood of letters. She was a secretary in the office prior to her marriage to Thurmond November 7.

The governor's office said that the chief executive was not letting the campaign interfere with his duties as governor, however.

Four campaign speeches have been arranged. Thurmond will speak in Memphis, Tenn., August 25 and in Arkansas, August 26.

Previously, he announced that his campaign will be formally launched August 11 in Houston, Tex., where the official notification will be made to Thurmond as presidential candidate and to Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi as vice presidential candidate.

The Record

Many Invitations

Thurmond's office reported that hundreds of invitations to speak have poured into his office but that a regular speaking schedule will be arranged later.

Thurs.

The executive committee of the States' Rights Democrats will include Gov. Ben. T. Laney of Arkansas, as general chairman; former Gov. Frank Dixon and R. T. Goodwyn of Alabama; J. O. Emmerich and Everett Truly of Mississippi; Frank Upchurch and C. E. Shepherd of Florida, Arch Rowan and Palmer Bradley of Texas; John Daggett and C. E. Parker of Arkansas, William P. Baskin and George Warren of South Carolina; Judge Leander Perez and Frank J. Looney of Louisiana.

Columbia S.C.

A steering committee will include Governor Laney as chairman; Dixon, W. W. Wright of Mississippi, Perez, Rowan, Upchurch and R. McC. Figg, Jr., of South Carolina.

Thurmond said that as other states are fully organized additional members will be added to the executive committee. 7-29-48

George C. Wallace will be national campaign treasurer. Headquarters will be in the Heidelburg hotel, Jackson, and liaison offices will be in Columbia and Washington.

34a(1)

Three-Month Campaign

The States' Rights Democrats are planning an intensive three-month national campaign beginning on Wednesday, August 11, with a statewide Texas rally in Houston, Tev.

Veterans, colleges, and women's divisions will comprise a part of the national organization and will have their executive committees in each state along with such other state organizations as will be necessary.

The Record

Governors Thurmond and Wright were enthusiastic today over the response they are receiving as thousands of people over the South and nation pledged support to the States' Rights cause. They promised a speaking schedule in early August that would take them into many states. They feel confident the States' Rights electoral strength will force this year's presidential election into the national House of Representatives and Senate.

Thurs.

If the Republicans should run away with the election outside of the South, Governor Thurmond predicted that he and Governor Wright would receive more electoral votes than Truman and that such an event would make State's Rights Democrats the minority party in the 81st Congress. This would give the Congressmen and Senators of States' Rights states the minority assignments on all committees.

7-29-48

Appeal To All

Columbia S.C.

Governors Thurmond and Wright appealed to Americans in all states of the Union who believe that individual freedom and human rights are dependent upon constitutional State's Rights government to rally behind them and to assist in this flight for the way of life Americans have enjoyed and under which our nation has prospered for 150 years.

They deplored Truman's, Dewey's, and Wallace's appeal to fringe groups and their willingness to desert constitutional government and States' Rights and thereby jeopardize the security, unity, and tranquility of the nation in order to win votes from unAmerican minorities.

Dixiecrat Presidential Nominee Hates Lynching, But Opposes Federal Law

The Call Kansas City, Mo

Fri. 7-30-48

COLUMBIA S. C. —(ANP)— The Dixiecrat candidate for President, Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, "hates" lynching, but he does not favor a federal anti-lynching law. He also "hates" poll taxes, but he does not favor a federal statute outlawing them.

34a(1)

In his own state, though he is on record as urging the passage of laws outlawing poll taxes and lynching, neither of these suggestions has been passed.

He is well remembered for his action in the Willie Earle lynching in Greenville. He ordered an investigation, and told his chief constable not to report until the case was broken.

As a result, 24 men were indicted. When placed on trial, however, they were acquitted, and the governor termed the lynching a "mob murder which South Carolina will not tolerate."

Anti-lynch and anti-poll tax laws would violate the U. S. constitution, he says. Of the "FEPC, he remarked, "FEPC is the closest this country has yet come to communism. It would turn this nation into nothing but a police state."

During the war he reached the rank of lieutenant-colonel with the 82nd Airborne division of the first army. He won 12 military medals. 7-31-48

Before going to war he served as state circuit judge and state senator. He graduated from Clemson college in 1923, and taught school several years. He once served as superintendent of education in his native Edgefield county.

THURMOND CALLS LYNCHING MURDER

South Carolina Governor a Foe of Poll Tax—Fought in War, Is Former Judge, Educator

34a(1)

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 17 (AP)—Gov. Strom Thurmond, states rights candidate for President, enters national politics after successfully inaugurating a program to modernize and streamline the government of South Carolina.

Mr. Thurmond, 45, who advocated a "cleanup" of government in his 1946 campaign for the governorship, devised and pushed through the General Assembly measures creating a governmental reorganization commission.

The commission, having broad powers to eliminate overlapping and duplication in government agencies, probably will begin work this fall.

The Times

The Governor has consistently urged abolition of the state's poll tax, legislation to provide secret ballots in general elections and creation of a personnel merit system for state government. These measures have failed of passage so far.

New York, N.Y.

Although he opposes federal anti-lynching legislation, Mr. Thurmond is known in South Carolina as a bitter foe of lynching. Immediately after the Willie Earle lynching at Greenville, the Governor ordered the state constabulary to the scene to investigate.

He told his chief constable not to report back until the case was cracked.

Sun.

The result was the trial of twenty-four men charged with the crime. They were acquitted, however, Mr. Thurmond repeatedly denounced the Earle affair as "mob murder, which South Carolina will not tolerate."

He has opposed federal anti-poll tax and anti-lynch legislation on grounds that its passage would violate the United States Constitution.

Governor Thurmond is even more bitter against the proposed federal fair employment practices law, contending it would violate Constitutional guarantees of the right to trial by jury.

"FEPC is the closest this country has yet come to Communism," he told the South Carolina State Democratic Convention in May. "It would turn this nation into nothing more than a police state."

A veteran of World War II, holding the rank of lieutenant colonel in the army, Governor Thurmond has twelve military medals. These include the Purple Heart, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Belgian Cross of the Officer of the Order of the Crown and the French Croix de Guerre.

He served with the First Army in Europe, landing on Normandy with the Eighty-second Airborne Division. He was with the First all the way across Europe.

In civilian life, Mr. Thurmond has served as State Circuit Judge an das State Senator from his native Edgefield County.

After graduating from Clemson College in 1923, Mr. Thurmond taught school for several years. He later was superintendent of education in Edgefield County.

In November 1947 he was married to his office secretary, the former Miss Jean Crouch.

Rebuke To Bigotry

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina has given the "white supremacy" fanatics in his following a stiff rebuke that augurs well for his fourth-party campaign in the South. If the noisy groups who nominated him for the Presidency at Birmingham thought he would vie for the mantle of the late Senator Bilbo as rabble-rouser No. 1 of the South, they have suffered a keen disappointment. The Governor classifies himself as a "progressive Southerner," pooh-poohs white supremacy, calls for better facilities for Negroes as well as whites, although on a segregated basis, and favors repeal of State poll taxes. His campaign for electoral votes this fall will be wholly devoted, he says, to the cause of State sovereignty as against interference by the Federal Government.

The Post

Washington, D.C.

Wed. 7-21-48

We think that if the Southern States had been half as zealous in upholding the rights of their minorities as they have been in safeguarding States' rights, the issue which has now split the Democratic Party would not have arisen. Most of them, as we noted the other day, have invoked States' rights to perpetuate human wrongs. It is, however, an encouraging fact that the man whom the deep South has chosen to run against President Truman, Governor Dewey and Henry Wallace has turned his face against bigotry of the Bilbo-Rankin brand. Governor Thurmond had previously demonstrated his interest in impartial justice by ordering the trial of 23 white men arrested in connection with the Greenville lynching. Now he has clearly indicated that he will not be high-pressured into an extremist position by the bitterness that cropped out at Philadelphia.

The South's candidate could further strengthen his position by moving positively against the evils that have given impetus to the President's civil-rights program. If he could induce South Carolina and a few other Southern States to abolish their poll taxes, it would promptly deflate the crusade for enactment of a Federal anti-poll-tax law. Something more than talk will be necessary, however, for the dissidents as a group to earn the objective "progressive." The country and especially fair-minded voters in the South will be waiting eagerly to see what they have to offer.

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 20 (AP)—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, Presidential candidate of the Southern States' Rights Democrats said tonight that he had resigned from the National Democratic Committee.

He mailed his resignation to William P. Baskin, chairman of the state Democratic executive committee, and sent a copy to United States Senator J. Howard McGrath, national committee chairman.

Governor Thurmond was elected to the national committee May 19 by the state party convention. He succeeded United States Senator Olin D. Johnston, who declined to be considered for re-election.

Mr. Thurmond said earlier this week that he had "given no thought" to serving on the committee.

He added that he was interested in "doing everything I can to assure the defeat" of President Truman.

Governor Thurmond Wants Streamlined Government

(The Associated Press)

Columbia, S. C., July 17.—Gov. Strom Thurmond, states' rights candidate for president, enters national politics after successfully inaugurating a program to modernize and streamline the government of South Carolina.

Thurmond, 45, who advocated a "cleanup" of government in his 1946 campaign for the governorship, devised and pushed through the general assembly legislation creating a governmental reorganization commission.

The commission, having broad powers to eliminate overlapping and duplication in government agences, probably will begin work this fall.

The governor also has consistently urged abolition of the state's poll tax, legislation to provide secret ballots in general elections and creation of a personnel merit system for state government. These measures have failed of passage so far.

Lynch Case Cited

Although he opposes federal anti-lynch legislation, Thurmond is known in South Carolina as a bitter foe of lynching. Immediately after the notorious Willie Earle lynching at Greenville, the governor ordered the state constabulary to the scene to investigate.

He told his chief constable not to report back until the case was cracked.

The result was the trial of 24 men charged with the crime. They were acquitted, however. Thurmond repeatedly denounced the Earle affair as "mob murder, which South Carolina will not tolerate."

He has opposed federal anti-poll tax and anti-lynch legislation on grounds that its passage would violate the US constitution.

Thurmond is even more bitter against the proposed federal fair tending it would violate constiemployment practices law, contutional guarantees of the right to trial by jury.

"FEPC is the closest this country has come yet to Communism," he told the South Carolina state Democratic convention in May. "It would turn this nation into nothing more than a police state."

Holds War Medals

A veteran of World War II, holding the rank of lieutenant colonel in the Army, Thurmond wears 12 military medals. These include the Purple Heart, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Belgian Cross of the Officer of the Order of the Crown and French Croix De Guerre.

He served with the First Army in Europe, landing on Normandy with the 82nd Airborne Division. He was with the First all the way across Europe.

In civilian life, Thurmond has served as state circuit judge and as state senator from his native Edgefield county.

After graduating from Clemson college in 1923, Thurmond taught school for several years. He later was superintendent of education in Edgefield county.

The governor was in the national news in November, 1947, when he was married to his pretty office secretary, the former Miss Jean Crouch.

Since his marriage Thurmond more or less has thrown the governor's mansion open to industrialists visting South Carolina.

He works until late at night and makes many out-of-state trips to attract big industries to the Palmetto state.

THURMOND PREPARING CAMPAIGN VIA RADIO

Dixiecrat Candidate Plans To 'Go' To Many States

COLUMBIA, S. C., July 20.—(UP)—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond Tuesday revealed he will carry his campaign for the presidency on the Dixiecrat ticket into "many states" by means of the radio.

Thurmond predicted that the "Solid" South would go solid again this Fall—for the Dixiecrats.

"When November has come and gone, the leaders of the present Democratic Party will be split 48 ways," Thurmond said. "We're not going into this thing half-heartedly. We're going in vigorously."

He waved a sheaf of letters and telegrams which he said were "pouring in from everywhere" in support of the Dixiecrat program. One letter came from Film Star Mary Martin, a Texan.

Campaign contributions also are beginning to pour in, Thurmond said.

Gerald L. K. Smith, head of the Christian Nationalist Crusade, whose offer to support the Dixiecrats was rebuffed by Thurmond, had this to say Tuesday at Jackson, Miss.:

"In a few weeks from now, after Governor Thurmond has been run through the wringer by Walter Winchell, Drew Pearson and the smear bund in general, he will understand what some of us have gone through in defense of the white man's rights."

Thurmond had rejected Smith's offer on the grounds that the Dixiecrats did not want the support of "rabble rousers" who inflame the people with "race prejudice and class hatred."

Thurmond Should Resign

The Lighthouse and Informer

Columbia, S.C.

34-D

Governor J. Strom Thurmond, elected by Democrats o a Democratic platform, and who has since abandoned th Democratic party, ought to resign forthwith and uncondi tionally, as the Democratic governor of South Carolina.

Taking cognizance of suggestions on resigning, Mr Thurmond last week pointed to Governor Warren, Dewe and Stassen and examples of men similarly situated, wh had sought higher offices while serving their respecti states.

But what Governor Thurmond neglected to conside was the only case on modern record in which a candidate a variance with the party which elevated him to office, acte in light of the circumstances in which he found himself..

That singular example is presidential candidate Henr A. Wallace, who after disagreeing with his party, resigne from the post to which it had lifted him, left its salary t a successor and devoted his full time to the party of hi preference, one he started and headed himself, much in th fashion of Mr. Thurmond.

Sun. 8-1-48

The Democratic party, Mr. Thurmond now denounces is the same party which favored him. It is not fair no to that party to draw a living from its resources and us these to defeat the party.

Thurmond Runs Behind Dewey In Southern Poll

Columbia Record

Columbia S.C.

Sat 8-21-48

The first Gallup poll of the South since the "nomination" of Governor J. Strom Thurmond by the States Rights Democrats reveals that it would be easier to defeat Truman in the South with Governor Dewey than with Governor Thurmond.

As of the time of the survey the Southern preference, as repored by Dr. Gallup, stood:

Truman	41 per cent
Dewey	34 per cent
Thurmond	14 per cent
Wallace	2 per cent
No opinion	9 per cent

Sentiment for Thurmond runs strongest in South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana and Texas.

This is, of course, only a first sampling and opinion in the South may change as the campaign develops, although history seems to indicate that campaigns do not greatly affect the voters' opinions.

And Thurmond's strength in the electoral college cannot be estimated until the vote by states is known. He stands now to get the electoral votes of South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi where the States Rights party has absorbed the Democratic party machinery.

The real significance of the poll, taken in the 13 Southern states, indicates in the strength shown by Dewey in the South that, as The Record has argued, this was the year to set up a real two-party system in the South, if the Dixiecratic movement had not been organized to divide the anti-Truman votes.

Sat 8-21-48

If the Dewey and Thurmond votes were combined the division would be:

Truman	41 per cent
Anti-Truman	48 per cent
Wallace	2 per cent
No opinion	9 per cent

And what the South needs is the two-party system under which it will have a voice in both parties and under which both parties will have to court the South for the South's votes as they now court the so-called crucial states and the minorities that may control them. And the South may even get the two-party system in 1952.

Thurmond Asks 'Free' Elections

Urges Complete Ballot Choice

Columbia Record

Tues 8-17-48

Columbia S.C.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond expressed himself strongly today for "free elections."

"I want the people of South Carolina to have free elections, to vote for who they want in this presidential race," the States' Rights Democratic presidential candidate said at a news conference.

"If there is any sentiment for the other three major candidates," he went on, "meaning Dewey, Truman and Wallace, then their supporters will see to it that their ballots are at the polling places in this state on general election day.

"If their ballots aren't distributed, then I would say that is pretty conclusive proof that there's not much sentiment for them."

The governor had discussed briefly this state's system of each party's printing and distributing general election ballots. The state Democratic party's ballots will include presidential electors pledged to Thurmond.

Tues 8-17-48

. The question had been asked as to how Democrats wishing to vote instead for President Truman, might do so.

"Just like those wanting to vote for Dewey or Wallace can do so," he replied. "By picking up the ballots, voting the one they want and pocketing the others."

Voter's Procedure

Voters, he reviewer, at general elections in this state pick up the ballots they want from the polling place tables. It is up to each party to see that its ballots are at the polling places.

The voter may pick up one copy of each ballot, the governor recalled, vote the one he wants and tear up the others, if he wishes to vote secretly.

Or a voter may ask openly for the party ballot of his choice, and let polling place workers and other nearby voters know just how he votes.

Thurmond re-expressed his previous strong sentiments for a single, Australian-type ballot for the general election. He has asked the General Assembly to enact a law creating such a ballot.

Disclaims Influence

Continuing his remarks Governor Thurmond disclaimed exerting any influence on the state Democratic party in support of his States' Rights Democratic presidential candidacy.

"I did not know, and I do not know now," he told a news conference today, "who all was on the state (May 19) Democratic convention's resolutions committee that endorsed me.

"I was not aware until they were read that resolutions were to be offered endorsing me for president —for president, not just as a candidate for Democratic nomination to be the naional party's presidential candidate—and directing electors to oppose President Truman or any other candidate endorsing similar civil rights views."

He was commenting on requests for a special legislative session to enact a law to direct nomination of presidential electors. A law exists saying how electors shall be elected.

The Democratic party leaves selection of its elector candidates to the state executive committee, which has pledged the electoral college votes to Thurmond.

The Republican party also has its executive committee name its electors.

'Spontaneous' Results

"I have in no way attempted to influence these matters," he continued. "They were spontaneous. They came from the grass roots—from the people at their local (Democratic) precinct meetings that elected delegates to the county conventions, ~~and~~ that in turn selected delegates to the state convention."

Tues 8-17-48

The Greenville county Democratic executive committee has suggested that because, since the time when the precinct, county and states meetings were held, a federal court decision has opened party membership to Negroes, the legality of the party's selection of its presidential electors might be questioned.

Thurmond had no comment on this point, although he made no attempt to refute a suggestion from several reporters that the court decision, coming after the meetings were held, might have come too late to affact the matter.

Governor Thurmond also delivered an impressive appeal for belief in his "sincerity in this States' Rights battle" at the close of his bi-weekly news conference today.

The nine press and radio reporters attending were out of their conference room chairs and heading for the door when the governor stopped them.

'I Am Sincere'

"There is one thing I want you people to know," he said. "That is that I am as sincere in this States' Rights battle as a man can be about anything,"

Their attention caught, Thurmond went on:

"I know that the two capital (The Columbia Record, and The State) newspapers and some others in the state are against me.

"I am not in this fight for anything in the future. I will battle it to the finish if it should cost me every office I should ever run for in the future.

"There have been no shenanigans or scheming about this whole matter. Everything is above board and in the open.

"I am convinced that this fight should be made for the American people as a whole as well as for the South."

7 HOURS OF YES AND NO

Advertiser

In Gov. Thurmond, South Carolina has given the nation a candidate for President who may get as many electoral votes as Truman, but it is having difficulty deciding, even so, whether it has severed connections with the national party.

The Democratic Executive Committee of South Carolina met this week to instruct its electors (the machinery is different from Alabama's). The session provoked hoarse shouting over whether the state was or was not divorced from the national Democratic Party.

The Columbia State's news story recorded:

Montgomery, Ala

Sat 9-4-48

A fiery 7-hour session of the . . . committee exploded into wild shouting and near complete disorder between States' Righters and old line Democrats . . .

Chairman Baskin declared that no severance from the national party had been effected . . . Mr. Welborn then asked, "Are our senators, specifically Burnett Maybank, members of the national party or not?" Mr. Baskin replied, "I do not know."

9-4-48

"This is a vital issue," Welborn shouted in the heat of debate. "Maybank was elected because the majority of the people think he has seniority and dignity in Washington. If we take this action (name States' Righters electors) it will cost us our seniority in the Democratic Party.

Mr. Baskin declared "that is not a part of the order of business but merely argument."

Senator Brantley Harvey of Beaufort joined the verbal battle to say, "I don't know if the gentleman is serious or not, but I have the answer at the tip of my tongue. In California the Republicans and the Democrats both named the same candidate on two separate tickets. We nominated Senator Maybank and he is our nominee for South Carolina and no one, except those trying to stir up trouble, try to think he is not."

Mr. Welborn asked, "Do you know, the status of Glen Taylor, Wallace's running mate, in the Democratic Party?" Harvey said he did not and Welborn interrupted to explain between other interruptions that Taylor was "stripped of seniority and he has no status in the Democratic Party . . .

I was at memorial services out in Texas for Roosevelt and I didn't go off in the corner to cry. I cried out in the open. I only hope when I die that I will get five minutes in heaven so I can shake Roosevelt's hand."

A committeeman then interposed, "You take a lot for granted, don't you. I wonder if Roosevelt will be there."

9-4-48

In three columns of debate the committee did not determine whether Senator Glen Taylor, nominee for vice-president on the Progressive Party ticket, and Gov. Thurmond, candidate for President on the States' Rights Tickets, were or were not members of the National Democratic Party

Thurmond has resigned as national Democratic committeeman from South Carolina and he is running against Truman for President, but his status is debated Perhaps if Thurmond assassinated Truman that would settle the argument.

One Southern Voter In Seven Favors Thurmond, Poll Says

The News Birmingham, Ala.

In Popular Votes, Both Truman And Dewey Lead Him

8-20-48

BY GEORGE GALLUP
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 20—At the start of the campaign the "Dixiecrat" movement has the support of about one voter in seven below the Mason-Dixon line.

In the first survey to be conducted on the popularity of Gov. J. Strom Thurmond since his nomination for president by the States' Rights Party, Gov. Thurmond polls 14 per cent throughout the 13 Southern states as a group.

In terms of popular votes he is topped by both President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in the South, but the popular vote percentage does not fully indicate the extent of the Thurmond threat to the Democratic Party. Dixiecrat spokesmen claim that 32 electoral votes are already "in the bag" for the States' Rights ticket. These 32 consist of Alabama, 11; Mississippi, 9; South Carolina, 8, and Florida, 4 of the state's 8 votes. In those states, the Dixiecrats claim, the Democratic candidates for presidential electors already have pledged themselves to vote against President Truman. The News

Those 32 electoral votes are votes which the Democrats have always in the past counted on as "absolutely sure" for them. To offset their loss this year President Truman would have to take virtually all the New England states which have a total of 40 electoral votes.

Throughout the South interviewers for the Institute put the following question to Southern voters in a survey begun directly after the formation of the States' Rights Party: Birmingham Ala

"If the presidential election were being held today how would you vote—for Dewey, for Truman, for Wallace or for Thurmond?"

The results among voters who said they plan to vote in November were:

SOUTHERN VOTERS
Truman	41%
Dewey	34
Thurmond	14
Wallace	2
No opinion	9

F 8-20-48

With the no opinion vote eliminated the results are Truman 46 per cent, Dewey 37 per cent, Thurmond 15 per cent and Wallace 2 per cent.

The 13 Southern states include South Carolina, Georgia, Arkansas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma. Thurmond sentiment runs strongest in the first eight, comprising the so-called "deep South."

'If The Election Were Held Today'

With election day only 10 weeks away, the final phase of the 1948 presidential campaign is about to begin. The candidates soon will start stumping the nation from Maine to California.

What would happen, if the election were held today instead of Nov. 2.

How are the Progressives and States' Rights candidates faring?

Be sure not to miss the latest Gallup Poll standings of all the candidates in an exclusive analysis of current political trends, reflecting the full effect of the special session on voter opinion.

Read this up-to-the-minute Gallup Poll in Sunday's issue of The News-Age-Herald.

While the new party plans to make a strong effort to get on the ballot in all Southern states, it remains to be seen how successful this effort will be. Today's poll figures indicate the extent of Thurmond's popular following at the present time assuming he were on the ballot in all states in the South.

Henry A. Wallace's figure of 2 per cent in the South compares with a national Wallace percentage of 5 per cent in the last Institute poll reported Aug. 1. Mr. Wallace plans to invade the South for an intensive campaign tour in early September. Future surveys will indicate whether his campaign efforts increase his popularity below the Mason-Dixon line.

THE DEWEY FIGURE for the South—37 per cent among those with opinions—is slightly higher than the percentage he polled in the South in 1944 presidential election when he ran against the late Franklin D. Roosevelt. That year Dewey polled 31 per cent of the major party vote in the South.

President Truman's figure of 46 per cent compares with the Roosevelt figure of 69 per cent in the 1944 election. President Truman's percentage in the South is roughly comparable to the 1928 election when Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic candidate, polled 48 per cent. The low Democratic figure this year, however, is not due so much to increased Republican strength as to the split of the Democratic vote between Truman and Thurmond.

Gov. Thurmond Opens Drive In Arkansas

The Post

34 (1)

Marianna, Ark., Aug. 26 (U.P.)—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, the State's rights candidate for President, appealed for votes in Arkansas tonight with a warning that the alternative is "a second reconstruction era."

Attacking the Democratic and Republican Party promises of Federal antilynch, antipoll tax, antisegregation and FEPC legislation, Thurmond told an Arkansas audience in a prepared address:

"A vote in November for either Dewey or Truman would be an invitation for passage in January of all those vicious bills . . . Every vote for either Dewey or Truman is a vote for a second reconstruction era." Fri 8-27-48

The idea ,he explained, is to prevent President Truman and Governor Thomas E. Dewey from getting a majority in the Electoral Colleg and thus throw the presidential election into the House of Representatives, where each State would have one vote.

"Then the States which vote with us will then have the balance of power," he added.

Thurmond accused the Democratic and Republican parties of indorsing the so-called civil rights program to "buy" the votes of minority blocs in the big cities of the north. Wash. D.C.

If the so-called civil rights bills ever became law, he said, it will be a step in the direction of a centralized, police state dictatorship. It would permit Federal police intereference in elections, local law enforcement and private business practices.

Thurmond Invites a House Guest

The Post

By Drew Pearson

BELIEVE it or not, but Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, whose Dixiecrat Party broke away from the Democrats over the Negro issue, once invited a Negro to be his house guest at the Executive Mansion in Columbia, S. C.

The incident came near going down as one of the worst social blunders in the history of the segregated South. Thurmond not only extended the hand of Southern hospitality to Gov. William H. Hastie of the Virgin Islands, but invited him to bring his family along.

Meanwhile, Thurmond's own States' Rights Party has bitterly criticized President Truman for being the official guest of the Negro Governor during the presidential visit to the Virgin Islands last February. Wash D.C.

Ironically, Thurmond's invitation to Governor Hastie was written on official stationery, bearing the great seal of South Carolina. Thurmond wrote:

"Dear Governor Hastie: It was indeed a disappointment to me that you were unable to attend the Governors' Conference.

"It is my earnest hope that, during my term of office, you and your family will honor South Carolina with a visit to Columbia and be our guests at the mansion."

The Negro Governor was most tactful. Writing on his own official stationery from Charlotte Amalie, Virgin Islands, he said: "Dear Governor Thurmond: I was happy to receive your gracious letter . . . You may be sure that I share your disappointment that we did not have an opportunity to meet and discuss matters of common interest.

"Thank you for your gracious invitation to me and my family to make a visit to South Carolina as your guests. Because it is relatively early in my administration and because we have quite young children in the family, it has not been possible for us to travel extensively.

"We do, however, appreciate your invitation and express the hope that you and your family may be able to visit the Virgin Islands and be our guests at Government House." Sun 10-24-48

Since writing the letter, Governor Hastie has taken official leave from the Virgin Islands to go to New York to campaign for President Truman. But the discreet Negro Governor does not plan to visit South Carolina.

THURMOND ATTACKS TRUMAN CIVIL RIGHTS

Times

Tues 11-2-48

"Regardless of the outcome of tomorrow's election he will have paved the way for the reorganization of the Democratic party and its rededication to the principle that the states shall govern their internal affairs," the South Carolina Governor declared in his speech, prepared for a radio network broadcast.

New York N.Y.

"We will have made it unprofitable for any candidate for President to barter away liberty of the American people to win blocs of racial votes.

"We will have crystalized sentiment against the so called civil rights program and made its passage improbable.

"We will have brought about recognition for the South in the political affairs of the nation which it has not fully enjoyed since the War between the States."

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 7.—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina tonight called for a one-third cut in the number of Federal employes.

The Dixiecrat presidential candidate attacking the centralization of Federal authority, declared: "We must abolish some of these commissions, departments and bureaus. We could reduce Federal employes by one-third and get just as muc hefficiency and save the U. S. Government millions of dollars."

Speech Heard by 1200

The economy plea was made to capacity crowd of more than 1200 persons including University of Virginia students and residents of Charlottesville, gathered in Cabell Hall at the university.

Sound Truck Out

The governor hit a jackpot of enthusiasm when he arrived here this afternoon. One of the first things he saw and heard when he arrived at the Monticello Hotel was an improvised sound truck blaring out an advertisement for the night meeting. The truck was manned by two members of the States Rights Democratic Club of the university, Cecil Kilpatrick, who lives at 4120 42d st nw. in Washington, publicity manager for the States Rights group in this area, and Bill Baylor, of Richmond.

Thurmond, accompanied by his pretty wife, Jean, 22, was greeted upon his arrival here by Colgate W. Darden, jr., president of the university and former governor of Virginia.

The Thurmond party made an afternoon visit to Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, and to Ash Lawn, the home of James Monroe. President Darden showed them over the campus of the university which was founded by Jefferson.

Blasts Opponents

In his night speech, Governor Thurmond stepped from a prepared manuscript into a hard-hitting extemporaneous blast at his opponents.

Fri 10-8-48

Challenge to Truman

He said that if President Truman is sincere about the civil rights program he ought to have the courage to face another candidate in a debate on the program.

"If he doesn't have that courage he knows he's wrong and again he's not fit to be President.

"Hary Truman has never been elected President of the United States and he never will be," Thurmond predicted.

Turning to Governor Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, Governor Thurmond attacked the GOP candidate's sponsorship of the New York fair employment practices law and his support of the Federal civil rights program. Hhe also charged that Dewey attempted to hold [illegible] equalization of freight rates [illegible] South.

Then Governor Thurmond asked, "Now what about Henry Wallace?"

Just Passes Him By

After a pause he added: "Let's just pass him by."

Thurmond announced plans to stay overnight at the home of President Darden, before moving on Friday to Richmond for two speeches there.

Earlier in the day, he spoke spoke to some 400 students at Washington and Lee University in Lexington.

Arter the speech at Lexington, Governor Thurmond visited the campus chapel where Gen. Robert E. Lee is buried. The general was president of Washington and Lee from 1865 until his death there in 1870.

This was the second day of Governor Thurmond's swing through Virginia, where 11 electoral votes are at stake in the with the Thurmonds were Virginia State Senoatr Frank Richeson of Richmond, campaigning for Dixiecrats in the State; J. C. Emberich of McComb, Miss., publisher, and Frank Burton, jr., Virginia State chairman of the party. THURMOND DEFINES AIMS OF HIS PARTY

Proposed Civil Rights Laws Step Toward 'Police State,' He Says in Talk Here

Her. Trib. 10-9-48

34a(1)

New York, N.Y.

In his only campaign speech in the North, Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, States Rights Democratic candidate for President, predicted again yesterday that his party would win 100 electoral votes in the Southern States.

Governor Thurmond expressed the views of the Democratic "splinter" party at a luncheon of the Overseas Press Club at the Roosevelt Hotel. He arrived here by plane from South Carolina at 10 A. M. and left at 3 P. M. by plane for Roanoke, Va., to continue his campaign in the South. His short visit went unnoticed by liberal and left-wing groups. He was not harrassed by picketing.

The Governor centered his main attack against the "so-called civil rights program, which is un-American to the core, and it will not work," and the Fair Employment Practices Commission bill, which he called dangerous to the American way of life and an ideal tool for Communists.

"The States Rights Democrattic campaign," he declared, "is based upon fundamental governmental principles, the preservation of which is of vital concern to every American citizen in every section of the nation."

Precedents for Congress Seen

Governor Thurmond asserted that proposed Federal civil rights legislation would provide precedents for Congress to take over control of state elections, step into state crime prosecutions, interfere with state and local segregation laws, assume the right to regulate private employment practices and create a "national police force, thereby invading the field and functions of state, county, city and town policemen, and of duly elected sheriffs, a long step toward a police state in America."

Her. Trib. 10-9-48

"In their platforms this year," he said, "the major political parties have advocated such radical change in our Government. Their action left the American people no way of expressing their opposition to such change at the ballot box.

"When the Democratic party abdicated its historic function in American political life of opposing the centralization of power in the Federal Government and opposing Federal encroachment on the sovereignity of the states, the States Rights Democrats came into being virtually spontaneously to perform that function and give the people a chance to express themselves."

Tackling the problem of race segregation, he declared: "If you people in New York want no segregation, then abolish it and do away with your Harlem. Personally, I think it would be a mistake, but if the people of New York want no segregation, that is their right under the Constitution and no Federal law would seek to force segregation upon you. And by the same reasoning, no Federal law should attempt to force the South to abandon segregation where we have it and know it is best for both races."

Governor Thurmond attacked the anti-lynching bill, declaring that since lynching was murder it was a crime for prosecution in state instead of Federal courts. He recommended abolition of the poll tax but added, "I say this is a state matter and we do not want the Federal Government to make a Federal anti-poll tax bill an entering wedge for controlling our election machinery."

Wallace "have become political agents of a kind of doctrine that would be fatal to the American system of government." They are acting, he charged, "either out of ignorance or malicious intent."

Charges Bid for Race Votes.

Truman, Dewey, and Wallace, the South Carolina Governor continued, are advocating the civil-rights program in a bid for minority blocks of racial votes. But he charged the program has been twisted by Communists into an instrument to promote their own advancement in this country.

"All good Americans favor human rights," he said, "but thoughtful Americans know that our constitution is the only guarantee of human rights. Without its fundamentals of local self-government and home rule, human rights will be subject to the destructive assault of dictators."

"We maintain, in addition," he added, "that the civil-rights proposals would make radical changes in the American way of life, which can lead only to violence, lawlessness, and widespread racial discord."

Constitutional guarantees of self-government and home rule, Thurmond declared, would be violated by such civil-rights proposals as:

1. The anti-poll-tax bill. "This would establish a clear precedent for Congress to seize control of elections and voting qualifications in the States."

2. The antilynching bill. "This woul destablish a precedent for Congress to usurp State legislatures and State courts."

3. Antisegregation laws. "This would establish a precedent for Congress to interfere with State and local laws dealing with relationships between the races."

Sees Seizure of Police Power.

4. Fair-employment-practices control. "This would establish a precedent for Congress to regulate private business and private employment in the States."

"Further," he declared, "my opponents would create a national police force through the civil-rights division of the Department of Justice, thereby invading the functions of State, County, and local police."

The speaker assailed Fair Employment Practice Commission ~~proposals in~~ particular.

To Resist Foreign Doctrine.

Fri 10-15-48

"It is perfectly plain," he said, "that F.E.P.C. originated with forces seeking to undermine the Government of the United States. It is perfectly plain that the Communists would use this law to force their agents into industrial plants and secret atomic laboratories, where they would be ready to strike when Stalin passes the word."

But the States' Rights Democrates," he declared, "are making it equally plain that we will resist this foreign doctrine, and that it will never be forced upon a free America."

The South, he continued, has stood and fought for States' rights since the Virginia resolution of 1787 ratified the federal Constitution upon the rigid condition that "every power not granted remains with ~~the~~ people, and at their will."

Fri 10-15-48

"We cannot accept the socialistic claptrap of Henry Wallace," he exclaimed. "We cannot countenance the use of petty people to front for Pendergrast-type city machines, such as the Harry Truman Administration has brought. And we cannot accept the big-government, special-interest, high-tariff leadership of someone like Tom Dewey, who once flatly stated he thought the South should be subjected to unfair freight rates : protect Northern industry.

Says Party Only Choice.

"We are told that Henry Wallace is a shining savior of mankind. W eare led to believe that Harry Truman is a regular guy, or a good fellow, as he himself once said of Joe Stalin. And they try to sell us the idea that Tom Dewey is a brilliant glamour-boy executive type, whatever that is.

"But we have yet to be shown that either one of these three has any conception of the genuine fundamentals of American representative government. The course of thoughtful, loyal Americans in this election is clear. The States' Rights Democrats offer the only chance by which you may cast a vote against prostration of our ideals by the demands of selfish minorities," he concluded.

Dixiecrat Candidate Sees Big Change In Party; Makes Last Vote Call

Tues 11-2-48

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 1—(AP)— Governor J. Strom Thurmond, States' Rights Democratic presidential candidate, said tonight that "regardless of the outcome" of Tuesday's election "we will have paved the way for the reorganization of the Democratic Party and its rededication to the principle that the states shall govern their enternal affairs."

In a final pre-election campaign speech on a network broadcast, Thurmond declared, "we will have made it unprofitable for any candidate for president to barter away liberty of the American people to ~~win~~ blocs of racial votes.

Montgomery Ala

"We will have crystalized sentiment against the so-called civil rights program and made its passage improbable," he continued.

"We will have brought about recognition for the South in the political affairs of the nation which it has not fully enjoyed since the War Between the States.

Cold-Blooded Plan

"Every vote cast for the States' Rights ticket tomorrow will be an important contribution to these objectives."

Thurmond charged that President Truman's "misnamed" civil rights message to Congress was "designed to enable President Truman to outbid Governor Dewey and Henry Wallace for blocs of minority votes in doubtful states."

The message, he said, "sprang from no humanitarian desire to help the Negro. It was a cold-blooded proposal by a president of the United States to barter away the sovereign rights of the 48 sovereign states to win an election," he asserted.

Thurmond denounced "the shameful proceedings of the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia" by which he said the South was "insulted" when "a vicious civil rights plank" went into the party platform.

"To add insult to injury, President Truman strutted out on the convention hall rostrum and with a great dramatic gesture called an extra session of Congress to enact, among other things, his so-called civil rights program," he continued.

"My friends, after this kind of treatment, the people of the South had to fight. If we had not, we would have forfeited any claim to the nation's respect."

Thurmond declared he and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi, his vice presidential running mate, "have informed the nation that the South is now on the road to economic security for all ~~races~~."

"We ~~have cited~~," he said, "the remarkable progress of our Negroes, and have challenged anyone to show where any race in history has done more for another race than the white people have done for the Negroes in the South . . ."

Thurmond Flays 'Reds' Democrats

Says National Party 'Radical'

Columbia SC

MADISONVILLE, Ky., Sept. 25 — (AP) — States' Rights Democratic Presidential Candidate J. Strom Thurmond said today "The radicals, the subversives, and the Reds" were "in complete control" of national Democratic party machinery.

"I'd rather be right than president" in "this age of political expediency" in an address prepared for delivery here today.

The South Carolina governor quoted Kentuckian Henry Clay in saying "I'd rather be right than president," and recalled the Kentucky resolutions of Thomas Jefferson declaring "the indestructible rights of states."

"Those rights," he said, and "those of us who follow the course made clear by the United States Constitution, find our pathway obstructed by a new and evil kind of political doctrine.

'Racial Democrats'

"Today the candidates of the Republican, the radical Democrats and the Wallace Reds claim to have discovered the road to great new freedoms and human rights.

"But the detour they ask us to take is the road to totalitarianism. These candidates pose as bearers of the torch of liberty. But the flame they carry is a firebrand from the steepes of Russia."

He termed the civil rights program "a cheap political trick designed to buy the votes of small but powerful racial minorities in big-city states." He said opposition quickly developed in the Southern states, "the cradle of American democracy."

He insisted that "the States Rights Democrats are the only hope of the American people to preserve the traditions of the American way of life. . . ."

Sat 9-25-48

Rights And Freedom

"The rights of a state to manage its own internal affairs means simply the right of an individual man to live his own life in the kind of freedom that America alone can give him. If that man gives up States' Rights, he gives up his own rights.. . .That is why our forefathers set up a government composed of strong states" rather than a centralized government."

Scores FEPC

He scored the federal fair employment practices proposal as denying a man the right to choose his associates at work.

The FEPC would make the President a dictator, he said, with police agents "trained and encouraged to stir up trouble."

Agents of the "total state" have chosen the traditions of the Southland for their primary attack, he said of his opponents.

He predicted that Dewey would have carried most of the Southern states had not the States' Rights movement sprung up.

"A thumping vote for the States' Rights Democrats will deal a crippling blow," he predicted, "to those who seek to convert America into a totalitarian state" and will protect the South against being ignored "because we are in the bag," or being left behind in preference for "a machine minority group."

Thurmond was carrying his campaign into Kentucky today bolstered by the announcement that States' Righters had won a place on the Arkansas general election ballot.

Governor Thurmond last night challenged President Truman to a debate on civil rights and states rights.

Sat 9-25-48

Thurmond, States' Rights Democratic presidential nominee, issued the challenge in an address at the Rocky Bottom (Pickens county) camp recreational area before a gathering of some 600 people.

The ocasion was the annual banquet staged by the Pickens County Good Will club.

Among the guests were South Carolina Sens. Olin D. Johnston and Burnet R. Maybank. Both spoke briefly on non-political subjects.

How Does Thurmond Stand?

To the Editor of The [illegible] Herald:

While a supporter of Gov. Thurmond in his candidacy, I have been waiting to learn his position on the other issues that a candidate for the presidency might properly be concerned with. If he will get his ear nearer the ground he will learn that many of his constituents are very much concerned over the high cost of living. While wage earners in the higher brackets can now buy proportionately 20 per cent more food than in 1939, those with fixed incomes, pensions and on social security, can now buy much less, and I have yet to hear of Gov. Thurmond's concern about them.

Another issue is right here at home. It would seem that people so much concerned over a threatened violation of the federal constitution regarding civil rights would be equally concerned about a long tolerated violation of our own state constitution. I refer to reapportionment, taxation without equal representation.

And is it good sportsmanship to suppress the rights of minorities? Is it good democracy? Can Alabama afford to be placed in this position in the eyes of the nation? Does not the right of free speech extend to the right of freedom to vote for the candidate of one's choice? The name of Wallace, I am told, will be on the ballot, and he ranks much lower than Truman in the opinion of many of us. If Truman supporters are denied the right to vote for him, Alabama will get a lot of unpleasant publicity, and what will hurt will be that it will reflect the opinion of people who believe in fair play.

BY ALDERMAN DUNCAN

CHERRYVILLE, N. C., July 31—(AP)—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, the States' Rights Democratic presidential nominee, declared here Saturday night that "It is a sad commentary on the condition of the American government when three of the four candidates for president favor 'unconstitutional invasion of the rights of states.'

"Tom Dewey has already set up the FEPC in New Yorw State," Thurmond said.

"Harry Truman is demanding that the so-called civil rights be forced upon every state.

"And Henry Wallace is the daddy of them all.

"Let us not be fooled by the apparent differences among these three men, for in the matter of failure to protect states' rights they are birds of a feather . . ."

Pins Hoje On House

SPEAKING AT THE ANNUAL Cherryville Watermelon Festival in his first public appearance outside his home state since his nomination at Birmingham, Ala., July 17, Thurmond lashed out at "some of our so-called political leaders" in the South for what he said was their willingness "to barter away the rights of the South for a mess of political pottage."

Thurmond told his audience that it was "a certainty that Dewey would have defeated Truman and could have been elected president if the States' Rights Democrats had not put forward their candidates."

"Since the States' Rights Democrats have already entered the race," he continued, "we believe that no candidate will receive a majority of the votes in the electoral college and that the election will be thrown into the House of Representatives.

"This is the best method of defeating both Dewey and Truman."

'South Not Alone'

SUPPORT FOR THE CIVIL RIGHTS program, he said, comes from "smart little political tycoons who are working like beavers to turn this nation into a socialistic states," from "those who favor a powerful and centralized government," from "those who are dedicated to the proposition that federal power should reach down and control every act of every American," from "the advocates of a totalitarian socialistic government," and from "politicians who do not care what happens to American liberty so long as they remain in power."

These groups "have chosen the South as a whipping-boy in an effort to gain minority votes," he charged.

He added that the South "does not stand alone in this fight." . . .

"The thousands of letters we have received from every state in the nation have proved that Americans who love their country and who love the freedom it gives them are getting ready for action."

He separately denounced the proposed anti-poll tax law, the anti-lynching law, the Fair Employment Practices law and non-segregation laws contained in the president's civil rights program.

"The FEPC is the nearest thing to communism this nation has ever seen and I do not believe the American people are going to accept it," he declared.

The South Carolina governor said if the states' rights movement succeeded in blocking civil rights legislation, it would win "the great victory for which we are fighting."

Truman Program, He Asserts, Would Cause 'a Virtual Revolution in South'

CHERRYVILLE, N. C., July 31 (UP)—Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina opened his campaign for President on the Southern States' Rights ticket tonight by warning that civil strife "horrible beyond imagination" would result from President Truman's civil rights program.

Governor Thurmond, nominated at the recent convention in Birmingham, Ala., said that "a virtual revolution in the Southern States" would be the outcome of writing the Truman program into law.

Speaking at a watermelon festival, he said:

"I did not risk my life on the beaches of Normandy to come back to this country, and sit idly by, while a bunch of hack politicians whittles away your heritage and mine. As for me, I intend to fight!"

He denounced the Democrats and Republicans for failing to guarantee states' rights in their platforms.

Striking at the proposed anti-poll tax law, he said:

"I have advocated that we repeal the tax in my state. But I cannot agree that the Federal Government has the right to force any state to abolish this tax if the people of the state want it."

He condemned any Federal anti-lynching law.

Asserting that the South "has almost wiped out lynching without outside assistance," he added:

"Lynching is murder. And murder is a violation of state laws, punishable by state laws. We do not intend to let the Federal Government come in and take over our state courts."

Mr. Thurmond hit at the proposal dealing with separation of races as "the most dangerous club ever held over the heads of the American people."

"If the segregation program of the President is enforced, the results in civil strife may be horrible beyond imagination," he declared.

"Lawlessness will be rampant. Chaos will prevail. Our streets will be unsafe. And there will be the greatest breakdown of law enforcement in the history of the nation.

"Let us tell them that in the South the intermingling of the races in our homes, in our schools and in our theaters is impractical and impossible."

He said that a Fair Employment Practices Commission would make private business a thing of the past.

"Unless a man is willing to hire the kind of people the FEPC tells him to, he must go to jail," he said. "Tom Dewey has already set up the FEPC in New York State. Harry Truman is demanding that the so-called civil rights be forced upon every state. And Henry Wallace is the daddy of them all."

AUGUSTA, Ga.—Three more Thurmonds, a housewife, a presser, and a minister told the AFRO this week that they are cousins of South Carolina's Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat nominee for president.

They are Mrs. Eva (Thurmond) Smith, half first cousin; Thomas Thurmond, half first cousin; and the Rev. James R. Thurmond, half second cousin.

Supporting the contention of Robert Thurmond, Morristown, N.J., the three stated that, not only do they have names spelled the same as the governor's, but that they are blood-relatives to him.

Pastor's Statement

"Not only that," asserted the Rev. Mr. Thurmond, who has eight little Thurmonds (half third cousins), "if you really want to see the Thurmonds, you should go up into McCormick County (joining Edgefield County).

"It seems like everybody up there are Thurmonds. They are of all colors. Some are so white that you cannot tell them from the original Thurmonds.

"Sometime ago I preached up there and after I had finished, it seems like everybody in the church came up and told me that they were Thurmonds. They may not be blood-Thurmonds but they have the name."

Matron Gives Proof

To support her belief that she was a blood Thurmond, and not just someone who picked up the name, Mrs. Smith pointed out a picture of her blue-eyed father, Thomas Thurmond, who was the half brother of James Thurmond, the governor's father.

"Why, I remember well when Gov. Thurmond's father used to visit my grandfather," the Rev. Mr. Thurmond added, "and they used to sit and eat, and talk for hours.

"I remember asking my grandfather why did that 'white' man always visit our home. My grandfather told me that they were brothers."

Plenty Relatives

There are several hundreds persons, colored and white, in this city and surrounding communities who claim relation to the Governor of South Carolina.

"When I came back to Augusta in 1941," said Thomas Thurmond, "I went to the employment office to get a job. They asked me my name and I told them. Then they asked me to spell it. I did.

"The man, who was also named Thurmond, asked me didn't my folk come from over in Edgefield. I told him that they did. He then told the folk in the office that we were all related."

The only thing that surprises colored Thurmonds is, why is it so important that they are related to the white Thurmonds. It is an old story and "everybody in these

Dewey, Martin Pledge White House-Congress Will Work Together

Montgomery Ala

By The Associated Press

President Truman pledged in New York's Harlem district yesterday to fight for "equal rights and equal opportunity with every ounce of strength and determination I have."

President Truman told a Brooklyn crowd last night that "the fate of mankind" depends on U. S. foreign policy and "our policy is safer in Democratic than in Republican hands."

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, his Republican opponent, arrived in New York meanwhile, to address a gathering tonight in Madison Square Garden.

But even before he got to New York, Dewey had words of his own on foreign policy, as well as a new pledge of White House-Congress cooperation. Speaker Joseph W. Martin (R), Massachusetts, joined in the pledge of cooperation, if the Republicans win the White House and Congress next Tuesday.

Wallace In Harlem, Too

Henry A. Wallace also spent yesterday on a New York City tour of his own. The Progressive Party candidate for president capped his day's schedule with a night speech in Harlem.

Mr. Truman's Civil Rights topic in Harlem was a natural in view of the heavy Negro population there, but it hit on a sore spot which already has driven many Southern Democrats from the regular party.

Standing firmly behind a 10-point anti-discrimination proposal he asserted "our determination to attain the goal of equal rights and equal opportunity must be resolute and unwavering."

This program, and a plank in the party platform supporting it, split Southern Democrats away from the regular party and brought the States' Rights presidential ticket into the campaign.

Mr. Truman told his Harlem audience he would work for the "kind of freedom" that comes when:

Sat 10-30-48

Here're His Reasons

1. "Every man has an equal chance for a job—not just the hot and heavy job—but the best job he is qjualified for."

2. "Every American boy and girl has an equal chance to get a good education."

3. "Every citizen has an equal opportunity to go to the ballot box to cast his vote and have it counted."

4. "Every man, woman and child is free from the fear of mob violence and intimidation."

The president was presented with the Harlem Ministers' Award for his espousal of anti-lynching, anti-poil tax and anti-discrimiv proposals.

He said in his talk that he set up the civil rights committee, whose report formed the foundation for his recommendations "because racial and religious intolerance began to appear after the war," threatening "the very freedoms we had just fought for."

Thurmond In Texas

Meanwhile, Democratic National Chairman J Howard McGrath recognized the pro-Truman group in South Carolina as the state's "official Democratic party." The long-established Democratic party organization is supporting state electors pledged to the States Rights party headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond for president.

Thurmond campaigned in Texas yesterday against what he called "the mis-named civil rights program of Truman ,Dewey and Wallace."

Sat 10-30-48

The Dewey-Martin pledge of cooperation between a Republican president and Congress came at Martin's home town of Attleboro, Mass., where Dewey was campaigning toward New York.

Dewey told a crowd at New Haven, Conn., that the Truman administration's "foot is slipping with increasing regularity," and "you can't buy peace by giving away other people's freedom."

MR. TRUMAN MAKES HISTORY

The Defender
Sat 8-7-48
Chicago, Ill.

No week in modern history has been more significant for Negroes than last week when the President of the United States struck several mighty blows for freedom. On one day Mr. Truman issued two executive orders dealing directly with the problem of first class citizenship for Negro Americans. On the next day the President called upon Congress to act upon his program of civil rights and to pass laws necessary for the stabilization of our economy.

In the two executive orders Mr. Truman attacked racism within the framework of the military establishment, and discrimination in federal employment. In both instances he set up machinery which can and will eventually eliminate Jim Crowism and the vicious anti-Negro practices which serve to deny equal opportunity to one-tenth of America.

In his order dealing with the armed services Mr. Truman declared, "It is essential that there be maintained in the armed service of the United States the highest standards of democracy." Certainly segregation does not represent the high standards of democracy.

There is no question about the course which Mr. Truman has chosen to steer the ship of state. He is determined to move forward toward a fuller realization of the high ideals of our democratic system. Mr. Truman is, without question, ready and willing to use the full power of his office to eliminate the evils that confront us. No president in modern history has shown more courage and more determination in the face of great controversy.

His stand has aroused the totalitarian South to great anger, and threats of secession are once again heard across the canebrakes. The last and strongest bastion of racial bigotry in America is under fire.

Despite all the Dixie threats and proclamations of alarm, we believe that the great majority of Americans will support the President. They recognize that the time has come in American history for the abolition of a double standard of democracy. We do not believe that the majority of citizens will permit Mr. Truman to be crucified on a cross of racial bigotry.

FORMER DISTRICT LEADER OPENS CAMPAIGN FOR TRUMAN

BY CONRAD CLARK

With a goal set for $1,000,000, Mr. Bruce, who was the first Negro elected a leader in Tammany hall from the Beavers-Ramapo Democratic club, now headed by Atty. Carson DeWitt Baker, and who is "outside of Tammany" at the present time, declared that "freedom is not a cheap commodity."

The former district leader said that he had not consulted the National Democratic committee about his plans, which include the raiding of the money by individual contributions.

"We intend," Bruce said, "to ask a million Negroes to give $1 each and demonstrate that we know how to reward our friends. No individual will be permitted to contribute more then $5 because this is going to be a crusade by, for and of the little people representing all the Harlems in this country.

"I did not consult the National Democratic committee about our plans but we will eventually turn over $500,000 to that body. We will spend the rest of it to educate the 5,000,000 potential Negro voters through the press, radio and magazines."

Head of a prosperous wine and liquor store at 145th st. and Eighth ave., Mr. Bruce is one of the city's leading Negro business and political leader, and although he is said to have retired from the political field, both local and state administrations yet consider him a top leader here.

Pres. Truman the Last To Know?

The Constitution
Thur 9-16-48
Atlanta, Ga.
34a(1)

WASHINGTON—President Truman starts out on the second lap of his campaign for re-election under handicaps that would be completely disheartening to a man of less fortitude.

On the one hand, he is faced with a three-way split in the ranks of his own party; while, on the other, he is confronted with the unanimous verdict of the leading poll takers that he is hopelessly defeated before he begins.

The Wallace third party movement, which must be marked down as a split in Democratic ranks, was enough, in itself to bring about the President's defeat. It seems certain to take away enough liberal support to make it impossible for the Truman-Barkley ticket to win.

On top of that comes the revolt of Southern Democrats reflected in the Dixiecrat ticket. Through manipulation and otherwise, the President's name will not even appear on the ballot in some of the Southern states.

In the first samplings of public sentiment as the campaign begins to get actively under way, the recognized poll takers give the President hardly an outside chance to win. That is true of the Gallup, Crossley and Roper polls. Earlier another poll of 50 leading Washington correspondents by Newsweek Magazine showed a similar result. All 50 of the news writers polled expressed the view that Mr. Truman would be defeated.

Mr. Elmer Roper, whose record in calling the turn on Presidential elections is far better than any of the others, says with a finality that borders on rashness that "Thomas E. Dewey is almost as good as elected to the Presidency of the United States." Indeed, he is so convinced of that development that he says he will not bother to make a further report on the election contest, "unless something really interesting happens before November."

Amer 9-16-48

Mr. Roper finds from his latest survey that only 31.4 percent of the electorate now thinks they will vote for Mr. Truman. He gives Dewey 44.2 per cent, with the balance scattered among Wallace, the Dixiecrats, Norman Thomas and the uncertains.

Dr. Gallup produces a set of figures that are a little different but are just as conclusive as to the final decision. He finds that Governor Dewey has the support of 48 per cent of the voters and Mr. Truman 37 per cent, leaving a smaller balance for the others in the field.

Mr. Roper makes the interesting observation that "all the evidence we have accumulated since 1936 tends to indicate that the man in the lead at the beginning of the campaign is the man who is the winner at the end of it." Hence he says he can "think of nothing duller or more intellectually barren than acting like a sports announcer who feels he must pretend he is witnessing a neck-and-neck race that will end in a photo finish or a dramatic upset for the favorite—and then finally have to announce that the horse which was eight lengths ahead at the turn is still eight lengths ahead."

Amer 9-[illegible]-48

If Mr. Truman is depressed by any of this gloomy outlook for the Democratic ticket he does not show it. On the contrary, it seems to have spurred him on to a greater effort. He is planning one of the most intensive campaign tours ever undertaken by a Presidential candidate. As he once put it privately, "I do not depress easily."

The American people admire this quality in a man who ignores the odds and keeps on plugging. And so it is that Gov. Dewey had best descend from his ivory tower and get down to more personal campaigning or he may yet find at the finish that he has a race on his hands. Up to now the Republicans have acted more on the assumption that it was only necessary for them to coast to victory without bestirring themselves very much.

Truman the Bulldozer

The picture of the first family and its satellites, at the Armory and the ballroom of the Seelbach, must have been very disappointing to the Negro. Not one picture of a Negro was in the group. That alone should prove that Truman and the Democratic Party are trying to bait the Negro for his vote. I read a letter from the extreme Northwest. The Western people are not going along with Truman and his abusive slang. It would be a safe bet that Truman won't carry a single Western State.

Mr. Truman must have inherited his bulldozing from the Tom Pendergast political machine. In his speech at the Armory, Truman charged the Republicans with causing inflation. Mr. Hillard asked if this statement was made from ignorance or political hypocrisy. Mr. Truman has stooped the lowest of any politician. According to rumors, Mr. Truman was schooled by the most political machine that ever existed in the U.S.A.

Tallulah For Truman

In introducing the president to a radio audience, Tallulah Bankhead spoke of Mr. Truman as "the human being" she prefers for president over Mr. Dewey, to whom she referred as "the mechanical man."

Miss Bankhead, daughter of the late Speaker William B. Bankhead and the granddaughter of one U. S. senator from Alabama and the niece of another, expressed an attitude that is shared by many other Americans.

B'ham, Ala

Mr. Truman, for all his limitations and mistakes, appeals to many Americans as a sincere and courageous man, striving to do his best in an extremely difficult and immeasurably responsible position, as a man very much like themselves.

On the other hand, many such Americans, recognizing and even accepting the claims of Gov. Dewey's efficiency, nevertheless feel that he is decidedly lacking in warmth and magnetism, qualities they regard as highly desirable in a president of the United States.

Miss Bankhead declared: "I have no doubts about Harry Truman. He's been through the wringer. And by the wringer I mean that 80th Congress. That 80th Congress which ignored his passionate pleas for veterans housing, for curbs on inflation, for legislation to aid and comfort the great mass of our population."

This was support of the president suggesting that Miss Bankhead's exceptional talents extend beyond the stage and that she is not lacking in the political insights and capacities that have long distinguished her family.

Full Steam Ahead

While debate over the character and ability of the various candidates for the presidency rages in the hinterland, the liberal Civil Rights program of President Truman moves forward vigorously day after day.

The President's executive order which created a Fair Employment Practice Committee within the federal government, took on active life after the appointees to the committee were announced last week.

The seven man board which will assure equality of opportunity to all job seekers and job holders in the federal government, includes two Negro members, Eugene Kinckle Jones, General Secretary of the National Urban League and Jesse H. Mitchell, President of the Industrial Bank in Washington. Both these gentlemen of color, as well as the five white members of the new board, are eminently well qualified to perform the functions of their office and they have the confidence and respect of the public at large.

As one reviews the handiwork of Mr. Truman as he moves boldly in the controversial realm of civil rights, we are compelled to applaud. The President has made a liar out of those carping critics who have tried so desperately to prove that he is merely a man of words and not of action. The record clearly shows, however, that Mr. Truman has made brave statements and he has matched them with brave deeds.

Long after this election has gone down in history, all of us and all of our children will have good cause to remember this man from Missouri. He set his course in the right and like the mule of his home state, he is not budging an inch. It is such men who have made America the greatest democracy on earth, the Republicans not withstanding.

Some of the Democratic Party's spokesmen and orators have recently been doing a little more than hinting that their candidate's Civil Rights program shouldn't be taken too seriously—that everything was going to be all right after election. They seemed to have considerable inspiration from the White House itself, for, until Friday, President TRUMAN had made only vague allusions to the civil rights issue—never more than a sentence or two in his speeches.

And then came Friday and an outright declaration from him that "I intend to keep moving toward this goal (civil rights) with every ounce of strength and determination I have." He said he had asked the 80th Congress to do 10 things recommended by his Civil Rights Committee, and when it did nothing, he did the best he could without the help of Congress. That, he explained, was to issue executive orders establishing a committee on equality of treatment and opportunity in the armed forces and covering fair employment practices in the Federal Government.

Memphis Tenn

The place President TRUMAN chose to give the civil rights issue "the works" and to take his no-retreat stand on a platform his followers have been attempting to soft pedal in the South was in the heart of New York's overpopulated Harlem district.

Long avoidance of a full campaign discussion of the civil rights issue was to encourage a more favorable Democratic Party viewpoint in the South. Friday's full and accurate exposition by the President of where he stands was for the purpose of grabbing the big negro vote in Harlem.

By the look of things he is going to need it—and much more!

Truman Will Let 'Em Take 2 Walks

WASHINGTON

President Truman, in a press conference held here Thursday, affirmed the report made earlier this week by Sen. Carl A. Hatch (Dem., N.M.). who declared that he (the President) "was in the fight to a finish."

When asked about the Dixie Democrats, who have loudly proclaimed that they have walked out of his camp, the President suggested to reporters that they await until November and see whether they will walk back.

Truman Confident

Exuding confidence, the President stated that he was not disturbed at what was referred to as the "rising revolt" against his nomination at the Democratic National Convention this summer, because of his civil rights program.

Baltimore Md

In addition to that, the President flatly predicted a Democratic victory in the November elections, telling the reporters that it was no hunch, but a prophecy.

Truman Still Losing Strength

Atlanta, Ga. Sun 4-11-48

PRINCETON, N. J.—Latest testing of voter sentiment on the 1948 presidential campaign reveals dramatic changes in the political fortunes of the leading contenders.

In a nationwide poll completed less than a week ago the American Institute of Public Opinion asked thousands of representative voters for whom they would vote in four "trial heats," if the election were held now.

Results of the poll may be summarized as follows:

1. Last January a similar Institute survey showed that President Truman was then in a position to win over all Republican contenders except Gen. Dwight Eisenhower who shortly withdrew from the race.

Today, three months later, the situation facing Democratic strategists is almost completely reversed. Their only avowed candidate is now running behind four of the leading Republican possibilities in terms of the popular vote. The Constitution

2. The four GOP candidates are running a tight race, the difference in their margins over President Truman being very narrow.

3. Despite Gov. Dewey's poor showing in the vital Wisconsin primaries, last week, he enjoys a slight advantage in the national poll over his fellow-Republican candidates. Harold E. Stassen, who undoubtedly gained prestige by his smashing victory in Wisconsin, ties with Sen. Vandenberg for second place, closely followed by Gen. MacArthur.

4. The lead of these four Republicans over President Truman is so substantial at the moment that the Third Party candidacy of Mr. Wallace loses much of its tactical potency. In the case of Gov. Dewey the margin over Truman completely wipes out the power of Wallace to "throw" the election to the Republican party as far as the popular vote is concerned. Atlanta, Ga.

THE QUESTION asked in today's poll was the same in each "trial heat" except for the name of the Republican candidates. This is the question: "If the presidential elections were being held today, and Truman were running for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket against (Dewey) on the Republican ticket and against Wallace on a third party ticket, how do you think you would vote—for Truman, (Dewey) or Wallace?"

ADA Head, Calling Convention 'Open,' Says Eisenhower, Douglas Could Beat GOP

34a(1)

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, June 29—President Truman will have but twenty-six delegate votes pledged to him from below the Mason-Dixon line fo rthe Presidential nomination at the Democratic National Convention. The Times

This was indicated today in a check on instructions to delegates from this area, who will cast 404 of the 1,234 votes in the convention, now just two weeks away. Only Southern delegations pledged to the President are Maryland, with twenty, and the District of Columbia, with six. 6-30-48

Virginia will not pick its delegates until Friday, but the state, hostile to the Truman candidacy since his civil rights message, has set up machinery to make a bolt possible in the event he is renominated. All other sixteen delegations from the area have been chosen. New York, N.Y.

69½ Votes Against Truman

But examination of the various state delegate slates also shows that, while there are only twenty-six votes assured the President, there are but sixty-nine and one-half committed against him.

The anti-Truman bloc, which may be expanded when the Virginia delegation is instructed, is made up of Mississippi's twenty-two votes, South Carolina's twenty, fourteen of Alabama's twenty-six and thirteen and a half of Florida's twenty.

The remaining 282½ delegates are unpledged, which from the Administration viewpoint is important.

Truman forces have been cataloguing delegates from the South either as "walkers"—those who will bolt in the event of Mr. Truman's renomination—or "sitters"—those who will abide by the convention decision. 6-30-48

The President's supporters believe that unpledged delegations not only will abide by the convention decision but will vote for Mr. Truman's nomination if a civil rights plank, similar to that incorporated in the 1944 platform, can be adopted. Wed.

34a(1)

Many Southerners hold this view also. As one prominent Texan declared in laughing off talk of revolt: "Truman will be nominated before the roll-call gets to Texas." The Times

Biggest Delegation Unpledged

In this regard, it is considered significant that the two largest delegations south of the Mason-Dixon line—Texas with fifty votes and North Carolina with thirty-two—are uninstructed. 6-30-48

While all of Alabama's twenty-six delegates oppose Mr. Truman, only fourteen are pledged to walk out of the convention if he is nominated. Four others will vote for him if there is no other candidate. New York, N.Y.

Like Alabama, the Florida vote is split. Eleven and a half votes are pledged to Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, leaders of the revot against the President. Two are uninstructed "against Truman" while the other six and a half are for Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, if he is placed in nomination.

Other delegations line up in this fashion:

Louisiana's 24, uninstructed and supposedly controlled by Gov. Earl Long, who has held aloof from the anti-Truman drive.

Georgia's twenty-eight, uninstructed, with verbal assurance from James H. Peters, delegation chairman, that there will be no bolt. Wed

Arkansas' twenty-two, uninstructed, though Gov. Ben Laney has been outspoken in his criticism of the President. 6-30-48

Tennessee's twenty-eight, uninstructed after movement to instruct against Mr. Truman was beaten.

Kentucky's twenty-six, uninstructed and supposedly friendly to Mr. Truman.

West Virginia's twenty, uninstructed and believed friendly.

Oklahoma's twenty-four, uninstructed and friendly.

Meanwhile, Leon Henderson, national chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action, asserted today that President Truman had only 310 pledged delegates of the 1,234 votes in the convention and that a free and open session might nominate Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower or Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas.

At a press conference, Mr. Henderson told reporteds of growing opposition to the President, even in the instructed delegations, and declared that if a showdown vote were to be taken at least ninety of the delegates now counted for Mr. Truman would support another candidate. The Times

The ADA chairman also unveiled himself as a Vice Presidential possibility, declaring in response to a question that he would take second place even to Mr. Truman whom he still hopes will withdraw to avoid certain defeat in November. New York, N.Y.

Mr. Henderson said he thought that General Eisenhower could easily defeat the Dewey-Warren ticket and that Justice Douglas would have a closer race but still would win. He said his hopes Mr. Truman still will get out of the race were based on information that top-ranking politicians were advising the President he could not win. Wed. 6-30-48

Mr. Henedrson said the President's 310 pledged votes included California's, but he added that California was in revolt, and, in a show-down secret caucus, only twenty of the fifty-four votes were cast for the President on the issue of whether the delegation must continue bound to Mr. Truman.

"Claims that the President's nomination is 'in the bag,' are utterly unfounded," he said. "The convention is already wide open and President Truman is clearly not the first choice of the delegates. 6-30-48

Harlem Speech Lauds Truman For Civil Rights

New York, N.Y.

Dr. Imes Praises Program at 28th Annual University Day at St. Mark's Church

It was God's will that President Truman should "deal a telling blow for common decency and human rights," and in so doing "put to shame some of his fellow-Americans in high places in the church, in politics and in business," the Rev. Dr. William Lloyd Imes, director of social and adult education of the New York State Council of Churches, said yesterday. Herald Tribune

Dr. Imes was the principal speaker for University Day, sponsored annually in Harlem by Cleveland G. Allen. The meeting was the twenty-eighth in the series and was held at St. Mark's Methodist Church, St. Nicholas Avenue and 137th Street. The movement was launched by Mr. Allen to focus the attention of Negro college graduates "on social evils that can be attacked through the tools of education." It is dedicated to advancing the status not only of the Negro, but of all minorities.

A resolution offered by the Rev. Arthur W. Parker, Bronx evangelist to convert the movement into a national organization with college and universiyt chapters, was carried and Mr. Allen appointed a committee to study and report on a permanent program. New York N.Y.

Dr. Imes said that it was worthy of note that God should use for divine ends the "personality of a man" who has been described by his critics as "a small-time politician and as the tool of the Kansas City political machine." He praised President Truman as "a God-fearing man," who "has put fundamental rights into our consciousness," and said that it was now up to the people to prevail on Congress to translate these rights into action."

Negro to Seek Million For Truman Campaign

New York, July 26 (AP)—Herbert L. Bruce, a Harlem political leader, today announced plans for raising $1,000,000 among Negroes in behalf of President Truman's campaign for re-election. 7-27-48

He said such a fund would "serve as the Negro's contribution to the fight to make the Truman civil-rights program a living reality."

Bruce said, "We intend to ask 1,000,000 Negroes to give $1 each and demonstrate that we know how to reward our friends."

State's Oldest Resident 107, Strong For Truman

Tues.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 29—The man who claims to be Alabama's oldest resident thinks President Truman will stay in the White House after the November election.

He's 107-year-old "Uncle Tom" Jordan, an ex-slave who thinks President Truman will receive the Democratic nomination and follow up with a victory over the Republican nominee, Thomas E. Dewey, in November. 6-29-48

"When you've got a good man up there you'd better keep him there," "Uncle Tom" declared today.

"Truman is a good man and he's there to stay," the old Negro man, a familiar figure around the state capitol for many, many years, prophesized.

Born in slavery, "Uncle Tom" says he and his parents were purchased by an Alabama family of Baldwins for a total price of $1,000 "more than 80 years ago."

His father, Hezikah Jordan and his mother, Flo Jordan, then came to Alabama to live. "Uncle Tom" has resided in Alabama ever since.

Recalling his slave days, "Uncle Tom" said that "the white folks treated us all right, the ones who would work." He said he doesn't know anything about President Truman's civil rights program.

"UNCLE TOM" was born in Charleston, S. C., 107 years ago. He says only 'about seven or eight' of his 22 children are living. "Uncle Tom" has outlived three wives.

The ex-slave spends much of his time on the capitol grounds today. He's in remarkably good health for his age, still retains some of his teeth and has never been sick a day in his life. He doesn't drink, and limits his smoking to a pipe. Tues.

"Mr. Folsom is the best governor we ever had," "Uncle Tom" told The News reporter. 6-29-48

Turning to the weather, "Uncle Tom" agreed it was hot. "But we've had a weather a lot hotter than this before," he added, taking another wipe of his brow.

Calling Back of Congress Assures a Long and Slugging Campaign

BY PAUL R. LEACH
Chief of Our Washington Bureau

PHILADELPHIA—When President Truman called the Republican-controlled Congress into special session for July 26 to consider all the legislation he wrapped up in his nomination acceptance speech, he assured one thing definitely.

That is: The Presidential election campaign—with Battling Truman-Barkley in this corner versus Kid Dewey-Warren in that corner—is going to be an old-fashioned slugfest.

And look out for horseshoes in the gloves. With nails in them.

THE DEMOCRATIC National Convention formally chose President Truman and Kentucky's Senator Barkley to carry its colors at the Wednesday-night windup session, which extended past midnight.

Mr. Truman won a first-ballot nomination. He received 947½ votes.

Senator Russell, of Georgia, candidate of the states' rights Southerners, got 263 and Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, got a half vote.

Barkley was nominated by acclamation for vice president.

THE PRESIDENT, in an acceptance speech to the cheering delegates, announced his plan to recall Congress. He issued the formal call Thursday.

The party completed its business Thursday with re-election of Senator McGrath, of Rhode Island, as national chairman.

McGrath's selection by the National Committee was unopposed. Several Southern members were absent.

Free Press

ORDINARILY, a Presidential campaign does not get under way until after Labor Day. That provides 60 days of oratory and traveling over the country.

Fri. 7-16-48

Except in war times Congress members are away from Washington in national-election years.

It is customary—in fact, it's usually a gentleman's agreement—that they get that time off to do their own campaigning.

BUT MR. TRUMAN has done the unexpected in calling a special session.

He is laying down enough work in legislation he wants passed to keep all hands in Washington possibly until next January, when the 81st Congress goes in.

Is that special-session call good Democratic politics, or will it kick back on Mr. Truman?

Republicans as well as Democrats recognize the special call as a political act.

The special session will be a political session. It was Mr. Truman's idea to put the Republicans on a spot. At the moment, he's done just that.

THE REPUBLICAN National Committee described the call for a special session as "the act of a desperate man * * * to obtain partisan advantage after he himself has lost the confidence of the people."

Rep. Scott, of Pennsylvania, the committee chairman, said that Mr. Truman "evidently hopes in some way, out of the confusion, that he may benefit at the expense of the country."

Many other Republican congressional leaders branded the special-session call "cheap politics."

SENATOR VANDENBERG, now at home in Grand Rapids,

said he doubted that any good to the country could come from the President's action.

Rep. Woodruff, of Michigan, chairman of the House Republican Conference, said that the President is trying to "bulldoze" Congress.

Rep. Wolcott (R., Mich.), House Banking Committee chairman, said that "the call is purely political and the session will not be conducive to constructive legislation."

It was in Wolcott's committee that housing legislation sought by Mr. Truman was tied up.

MOST DEMOCRATIC leaders approved the special session, though some anti-Truman members called the idea unwise.

While the Democrats will be making the most political capital they can out of the special session, the Republicans will not be sitting back sucking their thumbs.

And that brings up an interesting political consequence for the voters to keep an eye on.

WHEN THOMAS E. DEWEY was just another governor running for the Republican presidential nomination, he could not say a word to the Republican congressional leaders.

If he had made just one suggestion to Congress, Senator Taft (R., O.), and a couple of hundred other members of both Houses would have jumped him so fast he never would, have got his balance back.

But now the picture has changed. Dewey is the presidential nominee of the Republicans. He's the leader of the party. Mr. Truman is shooting at him while aiming at Congress.

Whether he likes it or not, whether congressional Republicans like it or not, Dewey has to take a lively interest in what's going on in Washington.

That sets up a challenge to Dewey's campaign strategists.

THE PRESIDENT wants price and housing legislation especially. He asked for rationing and price control in his special message last fall.

He said in his acceptance speech that he still wants it.

The Republicans in Congress were pretty certain the people did not want those things.

The Democraic platform calls for its outright repeal. That's a sop to organized labor.

When the Republicans passed the law over Mr. Truman's veto—with the help of a large part of the Democrats—they thought the rank and file of labor wanted it. That's one to watch.

MR. TRUMAN called the Republican Displaced Persons Act "anti-Catholic, anti-Semitic." That will come in for some comment in Congress.

In his acceptance speech, the President took a leaf from Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal book.

What he asked for in legislation would, as the Republicans put it, give just about everybody in the voting mass something that costs Federal money, except the people who pay taxes.

Mr. Truman called the tax-reduction act, passed over his veto

Man On Mobile Bay Who Wrote Truman Song Needs Help

Chicago, Ill

MOBILE, Ala.—Here in this garden spot of the South not too far removed from the rabid headquarters of the waning Dixiecrats, an inspired composer who has alleady sent his cash contribution to the National Truman Headquarters in New York, N. Y., is feverishly working out plans whereby his new song which caught the political pulse of the Democrats at the Philadelphia convention, may be spread throughout the nation.

In a modest little place at 1515 S. Washington ave., Holger C. Lanther and Cleda Gray created this new song likely to eventually become the battle cry of the Democrats when they enter the big battle for votes shortly after Labor Day. Lanther says by that time every man and woman wishing to preserve their civil rights will be chanting, "Demo, Demo, Democrat. The battle cry is to go to bat and see the U. S. through with Truman," as the words of the song go.

World Atlanta, Ga.

A Fighting Challenge.

Since April, 1945, Truman as President has been carrying out the platform pledge of the late President Roosevelt. If he succeeds in the Presidency next November, he will be carrying out a platform of his own choosing. He committed to a genuine platform of civil rights, and in his acceptance speech at Philadelphia, left no room for doubt as to where he stands on this important issue. He is committted to a foreign policy which will extend hope and democracy to oppressed Nations of the world, as well as food and shelter, without which they will promptly starve. He is committed to the extension of Democracy to the backward peoples of the earth as much so as to the oppressed minorities at home, and is wasting no time in proving to the world where he stands on it. Sat. 7-17-48

In short, therefore, Mr. Truman, by his action is calling on America to follow his leadership to make the Four Freedoms upon whose promise our men and women, too, have fought and worked and died to make a reality for all people. That is how the nominee of the Democratic party feels towards the call of his party as its Standard Bearer.

In a fighting tone, the President opened his campaign, much to the surprise of his enemies and to the delight of his supporters. He wants action, and not mere words, on Civil Rights legislation; on discrimination by reason of race color or national orgin, on protection of racial and religious minorities from discrimination in employment, the right to vote, the the right to equal protection under the law and most of all, he wants a chance for the lawmakers at Washington who have been so anxious to rescue the Nation from the brink of disaster, to come forward now and show it by their votes on sorely needed legislation, which cannot wait until a Presidential Election is ended.

To that end, he has announced that he will recall the lawmakers to Washington this month and will ask them to do specific things, now promised in the platform of the two major parties. What a challenge the President has posed to the leaders in both parties. No longer can the predominant Republican Congress hide behind criticism of Franklin D. Roosevelt. No longer can they dodge the issue of mob violence, the poll tax, political equality for all groups and numerous other burning issues, as housing, inflationary prices, a minimum wage level. Now they must face this issue squarely and coragecusly, or else words on the political platform will sink them this Fall before the voters.

For this corag ous and forthright leadership Americans and especially American Negroes, owe to Mr. Truman an undying debt of gratitude. Such a man deserves not only the undivided loyalty and support of Negro voters but likewise, deserves a hallowed spot in their memories in order that posterity may know of his bold and determined advocacy of the cause of freedom and equality for them.

Nomination of President Truman

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One cannot but gain admiration for President Harry S. Truman after the ordeal he has gone through in the past few weeks at the hands of his own arty members.

Despite the many unkind cuts he received from these politicos, despite the bitterness that exists on his Civil Rights program, he remained undaunted and persisted that this measure become part of the platform plank. His desire to be nominated was truly a gesture that required stamina in the face of the many things being said and published, proving that he had the courage of his convictions and that what he has done was what he believed to be right. To prove his belief he wanted the voters to be the ones to determine his fate and not those who disagreed with him.

I am happy that he was nominated, because I am certain that Mr. Truman made every move he did make with sincere, honest and purposeful intention. I do not feel he ever resorted to subterfuge, and that is what will endear him to those who want their Presidents along the Abraham Lincoln pattern. Harry S. Truman is the real home-spun type of person who has not learned to double-deal and has the courage to fight back when necessary. That is the man we want in the White House again. 7-19-48

Harry S. Truman has proved to be the courageous person required to guide this nation to a lasting peace by his untiring efforts to defeat the Communists and other subversive groups. Let us not fail him. NAT R. ADLER.

Demagogy on Jimcrow

By Benjamin J. Davis

New York, N.Y. Fri. 7-30-48 Daily Worker

PRESIDENT TRUMAN's executive orders on the armed forces and on federal employment are two more examples of a grandiose scheme of election demagogy which is by now revoltingly cheap and vulgar. Such methods — which characteristically come from a product of the Prendergast machine—bring discredit upon a White House, the level of which had been raised by its last occupant, Franklin Roosevelt.

The executive order on the armed forces speaks vaguely and abstractly about "equality of treatment and opportunity," but it is completely silent about the very heart of discrimination against Negro soldiers, namely, segregation. This means segregation will continue, with the blessings of Truman.

Even Walter White, NAACP secretary and one of Truman's most pathetic apologists, felt compelled to state: "President Truman, I am sure, is aware of the fact, as is every other intelligent American, that there can be no equality with a segregated pattern." But White, like the other bankrupt liberals and right-wing Social Democrats, it still trying to convince Negroes to vote for Truman, although White, in his own statement, calls Truman a hypocrite. 7-30-48

The executive order on federal employment re-affirms merely with additional words a policy which has been in existence for 60 years—like the 14th Amendment—but which anyone would be downright silly to expect Truman to enforce.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States is a desperate man. Discredited by the pre-convention Eisenhower and Douglas booms, he is trying any and every maneuver to recapture his irrevocably lost face among the masses, especially among Negroes and other defenders of civil liberties. He is trying to overcome the fatal crisis in his own party, and somehow keep the Negro people chained to the two-party system. He is searching for a way for the bankrupt liberals, who said "down with him" before the Democratic convention, to say "up with him" afterwards. Truman is trying to disorient, confuse and divide the Negro people who favor Wallace. Frightened by the prospect of defeat in November, Truman is anxious that he, and not Dewey, shall win the right to serve Wall Street for the next four years.

The Republicans have assailed Truman's executive orders and the special session as election hypocrisy. Truman has assailed them back. Both are right. During the last four years, both the Democrats and Republicans had control of Congress—neither passed civil rights legislation.

The same is true for the last 80 years. With Nov. 2, starting him in the face, Truman feigns interest in the issue. But even so, not much. Once he said he could not in propriety tell Congress what specific bills to pass. In his message Tuesday, he dropped propriety and told Congress the name of bills he wanted passed in every case—except in the case of anti-poll tax, anti-lynch and FEPC legislation. This kind of fakery is an insult to the intelligence of the Negro people. 7-30-48 Fri.

THE ONLY AREA in which Truman and his Gestapo bloodhounds act is in imposing "loyalty" oaths, tearing up trade unions, and jailing and framing Communists in an attempt to outlaw the party—all in Hitler's image and in an attempt to silence all opposition to his bipartisan war program. Fri. 7-30-48

We Communists have been fighting for two decades for civil liberties and against the force and violence practiced by lynchers upon Negroes, labor and upon American democracy. We are jailed. But the Ku Klux Klan gangsters can hold an open daylight convention in Atlanta, Georgia, dedicated to "enforce white supremacy by force," and neither Truman nor Tom Clark, nor any of their gentlemen-bloodhounds take action. The Ku Klux Klan, of course, supports the Marshall plan and opposes the Progressive Party, and thus the Klan meets the Rankin-Truman-Parnell Thomas test of so-called "Americanism."

Truman does great honor to the Wallace-Taylor Progressive Party. He knows it had a terrific impact upon the essentially democratic population of the country, and he is trying to undermine it—with words. In this, he might as well try to bale out the ocean with a thimble. He must also tip his hat to the fighting militant spirit of the Negro people.

This party has arisen because a fundamental new realignment of forces is necessary today, to save the country from the ruin of war and fascism into which both major parties would drag it.

With all the demagogy in Truman's message to the special session, there's not a word about foreign policy because both major parties constitute one war party. On this, the major issue of the campaign, only the Progressive Party offers an alternative to Negro and white Americans. Nevertheless, the competition in demagogy on civil rights between Truman and Dewy must not be underestimated.

For whatever reasons Truman called the special session, labor and the people—Negro and white—should by their dramatic presence in Washington see that their will, and not Wall Street's, is done.

The Truculent (Truman)

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

Harry Truman came out of his corner fighting when he accepted the Democratic nomination for the presidency. And in that fact he gave his party the promise, if not of victory, at least of a warm campaign, and maybe of a closer race than has generally been thought likely. When November comes the Republicans will know they have been in a fight.

Fri. 34 a(1) 7-16-48

President Truman's acceptance speech had the virtues as well as the faults of the temper he was in. It contained some of the crudities of belligerence. The chip he carried on his shoulder did not make for grace. His choice of words sometimes had closer kinship with the street than university classrooms. Some of his statements, particularly his references to the ungratefulness that would be shown by farmers and organized labor if these groups did not support the Democratic ticket, may have antagonized more than they helped.

But on the whole it was an effective political speech. It contrasted sharply with the acceptance speech three weeks ago of Gov. Dewey. The Republican nominee gave a polished oration, full of sounding phrases and noble ideals. But somehow it seemed that an automaton was speaking. There was a man behind Truman's speech, a battling, earnest man; a man sometimes wrong, sometimes crude, but always sincere. He was taking a political program down to the political level where it would have to be worked out.

The challenge of the whole speech reached a climax in the announcement that Congress would be called into special session. That call will be questioned, for many impressive reasons, but it is politically daring. It is intended to put the Republicans on the defensive, a role they had not wanted to take in this campaign. How well it will succeed is very questionable. It involves decided dangers.

There are many matters that should be acted upon by Congress, notably housing and the rising cost of living. But they are not problems that have arisen since Congress adjourned early in June. They existed then, and exist now only in aggravated form. There is proper question raised, therefore, as to the extent of the need and feasibility of the special session.

The News

Since that question exists, there cannot be avoided certain political overtones to the call. It will be charged that campaign strategy influenced the call and its timing. Certainly the occasion which President Truman chose to announce the special session emphasizes its political aspects.

The session will be held, therefore, in a political climate that cannot be wholly avoided. In a larger degree than is usually the case, the nation will be watching the lawmakers as voters more than as citizens. The political spotlight will shine on Capitol Hill.

Birmingham, Ala.

Constructive legislation may come out of the session. It is to be hoped that it will. But one result of the session may be to throw light upon whether the Republicans mean what they say in their program.

Fri. 7-16-48

Probably never before in the country's history has a political party had an opportunity to put some of its platform promises into effect before, and not after, an election. President Truman is giving the Republicans that opportunity. Apparently he is sure they will not, or cannot, take advantage of it, and their failure will hurt them. But he is committing the Democratic Party to a big risk. People do not like the idea of using Congress in this way for campaign purposes.

It is not the first time, however, that President Truman has risked not only his own political career but also his party's position. Will he win now? That is a question. But certainly the odds against him are not quite so great as they have been. His fighting mood is proving contagious.

Head of FSA Tells Association for Aiding Negro Advancement He Risked Political Future

New York, N.Y.

By GEORGE STREATOR

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 23—The delegates to the annual convention of the Natoinal Association for the Advancement of Colored People were told today that President Truman had deliberately risked his political welfare to fight racial prejudice on every front. Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, said that a more cautious occupant of the White House wouud have side-stepped grave social issues in an election year.

"In taking this forthright stand, President Truman deliberately antagonized a large wing of his own party and laid himself open to an unparalleled barrage of threats and personal abuse," Mr. Ewing asserted, "at a time when such threats and abuse could damage his political prospects most. And he stuck to his guns."

In praising President Truman "for throwing the full weight of his authority in support of Federal legislation against lynching, the poll tax and a permanent FEPC," the speaker criticized Congress for failing to act. Although a Fair Employment Practices Commission was lacking, said Mr Ewing, the United States Employment Service, the Office of Education and Department of Commerce had entered into a program of aiding Negroes by educating the general public to the urgency of the situation.

Assails Congress on Housing

The Times

Mr. Ewing also asked the delegates to view "the shocking overcrowded slums of Harlem, or the little communities of tumbled-down shacks in a southern town," as a rebuke to Congress which had, he said, refused to act upon the President's "repeated requests" for adequate housing measures.

He also blamed Congress for blocking health measures, and asked the association to campaign for including in the social security program 20,000,000 farm hands, small farm owners, share-croppers and domestics.

Mr. Ewing praised the officials of the Government-operated Gallinger Hospital in Washington, for admitting to its training facilities, Negro medical internes from Howard University and the Meharry Medical College. This action should stimulate other blows against race discrimination in this country, he said.

Thurs

In all these things, he asked that Negroes cooperate with liberal whites by joining political forces. A campaign for democracy will fail "if we present less than a solid front to the opposition," Mr. Ewing added.

Regional Colleges Denounced

Thurgood arshall of the association's legal staff, said tonight that any plan fo r a regional college whose students would be selected on the basis of race, was "vulnerable." Classing such colleges with other forms of "separate but equal" policies of the South toward Negroes, he declared that the association looked upon segregation "in any form and in any disguise as undemocratic, un-American and immoral, a thesis that is no longer debatable."

The association announced that it would continue to support the fight of Mrs. Ada Lois Sipuel Fisher, who seeks admission to the law school of the University of Oklahoma.

Discussion of political action was set aside today while delegates debated the question of "democracy" within the organization itself, will be opened at the next business session of the association. Walter White, association secretary, accused "some political organizations" of seizing upon technical questions of organization detail, as a means of spreading confusion in the association.

Nothing Found Objectionable In Barkley Record

Thurs.

7-22-48

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

PHILADELPHIA—(NNPA)— The Truman-Barkley ticket plus the strong civil rights plank in the Democratic platform are bound to have a definite appeal to minority group voters and hold in line some of the colored voters who have shown a tendency to desert the Democratic party either to return to the Republican fold or support the Wallace-Taylor third party ticket.

The biggest feather in Mr. Truman's cap insofar as colored voters are concerned in his civil rights program. Whether his actions be regarded as sincere or merely lip service, the fact remains that it was he who decided to appoint the Committee on Civil Rights, whose report made civil rights a burning national issue.

34 a(1)

But even before Mr. Truman appointed his civil rights committee, his Attorney General had advocated in the South a strengthening of civil rights preparatory to seeking a broadening of existing civil rights statutes to overcome the limitations placed upon them by United States Supreme Court interpretation.

SPECIAL MESSAGE Thurs

Mr. Truman himself on February 2, sent to the Congress a special message calling for legislation to implement the report of the Civil Rights committee. The message called for a strengthening of existing Federal civil rights statutes, a Federal anti-lynching law, more adequate protection of the right to vote, establishment of a fair employment practice commission, and prohibition of race discrimination in interstate travel.

Southern Senators, Representatives and Governors responded to this message with one of the bitterest attacks ever made upon a President, climaxed by rebellious members of the Alabama and Mississippi delegations walking out of the Democratic national convention last Wednesday.

BARKLEY'S RECORD

While Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky President Trumans' running mate, has been no crusader, there is nothing objectionable in his record. The Vice-Presidential candidate, who will be 71 years old on November 24, next, is a conservative but he has voted for cloture on both FEPC and anti-poll tax legislation.

Daily World

In his acceptance speech at the convention early last Thursday morning, Mr. Truman, apparently referring to the bitter fight over the civil rights issue, said:

7-22-48

"This convention met to express the will and reaffirm the beliefs of the Democratic party. There have been difference of opinion and that's the democratic way. Those differences have been settled by a majority vote, as they should be. Now is the time for us to get together and beat the common enemy, and that's up to you."

Atlanta, Ga.

Later in his speech dramatically announcing that he was calling the Congress back into session on July 26, Mr. Truman declared that one of the things he will ask them to act upon is "civil rights legislation, which they say they are for."

Daily World

Mr. Truman appeared undisturbed by the fact that twenty-two delegates from Mississippi and [illegible] of the twenty-six delegates from Alabama had walked out of the convention after it had approved a minority report indorsing his civil rights program and rejected a States' rights proposal.

Truman Aims to Fight Battle on His Own Merits

Of Our Washington Bureau

PHILADELPHIA—Four years ago, in a Chicago Stadium that was as steamy and oppressive as this Philadelphia Convention Hall, the party bosses pulled the rug out from under Henry Wallace.

To the rage of the CIO they nominated their boy Harry S. Truman for Vice President.

The modest, low-voiced Senator from Missouri stood in the rostrum that July night in 1944 full of humility.

HE TOLD THE delegates to the Democratic National Convention, most of whom were in the hall again Wednesday night, that he didn't feel worthy of the honor that had been thrust upon him.

Nine months later, the friendly, gregarious and unassuming man answered his phone at the Capitol and was told to come up to the White House and be sworn in as President of the United States.

Seldom has a man been so overwhelmed by fate as was Harry Truman when he took the oath of office as President in April, 1945.

At his first press conference in the White House he asked the reporters to pray for him.

THERE IS NO record that the reporters ever did this. But if they did, their prayers were not very effective.

Mr. Truman has had nothing but trouble ever since.

Detroit, Mich

His popularity curve, according to public opinion polls, has gone up and down with such violent and rapid fluctuations that the President might well be cynical about the fickleness of the American public.

Thurs.

For many months after he assumed his heavy duties as President, Mr. Truman answered all criticisms with the petulant asertion that he had never sought the office in the first place.

This petulance has disappeared.

MR. TRUMAN has no detectable delusions of grandeur, but he certainly does not feel now that he is inadequate for his job.

Stubbornness and pride have taken hold and turned him into a fighting candidate for a full-term election on his own merits.

His Western trip proved beyond doubt that if Mr. Truman goes down to defeat in November, as so widely predicted, he will go down fighting and with his head up.

And the Republicans will know, when it's all over, that they have been in a contest.

THE SOREST BURDEN of Mr. Truman as he begins his desperate fight for vindication is the failure of the so-called "liberal" elements of the Democratic Party to rally to him.

7-15-48

There are dozens of elusive reasons for the present disintegration of the liberal forces.

Franklin D. Roosevelt managed to keep them in the same tent with the middle of the roaders and the conservative Southerners of the Democratic Party for so many years.

But Harry Truman is not Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Thurs.

The fuzzy assumption that there may be some remedy for this immutable fact is mainly responsible for the lack of spirit of the Democratic Convention of 1948.

7-15-48

FRANCES PERKINS, the former Secretary of Labor, has been the only person at this convention to face the obvious fact that Truman is not Roosevelt.

She told the delegates the other night they'd better stop trying to find another Roosevelt as a candidate and settle for a couple of men who are willing to carry on what Roosevelt started.

Mr. Truman himself is rather tired of being measured by the Roosevelt standard. He's very much in the position of a second husband whose wife is forever reminding him of the virtues of her late spouse.

The first husband might have catted around some, but the vices of a good man—or a good vote getter—tend to become blurred in the memory of his loved ones.

THE EAGERNESS of Mr. Truman to be President in his own right, without being reminded how the Great White Father would have done it, explains in part the power of the so-called "Missouri gang" at the White House.

Free Press

It is a whisky-drinking, poker-playing mob, the members of which have won their places in the palace through real or pretended friendship for the President, rather than for any service in the world of statesmanship and politics.

Detroit, Mich

Whether he gets encouragement from the Missouri gang or from his own inner felicity, Mr. Truman seems not at all concerned about the difficult and bitter months ahead of him.

Thurs. 7-15-48

HE HAS WHAT he considers a vital issue in the record of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, which he says has legislated for the special interests and not for the people.

Mr. Truman is prepared to win or lose on that issue. He has indicated that he will preach the derelictions of the Republicans in Congress at every cross roads in the United States.

The President appears in excellent shape for the grueling campaign he has tentatively outlined for himself.

Thurs.

HE LOOKS fresh and sprightly for his 64 years.

He shows fatigue after a hard day of campaigning, but has the blessed faculty of relaxing and recouping for the next day's routine.

He is an early-to-bed and early-to-rise man, and usually has a good start on a day's work when most people are just climbing out of the sheets.

THE PRESIDENT keeps in shape with mild exercises, walking and swimming, and gets a "let down" each night with a massage by an expert physical therapist supplied by the Navy.

Mr. Truman is looking forward with courageous zest to his coming bout with his Republican rival, Gov. Thomas Dewey of New York.

Thurs 7-15-48

If he shares the pessimism of some of the Democratic leaders at this convention he has concealed it well behind his friendly and confident smile, his new sense of liberal leadership and his determination to tell his story to the American people and let them decide for themselves next November.

Fights GOP In And Out Of Congress, And Dixie Democrats In Party

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

PHILADELPHIA—(AP)—President Truman Thursday took on momentous political battle, with Republicans in and out of Congress and with rebelling Southerners in his own party.

The opposition swiftly accepted the challenges Mr. Truman laid down. The Republicans did it with charges of "cheap politics" and the shifting of G. O. P. campaign headquarters to Washington.

34a(1)

Southerners who bolted the Democratic National Convention Wednesday night in a rage over the civil rights issue reacted with a formal call for a rump convention in Birmingham Saturday. They plan to pick a candidate who thinks the states—not the Federal government—should handle such problems as lynching and poll taxes.

Mr. Truman stirred up both the Republicans and part of the once solid South in a short, hard-swinging pre-dawn speech Thursday. In it he:

What He Wants

1. Accepted the presidential nomination of the Democratic Convention at the moment of the greatest party split in 88 years—a split over racial and civil rights issues.

2. Announced he was summoning the Republican-led Congress back into a special session that promises to be as hot as a Washington Summer. His announced purpose: To carry the offensive to the G. O. P.; to make it put up or shut up right now on its own platform promises.

3. Appealed for Democratic Party harmony while swatting the South in its sorest spot. One thing he will ask—again—is that Congress pass some laws against lynching and poll taxes and "Jim Crow" discrimination against Negroes.

Following Uncertain

In the national campain, it will be Mr. Truman and Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, against Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, and Gov. Earl Warren, of California.

Just how much of a following the Birmingham meeting could rustle up was uncertain, because some of the South wasn't quite sore enough to get out of the party.

Russell said at Winder, Ga., he would have no part of the meeting. Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, who withdrew as a states rights candidate at the convention here, said he hadn't made up his mind about Birmingham.

Laney quit because he said he couldn't stand on that civil rights plank in the platform.

Virginia delegates were undecided, too, about keeping the new civil war going. Louisianans were just as irate as any in the South but made no plans to go to Birmingham because they figured they ought to have more time to think things over.

Truman Hailed by Drs. Tobias, Bethune for Forthright Action

BALTIMORE

President Harry S. Truman, through his forthright address before the national NAACP convention last summer and because of the report submitted both by his Committee on Civil Rights and Commission on Higher Education, has drawn the praise of Dr. Channing Tobias and Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune.

Dr. Bethune in addition to praising the President for his own actions, gave him credit for the action of the Justice Department in joining forces with the democracy in the restrictive covenant and railroad firemen cases before the Supreme Court. "These actions," she says, "have re-affirmed and heightened the prestige of the democratic way of life." 1-3-48

Dr. Tobias points out that no other President of the United States has came out as openly against the anti-democratic forces in America as did President Truman in his NAACP speech. His "courage" drew an enthusiastic hand from the director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund.

The President Reveals His Intention

The Constitution

WASHINGTON—It will be difficult to place but one interpretation on the announced decision of President Truman for making a cross-country tour of the nation on the eve of the coming Democratic National Convention. The trip, having all the earmarks of a Presidential campaign tour, tends to remove any lingering doubts as to Mr. Truman's willingness to run for a second term.

Starting out from Washington the first week in June, the President plans to go all the way to the Pacific Coast by slow stages. Usually in his travels about the country Mr. Truman has gone by plane, but the present trip will be made by train, enabling him to make any number of rear platform appearances along the route.

It will thus be the first opportunity the country has had to see the President at first hand. From the itinerary arranged by the White House, there is every evidence that he plans to take full advantage of it.

Mon 5-10-48

Major speeches have been scheduled at both Chicago and Omaha on the trip West. Still others may be put down on the program before the arrangements are completed. Visits are to be made to Washington and Oregon before the President goes on to California for several days stay. He plans to make at least three speeches in California, one at the University of California in Berkley, another at San Francisco and a third at Los Angeles.

Atlanta Ga.

California, with its big block of 25 electoral votes, is one of the Democratic sore spots of the West. The indicated widespread defection of party followers there to the Wallace Third Party ticket has raised serious doubts as to the ability of the Democrats to carry the State in November.

The fact that the President is planning to spend as much time as he is in the State is therefore considered not without some political significance.

The Constitution

His plans for returning to Washington after leaving California have not yet been revealed, but there is some speculation that he may come back over the Southern route, with suggested stops in such key cities as Houston, New Orleans, Atlanta and other points beyond. The purpose of this would be to soften up the threatened Southern rebellion against his renomination, it is supposed.

Mon 5-10-48

For the President to undertake a trip of the kind a short time before the party's national convention in July has apparently only one meaning. It is taken to mean that he has definitely made up his mind to run for re-election and is laying the groundwork for a minimum amount of opposition to his nomination.

Otherwise it is inconceivable that Mr. Truman would go on such a long jaunt with all of the political frills that have been arranged as an accompaniment. Moreover, instead of going by train he expected to travel by air, which would enable him to cover the distance without spending too much time away from the White House.

With the political trend running against him, as it is, there has been a lingering suspicion among some top-ranking Democratic leaders that the President, at the proper time, would make known his decision not to offer for a second term. There was a suspicion that, seeing the handwriting on the wall and preferring not to go down to defeat, he would step aside at the last minute and ask the convention to nominate Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, the man who seems to offer the best prospects of a Democratic victory this year.

Atlanta Ga.

Few party leaders doubt the willingness of Gen. Eisenhower to accept the nomination under such circumstances. Most of them are agreed also that he would be a sure winner.

But all of this now appears to have been inspired by wishful thinking. It still could happen that way, but the odds are against it. Mr. Truman seems to have revealed his hand sufficiently by committing himself to the cross-country jaun he is about to make. It is hardly likely that he would be making a trip of the kind with the political trimmings involved, if he were thinking of anything but running for re-election.

Negroes Backing Truman

Memphis World

It is most gratifying to know that Negro leaders throughout America have accepted assignment on the National Citizens Committee for the re-election of Pres. Truman, with Congressman William L. Dawson as the General Chairman. It would have been a source of great and painful disappointment to the rank and file of American Negroes if this could not have been done. Thus, with Negro publishers, editors, lawyers, business and professional leaders, accepting the call to lead in the crusade for Truman's re-election, the task should be greatly simplified.

To forsake Mr. Truman at such a critical hour would be the height of ingratitude on the part of Negroes. Nothing else should be greater in the minds of American Negroes in this election than the fact that Harry S. Truman gave his last full measure of devotion to the cause of civil rights for Negroes, more than for any other minority group in America. And the weight of all of the fight against the President today has its origin in his advocacy of the passage of civil rights legislation.

Fri 8-6-48

Thus, millions of American Negroes will throw their votes, their money and their influence behind Mr. Truman. He should be re-elected. We think he will be, if we take advantage of the opportunities that are ours now. In advocating civil rights Mr. Truman is seeking to build the kind of America which the Constitution stands for. In this position the Demagogues and Dixiecrats are leagued to defeat him. They do not want freedom and equality for all Americans. They do not want universal suffrage, either for Negroes or for whites. They do not want freedom from terror and death by the mob. And they do not want education for the masses, either for whites or for Negroes. In other words, the Dixiecrats are waging a desperate battle to hold on to their age-long traditions to rule by terror and thus subject the Negro to second class citizenship.

Memphis Tennessee

A government which seeks to accord to the Negro equal justice in the courts, freedom from terror and mob-violence honest wage for honest work, they say is "an insult to the South," a menace to southern traditions, and "an invader of State's rights."

No sensible Negro will be fooled by southern congressmen who say they are not against the abolition of the poll tax but are against the invasion of states' rights. The plain and undeniable truth is that they are against a free and unrestricted ballot. They are against universal education for the masses and they, for the most part, profit by hatred between whites and Negroes, between capital and labor, and between the masses and the classes.

Truman in 3-Way Political Fight With GOP, In-Out Solons, Rebels

Atlanta Constitution

Fri 7-16-48

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

PHILADELPHIA, July 15—(AP) President Truman took on today a momentous three-front political battle, with Republicans in and out of Congress and with rebelling Southerners in his own Party.

The opposition swiftly accepted the challenges Mr. Truman laid down. The Republicans did it with charges of "cheap politics" and the shifting of GOP campaign headquarters to Washington.

Southerners who bolted the Democratic National Convention last night in a rage over the civil rights issue reacted with a formal call for a rump convention in Birmingham Saturday. They plan to pick a candidate who thinks the States—not the Federal Government—should handle such problems as lynching and poll taxes.

Mr. Truman stirred up both the Republicans and part of the once Solid South in a short, hard-swinging predawn speech today. In it he:

1. Accepted the presidential nomination of the Democratic Convention at the moment of the greatest party split in 88 years—a split over racial and civil rights issues.

2. Announced he was summoning the Republican-led Congress back into a special session that promises to be as hot as a Washington Summer. His announced purpose: To carry the offensive to the GOP, to make it put up or shut up right now on its own platform promises.

3. Appealed for Democratic Party harmony while swatting the South in its sorest spot. One thing he will ask—again—is that Congress pass some laws against lynching, poll taxes and "Jim Crow" discrimination against Negroes.

In the national campaign, it will be Mr. Truman and Sen. Barkley of Kentucky against Gov. Dewey of New York and Gov. Warren of California.

Barkley accepted the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination, also in this morning's early hours. He won it unanimously on the first ballot.

Mr. Truman was a first ballot winner, too, but far from a unanimous winner. For the South, angered by his civil rights program and a Northern maneuver that wrote it into the Party platform, put up Sen. Russell of Georgia as a protest candidate.

Russell pulled 263 votes to Mr. Truman's 947 1/2, with 618 needed to nominate. But he registered the extent of Southern unhappiness within the Party.

Before that, the whole Mississippi delegation and half of Alabama's thumbed their noses at the rest of the Convention and walked out into the rain. The downpour failed to cool their anger over the Civil Rights plank in the Party platform.

And this morning, Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi appealed to "every man and woman who believes in States' Rights and who opposes Harry S. Truman and the things he stands for" to assemble Saturday in Birmingham.

Thus Party unity was at the lowest point since the Democrats broke apart in 1860 — over the issue of slavery. Through the gap in their ranks, the Republican Party marched to its first victory with the immortal Lincoln leading the way.

Just how much of a following the Birmingham meeting could rustle up was uncertain, because some of the South wasn't quite sore enough to get out of the Party.

Russell said at Winder, Ga., he would have no part of the meeting. Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, who withdrew as a States' Rights candidate at the convention here, said he hadn't made up his mind about Birmingham.

Laney quit because he said he couldn't stand on that civil-rights plank in the platform.

Virginia delegates were undecided, too, about keeping the new civil war going. Louisianans were just as irate as any in the South but made no plans to go to Birmingham because they figured they ought to have more time to think things over.

Nobody turned up to represent Mississippi at a meeting of the Democratic National Committee today. Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina likewise stayed away.

A main purpose of the meeting was to re-elect Sen. J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, National Chairman. This was done without opposition.

The way Russell sized up the special session of Congress, Northern Democrats and the Republicans will "fight to see who can kick the South the hardest" with civil rights legislation.

He said Mr. Truman's call to Congress is "a desperate move" to "rivet national attention on what he has picked as the national issues in the 1948 campaign."

Republicans, too, almost unanimously said there were political motives behind the move.

Political or not, supporters of Mr. Truman said it was a wise move. Former Sec. of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson said Mr. Truman put the Republicans on the spot. He added it up this way:

"If they don't do anything about the special session program, he's got them. If they do, the credit will be his."

Fri. 7-16-48

Besides civil rights, Mr. Truman said in his acceptance speech he would ask Congress to get busy on such items as help for schools, improving the nation's health, enlarging the social security program, and a boost in the 40-cents-an-hour minimum wage."

He said the special session will determine whether the GOP "can fool the people with such poppycock" as he said he found in their platform.

Loudly and confidently he told the hundreds of delegates and thousands of spectators who stuck it out until the convention quit: "Sen. Barkley and I will win this election and make these Republicans like it."

Barkley told a reporter he plans to keep his Senate seat while campaigning. His present term lasts until 1951. He said he was going back to Washington and then home to Paducah, Ky., for a week or so of rest.

Revolt Strategy

Birmingham News-Age-Herald

Southern Democrats Don't Expect To Block Truman But Are Planning To Fight Civil Rights

Sun. 5-23-48

BY FRED TAYLOR

Critics of revolting Southern Democrats, particularly those pledged to a walkout at the Philadelphia convention, repeatedly ask this colmn just what these dissident Democrats hope to accomplish.

After all, they ask, won't the revolters be butting their heads against a political stone wall?

The revolters don't think so.

The revolters have little hope, if any, of blocking President Truman's nomination.

TAYLOR

They may be steam-rollered by Northern and Eastern Truman backers in their efforts to block the president's "civil rights" force measures.

But the revolters' over-all strategy goes beyond the 1948 presidential election. They look to 1952 and the other quadrenniums to come.

Their aims are to establish the South's political independence and make it a factor in national elections, so that Southern states will be wooed by both Democrats and Republicans instead of being ignored by both parties.

Birmingham News

WILL FIGHT BE FUTILE?—Skeptics think the revolt will die, gasping its last breath at Philadelphia. They point out that State Democratic Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey, revolt leader and walkout spearhead, concedes Mr. Truman's nomination, probably on the first ballot.

They say the revolters must view realistically the fact that by sheer weight of numbers the North and East will be able to overwhelm the South in delegate votes. And, in doing so, force adoption of "civil rights" measures.

Sun. 5-23-48

But the Southern revolters, at least, some of the Alabama leaders, don't concede this. They believe that if a strong enough fight is made, the race equality force measures will be greatly toned down if not beaten down.

The Southerners don't think the fight will be futile. And they are banking on getting real help from some of the Western states.

WALK OUT — But why walk out of the Democratic National Convention? This question is asked most of all.

Strong arguments have been against a walkout. It was—and is—one of the issues in the delegate campaign.

It is disputed only as a method of opposing Truman for the nomination and combatting his proposals.

This column has pointed out time and again that all the delegate candidates, as were all the presidential elector candidates, are publicly committed against Mr. Truman and his force measures.

Those opposed to a walkout argue that Alabama delegates should stay in the convention and fight the president and his program to the bitter end.

Chairman McCorvey and other candidates pledged to a walkout say they are going to stay in the convention and fight adoption of the "civil rights" plank. A walkout would come if they lose.

Then, and only then, do they propose to take a walk. To remain in the convention after that, they contend, would be to give tacit approval to these "anti-South" measures.

"GLITTERING GENERALITIES"—Some observers expect the proposals, as recommended by the president, to be compromised along the lines laid down by that master politician, Franklin D. Roosevelt, at Chicago in 1944.

F. D. R., with his deft touch and vote-winning finesse, had written into the platform a declaration promising only in a general way to bring about greater equality among the races.

But McCorvey has emphasized that the Southern revolters will continue to fight the "civil rights" proposals, even if these measures are reduced to "glittering generalities."

He says the time has come for the South to assert itself as a political part of the nation, make it wants heard and its wishes considered.

Birmingham News

SOUTHERN CONVENTION—Plans have been made to hold a Southern convention in Birmingham, if Alabama and other Southern delegates walk out at Philadelphia.

Arrangements for the Birmingham convention were made at the Southwide conference of states' rights at Jackson, Miss., recently. Tentative date for this session was set for July 17, following opening of the national convention July 12. But Arkansas Gov. Ben Laney, permanent chairman, was authorized to change this date, if developments make this necessary.

Whether the revolting Democrats, who have repudiated Truman, nominate a presidential candidate of their own is a matter of conjecture. Actually, the threat this group has raised against the National Democratic Party is this:

If the "civil rights" proposals are written into the national party platform at Philadelphia, the revolting Southerners will meet in separate convention to take whatever action is "necessary and appropriate."

RUNOFF HOLDS ANSWER—While all runoff delegate candidates are committed against Truman and his program, there is sharp division among them as to a convention walkout.

Of the four delegates-at-large already elected, two favor and two are opposed to a walkout. Seven candidates are scrapping it out in the runoff for the four additional at-large places. Four of these aspirants favor a walkout, three are against.

Of the 11 district delegates already chosen, four are against and three favor a walkout, with four uncommitted.

In the runoff races for seven other district places, 11 are pledged to walkout, eight are opposed and two uncommitted.

The runoff will decide whether those favoring or opposing a walkout will have an edge, but the uncommitted delegates may decide which group has majority control of the delegation.

CATHOLICS BACK TRUMAN ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The Guardian
Boston, Mass.
7-10-48

NEW ORLEANS, La. — The New Orleans Achdiocesan Committee of the Catholic Committee of the South is in agreement with the basic principles of Pres. Truman's message on civil rights.

In a statement issued this week the committee said "We, as Catholics and citizens, subscribe to the basic principles of human dignity and of the responsibilities of individuals in a free democratic society, and believe that these concepts are part of the natural law and are recognized in our constitutional scheme."

"We regret that many leaders in the South have refused to accept in good faith the President's message. We sense in their statements the seeds of race prejudice and reaction, indicating to us a lack of agreement on the fundamental principles of human rights. We fear that such an approach to the problems involved will tend to isolate the South as a region and weake nthe nation."

In New York, the importance of immediate enactment of federal anti-lynching legislation was emphasized by Roy Wilkins, editor of Crisis and assistant secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., at a forum of the Catholic Inter-racial council. He said:

"The vast mapority of people in this country today don't approve of lynching and yet a number of the mwon't accept a federal bill to stop it. They say that lynching is dying out, that most people are good, moral citizens, and why not let the South handle its own problems. What these people fail to realize is that it has been the pressure of outside opinion, the indignation, really, of people outside the South, and even outside the United States, that has affected this decline."

They Shy At Stumping Alabama For Truman

The News
Birmingham, Ala.

BY JAMES FREE
News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 11—It begins to look as if there'll be no official Alabama accents in the 1948 presidential campaign if Democrats choose President Truman and his civil rights program.

Five Alabama members of Congress made it plain today how they feel about a mimeographed call from their party that now is the time for all good Democrats to rally round. Tues. 5-11-48

"If Mr. Truman is renominated, I could not serve in the campaign for his reelection," Sen. John Sparkman said flatly.

Senior Sen. Hill agrees with his colleague and even plans to work for nomination of Dwight D. Eisenhower as the Democrats' offering.

The senators made their comments after they had received a letter sent to all party members by the Democratic National Committee asking that they be available for speeches in the coming campaign.

"I TOSSED IT IN the wastebasket," said Rep. George Andrews. "I'll make no speeches for Mr. Truman or anyone else backing the so-called civil rights."

Rep. Carter Manasco said crisply that he "never answers mimeographed letters." Tues

Rep. Bob Jones said he would make no plans or commitments for backing a Truman nomination.

"There'll be plenty of time for talking about campaign speech possibilities after the Democratic National Convention in July," said Jones. 5-11-48

Rep. Andrews said he believes it would be "safe to assume" that, with Truman as nominee, the Democratic Party would get no financial backing from its Alabama wing.

Other members of the delegation, not yet returned from elections at home, are believed to agree with the sentiments of their colleagues.

Sen. Sparkman's case is a striking example of how relations between the party and the South have deteriorated. In the 1946 congressional campaign Sparkman headed the whole speakers' bureau for the Democratic National Committee.

Democrats In Midwest Pledge Truman Support

13 State Chiefs In Conference Urge South To Follow Suit; Eisenhower Not Mentioned

Louisville, Ky.
Mon. 4-12-48

By the United Press.

Des Moines, April 11.—Directors of the 13-state Democratic Midwest Conference today gave President Truman their "wholehearted" support for election and urged Southern Democrats to do the same

No sentiment for General Dwight D. Eisenhower was voiced at the meeting, as had been expected.

Carl V. Rice, Kansas national committeeman, who had been expected to ask the conference to indorse Eisenhower, said "the people of my home state believe Eisenhower means it when he says he is not a candidate."

The conference, attended by 14 persons, urged that rebellious Southern party members "pledge themselves as we hereby pledge ourselves to accept the result (of the Democratic national convention) and unite behind our platform and candidates for the good of our country and party."

Truman Not Mentioned.

The Courier Journal

Although the resolution directed at the Southerners did not mention Truman by name, the Midwestern leaders left no doubt that they expect the national convention to nominate him. Louisville, Ky.

James C. Quigley, Nebraska national committeeman and chairman of the conference, will send the resolution to the Southern Democratic Conference, which meets at Atlanta tomorrow. Mon. 4-12-48

States represented today were Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa. However, resolutions adopted today put the entire conference on record, including party units in Missouri, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and Oklahoma.

Louisville, Ky.

The conference said the Democratic Party "has a national program," whereas "the hopeless confusion of the Republican leadership and the lack of a national Republican program is shown clearly by the contest for the Republican nomination now being staged in Nebraska."

Truman's Election Chances

Birmingham News

Almost everybody one sees nowadays, asked for an opinion, will say very knowingly and positively that, even if he is nominated, President Truman has virtually no chance of being elected. There are many obvious reasons to support that prediction.

Even the immensely popular Franklin Roosevelt felt the swing of changing sentiment several times before he died. Administrations in power, however successful, disappoint people, make enemies, create active opposition. The more effective an administration is, the more is it likely to generate reaction of some sort. Mr. Truman took over when the desire for change was developing strongly. The Democrats now are in their 16th year of national power. 6-13-48

Mr. Truman is not the kind of leader to inspire a great renewal of enthusiasm for his party and for its leader. He has made serious mistakes. Many Americans do not like the way he picks his advisers. Many do not like his association with the Pendergast machine of Kansas City. In the South his civil rights proposals have evoked a fervent and widespread protest. Many Southern Democrats will oppose him in every way they can because of these proposals.

Mr. Truman does not claim to be a great man. On the contrary, he plainly and repeatedly indicates his own awareness of his limitations. In any presidential race such a candidate would have decided handicaps. But it is the great swing of desire for change that underlies the conviction of so many that the Democrats have little or no chance this year. 6-13-48

On the whole, this seems to be a sound conception as to the outlook. This paper is not disposed to present any broad challenge of its validity.

But there is, it believes, some possibility that such thinking, based on such obvious considerations, may grow careless and overlook other factors that may enter into the situation.

There are some things that, before November comes, may contribute substantially to the improvement of Mr. Truman's standing. Sun. 6-13-48

There is the fact that, above all things, the people want a sound peace, and that by Fall the administration's program to that end may be showing so much promise that a considerable argument may be made against changing it.

Sen. Vandenberg and some of the ablest of the nation's Republicans have supported a bi-partisan foreign policy. But this policy has been carried out under a Democratic administration, and to that administration must go much of the credit if it proves successful. Sen. Vandenberg is himself, of course, a possible Republican presidential nominee. He would be able to share much of this credit, but Dewey wouldn't, nor Taft nor any other likely nominees. Birmingham

Mr. Truman is confident that peace is going to be maintained, that Russia dare not start a war if we build up our strength and that of Western Europe. If the international situation is markedly improved by November—as it may be—the Democrats will bear down strongly on that factor. News

They will also bear down heavily on already apparent division and extreme reaction among the Republicans.

They will continue to present their claims as the party of hope and progress. Mr. Truman will be presented more and more as a stout average man, much like the rest of us, doing his utmost courageously in a tremendously hard job. 6-13-48

These considerations are not presented as greatly brightening the outlook just now for the Democrats, but they are factors not to be lightly dismissed.

"Little Southern Pats"

34a(1)

President Harry Truman gave no sign that he knew his feet were wet; he was peppy, dapper and punctual as usual, and he reflected a hearty good cheer. But there was something a little unreal about his brisk attitude of unconcern. The angry waters of Democratic politics washed muddily through the White House all week and the President scarcely moved without sloshing in the stuff. Mon. 3-22-48

He began his press conference by calling Columnist Drew Pearson a liar. The reason: Pearson's charge that the President, in private conversation with an unidentified Manhattan newspaper publisher, had called New York Jews disloyal. Speaking slowly and without heat, Harry Truman told newsmen: "I want to pay attention to a vicious statement . . . it is just a lie out of whole cloth." Chicago, Ill.

Soothing Words. Next day, he met with the executive committee of the Democratic National Committee. The committee had spent two days in private argument, but members had emitted various soothing off-the-cuff announcements—that the Southern revolt was not serious, that the President's declaration of candidacy had calmed intra-party bickering, that he would be nominated on the first ballot at Philadelphia and would probably have Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas for a running mate.

Having thus presented an unbroken, if slightly mottled, front to the world, the members trooped into the White House state dining room for luncheon. The occasion was to be strictly social; they were to meet the President and Cabinet and quietly absorb 32 pounds of smelt which an American Legion post had just sent from the State of Washington's Cowlitz River. Chicago, Ill.

Visitor from the South. But politics raised its head immediately. A Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Montgomery, Ala. adjusted a floppy black hat adorned with pink plumes, gave the President "some little Southern pats" to attract his attention, and engaged him in conversation on his civil rights program. It went, said Mrs. Thomas later, like this:

Mrs. Thomas drawled: "You don't know where I'm from."

"Oh, yes, I do. You're from Arkansas."

"Worse than that."

"Alabama," the President replied.

"Just then," said Mrs. Thomas, "a waiter came up and knocked the cup of coffee the President was holding out of his hand. The President was real nice about it. The waiter—yes, he was colored—was so apologetic it was pathetic. The President said: 'That's all right, Pete.' He's so human."

The President then read Mrs. Thomas a passage from the Constitution; he announced, she said, that he would not take back anything he had said on civil rights.

For some reason, this convinced Mrs. Thomas that he was "not going to ram anti-segregation down our throats." She added: "The White House looked just like a beautiful home instead of a cold ole capital. I do feel that we're all right."

But at week's end, members of the Southern Governors' Conference loudly announced that things were all wrong. Seven members (six governors and Virginia's Senator Byrd, who represented Governor Tuck) voted to "fight to the last ditch" against the nomination or election of Harry Truman or any other candidate advocating equal rights for Negroes.

Truman And Missouri

The News

34a(1)

To the Editor of The News:

Our primary election, predicted upon the civil rights issue, purposely angled to embarrass President Truman, is over. There is much evidence available that all the facts have not been presented to the voters. The whole truth and nothing but the truth is that President Truman never committed himself to any civil rights issue but what was a plank in the Democratic platform of 1940 and 1944. Therefore, the name "Truman civil rights program" is a misnomer and misleading.

It is a well-known fact that Missouri politicians and voters have never raised their voices with slander against President Truman, such as used here, suggesting they had found him guilty of any breach of faith on the national Democratic platform civil rights issue. If the people in any state could be needled about a new national change in civil rights issues, Missouri should be the first state to complain. Birmingham, Ala.

Our politicians here should have first reviewed the following state history before blasting the voters with their demagogery and childish fears about President Truman. It should be generally known by most voters that Missouri has the most enviable record, representing Southern traditions on civil and state rights matters, regarding both white and colored folks, of any state in the Union. This record has been maintained since the Civil War under very adverse conditions. Wed.

Missouri maintains every civil rights and state rights viewpoint, excepting the Jim Crow law, that is maintained for white and colored folks in Alabama. Missouri is bounded on the east by Illinois, where white and colored attend the same public schools and have many equal social privileges. Missouri is bounded on the north by Iowa, which state also offers both white and colored the same privileges as does Illinois. Missouri is bounded on the west by Kansas, which state is noted for its liberalities in behalf of colored people. 5-19-48

It is interesting to know that white and colored people get along well together in St. Louis. The politicians in St. Louis, a city with a large Negro population, never mention the race issue at election time. Both races have learned much from the race riots years ago in St. Louis. There is a good reason for this political viewpoint. We all know that St. Louis is a large shoe, dry goods, stove and beer manufacturing center. Their products are shipped into states whose people think differently than Missourians do about states' rights and the race question. Was it not wisdom applied years ago by Missouri business people to hush up their politicians about this race question, before it ruined their business? Just because Missouri has handled this subject with some diplomacy, don't think their traditional way of life has gone by default.

Thanks to The Birmingham News and Age-Herald for doing a fine editorial job in presenting both sides of this civil rights issue.

IT'S NOT SULLIVAN WE CAN SPARE

The Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Ed. 5-1-48

It appears that President Truman, whose ineptness is of a magnitude that makes his presence in the White House a kind of impertinence, is bent on reducing our whilom Paul Bunyan of a party to wheezing impotence.

34a(1)

We abort the stricture here long enough to say that this is not intended as another clout at Everybody's Punching Bag. As we've said before, Truman strikes us as a gallant and decent little gent who did what he did because it appeared to him as standard practice.

Let it be remembered that some of the most comprehending political minds in Alabama were a long time in recognizing the extent and durability of the revolt; they thought the resentment would wind down as it had in the past. 5-1-48

Truman was unable to remember more than a Southern wink when FDR won the Northern Negro vote away from the Republican Party in 1932. He saw Roosevelt keep the South solid in 1944 after he had created a wartime FEPC by executive ukase. We say Truman, who left the Senate as reluctantly as did Warren Harding, had every right to be bewildered by the sulphur fumes that boiled up from the sidewalks in the South in response to his Civil Disturbance program. Sat.

Nevertheless, ignorance is not excuse under the law, as it were, and four things have irreparably washed up Truman. We venture to recite them in the order of their importance—Truman, Wallace, Palestine and the Civil Disturbance program.

After nearly 16 years, the normal wear and tear on the party, would make it difficult for any leader to keep it together. The task is twice formidable because of Truman's multiplicity of inabilities.

The Advertiser

He ought to step down at the proper time. But meanwhile, and as we started out to say, he is spilling such milk as has not already been spilled. The purge of Gael Sullivan, director of the Democratic National Committee, is a major example.

is young, daring and thinking. He is as ready to go as a mustang and has the steam of Casey Jones' boiler. He is one of the few Democrats around who crow like the Rooster is supposed to crow although he stands on a mat of his own plucked tail-feathers. Most of the other roosters are sitting about as if setting. Sat. 5-1-48

Sullivan got the sack because, as he acknowledged recently before a convention of editors, he thought Truman ought to come down and that Supreme Court Justice Bill Douglas was his idea of a successor. Sullivan will be missed.

Truman's Popularity Has Declined Among Voters, Recent Survey Shows

The Courier-Journal Louisville Ky.

Fri. 4-23-48

Strong Stands Are 'Preferred'

By GEORGE GALLUP

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., April 22.—At the end of Harry S. Truman's third year in the White House his popularity with voters is at a low ebb. President Truman, however, once before staged a dramatic comeback in public approval. Can he do it again?

The answer to that question will have an important bearing on the national party convention two months from now.

Today 36 per cent of voters in a coast-to-coast survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion say they approve the way Truman is handling his job as President. This compares with 55 per cent who felt that way last October.

Started With 87 Pct.

Fri. 4-23-48

The Truman popularity chart looks for all the world like the blueprint of a roller coaster. Starting at a high of 87 per cent shortly after Franklin D. Roosevelt's death in 1945, it nosedived to a low point of 32 per cent just before the November, 1946, elections. Then began an even sharper upward climb in voter favor; at the end of two years as President Truman's job was approved by six out of 10 voters throughout the nation.

Three comments on the President's present standing with voters seem pertinent:

Fri. Courier-Journal

1. Truman has tended to gain favor with rank-and-file voters when he has taken strong stands on vital issues.

2. Cardinal points in the Administration's policies enjoy overwhelming support from voters of all parties, namely European Recovery Program and his demand for immediate strengthening of the nation's military defenses.

Many Won't Desert Party.

Louisville Ky.

3. A great many Democrats who now say they do not like the way Truman is handling his job, probably would not desert their party affiliation in November to vote for a rival party's candidate. Much will depend on the Republican chosen to run against him and events between now and election day. Fri.

4. The current Institute survey is an up-to-the-minute check of voter sentiment, the final ballots being counted only three days ago. Thus, it reflects what possibly may be the peak of ill-feeling against the President in the South on the civil-rights issue and in other sections on his Palestine-partition stand.

5. After considering all these points, however, the fact remains that the performance of the Democratic Party's most likely candidate is approved by fewer than four out of 10 voters, with the election less than seven months off. 4-23-48

Even among Democratic voters only one out of two give the party's chief a nod of approval. Fewer than one out of two voters who call themselves independents approve of Truman's performance: this is the group, amounting roughly to one out of every four voters, which contributed so greatly to Roosevelt's victories.

Truman's major sources of strength still are among the farm and worker groups. Geographically, the lowest ebb is in the Southern section and highest in the West Central.

Presidential popularity is based on the answers to the following question:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way Truman is handling his job as President?"

The trend, since July, 1945, follows: The Courier-Journal

Truman Ignores Revolts, Predicts Election Victory

34a(1) The Times

New York, N.Y. Fri. 3-26-48

By CHARLES HURD

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, March 25—President Truman voiced today an undiminished optimism over Democratic political prospects in the face of direct questioning based on rising manifestations of discontent in that party's ranks.

He told a news conference that he would give the dissident groups, currently embracing both the conservative leaders in the Old South and the radical supporters of Henry A. Wallace, a chance to walk back into the party. He said he expected the Democrats to win in November.

In addition, he confirmed a recent statement by Senator Carl Hatch, Democrat, of New Mexico, that he would go through with his campaign for re-election on the basis of what he considered proper conduct of the Presidency without regard to political considerations.

In reply to questioning about politics, the President, in evident good humor, first replied that he had no comment. He quickly added that the situation did not disturb him, if that was what the inquirer wanted to know.

"Do you think," he was asked, "the Democrats who took a walk will walk back in November?"

The President suggested waiting until November to see. He would give them every chance to walk back. The Times

"You were correctly quoted," a reporter asked, "on the Hill as saying you intend to go through with it?" New York N.Y.

Yes, the President said, that was a correct quotation, the truth.

When another reporter asked if he was also correctly portrayed in a cartoon carrying the caption, "I Would Rather Be Right Than President," Mr. Truman laughed and said that he had the original of that cartoon. Fri 3-26-48

The President's cheerful prediction for November found little echo, however, in Congressional circles. The Southern representation seemed to be as solid as heretofore in its break with the White House over the civil rights program. The only exception appeared to be Representative Sam Rayburn of Texas, minority leader, whose floor position gives him special responsibility. 34a(1)

Congressional political interest centered today in plans to bring to the floor of the House in the near future a proposed Constitutional amendment by Representative Clarence F. Lea, Republican, of California, to nullify the electoral college system. The amendment has been approved by the judiciary committee, but a subcommittee met today to hear Representative Ed Gossett of Texas, speak in its favor on the ground that the Communist party might use the electoral system in a tight election to sway a Presidential election. Fri. 3-26-48

Under the electoral system the candidate who wins in a state gains the entire electoral vote. The amendment proposed by Representative Lea would direct that electoral votes be cast for all candidates in proportion to the popular votes they won in each state.

One in Southern Conference Withholds Vote, Seven Absent —'Last-Ditch' Fight Urged

By JOHN D. MORRIS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, March 13—Seven Governors of states in the Solid South pledged themselves today to oppose President Truman for election in November.

A special meeting of the Conference of Southern Governors adopted a resolution calling on the people of the South to join them in such a project. The manifesto also formally repudiated the national leadership of the Democratic party. 34a(1)

The action brought to a climax a movement begun by the Governors at a conference at Tallahassee, Fla., on Feb. 7, in protest against the President's civil-rights program.

While they did not mention Mr. Truman by name, the Governors flatly stated that they would support only candidates for President and Vice President who entertained views similar to their own on the civil-rights issue. The Times

"We recommend to the people of the Southern States," the document stated, "that they fight to the last ditch to prevent the nomination of any candidate for President or Vice President who advocates such invasions of state sovereignty as those proposed in the said program."

The resolution went on to urge Southerners to see to it that Electoral College votes of their states were not cast for Democratic nominees favoring the proposed Federal laws against lynching, the poll tax, racial discrimination in employment and racial segregation. New York, N.Y.

It outlined methods by which this could be done without an outright bolt from the Democratic party. Sun 3-14-48

The Governors also called for restoration of the two-thirds rule in the Democratic national convention, by which Southerners in the past have been able to exercise a veto over some candidates favored by a convention majority. Sun.

They asked Democratic state conventions to instruct national convention delegates to work for the two-thirds rule and for the adoption of a plank in the national party's platform opposing the enactment of civil-rights laws.

Of the conference's fifteen members, seven were present. Six voted for the resolution, and the name of Gov. William M. Tuck of Virginia was signed to it by Senator Harry F. Byrd, who represented Mr. Tuck on a special committee which drew up the document and presented it to the conference.

Gov. William Preston Lane Jr. of Maryland, conference chairman, withheld his vote. He took the position that he could not speak for the Maryland Democratic convention prior to its meeting in May, but said he would present the proposal to that organization.

Voting to endorse the resolution were Govs. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, Beauford Jester of Texas, James E. Folsom of Alabama, M. E. Thompson of Georgia, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Ben Laney of Arkansas. 34a(1) 3-14-48

Absent from the meeting were the Governors of Florida, Louisiana, Kentucky, West Virginia, Oklahoma, Tennessee and North Carolina, who are also members of the conference.

"Resolved, by the Conference of Southern Governors in meeting assembled in Washington this 13th day of March, 1948: New York,

"1. That we go on record as repudiating the present national leadership of the Democratic party in sponsoring the so-called civil rights program.

"2. That we recommend to the people of the Southern States that they fight to the last ditch to prevent the nomination of any candidate for President or Vice President who advocates such invasions of State sovereignty as those proposed in the said program; and we pledge our influence in our respective states to this end.

"3. That we recommend to the people of the Southern States that, if the national Democratic party should nominate any candidate who advocates such invasions of State sovereignty as those proposed in the said program, they shall see to it that the electoral college votes of their States are not cast for such nominees; and we pledge our influence in our respective States to the objective that the delegates to the national convention will support and fight for a positive declaration for States' rights in the party platform and will support only candidates for President and Vice President who entertain similar views."

The Governors then urged Southern Democrats to "take all effective political action possible" to implement the resolution.

They suggested the following as among the available methods:

That state conventions defer the nomination of electors for President and Vice President until after the national convention. Sun.

That state conventions pledge their nominees for electors to vote only for candidates who oppose the civil-rights program. 3-14-48

That state conventions bind electors to vote for candidates selected by the conventions or by state Democratic executive committees. The Times

The Governors suggested a caucus of Southern electors "so that they can take concerted action in the electoral college if necessary." New York N.Y.

ANTI-TRUMAN BILL STIRS VIRGINIANS

Some Democrats Rebelling at Measure Approved by the State Legislature

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RICHMOND, Va., March 20—Political temperatures climbed a little higher in the Old Dominion this week as Gov. William M. Tuck's "anti-Truman" bill headed for its last round of formalities.

The measure will become law June 29, in ample time for Democratic party leaders to put machinery in motion to keep President Truman's electors, assuming he is the national nominee, toward the bottom of Virginia's ballot in November. At the top of the ballot will be the ticket and the electors designated by a state Democratic convention to be held after the party's national convention adjourns in Philadelphia.

A Stormy Reaction

The Times

Reaction to the Governor's measure has been on the stormy side. In the "Fightin' Ninth" District of southwest Virginia, scene of some warm Republican-Democrat battles, Dickenson County Democrats flatly revolted from the Governor's leadership. They pledged themselves solidly behind President Truman and the national convention. Liberal Democrats in eastern Virginia also have dissented sharply. New York N.Y.

The "anti-Truman" bill sailed through the State Senate March 12 by a 29-10 vote, after winning a convincing victory in the lower chamber of the General Assembly. The Legislature adjourned March 13, but will return to Richmond March 30 so that last-minute bills can be signed. The "anti-Truman" bill will be signed then. 3-21-48

Closing hours of the 1948 session also saw passage of a joint resolution which will permit a state-wide referendum in 1949 on the question of repealing Virginia's $1.50 poll tax. Sun

State Committee Urged To Assemble And Speak For Party

The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala

Sat. 3-27-48

By ATTICUS MULLIN

Handy Ellis, former lieutenant governor and candidate for delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention, at Philadelphia, opposes Truman, or any man sharing his views, for either the presidential or vice-presidential nomination. 34a(1)

He says, however, that he believes candidates for delegate should not bear the responsibility alone but that the State Committee should hold a meeting and speak for the party.

Mr. Ellis' statement was written in answer to an Advertiser questionnaire. He expresses the belief that Chairman McCorvey, of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, will call a meeting of that body as soon as the constitutionality, or non-constitutionality, of the Bentley bill governing electors is disposed of by the Alabama Supreme Court.

Straight Answer

Mr. Ellis does not dodge or quibble in his answer to The Advertiser. He hopes that Truman will not make it necessary for a division in Democratic ranks but, if he insists on the nomination and is nominated, Mr. Ellis is ready for the South to proceed under its own power. 3-27-48

The full statement of Mr. Ellis follows: The Advertiser

"The first duty confronting the delegates to the Democratic National Convention, after organizing, will be to write and adopt a platform upon which the Democratic Party will go before the people in the November election.

"If elected a delegate from the state at large, I will use my utmost efforts and all ability I possess to have a platform plank on civil rights as will meet the approval of the people of Alabama and the South. This means that there will be omitted any party declaration in favor of federal intervention in the matter of poll tax, anti-lynch laws, segregation, and employment practices.

United Effort

"I have been to the National convention before and we have always been able to keep these things out of the party platform. It seems that we should be able to do so again, and the united effort of the delegates from the South should be co-ordinated to this end.

"When a proper platform is adopted, I shall support some Democrat who is in accord with our Southern views and who does not wish to destroy our cherished traditions, time honored customs, and our way of life.

"I shall, at the convention, support for presidential and vice-presidential nominees only those who are in accord with the Southern view on racial matters, and a Civil Rights program.

"It logically follows that I will not support Mr. Truman in the convention, irrespective of what the Democratic platform may contain. The Advertiser

Definite Stand

"I do not favor any phase of President Truman's so-called civil rights program, and I reiterate that I will not vote for any candidate for nomination for the presidency or vice-presidency who favors any such program.

"I think the State Democratic Executive Committee should be called together to consider further the State's position in the event President Truman is nominated, or in the event the platform adopted at the convention is antagonistic to the South. I have good reason to believe that the committee will be called as soon as the Supreme Court of Alabama acts upon the request now pending before it to determine the validity or constitutionality of the Bentley act of 1945. Montgomery, Ala.

Cites Emergency

"An emergency exists, probably as never before, and there should be party action on this important matter, and the candidates for delegate individually should not alone be forced to make the decision. Sat.

"In my judgment, when the convention meets President Truman will be eliminated as a nominee for president, but in order to be sure of this result, the Alabama delegation should be fortified and supported by party action as well as by the temper of the Alabama delegation itself. When thus supported the convention would be made to realize that Alabama and the South are not bluffing, but are in dead earnest." 3-27-48

M'GRATH TELLS DECISION

New York, N.Y.

Says After Talk With Truman That Democratic Leaders Requested the Move

Tues. 3-9-48

By ANTHONY LEVIERO

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, March 8 — President Truman declared this afternoon that he was willing to be a candidate for President if the Democratic party nominated him.

Making his first formal bil for a full, four-year term in the White House, the chief executtive affirmed that he would not back down on his civil rights policy, the most troublesome issue facing his administration and his party.

Mr. Truman also asserted that he would handle the Palestine problem without regard to politics but mindful of the security of the United States and of the world. He reiterated that decisions of the United Nations would be supported by the American Government.

The surprise announcement that Mr. Truman, heir of Fraaklin D. Roosevelt's unexpired term, was ready to run on his own record, came in undramatic circumstances.

McGrath Tells of Decision

Senator J. Howard McGrath of Rhode Island, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, announced the candidacy and Mr. Truman's views in the lobby of the White House executive office. Before he did so, however, he talked with Mr. Truman for ninety minutes. The Times

"The first thing that I have to tell you," Senator McGrath told reporters, "is that in response to numerous requests from Democratic leaders throughout the country, I asked the President if I might state what his intentions are with respect to the coming Democratic National Convention.

"The President has authorized me to say that if nominated by the Democratic National Convention, he will accept and run."

Mr. McGrath came to the White House at 3:30 P. M. with a package of political woes that accumulated during Mr. Truman's recent fifteen-day Caribbean tour and vacation. With him were Gael Sullivan, executive director of the Democratic committee, and John M. Redding, publicity director. The latter remained in the lobby. At 5 P. M. Messrs. McGrath and Sullivan came out of the President's office, looking serious. New York, N.Y.

Civil Rights Plan Stands

Tues. 3-9-48

The revolt of the Southern Democrats, with its rising threat of secession from the party, became acute during the President's absence from the capital. During that time, the storm also arose over the restatement of American policy on Palestine by Warren R. Austin, chief American delegate to the United Nations.

Without prmpting, Senator McGrath plunged into the civil rights question.

"I talked to the President with respect to his civil rights message," Mr. McGrath said. "The President's position remains unchanged since he delivered that message. The Times

"I might state that it is my view, which I expressed to the President, that the substance of his message is as old as the Constitution of the United States itself and as new as the 1944 Democratic national platform." New York, N.Y.

Of the ten points of the civil rights program, which the President sent to Congress on Feb. 2, seven points directly bear on the Negro issue in the South. The Administration has sent to Congress a civil rights bill, but it is being held in abeyance by Democratic Congressional leaders. 3-9-48

Had they discussed Palestine, Senator McGrath was asked.

"I asked the President to explain the present status of the Palestine situation, which he did in considerable detail," the Senator said, adding:

34a(1)

"This question is one which affects the security of the nation and probably of the world, and the President will continue to handle the problem without regard to its effect on politics." The Times.

The Democratic chairman was asked if the remark on security was a reference to this country's oil interests in the Middle East. He replied that he had nothing to contribute on this point, then said:

"I assume the President is speaking for the policy of our Government. The President has assured me that our original position of backing up decisions of the United Nations has not and will not be changed." New York, N.Y.

When a reporter recalled that the Austin speech was branded by a New York group as a "betrayal" of American policy, Mr. McGrath reiterated that the President's policy "is not affected by political considerations." Tues. 3-9-48

He replied that "I can't discuss that" to a question as to whether the embargo on arms to Palestine would be lifted.

Truman's Move Called Astute

Political observers agreed that the announcement was an astute move at a moment when Democratic fortunes appeared to be sliding down an abyss. Messrs. McGrath and Sullivan were credited with the engineering and the timing of it. Tues. 3-9-48

Only about six weeks ago, Mr. Truman laughed off in a press conference questions on his candidacy, saying there would be plenty of time before the convention in July for an announcement.

Although it was generally acknowledged that Mr. Truman would be the candidate, there has been increasing speculation recently that he might decide not to run. This seemed to have been in Mr. McGrath's mind when he said that he had numerous requests as to Mr. Truman's intentions from party leaders.

When asked for particulars, however, Mr. McGrath said that the queries were from people who wanted Mr. Truman to run and wanted him to go on record.

A reporter asked if these queries reflected rumors that big-city political bosses wished to "dump" President Truman. Senator McGrath dismissed this by saying that "I'm glad as national chairman that this statement puts at rest all such rumors."

Truman Leaders to Meet

The effect of Mr. Truman's declaration on party discipline was awaited with interest, but observers doubted that the Southern wing would close ranks in the near future. The Times

Senator McGrath announced that the Presient would give a luncheon on Friday in the White House to the top leaders of the party, the recently appointed executive commmittee of the Democratic National Committee. Among its members are two from the deep South and two from Arizona and Oklahoma. New York, N.Y.

Mr. Truman will make his first appearance as an avowed candidate in New York when he addresses the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick on March 17. Tues. 3-9-48

Asked if a Vice Presidential candidate was discussed, Mr. McGrath turned to Mr. Sullivan, then said, "My gosh, we forgot that." The Wallace third party movement was not discussed, he added.

Mr. McGrath said that he was sure Mr. Truman would be reelected and Mr. Sullivan asserted that his stock was going up.

About Truman

34a(1)

WASHINGTON, March 8—(AP)—President Truman's announcement that he would accept his Party's nomination for a full four-year term left Democratic leaders divided and Republicans, on the whole, well pleased.

Among Southern Democrats, many of them in open revolt against Mr. Truman's leadership because of his civil rights program, the announcement caused gloom but little surprise.

However the man who made known the President's decision, Sen. J. Howard McGrath, Democrat, Rhode Island, expressed confidence he would be nominated and elected.

Sen. Holland, Democrat, Florida, said Mr. Truman "will have plenty of trouble in the South—some support but a great deal of opposition."

Sen. Eastland, Democrat, Mississippi, one of the leaders in the Dixie civil rights revolt, told reporters: The Constitution

"I'm going along with the Democratic Party of Mississippi. Our course is clear."

James S. Peters, Georgia's Democratic Executive Committee Chairman, remarked merely, "I'm against him (Truman)."

Gov. Jim McCord, of Tennessee, remarked, "I should think he would run, wouldn't he, if nominated?" Atlanta, Ga.

Mississippi Democrats already have made plans to prevent the State's electoral vote from going to Mr. Truman. Tues. 3-9-48

Sen. Thye, Republican, Minnesota, predicted Mr. Truman "will be one of the easiest men for the Republicans to defeat."

Sen. Williams, Republican, Delaware, added: "We welcome him into the race."

Sen. McMahon, Democrat, Connecticut, an Administration supporter, said only he had expected the announcement.

So did Sen. Pepper, Democrat, Florida, another who has defended Mr. Truman.

Sen. Ellender, Democrat, Louisiana, said: "I'm not surprised. I expected it."

In Jackson, Miss., Gov. Fielding L. Wright said he was convinced the Party wouldn't nominate Mr. Truman.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, said, "I'm agaianst him (Truman) from start to finish."

Desperate Demos Trying To Dump Pres. Truman

Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

By EMORY O. JACKSON

BIRMINGHAM, ALA—(SNS)

Desperate Democrats are trying to dump President Truman for several reasons. Fri.

The political bosses in the East are looking for a strong man which they do not see in the President to help pull their local tickets through.

7-9-48

Southerners are mad with him over his "Civil Rights Objectives" which Mr. Truman announced in a message to Congress but failed to fight for.

New Dealers are angered with the Democratic Party Chieftian for his removal of strong New Dealers from key cabinet and other influential positions of government.

Southerners are even talking of being willing to support Supreme Court Justice Douglass, a fervent New Dealer who holds even more positive and broader civil rights view than President. That is the give way of Dixie Desperation.

The truth is that no man can be elected president of the United States in November who does not have an authentic favorable record on civil rights. Daily World

Excursions to several different sections of the Nation convince me that Dwight D. Eisenhower will not pull many Negro votes because of his testimony before Senate Military Committee which has been interpreted as either status quo or less. Walter White of the N. A. A. C P. who had written glowingly of the General reversed his position after the testimony. Atlanta, Ga.

Dump Truman and I believe that the Democratic Party will deprive itself of the Negro vote in key states. The Negro vote is the balance of power in 17 states and a dominant factor in several others.

The Negro vote, if Eisenhower is nominated, is likely to be heavily split between Governor Dewey and Henry Wallace. President Truman has more appeal right now among Negro voters throughout the Nation than Gov. Dewey. Gov. Dewey has failed to abolish the jimcrow guard in his state. Pressure by the multi-minorities living in New York are responsible for New York's state FEPC and other civil rights and anti-discrimination laws.

Fri. 7-9-48

Eisenhower could give Dewey no more than good run, it seems to me. In a political campaign, much that is often forgotten is dug up. On the contrary, Dewey's public record is well known.

It is possible that Negro voters who would be angered over the ditching of Truman would go on a voters' strike and therefore enable Dewey to win handily winning the electoral votes in the 17 pivotal states.

I can list at least ten enticing reasons why a substantial number of Negro voters are enthusiastic about President Truman:

1. His foresight in organizing the Committee on Civil Rights and his courage in building civil rights program out of it and sending it to Congress.

2. Appointment of Judge Hastie to be Governor of the Virgin Islands gin Islands.

Daily World

3 The naming of Irving C. Mollison and Herman Moore to federal judgeships.

4. His appearance before the 1947 annual NAACP conference as a headline speaker. Atlanta, Ga.

5. He took Negro newspaper correspondents on his tour of the Virgin Islands and his non-political trip to the West Coast.

6. Twice he spoke out forthright for the FEPC. Fri.

He "lent the prestige and weight of his office" to defeat Congressman Slaughter "from his home state of Missouri who took pride in boasting that that he had killed the (FEPC) bill by bottling it up in the House Rules Committee."

7. His refusal to back down on his civil rights program after being threatened with revolt by the Southern wing of his party.

7-9-48

8. His attack on the 80th Congress was a brilliant piece of public service. For the Republican-controlled Congress with its working alliance of backward Southerners blocked civil rights and social welfare legislation.

9. Attacks on the President from the extreme right and left seem to indicate that he has been on good middle ground.

10. His record as a Senator in which he supported fully the New Deal tends to show that he is sensitive to the responsibility of modern revitalized democracy.

As Henry Moon points out in his book, "Balance of Power," "Unlike the Southern vote, the Negro vote today is tied to no political party. It cannot be counted in advance." He further warns that: 'The size, stratgic distribution, and flexibility of the Negro vote lend it an importance which can no longer be overlooked." Daily World

Harry S. Truman is having a hard time as did Wendell Willkie. What ever, the outcome, he will be beloved by the common people with an affection that will endear him to generations to come. He has taken his stand for the good of his country. A few politicians do not like this. They may toss out but that can't turn back the march of man toward a democracy giving and guaranteeing full civil rights and freedoms to all of its people alike. Atlanta, Ga.

Truman Urged To Back Anti-Jim Crow Law

Journal & Guide

1-3-48

Norfolk, Va.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—A telegram urging President Truman in his annual message to Congress to appeal for abolition of discrimination against colored people was sent to the White House Christmas Day by the National Negro Council following a meeting of local colored leaders.

Racial segregation in schools in the District of Columbia and 17 states, including Missouri, not only works to the disadvantage of 4,000,000 colored students, the council asserted, but endangers the rights of 40,000,000 white school children in the United States.

Sat 1-3-48

President Truman was urged to call on Congress to carry out recommendations made by the President's Commissions on Higher Education and the Committee on Civil Rights.

In recent reports, the commissions cited flagrant injustices resulting from discrimination against colored people and other minority groups.

TRUMAN WITHDRAWAL URGED BY THURMOND

The Times

N.Y.

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina appealed to President Truman last night not to compete for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. He conceded that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's refusal to seek the nomination might have left the field so favorable for President Truman that he would be nominated on the first ballot, but argued that this would spell certain defeat for the Democratic party in November.

Governor Thurmond declared that by his "so-called civil rights program" President Truman had so offended most Southerners that he actually had slowed up social progress in the South, and alienated most of the supporters on whom he could traditionally count. The Southern states have been working to improve the educational and economic opportunities of Negroes, he said, but they believe firmly in segregation of the races and will not tolerate "unconstitutional" Federal attempts to break it down. Sat 7-11-48

But while President Truman is an unacceptable candidate in the South and elsewhere, Governor Thurmond declared, "the liberal minded people of America, those who believe in the progressive social and economic development of our country, do not want a Republican administration." N.Y.

"We must defeat a Republican party which numbers among its inner circle so many of the same old powerful and influential reactionaries, who hope to ride back into the same old control of our domestic affairs by means of the Republican Philadelphia ticket," he said. The Times

"We must keep the nation's foreign affairs out of the hands of a Republican party which is still isolationist at the core." 7-10-48

Truman Finds Some Dixiecrats Supporting Him On A-Veto Stand

Birmingham News

Both Hill, Sparkman Back Up President With Other Senators

Sat. 5-22-48

WASHINGTON, May 22—(AP)—President Truman had evidence today that some of the Southern Democrats who have been battling his civil rights program still are willing to support him on other matters.

The evidence came in the form of 27 Democratic Senate votes which sustained his veto of a bill which would have permitted senators to order an FBI investigation of key atomic officials.

Two Republicans—Langer of North Dakota and Morse of Oregon—also went along. But as yesterday's count turned out their votes weren't needed to give Mr. Truman his first veto victory this year.

GOP LEADERS had counted on Southern anger over the president's civil rights proposals to help them override the veto. 5-22-48

But only nine Democrats joined the 38 Republicans voting to override. That was four short of the necessary two-thirds majority.

Among those supporting Mr. Truman's argument that the bill would invade his executive powers were such outspoken critics of his civil rights program as Sens. Olin Johnston of South Carolina, Hill and Sparkman of Alabama and Stennis of Mississippi.

Other Southerners who voted with the president included Sens. Ellender of Louisiana, Fulbright of Arkansas, George of Georgia, Hoey of North Carolina, Pepper of Florida and Umstead of North Carolina. Birmingham

The nine Democratic votes cast against the veto came from eight Southerners—Byrd and Robertson of Virginia, Eastland of Mississippi, Holland of Florida, McClellan of Arkansas, McKellar and Stewart of Tennessee and Russell of Georgia—and Sen. Downey of California.

SEN. SPARKMAN, an outspoken critic of the civil rights proposals, said his veto vote was based solely on a constitutional question. Sparkman's state already has fixed matters so it won't cast its electoral vote for Mr. Truman.

Walter White Praises Truman Anti-Bias Move

Kansas City, June 24.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was told Wednesday night that President Truman was the acknowledged champion of civil rights.

Tennessee Democrats Vote to Send Uninstructed Group to Philadelphia Convention

Fri. 4-16-48

NASHVILLE, Tenn., April 15 (AP)—The Tennessee State Democratic Convention rejected a sharply worded, anti-Truman resolution today in favor of a milder one leaving delegates to the national convention in Philadelphia uninstructed on the Presidential nomination.

The convention adopted the resolution on a voice vote after an hour of debate. The resolution instructs the delegation of forty to vote as a units at Philadelphia.

The action of the convention, which wa sclosely divided on the anti-Truman measure, was a defeat for E. H. Crump, party leader of Shelby County (Memphis) whose delegation of more than 400 supported it.

The convention, however, selected Mr. Crump — who has announced his opposition to Mr. Truman both in the national convention and the general election—as one of sixteen delegates-at-large to the July 12 national meeting.

The anti-Truman resolution, presented by Roane Waring of Memphis, was the minority report of four members of a ten-man resolutions committee. The resolution would have pledged delegates against Mr. Truman in the convention and pledged the party's Presidential electors to vote against him. The Times

It would have put the state party on record as saying "We shall never cast our votes for him, but, on the contrary will vote for a true Democrat representing the best interests of the people of Tennessee, the South and the nation."

Mr. Waring insisted on adoption of the minority resolution after attacking the President and his civil-rights program.

He declared the national party head "does not represent the true Democratic party" and that he had "forfeited his right for consideration as a Democrat."

"For such a man I have the most supreme contempt," Mr. Waring added. New York, N.Y.

The convention went on record as opposing Mr. Truman's c… rights program and the propos… FEPC bill. It pledged the state's delegation to fight for restoration of the two-thirds rule. Fri.

Central Committee to Seek Two-Thirds Rule

Thurs. 6-24-48 (34)

(The Associated Press)

Baton Rouge, La., June 23. — Louisiana's Democratic central committee has refused today to take any part in the revolt against President Truman's civil rights program.

The Louisiana House and Senate recently approved resolutions urging the committee to adopt the anti-civil rights program outlined by a conference of Southern governors in Washington several weeks ago.

Today the committee instructed its delegates to the national convention only to work for a restoration of the two-thirds rule "and of states' rights." The civil rights proposal did not come before the meeting.

Sen. Allen J. Ellender, a supporter of Earl K. Long in the recent gubernatorial primary, was dropped from the list of delegates as the committee chose its representatives to Philadelphia.

Among those named as delegates at large were U. S. Reps. Hale Boggs and Otto Passman.

William Helis, millionaire race horse owner, was among those named as alternates.

Gardiner Vice-Chairman

The committee elected State Sen. Lessley Gardiner of Opelousas as vice-chairman and confirmed a list of delegates to the national nominating convention.

Gardiner succeeds E. Wayles Brown of Shreveport, who died about three weeks ago. Thurs.

Gardiner, who introduced the resolution, told newspapermen that the reference to state rights was not intended to bind he delegates to any particular course of action. He said the delegates were free to consider the legislative resolution "if should

Not Since 1872 Has Area Varied From Demo Ranks

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C— (NNPA) — Republicans are hoping, with the Dewey-Warren ticket, to crack the "Solid South" in the Presidential election, Speaker of the House Joseph W. Martin, Jr., had revealed Saturday.

Democratic leaders, however, believe that southern states will cast their electoral votes for President Truman, who is assured of nomination at the Democratic national convention opening in Philadelphia on July 12. Their forecast is based on the belief that the civil rights program of Mr. Truman is less distasteful to southerners than the civil rights record of Governor Thomas E. Dewey. Sun

At his press and radio conference last Thursday, President Truman not only forecast his nomination on the first ballot in the convention, but predicted that he would beat Dewey and Warren.

He also discounted reports of a southern revolt at the convention. Some southern Democrats and the American for Democratic Action are supporting General Dwight D. Eisenhower and opposing Mr. Truman's candidacy. The southern bloc, which is bitterly opposed to Mr. Truman's civil rights program and the ADA, which is strongly supporting that bloc, will be unable to form an anti-Truman coalition. 7-4-48

The President rejected as foolish a question of whether he would withdraw as a candidate for the nomination.

THE RECORD

Not since 1872 has there been any defection from the Democratic party of the states in the Deep South. In 1872, northerners, who had gone south after the Civil War, and freedom, put the electoral votes of all the southern states into the Republican column for the reelection of President Grant.

In 1876, the Returning Board for Florida gave Tilden, Democrat 22,923 votes and Hayes, Republican, 23,849, but the State Supreme Court gave Tilden 94 majority.

The Returning Board of Louisiana gave Tilden 70,508, and Hayes 75, 135, but the figures on the face of the returns are said to have been: Tilden, 82,326; Hayes, 77,023.

Since then Hoover has been the only Republican to carry any state in the Deep South. In 1928, he carried Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Mr. Martin preditcted "a major shift in the border states." The border states of Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and West Virginia have several times shifted their political allegiance.

CASE OF DELAWARE

Delaware was carried by Cleveland in 1896, McKinley in 1900, Theodore Roosevelt in 1904, Tale in 1908 Hughes in 1916, Harding in 1920, Coolidge in 1924, and Hoover in both 1928 and 1932.

Kentucky was carried by McKinley in 1896 and Hoover in 1928.

Maryland was carried by McKinley in 1896 and 1900, Theodore Roosevelt in 1904, Taft in 1908, Harding in 1920, Coolidge in 1924 and Hoover in 1928.

Missouri was carried by Theodore Roosevedt in 1904, Taft in 1908, Harding in 1920, Coolidge in 1924, and Hoover in 1928.

Oklahoma was carried by Harding in 1920 and Hoover in 1928.

West Virginia was carried by McKinley in 1896 and 1900, Roose… 1904, Taft in 1908, Harding in 1928,

Mr. Martin named Tennessee, Virginia and Florida, in which the Republicans may pick up House seats long occupied, by Democats.

"We've got a vot-getting ticket that can't be beaten," he said.

BREACH-HEALING

Democratic leaders, however, took the view that the nomination of Governor Dewey may heal the breach in the Democratic party in the South over the civil rights issue. They believe it will prevent southern states, in revolt against Mr. Truman over the civil rights issue, from carrying out their threat of withholding their electoral votes if Mr. Truman is nominated at Philadelphia.

Under Governor Dewey's leadership, New York State has enacted and is enforcing a law against discrimination in employment and also has enacted a law against racial discrimination in the admission of students to institutions of higher learning.

President Truman in February reommended to Congress a 10-point legislative program, including legislation to establish a Fair Employment Practice commission make lynching a federal offense abolishing poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections

Negroes Told Truman Leads

Their Right

Louisville, Ky

Kansas City, June 23 (AP) — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was told tonight that President Truman was the acknowledged champion of civil rights.

Oscar R. Ewing, federal security administrator, said Truman "deliberately risked his whole political future" in taking his "forthright stand" in setting out his civil-rights program.

"He antagonized a large wing of his own party and laid himself open to an unparallelled barrage of threats and personal abuse — at a time when such threats and abuse could damage his political aspects most," Ewing told the association's 39th convention. "And he stuck to his guns." Thurs. 6-24-48

Ewing said it was the business of the "Federal Government to fight vigorously the prejudices and hostilities — the selfishness and greed—which so long have prevented a decent solution of our so-called Negro problem."

Ewing warned the association against "enemies abroad" who pointed out the "Negro problem" as a "failure of our democracy."

Ewing said the nations problems, including civil rights, should be settled "within our own family as American citizens."

Law Forcing Electors' Vote For Truman Slated For Test

Montgomery, Ala. The Advertiser

Wed. 3-3-48

By ATTICUS MULLIN

The Bentley law of 1945, authored by Senator Bentley of Coosa, which would require a presidential elector, chosen in a general election, to vote for a candidate nominated in any particular party primary, is "mere balderdash" according to Chairman Gessner McCorvey of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee. Wed. 3-3-48

This law has been cited by some as a reason why Alabama electors cannot vote against Truman, the racial equality candidate for the Democratic nomination for the presidency.

Electors, it is pointed out, are chosen in the general election. Certainly they could not be bound to vote for any convention nominee. They are the servants of the people and not of a party. And, furthermore, if there was an independent candidate for President who was not nominated by a convention, there could be no law preventing him from getting elected at the hands of the electoral college.

Court Ruling

I predict that the Supreme Court of Alabama, the only body which can pass upon this matter insofar as Alabama is concerned, will soon be asked for an opinion as to the constitutionality of the Bentley law. And nobody with whom the writer has talked doubts that the court will act quickly. The Advertiser

And I predict further that, in the next few weeks, a meeting of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee will be called. When that committee meets it is possible that candidates will be further pledged not to vote for Truman or anybody like him or that a State convention will be called which will fix a platform upon which every Democratic candidate will be forced to run. Montgomery, Ala.

An interesting event took place Tuesday. Jeff Beeland, of Greenville in Butler County, announced as a candidate for delegate to the National Democratic Convention from the Second Alabama District sometime ago. At that time he said he was for Truman. Now he says in a letter to the writer: Wed 3 3 48

Reverses Stand

"Since writing you in reference to being a candidate for delegate to the Democratic convention, men in whom we had some confidence have made declarations to which I cannot subscribe. (He means Truman.)

"I will not vote for Truman or any other person who endorses a civil rights program contrary to the traditions of the South. I will not vote for any person who does not declare himself opposed to the FEPC. I stand firmly for white supremacy in the Democratic Party. Advertiser

Thus Mr. Beeland follows Walter Givhan of Dallas in an outright unequivocal bid for the white vote of Alabama and of those who sympathize with white supremacy. Wed. 3-3-48

Anti-Lynching Bill Gets Nod In House Unit; Crump Stand Backed

WASHINGTON, March 2.—(AP)—A cry that "Harry Truman is a dead bird" was raised by a Southern Democrat Tuesday as Republicans piled new fuel on the Dixie "civil rights" revolt.

Rep. Rivers (D), South Carolina, beat the anti-Truman drum after: The Advertiser

1—The House judiciary committee, dominated by Republicans, approved a federal anti-lynching bill. Montgomery, Ala.

2—Seven senators, five of them Republicans, pressed for Senate action on a bill to set up a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission to outlaw job discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups. Wed

The anti-lynch and FEPC bills are among the Truman recommendations which have touched off a revolt among Southern Democrats, with threats to break with the national party if the President is nominated for a full term in the White House. 3-3-48

Rivers told Republicans in a House speech they were making a mistake in trying to "embarrass" Mr. Truman by pushing through his program.

"You are going to burn down the house to get at the rats," he shouted. "You had better make friends with the South right now while there is still time."

Committee Meets 3-3-48

A committee of Southern Democrats in the House who are fighting the Truman program met later in the day. Chairman Colmer (D), Mississippi, told reporters no decisions were made.

In New York, Henry A. Wallace's campaign manager said there would "no doubt" be Negroes among the congressional candidates on Wallace's third party ticket. Montgomery, Ala.

The spokesman, C. B. Baldwin, denied reports that the party itself would run Negro candidates in specific districts. That's "entirely up to our state organizations," Baldwin said.

Tuesday's developments came after Mississippi and South Carolina Democratic organizations threatened a clean break with the party's national leaders and took steps to raise money for possible separate campaign this Fall. The Advertiser

Governor Dewey, of New York, announced he would give up his usual Spring vacation and personally lead his campaign for the GOP presidential nomination.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Democrats Ponder Ditching Truman

News

Birmingham, Ala.

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—Anti-Truman resentment among the Democrats is now so deep that some are actually talking about trying to dump him. 2-13-48

What Truman has succeeded in doing is alienating both wings of the party—the Southern Democrats and the Northern liberals. This was something that Roosevelt, despite the kicking around he gave to some leaders, was careful never to do. Fri.

But now Truman has rubbed Northern liberals the wrong way by ousting such Roosevelt appointees as Marriner Eccles, James Landis and John Fahey. Simultaneously he has made Southern leaders boil over with indignation at his civil-rights message.

Result of all this is that some Democratic leaders are even talking among themselves about finding a new candidate. Admittedly they don't think the chance is great; for it's almost impossible to block the renomination of a sitting president. However, some of them have been quietly discussing a boom for Justice William O. Douglas, while others talk about a draft-Eisenhower move for the Democratic ticket. After all, the first and only political speech Ike ever made was at a Jackson Day dinner at the age of 18. 2-13-48

Meanwhile Henry Wallace has told friends that he would yank his third party out of the running if the Democrats nominate Eisenhower, Douglas, Judge Thurman Arnold or any other Roosevelt Democrat.

Note—What Democratic leaders fear most is that Wallace's third party will carry so much of the labor vote that it will be impossible for Truman to carry New York and Illinois.

Putting On The Pressure

Southerners opposed to the civil rights proposals of President Truman—and they unquestionably constitute a great majority—can put a lot of pressure on the national Democratic leadership. They already have begun to do so. The special committee of the Southern Governors Conference, which called on National Democratic Chairman McGrath, has already turned on a good deal of heat.

Of course Mr. McGrath and his associates dare not be indifferent to the possibility of a break in the "Solid South." The Hoover victory of 1928, which was substantially aided by strong Southern support, is not to be forgotten. Sentiment against the national leadership of the party conceivably might become even stronger than in 1928. So, of course, Mr. McGrath was concerned.

He assured his callers that he had never taken Southern support of the Democratic Party for granted. Birmingham Ala.

He declared that Mr. Truman's statement that he had ordered a civil rights division set up in the Justice Department was not a move aimed at the South, but was intended as a means of dealing with "hoodlumism" in industrial districts.

Sen. McGrath said he himself would be satisfied with the civil rights platform plank of 1944. Wed. 2-25-48

His manner was friendly and conciliatory. But, when asked two crucial questions, he stood firm. He said he would not use his influence as chairman to restore the two-thirds rule in the 1948 Democratic convention or to have civil rights proposals withdrawn from consideration by Congress.

Mr. McGrath was very explicit on those points. So the governors could not claim a victory. Their next move is to report to the full conference.

Birmingham, Ala.

In the meantime, the committee issued a statement saying that "the Southern states are aroused and the present leadership of the Democratic Party will soon realize that the South is no longer 'in the bag.'" This plainly implies, of course, that desertion of the party will be advocated unless satisfaction is obtained. Wed. 2-25-48

But it is to be noted that the statement went on to say that "each Southern state, under the framework of an over-all program, will work out the most effective means of resisting the proposals of the present leadership of the party, but resist them we will." Further, "the time has come for strong and effective action by the Southern states not only to save the Democratic Party. . . ."

These latter passages indicate that the committee is still thinking of action within the party.

Wed. 2-25-48

Of course neither the committee nor even the full conference could commit Southern Democrats in general to desertion of their party. News. Birmingham, Ala.

There are other important issues besides the civil rights proposals—issues upon which there are differences between the Democrats and Republicans.

The protesting Southerners can exert pressure on the party's national leadership—and are doing so—but fulfillment of threats of party desertion and the meaning of a Republican victory for the South are other matters.

Truman's Predicament

John Temple Graves

The Record

"Cannon to right of them, cannon to left of them, Volleyed and thundered . . ."

Columbia, S.C.

Mr. Truman has to deal with a Bronx cheer now in addition to a rebel yell. After taking all sorts of pains, at great cost, to outbid Henry Wallace in what goes for liberalism, he has been given to understand that liberals of this ilk prefer Wallace, nevertheless, and that party ties don't count. That is what the Bronx election means, it seems to me. Not that there is a chance of a Wallace national victory, but only that the radical vote belongs to him and no amount of bidding by Trumanites can take it.

Ellis Arnall and others who are saying the Democratic party can only win when it is "liberal" may or may not have some good suggestions now. What should be done when (1) liberals in that sense won't vote Democratic and (2) the country as a whole is against such liberals, no matter how an isolated little lot of them in the Bronx comes out and votes.

If Mr. Truman loses the South or any part of it now, he is lost for sure. Is he convinced that there is danger of losing it? Or is he still so sure of the South that he will go on bidding against Wallace until Wallace is persuaded back to the fold as presidential heir apparent for 1952? In the later event the South would most certainly not go Democratic.

The situation makes this more than ever a time for Southern Democrats to take an absolute stand. Without the radical vote, Mr. Truman needs the Southern more than ever. With the radical vote, won back at the high price that would now have to be paid, the South could not go along with Mr. Truman or any party over which he presided. It is a time for great settlement.

Tues. — 2-24-48

The Democratic party is in so bad a situation its chances of victory next November do not seem large. If there is to be a Republican administration, this is all the more desirable a time, from the South's point of view, for the party shake-up and realignments indicated. Great history is on the program. These states can ride its wave if they will be bold. The Record

They will have to be considerably bolder than when they breath uncompromising objection to the civil liberties program of the President without looking further than the Democratic convention. Their cause at the convention is lost in advance if they are not prepared to act beyond the convention. Columbia, S.C.

Four years ago, with less cause, there was great talk of revolt in the South. It failed for several reasons. One was the lack of enough looking beyond the convention. The only plan was a half-baked one of having electors violate their moral obligation to support the national nominee. This time, in one way or another, there need to be candidates for elector who will be subject to no absolute pledge as regards the nominee.

Will A Southerner Run With Truman?

He May Choose Course To Pacify Dixie Demos Angered Over Civil Rights Bill

Wed. 2-4-48

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4—(AP)—Politicians wondered today whether the cries of Dixie Democrats outraged by the racial issue might influence President Truman to choose a Southerner as his running mate.

The speculation among some Democrats here runs this way:

1. The revolt against Mr. Truman's 10-point civil rights program may never bring about the electoral college results its sponsors predict, but it could hurt the president in border states. Wed 2-4-48

2. The late President Roosevelt was sufficiently concerned in 1944 by an even weaker Dixie protest to toss Henry Wallace overboard. He picked Mr. Truman, a Missourian, for his vice presidential nominee.

3. Someone like House Minority Leader Rayburn of Texas could be chosen without serious offense to either racial or labor groups in the North. He would give Southern Democrats a voice at court. Birmingham Ala

THE POLITICIANS who talked of these things emphasized that they are only speculating. President Truman alone knows how seriously he regards the Southern complaints. His party leaders are inclined to discount them.

Sen. McGrath (R. I.), Democratic national chairman, told a news conference at Troy, N. Y., yesterday that the Democratic Party historically has championed human rights. He added he does not expect it to "fail in this issue." The News

It apparently is the party leader's view that they have more to worry about on the score of Wallace's third party bid for the presidency than they have about the role of the South. Wed 2-4-48

In some quarters, the president's submission of the 10-point program was credited, in part, to a desire to head off Wallace's appeal to minority groups.

Wallace has been working the minorities side of the street hard. The News

AS AN EXAMPLE, he telegraphed the Senate labor committee yesterday to oppose segregation of Negro war veterans in hospitals. Wallace said such a deal would be "outrageous" and smacked of "Fascists' creed."

While his Southern colleagues fumed, Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.) took a dig at Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York by publicly inviting the GOP presidential aspirant to help congressional Democrats support "the New Deal farm program." Birmingham, Ala.

In a speech to the Senate, Lucas said Dewey's comments in a recent address show that the New Yorker is for that program "100 per cent."

Dewey and the Democrats agree, Lucas said, that there should be a floor under farm prices, that production controls should be used only as a last resort and that the family farm should be preserved.

"All of this advice to the farmer makes me wonder where the governor has been for the last several years," Lucas said. "After all, Albany is not so far from Washington." Wed. 2-4-48

Aiken Names Ferguson Head of New Body With Unlimited Powers for Investigations

CLARK MADE ISSUE AGAIN

Kem Consults Inquiry Chief on Missouri Vote Charges—Many Studies Looming

Fri. 2-27-48

By WILLIAM S. WHITE

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—The most powerful Senate Investigating Committee in history, with an unrestricted and primary mandate to inquire into the acts of the Executive branch, was organized today to confront the Administration across the bitterness of this election year. The Times

Its newly designated chairman, Senator Homer Ferguson, Republican, of Michigan, within two hours of his appointment was in consultation with Senator James P. Kem, Republican, of Missouri, the original sponsor of an investigation of Attorney General Tom C. Clark.

Mr. Kem, who for more than a year has been accusing the Attorney General of "whitewashing" alleged vote frauds in a Democratic primary election of 1946 in President Truman's home county in Missouri, would comment upon his conference with Senator Ferguson only to this extent:

"It can be stated that I continue to have an interest in this matter of investigating Mr. Clark."

The Ferguson Subcommittee was created as the chief, and, in effect, the only investigatory body of the Senate, in an action which for the first time centered such power and jurisdiction in a single group.

Group Is Chosen by Aiken

The group was chosen by Senator George D. Aiken, Republican, of Vermont, from among the membership of his Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, in a closed session within eighteen hours of the Senate's final approval yesterday of an appropriation of $170,000 for the investigators.

Its seven members, with Senator Ferguson as the chairman, constitute collectively a majority of all the thirteen members of the parent group, the Committee on Expenditures.

Mr. Aiken termed it "as strong a group as could be got in all of Congress." The membership is as follows: 2-27-48

Republicans—Senators Ferguson, Irving M. Ives of New York, John W. Bricker of Ohio, Edward J. Thye of Minnesota. Fri

Democrats—Senators John L. McClellan of Arkansas, Clyde R. Hoey of North Carolina, and Herbert R. O'Conor of Maryland.

Senator Ferguson disclosed that the intention was to have the largest permanent staff of investigators ever assembled in Congress.

The committee has or will have jurisdiction shortly over all major inquiries into the executive branch of government; over all the war-procurement and allied matters formerly in charge of the old Senate War Investigating Committee; over any further inquiries into commodity speculation; and over a presently recessed investigation into the disposal of war surplus goods.

Wide Surplus-Property Inquiry

In the field of surplus property alone, Mr. Ferguson declared, there were "fifty or more matters" which would engage the committee's counsel, apart from "ten or fifteen" war-procurement cases left over from the War Investigating Committee. The Times

So much work was in prospect, he said, that the committee would be busy after Congress had adjourned for the Democratic and Republican conventions and would be active all during the rest of the year and through the Presidential campaign. New York, N.Y.

The creation of the committee, and the extraordinarily large appropriation granted to it only yesterday, proceeded in every aspect of a plan laid down many weeks ago by the Republicans after it had become apparent that they could not bring about an investigation of Mr. Clark under the existing state of affairs. Fri

Mr. Kem's resolution for the inquiry was turned down earlier by the Republican-controlled Judiciary Committee, by the margin of one vote, that of a party irregular, Senator William Langer of North Dakota. 2-27-48

The Republicans turned their attention then to the floor, attempting in vain to obtain a decision there to overturn the Judiciary Committee. The Democrats, pointing to the fact that the Judiciary Committee had refused to sanction such an investigation, cried "politics" and never would permit a vote.

It was then that the Republicans reached the conclusion that what one termed "anoher avenue" must be found. New York, N.Y. 2-27-48

George Boom Slated By Georgia Democrats

They said President Truman didn't have a chance to win.

They Want To Stop Truman

(34a(1)) Pres. Atlanta Contitution

WASHINGTON—It seems that the chief entertainment in the preliminaries next week before the Democratic National Convention opens in Philadelphia will be one of those "stop" movements that occupied the Republican Convention briefly before it fizzled out. This, of course, will be a stop-Truman performance.

It is, interestingly enough, the failure of the stop-Dewey maneuver that has given new hope to the stop-Truman crowd. If Sen. Taft, of Ohio, had been nominated, or if a deadlock had occurred and resulted in the selection, say, of Sen. John W. Bricker, of Ohio, or Speaker of the House Joseph W. Martinor some other conservative, then President Truman would have been a stronger candidate than he now appears and the case of those who want to ditch Mr. Truman would have been weakened.

But the Dewey-Warren ticket, it is generally agreed, is about the strongest that the Republicans could have picked. Such a ticket, the anti-Truman people now argue, emphasizes the need of another and stronger candidate for the Democrats.

Fri. 7-2-48

So, for a few brief days at Philadelphia, we'll see the huddles of anti-Trumanites, the issuance of statements filled with high hopes and optimistic claims and then it will all blow up after filling columns in the newspapers and taking big chunks of radio time. But it will all be fun.

Atlanta Ga

The job of the stop-Truman crowd is literally herculean compared to that of the stop-Dewey crowd. Where the stop-Dewey forces had a whole bevy of candidates—too many, in fact—the anti-Truman contingent has none that it can count upon. The stop-Dewey drive collapsed, as so many such "stop" movements have wilted in the past, because of too many prima donnas. But the stop-Truman campaign lacks even one prima donna. Nobody courts this role, that is, nobody who could satisfy enough delegates and pull together the dissident elements of the badly mangled Democratic Party.

Atlanta Constitution

It is the schism in the Party that raises the chief obstacle to the stop-Truman group. The latter necessarily is made up of so many irreconcilable elements which could never get together on a candidate who otherwise might be available.

There is the old New Deal element now organized in Americans for Democratic Action, ADA, and embodying CIO support and some smattering of AFL Labor. There is the bloc of Southern revolters, extremely conservative and anti-New Deal and anti-Labor for the most part, which was moved to rebellion by President Truman's civil rights program, which they abhor and which the ADA crowd is supporting stongly. Then there is the big city machine element represented so far chiefly and publicly in Jake Arvey, the new Democratic boss of Cook County and Chicago, with which New Dealers have joined forces before, strange as that alliance always seemed, but which has little in common with the Southerners.

Field marshal of the ADA forces is chunky, talkative Leon Henderson, ADA Chairman. He will have headquarters for his group in a college fraternity house in Philadelphia, hired for the occasion, and he promised, being himself an inveterate cigar smoker, that there would be "smoke-filled" rooms for the anti-Truman campaign. He makes grandiose claims about the number of delegates who are ready to drop President Truman, far more than a majority by his calculations, but is a bit vague about how these are to be drawn together behind another candidate.

All the otherwise dissident elements probably could agree on Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower—for varying reasons and for no one particular reason except that the polls show he could win against any Republican combination. But Ike is having none of this, he has made quite clear.

The real candidate of the ADA-CIO alliance is Associate Justice William O. Douglas, of the Supreme Court. Mr. Henderson points out that the Justice has raised no bar against the campaign for himself. How well the Justice, an ardent New Dealer in the Roosevelt Administration, would suit the Southerners is quite a big question. He is for the civil rights program, and his views on social and economic welfare measures do not comport with the standard Southern conservative viewpoint.

After the usual amount of smoke at anti-Truman conferences you may expect to see Harry Truman nominated. There is no easy way of salvation for the Democratic Party, such as a new face on the campaign posters. It seems destined for the hard road of defeat and slow rebuilding.

Truman Doesn't Weigh His Words

(34a(1)) Pres.

The News

BY DREW PEARSON

Birmingham, Ala. Mon 4-12-48

WASHINGTON—A few months after F. D. R.'s death catapulted Harry Truman into the most important elective office in the world, he was sitting on the front porch of the Summer bungalow of the widow Morris at Reelsfoot Lake, Tenn. Newspapermen in the party asked him about the atomic bomb. Would the United States, they queried, keep the bomb's know-how a secret? The new president emphatically replied that we would.

Almost falling off the porch, newsmen scurried into the night, looking for telephones.

Mr. Truman looked around at George Allen. "What did they want to leave for?" he asked. "There's still plenty of liquor."

Harry Truman did not seem to realize that his words as president of the United States meant a lot more than his words as Harry Truman, the senator. 4-12-48

Three years have now passed since the fateful afternoon when Harry Truman became president of the United States, and even today he still does not seem to realize that his words and actions reverberate around the world. As Jimmie Byrnes describes it, he still shoots from the hip, he still makes snap decisions that influence the fate of millions. He still seems unconcerned that our jerky, up-and-down-hill, somersault policies would make it difficult for our friendliest allies to remain our allies—except that we have too much money to lend. They never know what we're going to stand for day after next.

Sizing Up Truman

The News

WHEN HISTORIANS chronicle the story of Harry Truman, they will probably evaluate him as honest, sincere, courageous, stubbornly right about such domestic policies as price control, taxes, civil rights, labor and monopoly. But they will also accuse him of putting personal loyalty ahead of national welfare. They will find that his temper frequently proved his undoing, that he was hotheaded, unbalanced in times of crisis, and so frequently flew off-the-handle on vital decisions that the American people finally lost confidence. 4-12-48

Bob Hannegan, in the days when he was still trying to alibi for Truman, used to say: "Sure he made a mistake, but he was man enough to come out and admit it."

Birmingham, Ala.

The trouble is that no president can afford to make many mistakes.

Shooting From Hip

JIMMIE BYRNES, when secretary of state, was always careful to warn Truman, when he had to decide on an international matter, not to make up his mind until he, Byrnes, had explained both sides. Byrnes knew that if he wanted to, he could get any decision he wished merely by presenting one side first. For one of Truman's greatest weaknesses is shooting from the hip.

The News

That's why Secretary of Defense Forrestal, in a few brief minutes of pleasant conversation, was able to reverse a decision made by the Truman administration and the United Nations on Palestine after weeks of careful debate.

Birmingham, Ala.

Even after three years of holding press conferences, Harry Truman still does not realize that his words reverberate round the world. Last month, he called this columnist a liar. This affected only one man. But in the very same press conference he also called his own secretary of state a liar on Chinese policy. This affected 400,000,000 people. Mon. 4-12-48

He said that at no time had the United States considered taking Chinese Communists into the Chinese government. Newsmen attending the conference, realizing Truman's mistake, tried to save him. They asked questions calculated to remind the president that he himself had sent a special ambassador to China for the express purpose of getting the Chinese Communists to participate in the Kuomintang government.

But either the president couldn't remember or didn't want to remember this once widely publicized fact.

4-12-48

He himself, when Gen. Marshall was appointed special ambassador to China, had announced that Marshall was undertaking the mission in order to bring the Communists and Chiang-Kai-Shek into a coalition government. And Marshall on his return from China announced to the world that he had failed because of recalcitrance on both sides. These were irrefutable, public statements.

Truman Bawled Out Stalin

PROBABLY TRUMAN'S most disastrous shot from the hip occurred when he was a senator. That shot is still ricocheting down the corridors of the Kremlin, spattering occasional blood in our delicate relations with that most difficult of all nations.

In June, 1941, when Harry Truman was senator from Missouri and Germany invaded Russia, he was asked by the press for comment. "If we see that Germany is winning," he said, "we ought to help Russia. And if we see that Russia is winning, we ought to help Germany, and that way let them kill as many as possible."

The News

A lot of people have shared that view—then and since. But they were not members of the United States Senate, serving under a president who laid down a national policy of aid to Russia. Naturally, the gentlemen in the Kremlin read the newspapers. Naturally also, when Stalin sat down with the new president of the United States at Potsdam, this remark was not forgotten.

Probably it was even re-emphasized by the bawling out Truman gave Stalin on the first day of their meeting—a bawling out which caused that great foreign affairs expert, White House Military Aid Harry Vaughan, later to remark:

Birmingham, Ala

"Chief, you certainly gave it to him. That was wonderful."

Mon 4-12-48

Stalin has deserved many a bawling-out as far as Soviet-American relations are concerned. But you can't reprimand a chief of state as if he were a schoolboy on the first day you meet him—and then expect future relations to be cordial.

So when historians chalk up the final record of Harry S. Truman they may well compare him to a freight locomotive engineer who suddenly finds himself pulling a streamliner. And as we near the end of Harry's run, the United States of America is still on the tracks, but the sleepless, shaken-up passengers just don't want to ride with him at the throttle any more. At the next division point they are pretty sure to seek a new engineer.—©.

Truman's Southern Allies

This, one supposes, is the time to haul out the old bromide about what politics does to bedfellows. Some Southern Democrats who have been scrambling out of Truman's bed for some time because of his civil rights program are scrambling back in again because of his veto of the Bulwinkle bill. They are determined to back the president in this latter move of his. Sen. Russell, of Georgia, one of the chief bolters, has jumped to Truman's defense. Southern Democrats, he said, "are going to fight like the devil to sustain him on this."

If there is any observation to be made on such matters of expediency, it may be simply that men can work together or apart with singular intensity when their interests so guide them. The South does not want the Bulwinkle bill, which protects ICC-approved railroad rate-making from anti-trust prosecution, to become the nation's law. It feels it would be discriminated against and that its economic interests are to be served by defeating the bill. Birmingham News

Undoubtedly the bolters believe sincerely that a program of civil rights such as the one espoused by Mr. Truman is wrong. Even those, however, who may concede that there are certain of the president's proposals which might not greatly disturb the pattern of Southern life are not able to take a chance on supporting him. For they feel that they cannot be elected on such a platform. 6-15-48

They will say that they are for the president when he is right and against him when he is wrong.

President Truman

The Herald 34 a (1)

To the Editor of The News-Age-Herald:

There are two recognized sources for obtaining an education in our nation, through which men are qualified for political or business life. One is the college or university, the other the "school of hard knocks." The writer, like President Truman, was brought up in this latter school. The duties are rough and rugged, but the rules of conduct are very simple. These rules demand that you pay your honest debts, that you do not lie or steal, and that you be loyal to your friends. For some reason these rules have developed a sense of courage and modesty that often goes unnoticed in our modern world of false pretense and verbal bull-boogery. To accept failure in silence without offering a long-winded alibi is also a part of the tradition. Let us see if our president has lived up to his bringing-up. Birmingham, Ala

It is in the record wherein President Truman publically admitted his mistakes. The rebuke by a Baptist College in Texas which withheld an honorary degree from him because he drank whisky and played poker is generally known. He accepted this rebuke with humility and by practice has improved the cause for this complaint.

Let us review one of Truman's accomplishments. President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill first met Stalin. As horse trading goes, we now know that in some respects Stalin traded them out of everything but their breeches. Later President Truman met Stalin at Potsdam. When he left for Potsdam, his mother gave her son this advice: "Don't let them bluff you, Harry." Her son, Harry, took the best hand in the deck to Potsdam, which was the atomic bomb secret. The record shows President Truman played dumb at Potsdam for 30 days and let Stalin do the talking. We had often urged Stalin to help us in Manchuria, but he always said no.

President Truman left this meeting without batting an eye. He took three days of further meditation en route home to prepare his conscience for a terrible act of human destruction. The responsibility for this destruction to be unleashed at his will was a duty no other president in our history has been asked to assume. Finally, he literally snapped his finger and an atom bomb hit Hiroshima that killed 100,000 Japanese. In 48 hours Stalin ordered thousands of Russian troops to invade Manchuria. Newspapers reported that Stalin, with shame in his heart, sulked for six weeks at a health resort, because a good horse-trader beat him at his own game. June 4-11-48

Viewing our president's political conduct at home, there is much evidence available that he is a poor public speaker and has no concept of how to cement good public relations. His first mistake in this matter was evident when Churchill spoke at Fulton, Mo. President Truman felt he was helping the home folks by adding tradition to this religious school through Winston Churchill. Churchill took advantage of him by making a strong speech against the Russians that he should have made in England. Next, Henry Wallace had Truman approve a speech he did not understand. He felt Wallace tricked him in this matter and fired him. His civil rights committee handed him a report from which a college professor wrote a speech he made in Congress. This speech brought on the present civil rights controversy.

The subjects of civil rights and civil liberties are most confusing. Civil rights is by law a constitutional matter. Civil liberties, which are often confused with civil rights, is unwritten law established by custom and tradition by which human conduct is governed. Few of our best educated Americans could speak for our nation as a whole on these subjects without offending someone. This being true, should we not withhold some of our ill will toward our president?

States' rights are still states' rights in our nation because some laws in most states vary. Women have for years past and are today fighting for equal rights in some form in almost every state. Japanese of American birth have a campaign on for civil rights. The Negro is very active, too, as we know. Henry Wallace and numerous other rabble-rousers are campaigning for office on this issue. Do you think it fair to pick our president out of all this confusion of opinions and declare him the only man to be purged?

The three issues on civil rights our president often has spoken out on with frankness are as follows: Equal educational rights, equal voting rights and equal professional rights. Equal educational rights, qualified by states' rights privileges, where the government provides the money, seems fair. Equal voting rights will in time work themselves out. Equal professional rights are justified and but few will deny it. The News

Many believe the difficulties in Europe our nation's No. 1 problem. If true, why not let President Truman, who is hand-made for the job, handle Stalin? Birmingham, Ala

34 a (1) Daily Worker

New York, N.Y.

Daily Worker Wed. 5-19-48

Special to the Daily Worker

PHILADELPHIA, May 18.—The CIO Teachers Union has asked President Truman to cancel his scheduled address at Girard College here Thursday "because it is a Jimcrow institution."

A "White House spokesman" was quoted in the Philadelphia Inquirer as saying that the President would make the address as scheduled, and that he had no comment on the teachers' protest.

The North Philadelphia Civic League, a Negro organization, has called a mass rally in front of the college for Thursday noon.

Truman will be the main speaker at the 100th anniversary celebration of the founding of Girard College, a home restricted by its founder, Stephen Girard, to "poor, white, male orphans."

The Pennsylvania edition of The Worker initiated a campaign some months ago against the lily-white restriction at Girard. It is supported by a fund that has grown to 90 million tax-free dollars, invested largely in anthracite mine holdings and Philadelphia real estate and administered by the Board of City Trusts. 5-19-48

The local Negro press and other groups have joined the campaign to have the college admit the first Negro orphans in its 100th-year existence. They are also protesting Truman's appearance there. Wed

Earlier this year, the trustees closed the institution for several days, sending "home" some 1,200 boys, in order to break a strike for higher wages by 25 AFL engineers. New York, N.Y.

Teachers at the institution are also victims of discrimination. They have no standard salary scale, no tenure, and recently a teacher with 22 years service was discharged.

Daily Worker

WASHINGTON, May 18 (UP).—President Truman will speak extemporaneously when he addresses Girard College students at Philadelphia Thursday. Wed

He will address the 1,300 students in the College chapel at 5:05 p.m. (EDT) for 10 or 15 minutes. He will arrive at the 30th Street station in Philadelphia at noon. He will tour the college campus before the speech. 5-19-48

Members of the Democratic National Committee's executive committee will be in Philadelphia on the same date to pick a keynoter and permanent chairman for the party's national convention.

Wallace Finds Truman Is at Fault; Says Self-Made 'Angel' Shifts Onus

34 a (1) New York Times

CLEVELAND, June 20 (UP)—Henry A. Wallace tonight called President Truman "a selfannointed angel" whose head is "too big for his halo." Mon. 6-21-48

In an attack on Mr. Truman, Mr. Wallace, a Presidential aspirant, charged that the President always blamed "the other guy for everything that goes wrong."

Mr. Wallace's speech was prepared for delivery before a mass rally in Cleveland's public auditorium. The rally was called to protest the refusal of Edward J. Hummell, Ohio Secretary of State, to put the Wallace Third Party on the Ohio ballot in November.

"It is interesting that Mr. Truman in his Western travels put all the blame for the reactionary course of domestic policies on the Congress," Mr. Wallace said. "That's one kind of speech Mr. Truman has learned how to deliver—speeches blaming the other guy for everything that goes wrong."

"And he wasn't very far from Washington before his head got too big for his halo. The self-annointed angel blames all domestic ills on the Republicans in Congress; and all the ills beyond our borders from Bogota to Athens are Joe Salin's fault."

He charged that Mr. Truman was not "the fighting liberal he pretends to be" but "a partner in the move to curtail civil rights."

"It is always a safe bet that Harry Truman will be right 50 per cent of the time," Mr. Wallace said. "He is on both sides of everything." 6-21-48

Mr. Wallace said he would not debate Mr. Truman's statement that this was "the worst Congress in history," but he held the President equally responsible for this country's difficulties.

"Inflation — housing — health — taxes—business—labor," Mr. Wallace intoned. "It is obvious that Mr. Truman's protestations of purity and innocence and his accusations of guilt are about as valid as those of the man who plans a robbery, loads the gun and then tells the police it was his partner who pulled the trigger and killed the cashier." 6-21-48

Mr. Wallace declared that "a united protest will stop the philosophy of Hitler, Himmel and Hummell from conquering freedom in the sovereign state of Ohio." He asserted that since February 46,000 persons in Ohio had signed petitions for the third party but that Mr. Hummell, "without hearings, without due process, without any legal grounds whatsoever," had decided that the people of Ohio "should not have a chance to choose between the cold war and peace next November."

"The Secretary of State based his utterly irresponsible, un-American decision on his own allegation that some signers of a new party affidavit are Communists," Mr. Wallace said. "Even if one assumes that the Communists advocate violence, end even if Mr. Hummell had evidence that some signers of the affidavit were Communists, we would be at a loss to understand his mental gymnastics, perverted patriotism and callous contempt of citizenship."

Sparkman And Truman

It is easy to understand Sen. Sparkman's feeling that the only hope for a Democratic presidential victory this year lies in the withdrawal of Mr. Truman from the race.

The sentiment against the president is very strong in the South. Unquestionably he made a great mistake in the presentation of his civil rights recommendations.

It was a grave mistake in dealing with the South's racial situation. It was a basic misconception of how best to advance progress in this field, which should come by continuation of voluntary and regional measures. Anything else would be attempted compulsion of a majority in a great region. That could not work.

Mr. Truman's move was also a major political blunder. It is now apparent that he may indeed lose some Southern states even if his program is not pressed, even if the Democratic convention adopts only a general racial plank similar to that approved in 1944.

Mr. Truman, of course, is facing a hard fight in other parts of the country. Without the South, it is hardly conceivable that he can win. It was on this basis that Mr. Sparkman reluctantly came to the conclusion that the president should withdraw. Mon. 3-22-48

But, of course, there are obvious and very serious drawbacks to such an appeal, coming from Southerners.

In the first place, it is most unlikely that the president will withdraw. Mr. Truman may have many weaknesses, but timidity and lack of determination are not among them. His pride is profoundly involved.

It is to be realized also that many Democrats in other parts of the country feel very differently about Mr. Truman from the way so many Southerners do. They are not thinking about his withdrawal. They feel that if he withdrew that would make Democratic defeat even more certain than would Mr. Truman's nomination. with efforts continued

The one hope in the minds of Mr. Sparkman and many others is that Eisenhower might accept the nomination. That still may be a possibility, of course, but it remains a very slight possibility. We believe Eisenhower meant just what he said in taking himself out of the race. It would take a tremendous public demand to change that decision, if indeed it could be changed at all. There are too many conflicting considerations to make likely a great united sentiment leading to such action.

Would Truman withdraw without broad agreement on who would be the nominee? do not think that is at all likely, even to work out a basis of harmony in the party.

So, on the grounds of what is best for the party, there is much question whether it would be served by withdrawal.

if it be assumed he would do so on the basis of such an agreement. The News

Would Eisenhower agree to run if Truman agreed not to do so? We doubt that, too

Further, it is extremely difficult for this paper to see how the national interest, especially in world affairs, could be served and adequately protected if Mr. Truman's withdrawal were forced and the government for many months were weakened by a leadership that had in effect been repudiated. Birmingham Ala.

Mr. Truman would only withdraw under pressure, if at all. Such pressure would have to be based on rejection of his leadership by his own party. What would be the nation's position and future, what would be the party's position and future, in the event of such a rejection? Mon.

The next few months are going to be extremely critical for the fate of all mankind, for the fate of this country. Mr. Truman, fighting for reelection, would be one thing. Mr. Truman, repudiated by his own party, would be another. 3-22-48

We understand Sen. Sparkman's viewpoint, but, frankly, we see little realistic hope in it.

Wright Reaffirms Stand; Rushton: 'No Support For Truman In State'

ATLANTA, March 8.—(AP)—Rebellious southern Democrats were as "unchanged" as President Truman Monday night on the civil rights issue.

They made that clear after the President said that if the Democratic Party naminates him he will accept and run for a full term.

Southern political leaders displayed little surprise that Mr. Truman should seek the presidential nomination. Whether he can be nominated or, if so, with the election, were questions that brought varying opinions.

Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, one of the first Southern governors to oppose the president, said:

"We are not only opposed to Truman but to anyone else who advocates Truman's policy."

Earlier Monday Wright said he was convinced the Democratic Party would not nominate President Truman, but that even that action "will not satisfy the South."

Folsom's Comment

The Advertiser

Gov. Folsom of Alabama, who has announced his own candidacy for President, had only this to say: "Any good American should run for the presidency if nominated by the Democratic Party." Montgomery, Ala.

However, Alabama's National Democratic Committeeman, Marion Rushton of Montgomery, commented: Tues. 3-9-48

"Unless he changes his pronouncements of anti-southern legislation and unless the party adopts a platform without bringing in his civil rights program, Truman won't get any support in Alabama."

Crump Speaks Out

From Ed Crump, veteran Memphis political boss, came a prediction that Mr. Truman "probably will get the nomination." Tues. 3-9-48

"He has sufficient key men North, East and West," Crump continued. "Yes, he'll get the nomination but his election is another thing. Many of us will vote for a real Democrat, probably a Southerner."

Gov. Ben Laney of Arkansas said Saturday he did not believe President Truman can be nominated.

"No comment" was the reaction from Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida.

James S. Peters, Georgia's Democratic executive committee chairman, remarked merely, "I'm against him (Truman)." The Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Gov. Jim McCord of Tennessee remarked, "I should think he would run, wouldn't he, if nominated?" Tues. 3-9-48

Flight From Truman Mon 4-5-48

The sudden bolt of Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama from the discordant Truman bandwagon has had a profound effect on other party regulars. Although Hill is a Southerner, his Senate colleagues feel that his action cannot be dismissed as just another civil-rights protest. A former majority whip, Hill has an impressive record as a liberal, and close associates say that his bolt was due more to Truman's "poor showing" on domestic policies than to the civil-rights program. He's said to have been dismayed by the President's dumping of such liberals as Chester Bowles, Marriner Eccles, Wilson Wyatt, and James Landis. Look for Northern and Southern progressives to follow Hill's example.

Will Truman Be Ditched?

By Marquis Childs

The News

WASHINGTON—PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND THE ADVISERS close to him are busy putting out public and private assurances that the man in the White House has no intention of removing himself from the political scene by renouncing the Democratic nomination at Philadelphia. They say that he will stick to the end, come what may.

But what is happening both here and out in the country makes it possible—yes, probable—that the decision will be taken out of his hands. The professional politicians are moving in to save what they can of the party organization, including their own claims in bankruptcy on what is left of the Democratic machine.

The Dissidents' Ticket

DEMOCRATS ON CAPITOL HILL in touch with dissidents out in the country are talking in terms of Sen. Scott W. Lucas of Illinois for president and House Minority Leader Sam Rayburn of Texas for vice president. Or the order might be reversed, with Rayburn in the No. 1 place and Lucas in No. 2.

In this there is no hope of victory. Repudiation of the president by his own party would be too big a handicap to overcome. The campaign would be comparable to that waged in 1924 by John W. Davis, who was nominated after the Democratic Party, in the Madison Square Garden convention of that year, had all but destroyed itself over Al Smith, the Ku Klux Klan and the Catholic issue. Fri. 3-26-48

The candidates would give a respectable imitation of a campaign, doing it as cheaply as possible since, naturally, large contributors would not be flocking in to volunteer donations. In this way utter disaster, threatening dissolution of the party, would be averted. As the gloomy professionals cast up the score, that is about the limit of their hopes.

Two Important Events

TWO EVENTS BROUGHT ABOUT the grim fact-facing sessions of the past week. One was the outright reversal of the Palestine partition decision. That produced open revolt in New York and Chicago, where the Jewish vote is a vital factor.

The second event was the defection of Alabama's two senators, Lister Hill and John Sparkman. This was like a sudden lightning flash revealing the extent and the depth of the Southern revolt.

Hill and Sparkman are both liberals, both men of integrity. They had announced that they would support the president. But the groundswell of revolution back home made that impossible. The News

This, plus the situation with respect to the delegates to the Democratic convention and the Democratic electors to be chosen in the Alabama primary. Of 28 candidates for electors to go to the electoral college and cast Alabama's 11 electoral votes in November, 22 had pledged that they would not cast them for Harry S. Truman. Thus if Hill, running for delegate to the Philadelphia convention, were pledged to Truman, he would be committed to a candidate who could not receive the vote of his state.

Surveying the gloomy scene, the party's professionals realized that Mr. Truman might go down to a defeat as sweeping as that of Alf Landon in 1936. GOP Candidate Landon carried only two states, Maine and Vermont. Birmingham, Ala.

The Southern States would accept a Lucas-Rayburn ticket. They would, in fact, accept almost any other Democrat than the present occupant of the White House. 3-26-48

Thus, by sidetracking Mr. Truman, the Democrats would carry the Solid South. They might pick up other scattered states, particularly if the Republicans go back to William McKinley for their candidate. They might save congressional seats in cities which would otherwise go down in the general ruin.

The presidency is a powerful office in more ways than one. But whether the present president could head off such a move, if and when it takes final and definite form, is highly uncertain.—©

The Tide Of Revolt

IF THE TIDE OF SOUTHERN revolt continues at the present flood, Mr. Truman seems likely to lose all of the states south of the Mason and Dixon Line with the exception of North Carolina and possibly Florida. Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida has said that he will do everything he can to prevent Mr. Truman's nomination but, failing to prevent it, he will not lead a move to deprive Candidate Truman of the state's electoral vote. Truman Vs. Wallace

The News

President Truman departed from his prepared St. Patrick's Day speech to make a few remarks on Henry A. Wallace. He would have done better to have kept to his manuscript. For extemporaneous personalities of the sort to which he yielded could possibly help Wallace more than they hurt him, and they probably did not help Truman.

Birmingham, Ala.

(34a(1)) Fri. 3-19-48

President Truman said he would not accept the political support of "Henry Wallace and his Communists." He would as soon be defeated, he said, as to accept the support of the Wallace following. "Any price for Wallace and his Communists is too much for me to pay," he added.

Mr. Truman's rejection of Mr. Wallace's support is understandable. Most Americans, in all probability, share that general attitude. But the manner in which Mr. Truman phrased the rejection could conceivably aid Mr. Wallace.

The Truman implication that Wallace's supporters are all, or even chiefly, Communists is a kind of demagogy that could react in Wallace's favor. Not all of the Wallace support comes from Communists. Perhaps only a small amount of it does. 3-19-48

A recent Gallup poll gives Wallace 8 per cent of the total popular following. That would mean about 4,000,000 voters. Does Mr. Truman think there is anything like that number of Communists in the country? A press association study made in the Summer of last year found only 70,000 Communist Party members in the United States. The 1946 congressional elections listed only 7,472 Communist votes. The 1944 presidential election showed only 45,336 votes for the Socialist-Labor ticket supported by Communists. If all minor parties with a leftist tinge are included, there were only 950,000 votes in the 1944 election that could by the broadest of definitions be called Communist. It is preposterous to think that the number of Communists in the United States could have multiplied in the last four years to the point where even a majority of Mr. Wallace's following could belong to that party.

The News Birmingham, Ala. Fri. 3-19-48

3-19-48

Name-calling is poor political tactics, questionable for all and especially for the United States. In this instance it may well boomerang. Most American people like fair play. They want truth in their political charges. They don't want exaggerated and misleading statements from those whom they look to for information and leadership. Extravagant charges against Wallace may create sympathy for him, just as they might for anybody else.

(34a(1))

If Truman wants to minimize Wallace's influence, let him ignore him. Let him pitch his own utterances on a level far above personalities. Let him remember, if he can, that it isn't Wallace or Truman or Dewey or Eisenhower that count the most, but principles and standards and ideals.

Birmingham, Ala.

The News Fri. 3-19-48

But lest anyone be misled by this criticism of Truman, let us add that this paper prefers Truman to Wallace by a margin as wide as the Tennessee River in flood time. And that is one reason why we don't want Wallace helped by unfair personalities.

The Governors And Mr. Truman

The News

What are the implications of this action of six Southern Democratic governors meeting in Washington to discuss politics, especially the Truman candidacy for the party's presidential nomination? How far does it represent Southern sentiment? How far can the governors go in putting their ideas across?

Tues. 3-16-48

Six governors signed the statement, representing Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Texas. The governor of Florida was in Washington, but did not attend the meeting. The governor of North Carolina sent word he had important business at home. The governor of Virginia, who lives only a short distance from Washington, did not attend, although represented by the approving Sen. Byrd. No statement was made about the governors of Tennessee, Louisiana and Kentucky. The governor of Maryland was present but abstained from voting. Oklahoma, considered a border state along with Maryland, was not represented.

Birmingham, Ala.

Do these six men speak for the South? They do not speak for men like Sen. Lister Hill. They do not speak for Mrs. Lennard Thomas, Alabama Democratic ommitteewoman, in their to-the-bitter-end opposition to President Truman as the Democratic nominee.

The News

The six governors apparently would lead their states to vote against Mr. Truman regardless of what stand is taken on civil rights in the party's platform. Their vote to "fight to the last ditch" against anyone advocating federal legislation on civil rights does not seem to leave any loophole for later support of Mr. Truman on a platform acceptable to the South. They stand pledged to vote and work against him if he is nominated, no matter what the platform says.

That is going pretty far, much farther than a lot of good and loyal Democrats in the South are willing to go. There are many Southern Democrats who "prefer Mr. Truman, on an acceptable platform, to anything that could be offered by the Republicans with their historic and present policy toward the South and Southern problems.

Birmingham, Ala.

The six governors will have some influence. But they have no authority to bind their states or their states' electors or delegates to any specific course. They can adopt resolutions and make recommendations, and that is all that they did in Washington. The decisions still rest with the voters.

Has the Truman Revolt Failed?

The Constitution Atlanta, Ga

Ralph Jones, whose column usually occupies this space, is ill.

Tues. 4-20-48

WASHINGTON—The move to block the nomination of President Truman is rapidly fizzling out—mainly because his Democratic opposition, excepting Southerners and the Wallace group, failed to find any place else to go.

Edward J. Flynn, of New York, and Frank Hague, of New Jersey, combined to put a quietus on the effort to swing Northern city machines against Truman, which Boss Jake Arvey, of Chicago, the Roosevelt boys and the CIO had hopefully started.

Flynn and Hague acted after they had assured themselves that there was not the slightest chance that either Gen. Eisenhower or Associate Justice of the Supreme Court William O. Douglas would permit their names to be entered in opposition to Truman. And beyond those two the most ardent opponents of the President are unable to suggest anyone with even a remote prospect of winning the nomination.

If Flynn and Hague thought it worth inquiring about they also found that there is no prospect whatever that Mr. Truman will voluntarily renounce the nomination.

Not New In the course of his nearly 30 years in politics, Mr. Truman has faced gloomier outlooks than his current one without quitting. For example, when he came up for renomination to the Senate in 1940, just after his good friend and political boss, Tom Pendergast, had been shipped off to prison, Mr. Truman's stock was at extremely low ebb. He won the primary with barely more than one-third of the votes cast because his two opponents, Gov. Lloyd Stark and Maurice Milligan, spent all their efforts fighting each other. In his recent book dealing with Missouri politics, Mr. Milligan says that Truman was nominated because at the last minute a segment of the St. Louis Democratic machine, headed by Robert E. Hannegan, switched from Stark to Truman.

The Constitution

In the current instance an argument entirely aside from partisan politics is known to have influenced Mr. Truman's decision to stick. Thus if he either steps out of the fight for nomination or is beaten within his own party his effectiveness as President for the remaining six months of his term would be largely destroyed.

Certainly nobody, either abroad or at home, would pay much attention to a President proven incapable of mustering support of even a majority of his own party. State Department officials especially have stressed the danger that Russia's Communist bloc would see in such a complete repudiation of the American President an ideal opportunity to extend its aggressions.

Tues. 4-20-48

There is hope in the White House circle that this international consideration will decide even the South to stick with the President, after it has waged its fight against him in the Democratic National Convention.

Atlanta, Ga.

Crump's Failure The most encouraging development so far for the White House was the failure of the redoubtable Boss Crump, of Memphis, in an attempt to pledge Tennessee's Presidential electors to vote against President Truman. Instead of a fixed bolt, a resolution was passed merely condemning the President's civil rights program. The State's delegates, including Crump, will go to the national convention uninstructed, except for a mandate to vote as a unit on all issues.

The reason Tennessee Democrats were loath to go against the Presidential nominee of their party is that this would lead to such a split all down the line as probably to hand over a lot of State and local offices, as well as Tennessee's Presidential electors, to Republicans.

Tues. 4-20-48

Whereas that possibility holds in Southern border States, however, the deep South has no fear of being taken over by the Republicans. The likelihood still is that five or more Southern States will cast their electoral votes for somebody other than Mr. Truman.

Negro Group Backs Truman

The Constitution

The Georgia Association of Citizens' Democratic Clubs, statewide Negro Democratic organization, Friday commended President Truman for his Civil Rights stand and urged his renomination by the National Democratic Party.

A. T. Walden, Atlanta attorney and President of the State group, said President Truman's stand was commended in a formal resolution of the group.

Sat. 5-22-48

In another resolution, Walden said, the state organization censured Larkin Marshall, Negro newspaper editor at Macon, for joining the Wallace-for-President Third Party and called upon the Citizens' Democratic Club at Macon to oust him as President.

Atlanta, Ga.

A companion resolution directed the Macon group to commit itself to the support of President Truman's renomination, and said if it failed to do so, it would be expelled from the state organization.

Walden said Negro Democratic leaders from all sections of the state attended the closed session.

Text of Truman's Final Words to the Voters

Following are the texts of speeches prepared for delivery over the radio last night by President Truman speaking from Independence, Mo., and by Senator Barkley speaking from Paducah, Ky., the Senator introducing the President, who then went on the air:

President Truman

Times 11-2-48

~~By The Associated Press~~

My fellow-citizens:

I want to thank Senator Barkley for his generous introduction, and to say what I have said before—that no candidate for President ever had a finer running mate. The people of this country are everlastingly in his debt for his leadership in their interest. Senator Barkley will go down in history as one of our greatest public servants.

During the past two months I have been going up and down the country, telling the people what the Democratic party stands for in government. I have talked in great cities in state capitals, in county seats, in cross-roads villages and country towns.

Everywhere the people showed great interest. They came out by the millions. They wanted to know what the issues were in this campaign, and I told them what was in my mind and in my heart.

I explained the meaning of the Democratic party platform. I told them that I intend to carry it out if they will give me a Democratic Congress to help.

Gratitude to the People

From the bottom of my heart I thank the people of the United States for their cordiality to me and for their interest in the affairs of this nation and of the world. I trust the people, because when they know the facts they do the right thing. I have tried to tell them the facts and explain the issues.

Times 11-2-48

Now it is up to you, the people of this great nation, to decide what kind of government you want—whether you want government for all the people or government for the privileged few.

Tonight I am at my home here in Independence, Mo., with Mrs. Truman and Margaret. We are here to vote tomorrow as citizens of this Republic. I hope that all of you who are entitled to vote will exercise that great privilege. When you vote, you are in control of your Government.

Tomorrow you will be deciding between the principles of the Democratic party—the party of the people—and the principles of the Republican party—the party of privilege.

Your vote tomorrow is not just a vote for one man or another; it is a vote which will affect you and your families for years to come.

Things He Believes In

Now maybe you would like to know why I have made this fight for the people. I will try to tell you. It is a matter of the things I beliieve in.

I believe in a free America—strong and indivisible.

I believe in the principles of the Declaration of Independence—that we, the people, shall govern ourselves through our elected representatives—that every man and woman has a right to an equal voice in the management of our nation's affairs.

I believe that the Constitution, which rightly protects property, is still more deeply pledged to protect human rights.

I believe that the Democratic party is the party of the people. I believe that through the Democratic party, all classes of our citizens will receive fairer treatment and more security.

Nation's Role in World

I believe, in particular, that the industrial workers, the farmers and the small business men of this country can best protect themselves against reaction and against inflation through the Democratic party.

I believe that a Democratic Administration, pledged to continue the present policies of our country, is our best insurance against going back to the dark days of 1932.

I believe with all my heart and soul that Almighty God has intended the United States of America to lead the world to peace. We were in that position thirty years ago. We failed to meet our obligation then, and World War II was the result.

This time, we must live up to our opportunity to establish a permanent peace for the greatest age in human history.

We have two great goals—one to build a secure life for ourselves here at home, the other to build a lasting peace for the world.

Questions Put to Voters

Times 11-2-48

As you mark your ballots tomorrow, I want every housewife to ask herself: Will this protect my home and my children for the future?

I want every husband to ask himself: Is this best for my wife and family?

I want all voters to ask themselves: Is this the best way to insure a free and prosperous country?

And now, my fellow citizens, the future welfare of our country is in your hands. I have told you the truth as God has given me wisdom to see the truth.

Go to the polls tomorrow and vote your convictions—your hopes—and your faith—your faith in the future of a nation that under God can lead the world to freedom and to peace.

Senator Barkley

On the twelfth day of April, 1945, the news came to a shocked world that Franklin D. Roosevelt had died at Warm Springs, Ga.

In millions of homes, around the firesides of millions of families in America and throughout the world could be heard the muffled sounds of grief. No man has been looked upon by so many people as the apostle of democracy and the embodiment of popular faith in the ultimate objects of peace and humanity.

Now that this great personality had merged with that of other great men in the eternity of the ages, all eyes and hearts turned to the man who under our Constitution grasps the pilot's wheel of our Ship of State.

The war was still in progress on every front. Momentous questions of both war and peace and world policy must be grappled with, and domestic economy awaited the decisions of the Executive and the Congress.

Task of the Successor

Before the message carrying the news of President Roosevelt's death had flashed across the plains, through mountains and under the deep billows of the sea, the new pilot stepped forward to grasp the helm.

Harry S. Truman was new President of the most powerful Republic of our times.

No man called suddenly to the Presidency of this nation ever faced a greater task. Whether this task involved our internal economy or the delicate and dangerous course of international relations, it called for the exercise of patience, tolerance, firmness, foresight and courage.

Let us call the roll of those who have become President of the United States on the death of another President.

John Tyler, Millard Fillmore, Andrew Johnson, Chester Arthur, Theodore Roosevelt, Calvin Coolidge ~~and Harry~~ S. Truman.

Record in the Presidency

Search the history books and tell me whether any of them, or all of them combined, were confronted with anything approaching the great questions that confronted the successor of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Then, tell me whether any of them singly, or all of them combined, did a better job in administering the Government of the United States than has been done during the past three years and a half by the present Chief Executive of this nation.

I am sure your answer will be that which history will truthfully record—that this quiet, modest, patient, courageous, determined man in war and the aftermath of war, at home and abroad, has brought strength to our economy, expansion and permanence to our influence and hope to hopeless men and women throughout the world.

I am happy to be associated with him in the course we present and represent before the people of this nation.

I present to you Harry S. Truman, the present and the next President of the United States.

President Is Out to Upset Predictions

By JOHN L. CLARK

Political Analyst

ABOARD THE TRUMAN SPECIAL—Hoping to capture six Midwestern States—four of which have already been "conceded" to GOP candidate Thomas E. Dewey—President Truman is making a strong bid to upset the predictions of all political dopesters in this rich electoral vote field.

In these six States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and West Virginia—there are a total of ninety-seven electoral votes. Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin have been conceded through different "saplings of political opinion" to Governor Dewey, while West Virginia and Minnesota have been listed as "doubtful."

But with characteristic Truman aplomb, the Democratic standard-bearer hopes to annex the entire six. What observers had previously considered a hopeless case became tinged with a heavy atmosphere of optimism on the President's last trip when he improved his position in Texas, Kentucky, Oklahoma, West Virginia and Arizona and caused Utah, Colorado and Nevada to lean more towards the Democratic side. There is a hope that his present foray into hitherto "Republican" States may bring a similar reaction.

Sat 10-16-48

ATTACK REMAINS SAME

The pattern of the President's appeal is not expected to change. He will continue to hammer away at the GOP-controlled Eightieth Congress for its failure to provide low-cost housing and slum clearance programs and will continue to blame the Republicans for the high-cost of living. Civil rights—a moot issue—will doubtlessly remain on the "silence" agenda for reasons of political expediency at the moment.

Mr. Truman made his first major speech on this Midwestern tour Monday morning at a breakfast conference in Cincinnati. It was arranged by former Ohio Governor Frank Lausche and other Ohio Democratic leaders.

The President had on his schedule five stops in West Virginia; twelve stops in Indiana; eleven stops in Illinois; eight in Wisconsin, and eight in Minnesota. There were eighteen stops on his schedule in Ohio.

Dixiecrats, GOP Assailed By Truman

North Carolinians Are Reminded of Carpetbagger Era After Civil War

Wash. D.C.

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Raleigh, N. C., Oct. 19.—Here in the heart of the disgruntled South, President Truman returned to politics today with two forthright attacks on Republicans and States Rights Democrats.

He reminded the Dixiecrats, who deserted the Democratic convention in protesting his nomination, that their own Andrew Jackson "knew that the way to correct injustice in a democracy is by reason and debate, never by walking out in a huff."

And he told an audience of dirt farmers at the State Fair Grounds: "You don't have to be hit on the head twice to know who hit you the first time."

His target was not the Republican Party alone. In the same speech he spoke directly to rebellious Democrats in these words:

"You stand with the Democratic Party or you stand against it.

"You stand with the Democratic Party or for all practical purposes you stand against it."

However pleased his audiences may have been at his attacks on the GOP, they sat on their hands when he aimed his shots at Dixiecrats.

Wed 10-20-48

The President's farm speech, delivered this afternoon, was a barefisted dismemberment of the Republican Party's pre-depression record. He symbolized that record by recalling the "Hoovercart," which he said was indigenous to North Carolina and described as "the remains of an old tin lizzie being pulled by a mule because you couldn't afford to buy a new car or gas for the old one."

And he went even farther back in history for examples of what he said the South might expect from a Republican administration.

"You know," he said, "what Republicanism means in North Carolina and everywhere else in the South. 'First it meant rule by carpetbaggers, then it means rule by the money-baggers. Either way it means rule that treats the South and West as colonies to be exploited commercially and held down politically.

"Republicanism means that the Federal government is controlled by the powerful man and the greedy Wall Street interests that want cheap labor and cheap farm products. Republicanism puts the almighty dollar first and is not above using a little tidelands oil money to grease the way to power."

34a(1)

Then Mr. Truman appealed directly to the Southern members of his own party who are in open rebellion over his civil rights program.

"Today big-money Republicanism is on the march," he said in measured accents, "and to beat it we've all got to stand together. That's where we Democrats belong—together—shoulder to shoulder . . .

"We all belong together. I believe in loyalty as the great force in politics—the loyalty of free men and women, freely given and honorably received.

"But above all treasure the basic principle of democracy itself—the right to disagree among ourselves without letting differences of opinion lead us into temptation to betray our own best interests."

Capitol Speech Coolly Received

The reception given the President by his farm audience was many degrees warmer than the one he received from Raleigh at large this morning. His speech on the capitol grounds was coolly received and the procession to the capitol drew a moderate crowd which was friendly but not enthusiastic. There were few violations of traditional Southern hospitality. Here and there among the crowd a small Confederate flag waved and one man was heard to shout: "We are for the States Rights ticket! We're for Thurmond!"

Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina is States Rights Party candidate for President supported by Southern Democrats who split with Mr. Truman on the civil rights issue.

But at the fairgrounds this afternoon, the Chief Executive told his audience exactly what they wanted to hear and in words they understood. They rewarded him with whoops of delight.

Describing himself as "fighting mad," Mr. Truman lit into the Republican depression record and the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress for curtailing soil conservation, rural electrification, the Commodity Credit Corporation and the reciprocal trade agreement. He said the Congress threatened a "death tax" on farm cooperatives and "tried to kill the farm tenant purchase program."

"In the 1920s," Mr. Truman said, "the Republican Party could not fight depression. It was incapable of bold action for the people. The big business owners of that dismal party said there was nothing to do but 'ride it out.' You did—in Hoover carts.

"Today, the Republican Party stands convicted of being incapable of fighting inflation. Some of its present leaders have tried to put the blame for inflation on farm prices."

Mr. Truman denied that prices of finished industrial products were influenced by prices paid the farmer.

"Now wheat prices have fallen a dollar a bushel," he said, "but the price of bread has not come down a cent.

"It's the same with cotton. Nobody can blame the cost of a shirt on the cotton that's in it.

Wed 10-20-48

"The price of tobacco is infinitesimal in the cost of cigarettes."

The President let fly another roundhouse swing at GOP Candidate Thomas E. Dewey's pleas for "unity." Speaking of the Republican leadership of the Eightieth Congress, he said: "They have given us a sharp warning of what the Republican Party stands for today. And their record shows that the Republican Party stands for the same thing today that it did under Herbert Hoover.

Dissident Democrats Warned

"That is the record on which the Republican presidential candidate wants us to be unified." Governor Dewey, said Mr. Truman, has "indorsed the record of the Eightieth Congress. He says he is proud of the Eightieth Congress."

President Returns From Southern Trip

President Truman landed at National Airport at 5:30 p. m. yesterday after a two-day flying trip into the South.

He and his party went immediately to the White House, where he said he would dig into the work on his desk and polish up his speech to be delivered Saturday at Pittsburgh.

Accepts Party Bid; Raps GOP

Thurs 7-15-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 15— (Thursday) —(AP)— President Truman told cheering Democratic legions early today that he is calling Congress into session July 26 to give it a chance to enact Republican platform promises into laws if it will.

34a(1)

The official result of the balloting:

7-15-48

President Truman 947½.

Sen. Richard Russell, of Georgia, 263.

Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, ½.

Not voting 23.

Sen. Alben Barkley, of Kentucky, early today was nominated by acclamation the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee.

The President, fighting for a chance to win a full term in the White House, showed up at Convention Hall with Mrs. Truman and their daughter, Margaret, long before the nominating roll call began.

He remained in Party Chairman McGrath's office, watching the balloting by television, until time for his acceptance speech.

The next order of business was the nomination of Mr. Truman's Vice Presidential running mate, the reluctant Sen. Alben Barkley, of Kentucky. Mr. Truman tapped him after trying vainly to get Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas.

When the President stepped to the platform he was given a big demonstration calculated to ease the sting of what had been one of the bitterest Democratic conventions in many years.

Gov. Phil M. Donnelly of Missouri put him in nomination with a paen of praise that inspired everyone but the rebellious Southerners to dance in the aisles for 40 minutes.

The nomination was seconded by a long list of Mr. Truman's stalwarts, including Gov. Mon Walgren of Washington; Will Rogers, Jr., Miss Doris I. Byrne, Vice Chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee; Mrs. Marguerite Peyton Thompson, National Committeewoman from Colorado, and Catherine E. Falvey, of Massachusetts.

But no amount of cheering could hide the fact that Mr. Truman will lead a faction-torn party into the November election against the GOP's Dewey-Warren ticket.

Before the President reached the hall, the entire Mississippi delegation and half of Alabama's 26 delegates walked out in protest against the strong civil rights plank which the convention voted into the party platform. Georgia entered her Sen. Richard B. Russell in the Presidential fight as a States' rights protest.

And a surprise candidate popped into the lists.

Byrd Sims, of Pensacola, Fla., put into nomination Paul V. McNutt, former Governor of Indiana and a long-time party wheelhorse.

The President slipped into the Convention Hall almost unnoticed, after driving through a heavy rain from the special train which brought him and his party here from Washington at 9:30 p. m. (EDT). The huge auditorium was packed to the rafters, and secret service men and local police officers assigned to guard the President were all over the house.

Gov. Phil M. Donnelly, of Missouri, put his name before the delegates and the huge hall was a bedlam of yelling, dancing delegates. The band blared out "The Missouri Waltz" in competition with a howling siren.

But the delegations from the Deep South sat sullenly on their hands and ignored the show.

Donnelly told the Convention the President's policies are the nation's "strongest guaranty of peace."

Donnelly read the record of the Democratic Party's 15 years in power and of Mr. Truman's contribution to it as Senator, Vice President and President. He challenged the Republicans to repeal a single one of the social and economic laws enacted under the Democratic regime.

We Stand By Truman

Lighthouse and Informer

Sun 10-31-48

Columbia S.C.

This coming Tuesday, November 2, we of South Carolina will go to the polls with millions of other Americans to vote our preference among four candidates for the presidency.

There is little point in discussing here which candidate has the appreciation of most of us. It is not a matter of deciding which man we are going to vote for; rather, it is to decide how many votes we can give him and how might we get around any attempts to limit our votes, or have them counted for the wrong person.

We of South Carolina are standing with President Truman and with the Democratic party and, with the millions of white South Carolinians, Southerners and Americans elsewhere who, as we, believe America cannot be any stronger than its weakest link, nor effect abroad any more decency than it can effect at home.

We of South Carolina know also that millions of people are watching the Tuesday election to decide whether there's any truth in the oft-repeated advice to officeholders, "It is suicide to fight for the rights of Negroes." We know that if we don't stand with the man who has stood by us who hasn't been content, as his opponents, to talk and promise vaguely, but has done all he could, almost single-handedly and, has elected to sink or swim on his convictions nobody will dare again to stand by our side for a long, long time.

Every loyal and faithful one of us is going to the polls and vote on November 2. Nothing is going to keep us at home or on the job that day. November 2 is the day of the second emancipation for our people, the day we show cur little support. And we'll stand by President Truman.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN SHAKES HAND WITH A NEGRO LADY IN TEXAS AND IS "BOOED"

The Argus

Fri 10-8-48

St. Louis, Mo.

34a(1)

It is very difficult to understand some of the white people in the South. They not only wish to practice their outmoded customs upon other persons, to whom they are distasteful and annoying, but they endeavor to force other persons to engage in childlish and uncivilized practices. They are willing to insult a ~~transient~~ guest who disregards their customs.

President Truman has been campaigning in Texas. In a community through which his schedule carried him he chances to meet a Negro lady and shakes hands with her. The white citizens who witnessed the incident, "booed him." Is it possible to imagine anything quite so crude as this?

Some of the white people in the South are determined to make the world believe that Negro people should not be treated as other human-beings are treated; that one cannot encounter a Negro person, and follow the same ordinary rules of courtesy and politeness as are enjoined in meeting other persons.

Such conduct is so shocking, one cannot help asking: why are these customs insisted upon?

It is not because the white dislike the Negro people "whom they know." Many of the white people manifest strong affection for "our Negroes." They have had the services of Negroes for most of their needs. Negroes have cared for the young from birth until adolescence. They have cleaned their homes, have cooked their food, washed their clothing, and attended them when ill. Some have been so endeared to their Negro servants that they have wished these servants to be buried at their side.

One would need to search the pages of history a long time before finding a paralleled instance of the relation of slave to white woman and children during the Civil War. These slaves took care of wives and children when fathers, and sons were fighting to keep them enslaved.

Notwithstanding these experiences some of the white people believe that in order to possess the greed and luxury of slavery, they must preserve the spirit of slavery when the letter is dead. To justify the moral baseness of slavery, whether in letter or spirit, they try to make it appear that the Negro people are dependent upon them for existence. He is incapable of making his own way.

Fri 10-8-48

This vicious circle of denying to the Negro the right and opportunity to make his own way and then alleging that he is incapable of making his own way is the unpardonable sin of the iniquitous institution of slavery.

This wanton and outrageous conduct insults the President of the United States when he is a guest in a Southern Community.

History Will Deal Kindly With Truman

34a(1)

I recall that it was a very cool day for Chicago and I was grateful for it, walking to the hotel where a Senator from Missouri, Harry S. Truman, had his rooms.

It was the day before the 1944 convention opened and already it was obvious that Henry Wallace was out and the tides were running toward Sen. Truman.

I got in to see him almost immediately. We talked for a while. And, of course, I asked him how he felt about the probability he would be the Vice President.

Wed 11-3-48

He was torn between pride, as any man would have been, and worry.

"I honestly don't want it," he said. "I haven't the money to be Vice President. It requires a lot of entertaining and expenses outside the official position.

"The social part of it would be all right. I've got a wife who can take care of that part easily," he said, with open pride in his wife. "But I don't want it. The boys tell me it's mine if I will say the word. But I don't know."

Later, of course, he did say the word.

Atlanta Ga

Appraisal History, I think, will be kind to him. He has tried honestly to be a good President and to serve his country well. He was thrust into the presidency to follow one of our greatest Presidents and into a situation which would have tested the best of any of our great leaders of the past.

He himself removed most of the wartime controls. The inflation we have has not soared to the great heights it has attained in other countries. Yet, he railed against the removal of controls, which he himself had begun, with apparent honesty. I do not think it ever occurred to him there was any connection between his early removal of controls, at a time when many of his advisers were saying all we needed to avoid a rise in the cost of living was production, and the later breakdown of OPA.

He did bring back to Government the Cabinet and also a supplementary "kitchen Cabinet." They had said of Roosevelt he would never take advice, that he was a one-man show. Ironically, and especially so since he chose men from big business, many were to damn Truman for having such poor advice. That he was betrayed by some is obvious.

Help When the war ended and most of the men who had ability left the government service and went into business to make money, he had to call on his friends to fill in. Therefore, the jokes about Missouri being depopulated and the Missouri gang in Washington.

It is one of our paradoxical attitudes that few men want to make a career of government service, especially in the top levels, and yet we heartily curse our government because it is inefficient. Truman tried desperately to get good men to take top jobs. He got only a few.

Thomas E. Dewey will encounter the same difficulty, although he has been trying to avoid it by lining up able Republicans who will take government administrative positions.

Wed 11-3-48

FDR Franklin D. Roosevelt was able to gather around him many extremely good men. We sometimes forget them in remembering the few crackpots and failures among them. Since his death the quality of the administration steadily has declined. It is this factor alone which has convinced many persons that the Democratic Party needs to be removed. The machinery of its administration has slowed down. Dewey. at least, will bring to it a new enthusiasm and a fresh approach from men who believe they can do a job and that it will pay political dividends.

Dewey's success or failure will depend upon what he is able to do as an administrator. A coldly efficient administration, lacking in an appreciation of the humanities, will destroy him. He must find, somehow, the men who will do an efficient job and provide, too, a warmth and an understanding which the people demand.

It is a great mistake for those of us who are employed, comfortable, fed and housed to think that everyone is so fixed. With all the world turned toward some form and degree of socialization save us, we must be watchful and the more concerned with making our system apply its benefits to an ever-growing number of our people.

Truman Puts It Up to Labor

The New Republic

34a(1)

WITH HIS APPEARANCE at Detroit, Harry Truman has outlined frankly the whole course of his campaign for the presidency. Going on the assumption that a big vote will be a Democratic vote, Truman will do everything in his power to get out a record vote this November. Realizing that it will take a massive labor turnout for him to win in the crucial big cities, the President will demand repeatedly, as he did at Detroit, an exceptionally powerful effort by labor for "an all-out vote on election day." His theme is to be Republican special privilege v. Democratic efforts on behalf of the little man. And the center of his attack will be "the Taft-Hartley, backward-looking Congress" rather than Thomas E. Dewey.

Mon 9-13-48

New York, N.Y.

Franklin Roosevelt went so far toward making the Democratic Party the party of labor that Labor Day never again can be merely the occasion for hypocritical holiday speeches it once was for Democratic politicians. The six speeches Truman delivered to the 750,000 Michiganders he addressed in the course of this Labor Day all showed that he understands the probably decisive role labor will play in his own political future. The President told labor what would happen to it if the Republicans got in. In that case, he warned, "the boom is on for the Republican reactionaries and the bust is on for you. . . . You men of labor can expect to be hit by a steady barrage of body blows. . . . The position of labor will be so greatly weakened that I would fear, not only for the wages and living standards of the American workingman, but even for our democratic institutions of free labor and free enterprise."

Also clearly in Truman's mind was what certainly will happen to him if he is deserted by labor. "You must register, you must vote if you expect to get a square deal in this great nation," the President told his Detroit labor audiences. It is equally true that if labor does not do these things Harry Truman will not be in on the deal at all after this election. Democratic campaign managers figure that Truman has no chance to win unless a record number of voters, up to 60 million or more, go to the polls November 2. There is no chance that this will happen unless the CIO-PAC and the AFL's newborn League for Political Education ring a record number of doorbells and recruit a record number of block workers and poll watchers.

Even then, the going will be tough for Truman in many parts of the labor movement. Henry Wallace can upset the apple cart in key states where the labor vote is the marginal factor. In Michigan itself, for instance, Roosevelt won in 1944 by only 22,000 votes. Henry Wallace, whose party has already qualified for a position on the Michigan ballot this year, may, according to the experts, attract some 25,000 to 100,000 votes.

One usually accurate and objective reporter who accompanied the President on his swing into Michigan wrote that the crowds which greeted him were "friendly and curious, but not demonstrative." It will be the job of those sections of organized labor which have endorsed Truman's candidacy to turn this friendly curiosity into the kind of enthusiasm that will move the voters to the ballot boxes. Candidate Dewey, meanwhile, has shrewdly decided to let Truman and Wallace fight it out for the CIO while he directs his pitch to the more conservative AFL.

Alabama Only State To Bar Truman Vote

[illegible]

[illegible]

Question Is Unsettled In Louisiana, Georgia; Write-In Impractical

BY REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Alabama, which has supported every Democratic candidate since 1872, may be the only state this year where the voters can't mark their ballots for President Truman.

The question hasn't been settled yet in Louisiana and Georgia, but every other Southern State has a place on the November ticket for Truman or electors pledged to him.

Even in Mississippi, where the States' Rights Democratic Party was born out of resentment toward the President's racial policies, the voters can vote for him if they like. The regular Democratic Party candidates are committed to the Thurmond-Wright slate, but a separate slate of Truman electors will be on the election list too.

[illegible]

The president's name was dropped from the ballot in Louisiana, too, and Govs. J. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, were designated as the official candidates for President and vice president.

"Democrat" Out

Gov. E. K. Long called the Legislature into special session, however, to get Truman back in the running. A bill passed by the House and now pending in the Senate would let the President's supporters put him on the ballot as long as they do not call him a Democrat.

Georgia's Gov. M. E. Thompson also has called a special session to straighten out the election tangle in that state. The legislators will meet Monday. Meanwhile, the State Democratic Committee is scheduled to convene Wednesday to name the Democratic electors. Whether they will be committed to any candidate remains to be seen.

Both Truman Democrats and the States' Righters are expected to be on the ballot in Tennessee, but neither has been officially certified. Three of the 12 regular party electors have promised to support the Thurmond-Wright ticket and the State Democratic Committee has taken steps to replace them. But nothing final has developed.

More Clear-Cut

Elsewhere in the South, the issue is more clear-cut.

The States' Rights Democrats have been ruled out in Oklahoma in favor of Truman backers. The attorney general's office, which decided the question, has suggested the Thurmond-Wright followers take the matter into court, but nothing like that has happened yet.

Pro-Truman and anti-Truman Democrats will share the ballot in seven states—Mississippi, Arkansas, North Carolina, Florida, Kentucky, Virginia and Texas.

South Carolina has no state ballot, each political party distributing its own. The regular Democratic ticket is supporting Thurmond and Wright, but a pro-Truman faction says it will pass out ballots too.

Alabama's Democratic electors said even before Truman was nominated that they wouldn't vote for him or any candidate who ran on the explosive civil rights platform.

Mind Changes

Truman followers, led by State Sen. Joseph N. Langan, of Mobile, tried at first to get a separate slate of electors on the ballot, but changed their mind.

Instead, Langan has said he will seek a federal court order to make the regular 11 Democratic electors support the national party nominee. That won't come, however, until after the Nov. 2 election.

The Legislature of 1945 passed a bill to require electors to vote for the national party candidate, but the State Supreme Court said in an advisory opinion that the law is unconstitutional. Electors, the court said, are free agents with the right to vote as they please.

Of course, there is the write-in vote, but it's too impractical to rate consideration. The President's name won't be on the ballot; only those of the 11 electors.

Without an organized slate—and none has been presented—no write-in candidates for elector could be expected to get enough votes to matter.

Truman Pins His

The Constitution

WASHINGTON—President Truman in formal four broad issues, if they may be called that, on House term. In the order of their importance the,

(1) The high cost of living and inflation.

(2) The record of the Eightieth Congress, which he has described as the second worst in history.

Mon 9-13-48

(3) The general prosperity of the country and the necessity for adopting sound legislative measures to prevent us from going to a boom-and-bust end.

(4) The Taf-Hartley Labor Act, which has aroused the bitter opposition of organized labor throughout the country.

There will be other issues the President will discuss in the campaign, to be sure. At different places he is expected to dwell on his controversial civil rights program which has alienated a considerable support from normal Democratic strongholds of the South. For the most part, however, he is expected to soft-pedal this question.

But the main topics to be emphasized by Mr. Truman are those enumerated above. They constituted the main body of the series of speeches he made on his Labor Day jaunt to Detroit, where he launched his campaign before a flattering crowd variously estimated at between 125,000 and 175,000 people.

Atlanta Ga.

He will seek to hang the blame for the high cost of living on the Republicans, believing it to be his best issue of the campaign. In doing so he will bolster his charge about the present Congress being the second worst in history by citing its failure, among other things, to adopt constructive measures for bringing prices under control.

This is an issue which reaches to the fireside of every home in America and if the President can succeed in getting the country aroused his chances of winning will be greatly increased.

In the same connection Mr. Truman may be expected to drive home the theme of the great prosperity that now exists throughout the land and the need for preserving it by holding inflation down. It is axiomatic of national elections that the sitting administration always benefits by prosperous times. When the people are content with their jobs and incomes they usually do not vote out the party in power. Hence the emphasis that the President is expected to put on the national prosperity.

As for the Taft-Hartley Law, the President will continue to raise that as a live question as a means of holding his labor support in line.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican candidate, has not yet opened his campaign, but his answer to the Truman tack was given in the speech made at Detroit the other night by former Gov. Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota, who was personally selected by Dewey to reply to the President's Labor Day remarks. Reduced to its essence, it was that Mr. Truman is incapable of providing the leadership necessary to steer the nation through the trying times ahead.

Mon 9-13-48

That promises to be the Dewey answer to the Truman charge about the incompetence of Congress. But the New York Governor cannot rely on others to sell this theme for him. He will have to get out and do some speaking on his own. This was made evident in the sparse audience commanded by Gov. Stassen at Detroit, where only a few thousand turned out to hear him and with many vacant seats in the hall, contrasted with the massed outpouring for the President.

Whatever may be his chances of election, the President is known to have returned from his opening campaign trip highly pleased with the reception he got. There is no question but what he plans to make a real fighting campaign for a second term.

Between now and November the country may be expected to hear much of the issues raised by the President at Detroit and other Michigan cities. He intends to drive them home with a repetition that will put the Republicans to some pains to explain why more was not done to relieve the high price situation.

As things now stand, the President may be said to have started out by putting the Republicans on the defensive. It remains to be seen whether he can keep it that way.

Big Cities Join Opposition Against Truman

The News Birmingham, Ala. Wed.

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, March 24—(AP)—Reports of new big-city opposition and a "serious political situation" in California multiplied signs today that President Truman may face a tough fight for the Democratic presidential nomination. 3-24-48

Chicago politicians visiting Washington were said to have brought word that they fear it will not be long before the rash of criticism for Mr. Truman's policies breaks out in their ranks.

34a(1)

Unlike the Dixie complaint against the president's civil rights program, Northern opposition is based on the administration's about-face on Palestine.

In New York three Brooklyn district leaders announced they won't support the president for the nomination. One of these, James M. Power, said two party clubs in the 13th Assembly District will announce their support of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

AT LOS ANGELES, Democratic State Chairman James Roosevelt summoned 62 prospective national convention delegates to an "urgent meeting" in Sacramento next Thursday "because of the serious political situation." The News

There have been demands within the party in California for the expulsion of county central committee members who have announced their support of Henry A. Wallace's third party candidacy 3-24-48

All of this is serious business for Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath and his aids who are committed to getting the nomination for Mr. Truman. Birmingham, Ala.

McGrath was silent. But there seemed little doubt that if the revolt spreads the president may be caught in a party cross-fire.

Southern Democrats who advocate discarding Mr. Truman hope the president will become convinced before the July convention that he can't win in November.

THE SAY THEY THINK he can be appealed to then not to insist on heading a ticket that might take local candidates down to defeat.

A near-convert to the Dixie cause was Sen. Pepper (D., Fla.). Pepper stuck with Mr. Truman two months ago when Wallace went cantering out of the party. The News

But now Pepper says he has different ideas. Birmingham, Ala.

He wants the Democratic Party to wait until the July convention before it actually makes up its mind about a nominee. He said the states ought to choose uninstructed delegations. 3-24-48

Without opposing or supporting Mr. Truman, Pepper said other things than the civil rights program must be considered.

"We are faced with a grave international crisis," he said. "War could come almost any day. It is sounder politics to select a Democratic nominee in July than in March."

PEPPER SAID he wants the Democrats—Southerners included—to stick by the nominee chosen by the convention. Wed

Most of his Dixie colleagues, however, remained firm in their intention to bolt if Mr. Truman is picked to head the ticket. 3-24-48

Four of them spoke out in an all-South radio program last night in opposition to the President's proposals that Congress enact anti-poll tax, anti-lynching, anti-job discrimination and anti-Jim Crow laws.

Sen. Maybank (D., S. C.) criticized the "meddlers" who he said want to interfere with states' rights and abolish the poll tax.

Sen. Hoey (D., N. C.) said no mob is going to be dispersed by an anti-lynching law.

Sen. Hill (D., Ala.) said a bill to set up a Fair Employment Practice Commission offers "an invitation to sabotage" because firms making secret military equipment would lose control of their hiring and firing.

And Sen. Russell (D., Ga.) said the report of the president's Civil Rights Commission, if written into law, would wipe out individual rights "long considered sacred." The News

THIS DRUBBING of the Truman domestic program was matched by Sen. Taylor of Idaho, Wallace's third party running mate, in criticims of the president's foreign policies. Birmingham, Ala.

Taylor told an audience in New York last night, gathered to welcome Russia's new ambassador to the United States, Alexander S. Panyushkin: Wed 3-24-48

"We see many things transpiring which could well lead us to doubt the sincere desire for peace on the part of some of our leaders who have come to power by accident of fate." The News

Taylor praised Wallace as the "greatest" of American democratic leaders.

Sen. Bridges (R., N. H.) served notice that the State Department's short wave "Voice of America" had better not air Wallace's views to the world. Wed 3-24-48

"I'm not going to vote money here to publicize Henry Wallace and his efforts to deprecate American foreign policy," Bridges told Secretary of State Marshall at a Senate appropriations committee hearing. Birmingham, Ala.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur wrote a Wisconsin supporter of his candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination that he has been marked down as the American Communist Party's "primary target." It was this fact, the general added, which prompted his decision to enter the race openly.

Truman 'Thrown Away Chances,' Sen. McClellan Says: Favors Byrd

34a(1)

Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24—(AP)—Sen. McClellan, Arkansas Democrat, said Tuesday President Truman "has thrown away his chances" of being re-elected.

"I don't think that President Truman can win in November—not even with Southern support," he told reporters.

He said he personally favors Sen. Byrd, Democrat, Virginia, for President—"He's my choice at the moment. He's my choice for the Democratic nomination." Wed 2-25-48

McClellan's remarks came at the conclusion of a meeting of Southern Senators with a Southern Governors' Committee which Monday was rebuffed in efforts to have Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath use his influence to have President Truman withdraw his Civil Rights program from Congress. Wed. 2-25-48

McClellan said after the meeting in his office Tuesday that the group came to no final decision about what action to take, but that "plenty will be done."

He and Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, a member of the Governors' Committee, said "each State will do whatever is necessary to protect themselves" in the present situation.

Earlier, Laney described as "evasive" McGrath's responses to the Southern Governors' protests against Mr. Truman's Civil Rights program.

"But they were about what we expected," he told a reporter.

Laney said McGrath's answers to various other questions the Governors asked were "evasive and unsatisfactory."

"There was a slight appeal made to us for party unity, but it involved swallowing what already has been done and said."

Laney said the Governors now will proceed "with our work." The next step, he said, is for the Committee to report to the Southern Governors' Conference at a meeting yet to be called.

McClellan said the group of seven Senators and two Governors discussed "the advisability of a different nominee for president than Mr. Truman" but "only in a general way."

"No names were mentioned and I don't want to speak for any of the others." But, he said, he personally favors Byrd.

At Tuesday's meeting were Sens. Hill and Sparkman, Alabama; Byrd, Virginia; Overton, Louisiana; McClellan, Johnston, South Carolina, and Stennis, Mississippi; and Govs. Laney and Thurmond, of South Carolina.

Sen. Maybank, of South Carolina, declared in Columbia he believes it would be a mistake for the South to bolt the Democratic Party at this time but that "we must" select "independent democratic electors."

Meanwhile, formation of a new party by Democrats dissatisfied with policies of their present leaders was mentioned as a possibility by Arkansas' Democratic National Committeeman.

The Committeeman, Dr. R. B. Robins, of Camden, proposed organization of "the Conservative Democrats of America" if the Democratic Party nominates President Truman as its 1948 candidate and refuses to withdraw the civil liberties plank from its platform.

Calling for a slate of Georgia delegates to the Democratic National Convention pledged to Sen. George, Rep. Wood, of Canton, said in Washington he believed Georgia's senior Senator could solidify the Southern States. Wed 2-25-48

Pointing to the failure of the Southern Governors to gain any concessions on the Civil Rights issue at the conference with McGrath, Wood declared the South, if it failed to block Civil Rights legislation in Congress, must be prepared to fight out the issue on the floor of the Convention.

Mississippi's Democratic Executive Committee has been called into special session for next Monday to map plans to defeat the Civil Rights program. 2-25-48

Judge Herbert Holmes, of Senatobia, Miss., Chairman of the Committee, called the meeting after a morning conference with Gov. Fielding L. Wright and other State party leaders Tuesday.

Virginia Advances 'Anti-Truman Bill'; Senate Tones Down Governor's Measure

34a(1) Wed. 3-13-48

The Times New York, N. Y.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RICHMOND, Va., March 12—The State Senate of Virginia late today approved a watered-down version of Governor Tuck's original "anti-Truman bill," and sent it back to the House of Delegates (the Lower House) for final concurrence in minor amendments.

The Senate's action ended, for the time being, a controversy which has kept voters of the state aroused since Governor Tuck two weeks ago called for a bill which would have made it virtually impossible for the names of President Truman or Henry A. Wallace to be put on Virginia's ballot for 1948.

The far different version approved today by the Senate retains the one key point on which Governor Tuck insisted—that a State Democratic Convention possess veto power over the ticket of the national convention. In the wordin gof the amended measure, the National Democratic Party has the guarantee of a place on the ballot; but its candidates—assuming that Mr. Truman is the Presidential nominee—cannot run under a party label identical with that selected by a State Democratic Convention.

Thus, should Mr. Truman be nominated in Virginia, a slate of electors in his behalf will appear on the Virginia ballot. Those electors, however, will appear below a slate of electors named by a State Democratic Convention in behalf of another ticket. Virginia's Democrats, thereby will be able to take their choice. Most observers believe the Presidential nominee of a State Convention would be the Senior United States Senator, Harry F. Byrd.

Senator Byrd's son, who is a member of the state's Upper House, spoke in support of the measure today. It is designed "to protect the integrity of the Democratic party," he declared, in praising Governor Tuck for being sponsor of a measure which shows that "we will not sit idly by and see the Democratic party ravished by those who would destroy it from without." 3-13-48

Ex-Gov. Rivers Opposes South's Critical Attitude

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Wed 3-3-48

Ex-Gov. E. D. Rivers is quoted in the Athens Banner-Herald as opposing the South's critical attitude towards the National Democraic Party and President Harry S. Truman.

In the February 18, 1948 issue of the Banner-Herald, Rivers accused certain forces here in the South "of trying to scuttle the Democratic Party, from within."

Assailing Roy V. Harris, publisher of the Augusta Courier, Rive was quoted as saying: Wed.

"If Georgia and the South do follow such people as Harris, the 1948 Democratic National Convention will be the beginning of the end for the Democratic Party as an instrument of government in the United States. For generations to come the South's influences over federal legislation will be worthless.

"GOOD ENOUGH 3-5-48

"President Roosevelt picked Truman as his running mate, knowing that if he dropped the reins Truman would pick them up and carry on nationally and internationally. If Truman was good enough for Roosevelt he is good enough for me and he is good enough for the South." Daily World

"The Democratic Party has always championed civil rights. No later than the last National Democratic National Convention adopted a platform calling for the protection of civil rights. President Truman was carrying out the Party Platform when he asked Congress to translate in to law the civil rights policies of the Democratic Party. Harris was a delegate to the last Democratic Convention. And he voted for the Party's platform."

REVOLT AGAINST TRUMAN ALTERS POLITICAL SCENE

At This Stage of Campaign Both Old Parties Seem to Be Moving Toward Strenuous Convention Fights

GOP TALKS MORE OF MARTIN

By ARTHUR KROCK

WASHINGTON, March 27—Not since 1912, when insurgent Republicans sought to deny renomination to President Taft, until this month of 1948 has a widespread movement appeared in either major party to force an incumbent of the White House to retire at the end of his term. The current attempt is being made by Democrats in all sections of the country against the nomination of President Truman to succeed himself. Its probable effects on the choices of both the Democrats and the Republicans in their forthcoming national conventions are now the topics of all political discussion. Sun. 3-28-48

The uppermost questions are these: Will the Democrats select another candidate for President, with or without Mr. Truman's cooperation, and, if so, who will he be? Whether or not the Democrats do this, how will their obvious plight influence the Republican choice?

No confident answer is offered by prudent observers at this stage, and the reasons are plain. First, the rush of world events may call for national decisions so grave that the President by July may find himself at the head of a unifying party, with all the issues now splitting the Democrats submerged by much larger and more perilous concerns. Second, a President, if he stands by his expressed determination to be nominated, generally can dispose of any rivals in a convention. Third, the only Democrats who could possibly unite the party after the rejection of the President are personally beholden to him and conceivably would not abet an effort to retire him. Fourth, the uncertainty of world events may prompt the Republican politicians not to take a chance on a machine-made candidate whose vulnerability in ordinary circumstances would invite defeat.

Changes Time May Bring

The Times

But these are the reasonings of March, 1948, and by June they may appear as unsound as an opinion that prevailed among competent political authorities in February. This opinion was that Mr. Truman would be overwhelmingly nominated, though not with enthusiasm. When the President this week told a press conference that he expected the Democrats to win in November, intended to be their nominee and would give all the dissidents every chance to return to the party standard by November, he was patently counting on the rapidly changing aspects of the times. His hearers gathered that the party amnesty includes the Southern Democrats, the big-city bosses, who are openly suggesting another candidate, and Henry A. Wallace as well. But events which could send this assortment to the mourners' bench would be extraordinary events indeed. New York, N.Y.

To a degree that might happen. But the current portents are all the other way. And there are basic differences between the situation in the Democratic party today and that of the Republican party in 1912. Sun. 3-28-48

The Contrast With 1912

Then President Taft, whose renomination was imposed by the party bosses and the Federal officeholders on a rebellious convention, had been elected in his own right, while Mr. Truman is President by succession. Then also a third-party threat under Theodore Roosevelt did not materialize until Mr. Taft was renominated, while Mr. Wallace — though nothing about him, including his following, is comparable to T. R.'s 1912 equipment—has already formed an independent group. Furthermore, the Republican opposition to Mr. Taft's renomination came largely from the West, and Mr. Truman's party opponents have appeared in every section of the country. Finally, despite the Republican split, the Democrats nominated an outstanding citizen against the preferences of their state and big-city party machines, Woodrow Wilson. 3-28-48

But there is a difference between the present and 1912 which, as noted above, possibly could change some of Mr. Truman's political debits to credits by July and enrich them by November, as he appears to believe. This is the world situation. Though World War I began in Europe two years later, the voters of the United States in 1912 had their backs turned to its prologue.

Weighing of Possibilities

Nevertheless, present indications are that Mr. Truman cannot succeed himself, whether or not he compels his nomination by remaining in the field and declining to give way to any other Democrat. If this condition becomes fixed, the President may resolve the party crisis by withdrawing in favor of someone on whom the party can reasonably well unite. Because the Southern and non-Southern opponents of Mr. Truman's nomination are deeply divided on other basic issues, such Democrats are difficult to discover. The one most mentioned is the Chief Justice of the United States, Fred M. Vinson, whom the President appointed to this and other high offices. But there is no evidence he would leave the bench, even at Mr. Truman's request, or that the President would ask him to. 3-28-48

The calls on the President to retire, and the diversity of their sources, have encouraged some Democrats to hope that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower will agree to salvage the party. A campaign to this purpose is in full career, and citizens as dissimilar as Jacob M. Arvey, the boss of Illinois, and Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. are engaged in it. Those who know the general well, and all who take his recent statement at its face value, are certain he will never consent to be the beneficiary of such an effort. But the politicians who are making it are desperate, and even Gen. George C. Marshall, the Secretary of State, may be urged by them to reconsider his stern and high-minded rejection of political office.

The Times

This plight of the Democrats is, of course, beginning to have an effect on certain professionals among the Republicans. They are sure of victory in November, whatever the international situation may become, partly because their leaders in Congress are now full partners in a forceful foreign and military policy and have anticipated the President in some of its aspects. Why not, they ask themselves, nominate a candidate of the organization type and take no chances on "idealists," "boy scouts," "rugged individualists" and "world unionists"—by which terms all of them identify Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and Harold E. Stassen and some add Senator Robert A. Taft. And those who include Mr. Taft among the candidates they would prefer not to nominate, and believe could win with in the circumstances, almost invariably turn their thoughts to Speaker Joseph W. Martin Jr.

3-28-48

Whether the present prospect continues or changes one thing is sure: the two national conventions at Philadelphia will be hard-fought. And among things possible is a walk-out of Democratic delegates before the nomination, if the President is the choice of the majority. New York, N.Y.

States' Rights Leaders Say They Won't Mind Pro-Truman Electors On Ticket In November

BY FRED TAYLOR

By all means there should be a slate of pro-Truman electors on the Nov. 2 general election ballot in Alabama.

State Democratic Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey has assured his fellow townsman, Mobile State Sen. Joe Langan, that neither he nor any of the other anti-Truman electors nominated in the May 4 Democratic primary would "throw any stumbling blocks" in the way of placing names of Truman elector candidates on the ballot.

34a(1)

The state chairman wrote Langan further that they would not contest any court proceedings which might be necessary to get the pro-Truman elector names printed on the ballot, but "all our elector nominees would welcome a slate of Truman electors . . ."

SHOULD GO FRUTHER—It seems to me that McCorvey, whom I always have found to be sincere and fair-minded, should go further than that.

As chairman of the Alabama Democratic Execu Committee, and as one of the big wheels in the Thurmond-Wright States' Rights movement, it would be the magnanimous thing for McCorvey to help Sen. Langan and his cohorts get names of pro-Truman elector aspirants on the ballot.

He should insist that such names be placed on the ballot forms, even though there legally may be technical obstacles in the way. Then the issue among Alabama Democrats would be sharply drawn between the Thurmond-Wright and Truman - Barkley presidential tickets.

Aug 1-19-48

TEST SENTIMENT — The party's state chairman, in his letter to Langan, said "the question of whether or not the Democrats of Alabama wished to support President Truman for another term was settled in our primary elections and showed a complete rejection of President Truman and his diabolical racial program . . ."

He went on to add that "we hope very much that you will succeed in your effort (to get pro-Truman elector candidates' names printed on the ballot) as we would like for you to realize when the votes are cast, as you evidently do not now realize, just what little standing President Truman has among Alabama Democrats."

From McCorvey's viewpoint, this should be all the more reason why he would want a test of voter sentiment in the presidential election. This should make him want to urge Secretary of State Sybil Pool, if she has the legal leeway, to print the pro-Truman names on the voting ticket.

LANGAN ARGUES CAN DO—Sen. Langan is hopeful the secretary of state will certify names of pro-Truman elector candidates for inclusion on the ballot. He contends she has the legal right to do this, if the names are submitted to her on or before Sept. 1.

If she refuses, then he has alternative legal plans to file either mandamus or injunction proceedings to accomplish his aims.

Langan and his followers, who say they want to "restore Alabama to the Democratic Party," will meet in Birmingham Aug. 28 to nominate 11 elector candidates. They will submit their names to Miss Pool promptly thereafter.

Langan says he is not worried over the warning given him by Chairman McCorvey that the senator would be written out of the Democratic Party of Alabama, if he continues to promote a slate of pro-Truman electors.

BLANTON FOR GOVERNOR?—One of the most popular probate judges in the state is Dallas County's Claiborne Blanton. He long has been a wheelhorse in the potent state organization of county officials.

This is not the first time he has been mentioned for governor, but a number of the county officials who yesterday closed their convention in Birmingham, were strongly booming him as a candidate for the state's No. 1 offic in 1950.

Some think he might be persuaded to jump into the race for the big office on Goat Hill, which a dozen or more prospective candidates already are eyeing avidly.

4th Labor-Liberal Group Swings To Truman as 5th Readies Pledge

The Constitution

34a(1)

By D. HAROLD OLIVER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1—(AP)—President Truman won the indorsement for election of his fourth labor-liberal group today—the CIO Political Action Committee.

A fifth—the Liberal Party of New York—arranged to hook its wagon to the Truman star at a night meeting in New York City.

Except for the American Labor Party in New York, which is supporting Henry A. Wallace's Progressive Party candidacy, and some other former New Deal elements backing the former Vice President, the Truman-Barkley ticket now has won the official support of majority strength in liberal groups which used to rally to the Roosevelt banner.

They include the CIO - PAC, whose unanimous support was pledged Mr. Truman during a White House call today; the CIO Executive Board, by a vote of 35 to 12, and a private committee of most AFL union heads, as well as the Americans for Democratic Action, organized in 1947.

The anticipated backing by New York's Liberal Party was regarded by Democratic Party leaders as a probable big offset of ALP defections to the Wallace column. The late President Roosevelt carried New York State by only 316,591 in 1944. The ALP and Liberal Parties each more than made up his margin. The former cast 496,405 votes and the latter 329,235 for Roosevelt.

A forerunner of what Mr. Truman may elaborate upon in his opening campaign speech next Monday in Detroit was seen in a Labor Day statement made public by the White House.

In it the President again called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, curbing inflation to give workers more for their money, raising the minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents an hour, providing Social Security and health insurance to additional workers, and an enlarged Department of Labor with "adequate" staff and funds.

On the Republican side, Harold E. Stassen went to Albany to confer with Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican Presidential nominee, regarding Stassen's speech in Detroit next Tuesday. It is intended as a reply to the President's Labor Day address.

The first campaign swing for Gov. Earl Warren, of California, Dewey's running mate, was announced here. Warren will leave Sept. 15 on a 10-day trip through 12 Western and "border" States. He will make major speeches at Salt Lake City, Utah, Pueblo, Col., Albuquerque, N. M., Tulsa, Okla., St. Louis, Louisville, Columbus, Ohio, and Detroit.

The CIO-PAC pledge was carried to the White House by Philip Murray, CIO President; Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC Director, and others. They gave Mr. Truman a copy of the CIO resolution adopted yesterday.

Sen. Barkley, of Kentucky, Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, was another White House caller. Barkley leaves tomorrow for the Inter-Parliamentary Union meeting at Rome, Sept. 6-12. He said he would return about Sept. 15 for four or five speeches the last half of the month and a strenuous campaign in October that would take him to every section of the country.

Students Urge Placing Truman On Ballot

34a(1)

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 10.—(AP)—A University of Mississippi student said Tuesday he is beginning efforts to get the Truman-Barkley ticket on the Mississippi ballot.

Thomas J. Griffith Jr., of Aberdeen, a law student, said at the university that he and two other students are urging in a letter to the national Democratic chairman that steps be taken to place elector candidates on the ballot pledged to the national party candidates.

The slate of electors of the State Democratic Party is pledged to the candidates of the States' Rights Democrats.

Griffith said that neither he nor the other two students are seeking to be named as candidates for Truman-Barkley electors. They would prefer, he said, to see business men and other leaders in the seven congressional districts listed as candidates.

Griffith's group, he continued wants to see the Democrats of Mississippi have the opportunity to choose at the Nov. 2 polls between the States' Rights Democrats ticket and the National Democratic Party ticket.

Monday the attorney general's office, replying to a letter from Griffith, ruled that Truman electors may get their names on the ballot by filing with the secretary of state.

HE COMES OUT FIGHTING

The Defender

In true championship style, Mr. Truman opens up the first rounds of the heavyweight battle for the Presidency with a slashing attack upon his opponent. He feints with his left at the record of re-action and in-action of the do-nothing 80th Congress, and follows with a body blow to the hopes of the Republican contender with a right handed hay-maker, branding and documenting the Republican platform for 1948 as "the most hypocritical document in history."

Sat 10-2-48

That his style of fighting, carrying the battle to the enemy in down-to-earth plain talk naming names and citing examples, is popular with the voting fans is attested by the crowds which turn out to hear him and cheer him along the campaign route. When he opened up with his Sunday punch in staid and traditionally Republican Iowa, 110,000 farmers and small town folks turned out, a record attendance for ANY political meeting is that state. He read them the record of prosperity of farm folks under the federal programs of 16 years of Democratic administration, and they loved it.

In Denver 65,000 people turned out to hear him lay down the gage of battle on reclamation public power and the development of other national resources, so dear to the heart of the west, to be picked up by Governor Dewey when he follows him within a few days. He challenges the governor to "explain away" the sabotage of such programs by the Republicans in the recent sessions of congress.

All along the way crowds have met him at every "whistle stop" as Senator Taft contemptously described the small towns of the middlewest. They listen thoughtfully to the plain commonsense that Mr. Truman talks. His simplicity, his corrage and determination to carry the issues directly to the people have won him enthusiastic response. His tour has given the people a chance to see him as he is, in contrast to the caricatures which 70 per cent of the press has attempted to foist on its readers. At Salt Lake City the crowd in the huge Mormon tabernacle heard him lay it on the line," putting it squarely up to the people themselves as to what kind of government they want in Washington during the next four critical years.

Sat 10-2-48

In all his talks Mr. Truman has made it clear where he stands and has stood in government as a Senator, Vice President—always on the side of the plain and ordinary [illegible] of the country. He calls the roll on the programs and proposals he has made for meeting the critical problems of the nation, both domestic and in the field of foreign affairs, only to have them sabotaged by a reactionary congress and sniped at by GOP big-wigs hungry for office.

"You don't have to translate any double talk," he told his Utah audience, "to know where I have stood and where I stand today." He challenged his opponent to "come out in the open and tell where he stands." The nation will be listening to hear what Governor Dewey has to say.

TRUMAN PUTS GOP IN HOLE

The Afro American

34(a)(1)

The Republican Party, which pretty nearly won the Presidency four years ago with a slogan, "Had Enough?" now comes back with another, "Vote Republican in 1948; Save What Is Left."

The GOP didn't win in '44 and it may not in '48.

Last week President Truman came out with an exceedingly liberal program asking for equal educational opportunities for everybody, a Federal Fair Employment Practice Act and a vote for every citizen, white or colored, North or South.

Sat 1-17-48

He asked for Federal aid to schools in the States which are poor, compulsory military training, social security for servants and farmers and an increase in the minimum wage.

Republicans immediately damned the President's program as "political," "designed take the country into bankruptcy," "appeasement for Henry Wallace," and a "design to socialize the U.S."

They boasted that the President's message was received coldly.

Baltimore Md.

Most of the applause in Congress comes from the emotional Southerners. We don't expect them to applaud even a Truman proposal to give colored people more civil rights.

The President's message has many excellent advantages. It could well be the platform on which he will campaign for re-election.

Certainly it appeals to a large number of the common people.

Even if the Republicans came forward with a program as excellent as that of Mr. Truman, it would still be poor campaign material for them.

The reason is that they are in control of Congress. They have a majority of the votes. They can enact an anti-lynching bill, an anti-poll tax bill and a fair employment measure now.

If they didn't do it in 1946 and 1947 when they had the votes, how can they make us believe they will do any better this year?

Sat. 1-17-48

It looks to us like Mr. Truman has put the Republicans in a deep hole from which they will find it very hard to climb out by next November.

In Harlem, He Repeats Views That Caused Southerners to Revolt Last Winter

Sat 10-30-48

By ANTHONY H. LEVIERO

President Truman re-committed himself yesterday to the full measure of his ten-point civil rights program, pledging to work for it "with every ounce of strength and determination I have."

Thus the Chief Executive lifted the controversial issue that has split the Democratic party out of the limbo in which it has lain since the Democratic National Convention last July.

New York N.Y.

In words that appeared to foreclose any possibility of compromise between Mr. Truman and the States Rights Democrats Mr. Truman rededicated himself to the program in Harlem, the largest big-city Negro community in the world.

Immediate and far-reaching repercussions were expected from the South. The President and his advisers apparently had weighed whatever risks were involved in his declaration.

Tte speech, however, fitted in with the major objective of the final phase of Mr. Truman's campaign to rally all minority groups to the Truman banner.

The President recalled the "momentous report" of his President's Committee on Civil Rights in his prepared text, and explained that, "I asked Congress to do ten of the things recommended by the committee."

Sat 10-30-48

Mr. Truman did not enumerate the ten points. As given in his special message to Congress on civil rights last Feb. 2—the message that started the Southern revolt—these objectives were:

"1—Establishing a permanent Commission on Civil Rights, a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights and a Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice.

"2—Strengthening existing civil rights statutes.

"3—Providing Federal protection against lynching.

"4—Protecting more adequately the right to vote.

"5—Establishing a Fair Employment Practice Commission to prevent unfair discrimination in employment.

Sat 10-30-48

"6—Prohibiting discrimination in interstate transportation facilities.

"7—Providing home rule and suffrage in Presidential elections for the residents of the District of Columbia.

"8—Provoding Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska and a greater measure of self-government for our island possessions.

"9—Equalizing the opportunities for residents of the United States to become naturalized citizens.

"10—Settling the evacuation claims of Japanese citizens."

When Congress did not act on his program, he went ahead and did what he could as Chief Executive, Mr. Truman said, by issuing two executive orders. One was designed to achieve "equality of treatment and opportunity in the armed forces," and the other strengthened the fair employment practices policy in the civil Federal establishment.

Way to Answer Challenge

"Today the democratic way of life is being challenged all over the world," Mr. Truman said. "Democracy's answer to the challenge of totalitarianism is its promise of equal rights and equal opportunity for all mankind.

"The fulfillment of this promise is among the highest purposes of government. Our determination to attain the goal of equal rights and equal opportunity must be resolute and unwavering.

"For my part, I intend to keep moving toward this goal with every ounce of strength and determination I have."

Mr. Truman made the speech, regarded by observers as one of the most critical to his political fortunes on domestic issues, before a crowd of 65,000, predominantly Negroes, in Dorrence Brooks Square, 135th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue. The rostrum faced St. Nicholas Terrace, where the pennacles of City College showed among the trees.

Before the President's arrival in mid-afternoon, adherents of Henry A. Wallace, the third-party leader, distributed handbills urging attendance at an anti-Jim Crow meeting tonight. But the signs in the crowd were all for Mr. Truman—"C. C. N. Y. Wants Truman," and "Truman for New Deal," and "Veterans Want Truman."

At the high point of the ceremony, Mr. Truman received the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial Brotherhood Medal from the Rev. Dr. C. Asapansa Johnson, president of the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance. Just then the C. C. N. Y. students chorused loudly, "Give them hell, Harry."

O'Dwyer Praises Firm Stand

Mayor O'Dwyer, who before the Democratic convention advocated the candidacy for Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, praised Mr. Truman for his display of courage at that convention for standing firm against Southern leaders when the alternative was a compromise on civil rights or their secession from the party.

Mr. O'Dwyer quoted Mr. Truman as uttering these words at that party crisis:

"Let them go. I'm not going to change my opinion."

In this address Mr. Truman used none of the witticisms and play on words that have marked his recent speeches. He sat with Mayor O'Dwyer behind red, white and blue bunting while waiting to speak, but a bright sun beating down made Mr. Truman visible from the press table through the cloth. He was serious in demeanor, his lips tight, as he listened to the preceding speakers.

Sat 10-30-48

He rose, however, with his ready smile. The decision to make this speech, it was learned, was not made until 8 o'clock yesterday morning in his suite in the Biltmore Hotel, after a special messenger had brought a draft from Washington.

Yet it was apparent that long and careful preparation was made for this occasion. For one thing, as Mr. Truman pointed out, this was the first anniversary of the report of his committee on civil rights. It was believed that the decision had to do not with the question as to whether the speech should be made but as to its form and the weight of its content.

Sat 10-30-48

Recently a close adviser said privately that Mr. Truman would not make a major civil rights speech in this campaign. The decision to do so apparently was made at the time it was agreed upon to appeal strongly to the minority issues.

Pro-Truman Ballot Bid

But this does not eliminate the pressing need to give all Alabamians—and other Southerners—an opportunity to vote for the candidate of their choice, be he Thurmond, Dewey, Truman, Wallace or Norman Thomas.

We become involved at each effort to penetrate the apparent confusion over party regularity with the question of loyalty to state, or to national party. That seems an issue not soon to be settled, and about which many have strong opinions.

Sen. Langan may be doing his effort no good in making bitter charges against a well-fortified States' Righters' position. Those most concerned lest some Alabamians be deprived of the right of a free and full choice of candidates in November want only a conscientious and persistent effort to insure pro-Truman electors being candidates in the November balloting. That is a fundamental requirement, in our opinion. Even a manifest minority should have the privilege of expression. It is not clear that a primary held seven months before the general election is adequate opportunity for expression of final choice. Many events might influence voters' opinions in that lengthy interim.

The struggle of Sen. Langan and others still seems involved. It may be extremely difficult for this group to get a pro-Truman slate on the ballot. In the light of the declaration of the State Democratic chairman and other electors, it would seem, however, that some way yet may be found to give pro-Truman Democrats of Alabama an opportunity to vote for the man of their choice in the general election.

Of men who make up the directing corps of the States' Rights Democratic movement, certainly none is more to be admired for his Democratic devotion, according to his own convictions, than Gessner T. McCorvey, state Democratic chairman. The fine hand of Mr. McCorvey is visible in the formal announcement by all 11 electors that they will do nothing to oppose efforts of pro-Truman Democrats of Alabama to get a separate slate of electors on the ballot for November.

Mr. McCorvey and the other electors are not just being generous, though we assume a general inclination to be so. They believe they are the recipients of overwhelming support in Alabama. In supreme confidence, the electors declared in a letter to State Sen. Joe Langan, who has spearheaded the pro-Truman effort: "We hope very much that you will succeed . . . as you evidently do not now realize just what little standing President Truman has among Alabama Democrats." They seem to think they are offering the senator a very long piece of rope.

Mr. McCorvey only last week, however, had a somewhat different comment to offer. At that time he strongly implied a warning that Sen. Langan might find himself partyless—as far as the State Democratic Executive Committee was concerned—if he persisted in openly seeking to place Truman electors on the ballot.

Mr. Langan has persisted. But the meeting in Montgomery Monday was unimpressive. There is little doubt now that a majority of Alabama voters are probably sympathetic to Mr. McCorvey's view, and that they will support the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

Unsegregated Thousands Greet President Truman

The Dallas Express

Sat 10-2-48

Dallas Texas

DALLAS — A mixed crowd of 12,000 with near 4,000 Negroes intermangled throughout the throne, greeted President Truman at Rebel Stadium in Dallas Monday and heard the president declare his favor of measure for the benefit of the common man.

President Truman said in his speech he "wants low cost housing," "Federal aid to education," "price control.'

Declaring that the Republican party [illegible] where it benefited the common man, the President lambasted what he calls the "do nothing, good for nothing 80 th Congress." He asked to be voted back into the presidency with a Democratic Congress that would work with him for the common man because republicans would work only for special interests dominated by a big business.

NEGROES IN WELCOMING PARTY

In the welcoming party ,headed by Harry L. Seay, a State Democratic leader. were several representative Negro citizens with Dr. Ward scheduled as spokesman and assigned by officials to shake hands with the President. In the welcome party were Dr. E. E. Ward, R. A. Hester, A. C. Partee, Mrs. M. S. Flanagan, W. J. Durham, N. C. Chalmers, Mrs. O. J Cansler, Dr B. E. Howell, A. A. Braswell, Joe Fields, Sherman A Harmon and J. Clarence Davis.

FAVOR FREEDOM AND EQUALITY FOR ALL

The President didn't mention his Civil Rights program in the 20-minute address. The nearest approach to saying anything came admist speeches by Texas Democratic leaders who spoke prior to the president. All the speakers and other platform guests were pro-Trumanites who had thrown out the Dixiecrats and gained control of the Democratic party at the State convention.

Among the Texas democratic leaders who made utterance for equality were: Congressman J. M. Combs, from Beaumont, who declared that "Boys from Texas, South Carolina, Washington and Arizona shared the same fox holes, and sailed the same ships; they deserve equal treatments under the law."

Tom Tyson, who presided, was cheered roundly by both Negroes and whites when he spoke of advancing the program for economic equality.

Negroes sat in what are ordinarily reserve seats, box seats, and grand stand seats and a group of Negroes served in the welcoming party, which sat down near the speakers' platform. Anybody that was segregated, was not asked to be. Although there were officials helping people to find seats, both Negroes and whites were shown in the same direction to vacant seats. At entrances where there were no ushers, white citizens came in and took seats where they could find them or where they could best see the president and did not bother about whether they sat next to a Negro or not. Negroes did likewise.

Negores got not only their first chance to view the President of the United States, but saw for their first time many of the big guns in Texas politics, including Governor Buford H. Jester, Congressman Lyndon B. Johnson, democratic nominee for U.S. Senator; Tom Tyson, former chairman of Texas democratic executive committee; John C. Calhoun, new chairman; State Senator Fred Harris; District Judge Sarah Hughes; John H. Cullum, and others.

In the party also were the wives of the president and of the governor and Miss Margaret Truman, daughter of the president.

JOE LOUIS GETS PLUG

U. S. Attorney General Tom Clark, in introducing the President made a bobble in naming several Devastating Forces which the president had stopped with able, courageous, and strong action.

"I have seen the president's courage in stopping the Jap with the atomic bomb and saving American lives," Clark said.

"I have seen the president's stout courage stop Russia with the Turman Doctrine.'

"And I saw the courage of Harry Truman stop Joe Louis.

This drew laughter from the crowd, but the U. S. Attorney General did not recognize his mistake until he had sat down, but the President took care of it nicely. Mr. Truman said, "Tom, you gave me to much credit; it was not Joe I stopped, it was John L. Lewis. I don't have that much muscle."

President Visits South Street And People Love Him For It

Chicago Ill

PHILADELPHIA—"It's the first time any President of the United States ever came on South Street," they're saying in awed tones here this week.

And as a result of President Truman's trip down South street, plus his iron clad stand for civil rights, Negroes here will vote nearly all-out for the President, political dopesters say.

South street, like Chicago's South Parkway, New York's Lenox avenue, Memphis' Beale street and the other throughfares of Negro life throughout America, saw in the President's visit a silent reassurance of his determination to continue his fight for the rights of the "little people" all over America, regardless of race, creed, color or political consequence.

Sat 10-16-48

Truman's visit came as a surprise to the thousands of citizens who live on South street. The President's official party turned into the street shortly after leaving historic Independence Hall. He smiled a warm and friendly greeting to the crowds. Often he waved his hat at the sea of eager faces. But at the same time, the poverty, housing and health needs did not escape his attention.

Later he blamed the Republican 80th Congress for the large slum areas in the city. Addressing a huge throng in front of the Richard Allen Homes, a federally sponsored housing project occupied by Negroes, he said:

"I can't see for the life of me why the real estate lobbies resists building such projects as this." He discounted claims that federally sponsored projects were a drain on taxpayers' pocketbooks, saying they pay for themselves within a short time.

Typical of comment following his appearance was the statement of Ernest Logan, South street barber. Logan says he's been a Republican since 1940, but "I'm voting for President Truman this time. He's done alright under the circumstances. He had the whole 80th Congress against him."

CHEYENNE, Wyo.—(ANP)—A Southern newspaperman on the special Presidential train to the West Coast, severely reprimanded an MP on guard duty at the Governor's mansion when he insulted a Negro member of the Presidential group. 6-26-48

J. Lacey Reynolds, a native of Texas and representing the Nashville Tennessean, came to defense of Mrs. Alice Dunnigan when the military policeman insulted her. The guard, seeing her at the gate, ordered her to leave the group.

PUSHED BY MP

When she refused to obey, he snatched her away and pushed her toward the crowd of observers behind a rope. Sat.

At the moment Reynolds rushed to her aid and warned the MP that such tactics were unwise as he was interfering with the party of the President of the United States. He said:

"Mrs. Dunnigan is with us. She has a badge and she as it on."

The guard stepped back to his post position without saying a word. 6-26-48

Democratic Victory Viewed As Meaning Justice, Jobs For All

By Cong. WILLIAM L. DAWSON
(Assistant Chairman, Democratic National Committee)

President Harry S. Truman will et a larger Negro vote than any other candidate has ever polled. He will be the next President of the United States. In the next four years his administration will bring o every Negro man, woman and hild the full rights of American citizenship.

You know as well as I do that the GOP is using large sums of money to fool the Negro people in this campaign. We won't be fooled. It is the same party and the same candidate that we licked with our otes four years ago. Four years ago 80 percent of our press was claiming GOP victory, but 80 percent of the Negro voters backed up F. D. R. and Harry Truman.

Make no mistake, the fight to relect President Truman is your fight. I sat in the Republican 80th Congress. I saw the GOP leaders arrogantly turn thumbs down on anti-lynching bills: I saw them cold-shoulder housing bills which would have given tens of thousands of Negro mothers a decent home for their children. I saw them kill FEPC and anti-poll tax bills. I saw them destroy the OPA and send the price of food, and clothes and rent skyhigh.

What about Wallace? You know he answer. He admits himself he annot win. Thus every vote for ivil Rights program. Every vote or him is a vote for the Negroim is a vote against the Truman Civil Rights program. Every vote for him is a vote for the Negro hating States Rights Party, a vote or the greedy big business groups hat run the Republican party.

The simple truth is that we Negro Americans have the chance of our lives to win freedom by supporting the man who has stuck his neck out for us. Don't waste your vote. November 2nd is Freedom Day ~~for Negro America. Vote for~~ Harry Truman and Alben W. Barkley. Vote the straight Democratic ticket.

President Truman Wins Voting Poll

PONTIAC, Mich.—

Democratic President Harry S. Truman is the victor in the COMMENTATOR "Presidential Poll" as the final tabulations were made on the eve of the election.

The COMMENTATOR has been running a poll for the past six weeks to determine HOW MEL-

LOW LANE would vote in the November 2nd balloting. Mr. Truman has lead this poll right from the start and held a 7 to 1 lead when the poll was terminated at press time.

Despite the sentiment toward presidential candidate Thomas E. Dewey, President Truman never seemed in trouble in the COMMENTATOR poll. Whether this is a hold-over of Democratic power from the Roosevelt days is not known although it is reasonable to believe the Democrats will carry the state and national ticket in Oakland County. This, of course, would mean that G. Mennen Williams would be the new governor and that Kim Sigler would be returned to private life, for the present at least.

Interracial Group Leads Seattlers Who Pledge Suport

SEATTLE — More than 100,000 citizens turned out last Thursday to see and hear President Truman lambaste what he called a "special interest" congress.

The President who has been raising the tempo of his denouncement of congress all along the way minced no words in telling his cheering audience at the high school stadium that the 80th congress had been obstructionist and that it has passed a "rich man's tax law." Oct. 6 19-48

The reception that the President received was by far the greatest of the tour. The President debarked on pier 91 in Seattle to receive a 21-gun salute aftr a trip across Puget Sound in a yacht owned by Governor Mon. C. Wallgren. He was met at the pier by a reception committee of distinguished citizens of Seattle.

For the first time in the entire tour, Negroes were represented in a welcoming committee. Rev. F. W. A Southerner TALKING

by LILLIAN Smith

The Defender

Sat 7-17-48

I am going to vote for Harry S. Truman and I would like to tell you why.

I am voting for him because I am a white Southerner and I am proud of the magnificent thing that he has done in taking so brave a stand for the civil rights of all Americans. I think that he, as our President, has done my region great good by dramatizing democracy's belief in civil rights. I think he has stirred the southern conscience to profound depths. I think he has made the evil people angry and the good people glad. I think he has brought the White Supremacists, the American communists, the facists, and the scary folks up to the surface of our life where they can be counted and where the sunlight of publicity can kill the bacteria they spread wherever they go. I think he has made civil rights a world issue that can never again hide behind the iron curtain of States Rights whether here or in Russia. I think he has spoken good words, uncompromising words and that these words have stirred the imagination of millions of people.

I am voting for him not because he is a strong "Father" but because he is one of democracy's sons, like the rest of us. I think we need in a democracy ten thousand mature, wise leaders scattered throughout our government and our communities—not One Man to whom all minds and hearts must bend reverently. I think such a Man is for Russia, not for America. I prefer an Ordinary Man of extraordinary courage and integrity, a common man of uncommon goodwill and warm heart; one who has no Messianic complex but who thinks of himself as the decent, honest, good democratic human being that he is.

I don't want "An Answer to Prayer" in the Presidency but I do want somebody humble enough to do a little praying himself. I think we have grown lazy and fat-minded and have enjoy having our democracy run for us. Now it is time for us to realize that democracies are run by millions of responsible free people or else cease to be run as democracies. I think some of us are mixed up and are thinking of the kind of man who would be a fine ruler of a totalitarian regime; not democracy's kind of a man.

I think Harry Truman has made mistakes and bad ones. I think any other President in this same troubled complex age would have made mistakes and bad ones. I thing Republicans and Dixiecrats on the one hand and Communists on the other have played up the mistakes and played down the triumphs until people are utterly confused. But I don't think you can fool all the people all the time; that is what elections are good for: to show people's intelligence.

I am voting for Harry Truman because he is as stubborn as a Missouri mule and so far, has been stubborn mainly about the right things: civil rights for all mankind, controls to keep down inflation, opposition to the Taft-Hartley bill, steady support for ERP, federal housing, and federal aid to education and health; and a decent opposition to Red-baiting while at the same time fighting hard the causes that breed communism. I think these things that he has been stubborn about are terribly important to the welfare of all the earth's people:

I am voting for Truman because I think he is a learner; he has learned the hard way but he has learned; and he will learn more during the next four years. I hope the 135 million citizens of the United States have learned as much as their President has learned during the past three and a half hard years. If we have, we need not worry about America's future. We can make it together: Harry Truman and the rest of us.

Truman in 3-Way Political Fight With GOP In-Out Congress. Rebels

Atlanta Constitution, Atlanta, Ga.

Fri. 7-16-48

PHILADELPHIA, July 15—(AP) President Truman took on today a momentous three-front political battle, with Republicans in and out of Congress and with rebelling Southerners in his own Party.

The opposition swiftly accepted the challenges Mr. Truman laid down. The Republicans did it with charges of "cheap politics" and the shifting of GOP campaign headquarters to Washington.

34a(1)

Southerners who bolted the Democratic National Convention last night in a rage over the civil rights issue reacted with a formal call for a rump convention in Birmingham Saturday. They plan to pick a candidate who thinks the States—not the Federal Government—should handle such problems as lynching and poll taxes.

7-16-48

Mr. Truman stirred up both the Republicans and part of the once Solid South in a short, hard swinging predawn speech today. In it he:

1. Accepted the presidential nomination of the Democratic Convention at the moment of the greatest party split in 88 years—a split over racial and civil rights issues.

2. Announced he was summoning the Republican-led Congress back into a special session that promises to be as hot as a Washington Summer. His announced purpose: To carry the offensive to the GOP, to make it put up or hours. He won it unanimously on the first ballot.

Mr. Truman was a first ballot winner, too, but far from a unanimous winner. For the South, angered by his civil rights program and a Northern maneuver that wrote it into the Party platform, put up Sen. Russell of Georgia as a protest candidate.

Russell pulled 263 votes to Mr. Truman's 947 1/2, with 618 needed to nominate. But he registered the extent of Southern unhappiness within the Party.

Before that, the whole Mississippi delegation and half of Alabama's thumbed their noses at the rest of the Convention and walked out into the rain. The downpour failed to cool their anger over the Civil Rights plank in the Party platform.

And this morning, Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi appealed to "every man and woman who believes in States' Rights and who opposes Harry S. Truman and the things he stands for" to assemble Saturday in Birmingham.

Thus Party unity was at the lowest point since the Democrats broke apart in 1860 — over the issue of slavery. Through the gap in their ranks, the Republican Party marched to its first victory with the immortal Lincoln leading the way.

Just how much of a following the Birmingham meeting could shut up right now on its own platform promises.

3. Appealed for Democratic Party harmony while swatting the South in its sorest spot. One thing he will ask—again—is that Congress pass some laws against lynching, poll taxes and "Jim Crow" discrimination against Negroes.

7-16-48

In the national campaign, it will be Mr. Truman and Sen. Barkley of Kentucky against Gov. Dewey of New York and Gov. Warren of California.

Barkley accepted the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination, also in this morning's early rustle up was uncertain, because some of the South wasn't quite sore enough to get out of the Party.

7-16-48

Russell said at Winder, Ga., he would have no part of the meeting. Gov. Ben Laney, of Arkansas, who withdrew as a States' Rights candidate at the convention here said he hadn't made up his mind about Birmingham.

Laney quit because he said he couldn't stand on that civil-rights plank in the platform.

Virginia delegates were undecided, too, about keeping the new civil war going. Louisianans were just as irate as any in the South but made no plans to go to Birmingham because they figured they ought to have more time to think things over.

Nobody turned up to represent Mississippi at a meeting of the Democratic National Committee today. Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina likewise stayed away.

A main purpose of the meeting was to re-elect Sen. J. Howard McGrath, of Rhode Island, National Chairman. This was done, without opposition.

The way Russell sized up the special session of Congress, Northern, Democrats and the Republicans will "fight to see who can kick the South the hardest" with civil rights legislation.

He said Mr. Truman's call to Congress is "a desperate move" to "rivet national attention on what he has picked as the national issues in the 1948 campaign."

Republicans, too, almost unanimously said there were political motives behind the move.

Political or not, supporters of Mr. Truman said it was a wise move. Former Sec. of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson said Mr. Truman put the Republicans on the spot. He added it up this way:

"If they don't do anything about the special session program, he's got them. If they do, the credit will be his."

Besides civil rights, Mr. Truman said in his acceptance speech he would ask Congress to get busy on such items as help for schools, improving the nation's health, enlarging the social security program, and a boost in the 40-cents-an-hour minimum wage."

He said the special session will determine whether the GOP "can fool the people with such poppycock" as he said he found in their platform.

Loudly and confidently he told the hundreds of delegates and thousands of spectators who stuck it out until the convention quit: "Sen. Barkley and I will win this election and make these Republicans like it."

Barkley told a reporter he plans to keep his Senate seat while campaigning. His present term lasts until 1951. He said he was going back to Washington and then home to Paducah, Ky., for a week or so of rest.

Truman Helped Chances But Dewey Seen Winner

The Courier Sat

(Courier Political Analyst)

ABOARD THE TRUMAN TRAIN—According to Democratic leaders in eleven different States, President Truman has definitely improved his chances for election in Texas, Kentucky, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Arizona and Iowa. He caused Utah, Colorado and Nevada to lean more to the Democratic side and plans to clinch Missouri on a later visit.

No report is available on how President Truman will fare in Indiana. Ohio will be touched later in the campaign. Although excellent crowds turned out in California, factional fights within the Democratic party leaves California in the Republican column, unles the Wallace forces weaken and switch over to the Democrats,, in which case, the President's chances would be improved, but not enough to expect a Democratic victory in that State.

When the sixteen-day trip ended on October 2, Mr. Truman had made 137 speeches in the first phase of his crusading and was given a "fighting chance" in polls conducted by correspondents-covering the trip.

HAPPY OKLAHOMA SURPRISE

Tulsa, Okla., turned in a happy surprise for President Truman when he made his last major speech in Oklahoma on Wednesday afternoon.

Known to be the strongest Republican section in Oklahoma, there was much guessing about the reception Mr. Truman would receive. About 1,000 people congregated at the railroad station and an estimated 10,000 lined the streets, and at Skelley football field, home grounds of Tulsa University, an estimated 18,000 were waiting.

Sat 10-9-48

FRIENDLY CROWDS

The unexpected large turnout was not the only surprise. It was a friendly crowd which showed its feeling every time the President "gave the Republicans hell." His talk dealt with farmers and price supports, rural electricity, flood prevention and power projects.

President Truman detrained at Ardmore, Okla., where police estimated a crowd of over 40,000 heard and saw him. This included people in the stands at the station and along the streets. Eighty-five per cent of the audience at the Ardmore railroad station were Negroes. Ardmore's total population is around 22,000.

The first instance of planned segregation occurred at Ardmore. On a door at the railroad station was a sign reading: "Negro Passengers." As the President's party was leaving the First Methodist Church, a native of Ardmore bragged in this way: "Did you notice that no colored people were in the crowd when the President spoke?" Then he went on to explain that they had been segregated at the railroad station and not permitted in the crowds leading to the speakers' stand.

But it wasn't that way.

NOT SEGREGATED

It is a fact, that Negroes made up 85 per cent of the crowd to greet the President when the train rolled into the station, and they stood on both sides of the tracks. But along the streets in Ardmore and in front of the stand where the President spoke, Negroes were mixed in with whites.

This was noticed by all correspondents traveling in the Truman train, to determine where and how much opposition is shown to his civil rights doctrine which would abolish these conditions by Federal law.

Although many political leaders in Oklahoma say that the State is in the doubtful category on November 2, this claim is disputed if crowds mean anything.

Largest Crowd in History Swarms Into Fairgrounds To Hear and See Democratic Candidate

MAKES 18 STOPS IN OKLAHOMA

One of the largest crowds in state history, estimated at more than 100,000, jammed the Oklahoma State Fairgrounds here Tuesday evening to see and hear President Harry S. Truman deliver one of two principal political addresses on an extensive tour of the country. Mr. Truman is making 18 stops in Oklahoma on the tour.

From the Santa Fe station, where his huge party, joined by high state Democratic officials when the train reached the southern border, the entourage boarded open cars and paraded through the business section and north to Tenth and eastward to the fairgrounds with the entire several miles route jammed with spectators.

Gates to the large annual fair were thrown open for the afternoon and the thousands poured into the race track, stadium and sodded inner track that made a mass spectacle of humanity incomparable in state history.

Observers said the throng Tuesday was by far larger than on a similar visit made here in 1938 by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who also spoke at the Fairgrounds.

Sat 10-2-48

Among the Truman party of correspondents representing many of the largest newspapers and magazines was former War Correspondent Fletcher Martin, representing the Negro weekly, The Louisville (Ky.) Defender.

Secret service men arrived in the city last week-end and met with state, county and city officers to formulate plans for the safeguarding of the president. (It will be recalled that during the 1938 visit of the late Mr. Roosevelt a "crank" broke lines, rushed up to the late president's car attempting to shine his shoes, and a city patrolman was taxed to the limit in overpowering the eccentric man, almost creating pandemonium on the parade route; rumors spread like wildfire that an assassination attempt had taken place and like hysterial reactions).

Sat 10-2-48

Mr. Truman slightly eased up on his avowed pre-tour statement that he would "give 'em (80th GOP Congress) hell," but continued his espousal of the Republican controlled congress as driving the Communists under cover with the present open hearings on "Red" connections of federal officials, and called the investigation the waving of a red herring to cover up the GOP failure to pass any constructive legislation.

Sat 10-2-48

After eighteen hours in the city with Mrs. Truman and daughter concert singer Margaret. the party continued to Tulsa for a second major stop and address with car-platform speeches between the two points.

Sat 10-2-48

Bennie Payne, Northeast Second street waiter at the Skirvin hotel, where the Truman party was accommodated, and an old acquaintance of Mr. Truman when the president was a judge in Kansas City. Mo., was specially assigned by hotel owner Dan James as the Truman family's special waiter.

Payne has been at the Skirvin since 1923 and during his tenure here and in Missouri, he has served and formed personal acquaintance with some of the outstanding personalities in American life.

Dr. Tobias Gives Reasons for Supporting Truman

Cites Records as Senator, President, Lauds Courage in Civil Rights Fight

Sat 10-9-48

Afro Am

NEW YORK—In a statement issued this week, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, listed 10 reasons why he will vote for President Truman in the coming election.

Mr. Tobias issued the statement, he said in a letter to AFRO President Carl Murphy, "because of my deep sense of loyalty to the man who has done more to dramatize the issue of civil rights than any President that ever lived."

Mr. Tobias' reasons were:

1. Mr. Truman's support of progressive legislation as a Senator.

Appointed Judge, Governor

2. Tis "courage to defy custom" in appointing a colored federal judge and a colored governor of the Virgin Islands.

3. His inclusion of the Virgin Islands among his stops and his "whole-hearted acceptance" of the courtesies extended to him by Gov. and Mrs. William H. Hastie, during his visits of U.S. Territories in the West Indies.

4. His appointment of a committee to study the rigths of American citizens after receiving a committee in Sep., 1946 which protested the Walton County, Ga. lynching.

Sat 10-9-48

Civil Rights Activity

5. His issuance of Executive Order 9808 appointing the President's Committee on Civil Rights.

7. His special message to Congress, sent after his Civil Rights Committee's report, asking for legislation to put into effect the principal recommendations.

8. His issuance of executive orders directed against discrimination in the Armed Forces and in the civilian government services.

Has Withstood 'Pressure'

9. His belief that Mr. Truman has, "without apology," put the prestige and power of his office behind the struggle for a single standard of citizenship for all people, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

10. His having held his ground "against pressures and threats unparalleled in the political history of our country."

The Case Against Truman

PM

So President Truman finally had to announce his candidacy for the Democratic nomination (story on Page 3). His move is, at least in part, an effort to hold together the disintegrating Democratic support for him. Seeing his political strength crumbling, Truman has announced to the Nation that if nominated, he will accept and run. New York, N.Y.

No doubt. But the question of whether he is to be nominated and elected is not for him to decide, but for the Democratic and liberal voters of the Nation. I think it is going to be hard—terribly hard—to persuade them that he is the man whom they want to lead the liberal forces to victory.

What looked a month ago like an impossible pipe-dream of liberal Democrats—the chances of scuttling Truman as 1948 candidate and nominating someone better—has now become a real possibility. Tues 3-9-48

Partly it comes as a result of the Wallace movement. But only partly. For the strength of the Wallace movement is a sign, rather than a cause, of Truman's lack of a real hold on the imagination of people. The revolt of the Southern Tories, at the other end of the political scale from the Wallace left-wingers, is also a sign rather than a cause: a stronger President could make an unpalatable political move stick, while a weak one cannot make even the right move stick.

Does Truman Have the Stature To Hold the Party Together?

The real cause is President Truman himself. The component elements of the Demoratic Party have always been uneasy partners, but in a time of world crisis like the present one it takes a figure of great stature to hold them together. Roosevelt could. Truman can't. Truman is his own worst enemy.

He has talked of the need for Democratic liberalism, and his Jackson Day speech was wholly on that theme. But to talk liberalism and act liberalism are wholly different things. The only strongly liberal move he has made recently was his Civil Rights program. It deserved—and still deserves—praise. But it came late, after the Wallace forces had beaten him to the punch. And it was not believed. Both the Negroes in the Northern states and the reactionaries in the South figured it as a wholly political move: it enraged the Tories without rallying the liberals. Tues 3-9-48

Aside from that one gesture, Truman's recent record has been the sort to make him impossible as the liberal candidate of a liberal party. He has gone on with military intervention in Greece and Turkey, has yielded to those who pressed for more of the same kind of intervention in China, and his current moves on guaranteeing the military borders of western Europe mean that the Marshall Plan is in danger of being transformed into a military alliance. His recent record on appointments—his scuttling of Chairman Landis, Chairman Eccles, Surgeon General Parran—show a tragic unconcern about rewarding courage and ability in the Government service. Finally—and beyond all else—the Administration sell-out on the Palestine partition and the UN shows Truman as a man willing to be tough against everyone but the enemies of justice. Our generation has seen many sell-outs, but one would have to go back to Munich to recall a sell-out as cynical, as bedraggled, as contemptible as the State Department's weaseling out of its commitment to partition under the UN.

The Bosses' Standard: Candidates Who Can Deliver the Votes

New York, N.Y.

I wrote in this space on Feb. 19: "Either the Democrats must change their cynical and bungling policies, or they must change their Presidential candidate." The two are really linked, for Truman is what he is, and his policies will stay or go with him. He is a man of good will who is bewildered in a crisis world and doesn't measure up to the size of his job. He has allowed himself to become the instrument of the big generals and the big corporations, and he has made their military-minded and property-minded policies his policies.

What I have thus far wrtten is wholly on the score of principle. It sums up why I do not believe that Truman should be nominated. But there is an additional reason on the score of practical politics. From this distance I do not see how he can win if he is nominated. The movement of the pro-Wallace liberals is increasingly away from Truman rather than back toward him. Even the anti-Wallace labor movement has little enthusiasm for Truman. The Southern Tories have broken with him. I despise the motives that animate these Southerners, and in a contest between Truman and them my own sympathy is wholly with Truman: yet the political fact of the break is there, and must be reckoned with. The Isacson election shows the extent to which the minority-groups, which count for a good deal in the crucial industrial states, have been alienated from Truman. The big-city Democratic bosses, who would like to cling to Truman if they could, are now faced by what is for them a hard fact of life: the probability that they could not win with him. And it is in the nature of a boss as a political animal that he won't consciously back a likely loser.

An Instrument of the Big Generals And the Big Corporations

PM New York, N.Y.

The Democratic politicians are worried. On Thursday and Friday there will be a strategy meeting of all the big Democratic machine bosses. For the time being, no doubt, they will continue to assert their loyalty to Truman, and Truman will continue to be a candidate to succeed himself. A man who has had that much power, even when it has been thrust on him, does not easily abdicate it. And the men who put him into power, and whose position depends partly on the system of patronage, do not easily abandon their titular party chief. But politics is an unsentimental affair, as is so much else in American life. In business, money talks; in politics, it is the final votes that talk. The hard fact is that barring a miracle Truman can no longer deliver the votes. Five times in American history the party politicians have scuttled a Vice-President-become-President when the time came for a new nomination. Five instances ought to be good enough, if what you are looking for is precedent. But the decisive fact is that Truman does not deserve the nomination, and in all probability could not be elected if he got it. New York, N.Y.

Are there other leaders to whom the Democratic Party could turn? There are. I shall discuss them in detail at another time. But for the present it is enough to give the names of those who have been most frequently discussed in the past weeks: Justice William O. Douglas, General Eisenhower, former OPA Administrator Chester Bowles. Any one of them would give the Nation good leadership. Any one of them would go a good deal to re-unite the split Democratic forces. Any one of them would stand a good chance of winning, even with Wallace in the field, and would be sure to win if Wallace were to withdraw before November. A ticket made up of two of the three would give the Democrats a new outlook and future.

A New Base Must Be Broad Enough To Bear a New Structure of Unity

That is the crucial problem—the problem of building a base broad enough so that on it could be built a new structure of Democratic unity. Whether justly or not, Truman has today become a divisive and not a unifying force within the Democratic Party and among American liberals. His policy has become a divisive policy—exactly because it is reactionary in the foreign field and indecisive in the domestic. New York, N.Y.

What we need is a Democratic leader who will unify the liberals and give the nation the guidance it needs in a crisis age.

WASHINGTON, —(AP)— President Truman confidently predicted Thursday a Democratic victory in November and said he's in the race to stay.

He told a news conference he is not upset over the revolt in party ranks and that rebels will be given a chance to walk back into the fold before the election.

Southerners are rebelling against his civil rights proposals. Several senators have demanded that he withdraw his bid for nomination.

Clarifying his stand on the latter issue Thursday the President read a formal statement to reporters. He explained that this government's new proposal for a United Nations trusteeship for the Holy Land is only an emergency step to stop the killing of Jews and Arabs and is without prejudice to ultimate partitioning. Montgomery, Ala.

He also called a truce betwee the Palestine fighting factions. Fri.

Party Schisms and the Crisis

Mon. 3-22-48

by ERNEST K. LINDLEY

THE politicians and experienced observers in Washington who really believe Mr. Truman could win if the Presidential election were held next week would hardly crowd a telephone booth. There are not many who think he has much of a chance in November. The Democratic party appears to be shattered beyond repair by him or perhaps by any other Democratic politician in 1948.

Mr. Truman's prospects looked hopeless also in November 1946. Yet by the end of 1947 the popular-opinion polls indicated that he probably could defeat any Republican nominee except Eisenhower. Many things could happen during the next few months to improve his chances of reelection. Among his potential assets are, of course, stupidity and overconfidence in the Republican party. They accounted in no small part for his recovery between November 1946 and November 1947. The Republicans have plenty of both left. If they decide in June that they can win with anybody, Mr. Truman may become again a formidable adversary.

WHILE the spotlight has been playing on the schisms in the Democratic party, it should not be forgotten that the Republican party remains far from united in its approach to the grave issues of foreign policy and national security. Twenty-four Republican senators backed the Taft amendment to reduce the initial ERP authorization to $4,000,000,000. Twenty-five stood with Vandenberg against the cut. The Democratic alignment was 36 to 9. (These totals include pairs and absentees whose position was announced.)

The comparable test on the interim aid bill last November was on the Malone amendment to chop off $197,000,000. Twenty Republicans and ten Democrats in the Senate voted for this amendment, against the unanimous recommendation of the Foreign Relations Committee.

On aid to Greece last spring, the Senate line-up (again including absentees whose position was announced) was: Republicans, 35 for, 16 against; Democrats, 37 for, 7 against.

On the basis of these and other tests, between one-fourth and one-third of the Republicans in the Senate must be regarded as isolationists, and another one-fourth as halfhearted or unreliable supporters of American foreign policy and security. In the House, isolationist sentiment has been stronger than in the Senate and, until recently, has included most of the Republican leaders.

Events abroad have tempered some of the isolationists and perhaps converted a few, at least to the need for larger expenditures on the armed services. But they have not yet united the Republican party on the greatest issues of the time. The so-called bipartisan front still consists, in Congress, of most of the Democratic party plus perhaps half of the Republican party. The relative solidity of the Democrats in Congress on questions of foreign policy and national security has not been impaired in the slightest by the open splits over domestic questions.

In the fall of 1938 the Democratic party was torn with strife and bitterness. That was the year of Roosevelt's unsuccessful "purge." It was also the year of Munich. Roosevelt put the New Deal aside and reunited his party on the issue of foreign policy. Mr. Truman is not Roosevelt and he has to deal with organized rebellion on two sides. He cannot heal the schism with Wallace, which is over foreign policy. But it is hard to believe that, in the showdown, the South will so conduct itself as to help an isolationist Republican win the Presidency. And if foreign policy is an issue between the two major parties and candidates, it will certainly decide many votes in other parts of the country. The nomination of Taft, Bricker, Speaker Martin, or any of several other Republicans might make foreign policy the dominant issue of the campaign.

Mon. 3-22-48

THE division over foreign policy is the most serious weakness in the Republican party, and it could be ruinous. The outcome of the election may be decided at the Republican National Convention in June but it will not be decided before that, forlorn as Mr. Truman's position seems today.

Truman a 'Dead Bird' Says Dixie Democrat

P.M. - N.Y. N.Y.
3-3-48
Wed.

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON

A cry that "Harry Truman is a dead bird" was raised by a Southern Democrat as Republicans piled new fuel on the Dixie "civil rights" revolt.

Rep. L. Mendel Rivers (D., S. C.), beat the anti-Truman drum after:

¶ Seven Senators, five of them Republicans, pressed for Senate action on a bill to set up a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission to outlaw job discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups.

Touch Off Revolt

The anti-lynch and FEPC bills are among the Truman recommendations which have touched off a revolt among Southern Democrats, with threats to break with the national party if the President is nominated for a full term in the White House.

Rivers told Republicans in a House speech they were making a mistake in trying to "embarrass" Truman by pushing through his program.

"You are going to burn down the house to get at the rats," he shouted. "You had better make friends with the South right now while there is still time."

A committee of Southern Democrats in the House who are fighting the Truman program met later. Chairman William H. Colmer (D., Miss.), told reporters no decisions were made.

Negro Candidates

In New York, Henry Wallace's campaign manager said there would "no doubt" be Negroes among the Congressional candidates on Wallace's third party ticket.

The spokesman, C. B. Baldwin, denied reports that the party itself would run Negro candidates in specific districts. That's "entirely up to our state organizations," Baldwin said.

The anti-lynching bill cleared the House Committee by an unofficially reported 18 to 8 vote. Members said two Republicans voted against it along with six Democrats.

It now needs only clearance by the GOP-dominated Rules Committee before it comes up for full House action. Republicans, along with Democrats who are backing President Truman's civil rights stand, are almost certain to push the measure through.

3-3-48

'Dead Bird' Speech

Rivers' "dead bird" speech followed another Democratic prediction that Truman would be "overwhelmingly defeated" if he runs—because of the Civil Rights program—and a plea that he withdraw from the Presidential picture.

Rep. Tom Murray (D., Tenn.) aid he indorsed the statement by Tennessee Democratic leader E. H. (Boss) Crump, who said he would "vote for a Democrat next November but it will not be Truman."

"I would like to see the Democrats nominate either Sen. Byrd of Virginia, Secretary of State Marshall, Sen. Tydings of Maryland or Gen. Eisenhower if he could be drafted," Murray said in a statement.

Other Trouble Looms For President As Anderson Resigns

WASHINGTON, March 13—(AP)—Trouble doubled for Candidate Harry S. Truman Saturday.

Six Southern governors banded together to fight his nomination for president this Summer.

A few hours earlier, Secretary of Agriculture Anderson announced he is quitting the president's cabinet to run for the Senate.

Both moves, although not totally unexpected, added up to bad campaign news for Mr. Truman.

The Southern governors pledged themselves to fight the nomination of any presidential candidate who advocates the civil rights proposals of Mr. Truman: Anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, anti-segregation and anti-job discrimination laws.

3-14-48 Sun.

THE GOVERNORS, meeting here, recommended that the Southern states withhold their electoral votes from any candidate following the Truman civil rights pattern.

Joining in the recommendation were Govs. Wright, of Mississippi; Jester, of Texas; Folsom, of Alabama; Thompson, of Georgia; Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Laney, of Arkansas. Gov. Lane, of Maryland, said he refrained from voting "because any recommendation on my part, to the Maryland Democratic Convention, to which I probably will not be a delegate, would be resented."

Anderson's announcement stirred some expressions of surprise in New Mexico, although he had mentioned he might run for the Senate.

Anderson has been counted a political asset in the cabinet, with his farm and Capitol Hill links. The secretary plans to enter the New Mexico Democratic primary in June and leave the cabinet when Congress quits, possibly in July.

Anderson told a news conference of his plans. He aspires to the Senate seat vacated by Democratic Sen. Carl Hatch.

HATCH ALREADY has said he will be available for an appointment to the Federal Court bench if it comes to him. But he must wait until his present term ends next Jan. 3 before he will be eligible.

Anderson, appointed by President Truman to succeed Claude R. Wickard on June 30, 1945, said he is taking the step "reluctantly."

As a former House member from New Mexico, Anderson is popular with many members of Congress. He has been close to farmers' problems and has carried his agricultural arguments to Congress in committee hearings, many of which involved the issues of price control and rationing.

Birmingham Ala

The cabinet member said he feels that he can "best serve New Mexico and the interests of the nation in the Senate."

He said if Mr. Truman is willing he will stay on the job until Congress quits to press for adoption of permanent farm legislations to take the place of the expiring price-support program.

By that time, he said, the present food export program will have been completed and schedules drawn for the Fall months.

Sun. 3-14-48

THERE WERE PREDICTIONS that when the new cabinet member is named he will come from the Midwestern farm belt where Democrats are trying to break into a Republican voting stronghold.

Led by Sen. Taft (R., Ohio), Republicans immediately read into Anderson's decision a fear on the part of Democrats that Mr. Truman won't be able to beat the GOP presidential nominee in November.

But Sen. Sparkman (D., Ala.) retorted that this isn't true.

Anti-Truman Ire Rolls As South Stands Pat

As dissatisfaction with President Truman as nominee of the Democratic Party in the coming Presidential campaign spread into Illinois and California, Southerners Wednesday had not relented in their opposition to him and his civil-rights proposals. 3-25-4

In Washington questions were fired at a Senator before a Senate Rules Committee considering a measure that would outlaw poll taxes as a voting requirement in Federal elections. The President, among other measures, called for such enaction.

In Alabama, a critic of Mrs. Lennard Thomas sought to oppose the Democratic National Committeewoman at the polls.

Explaining her decision to oppose Mrs. Thomas for re-election, Mrs. S. Brooks Whitton said the National Committeewoman's position on the civil rights dispute "has made many people in the State doubt her firm allegiance to their cause."

After talking with President Truman recently, Mrs. Thomas said she was convinced Party leaders would not force anti-segregation laws, "down our throats" in the South. She said later she meant National Committee officials, such as Chairman Howard McGrath. Thurs.

Rep. George H. Bender, Republican, Ohio, in Washington objected to being linked with Communists in his advocacy of poll-tax repeal. 3-25-48

Bender testified before a Senate Rules Committee considering his bill to outlaw the poll tax as a requirement for voting in Federal elections. Gov. William M. Tuck, of Virginia, and Rep. J. Lindsay Almond, Democrat, Virginia, told the Committee Tuesday that Communists were the first in Virginia to seek poll-tax repeal by Federal legislation. The Constitution

"I object to being referred to as a Red," Bender told the Committee. "I happen to be a Republican from Ohio . . . and an elder in the Presbyterian Church. And, frankly, there isn't anything about Protestantism or Catholicism that that has anything in common with Communism." Atlanta, Ga

Bender insisted that the poll tax should be abolished in the interest of free and clean elections. Thurs.

Virginia is one of seven Southern States which still levy a poll tax. The others are Mississippi, Tennessee, South Carolina, Alabama, Texas and Arkansas. 3-25-48

Sen. John C. Stennis, Democrat, Mississippi, only Southerner on the Committee, was the only committeeman to question Bender.

Truman Not Disturbed Over Revolt in Party

The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga 3-26-48

WASHINGTON, March 25—(UP)—President Truman confirmed Thursday that he is in the Democratic presidential race to stay.

Southern Democrats cracked right back that they still intend to try to knock him out. 3-26-48

The President told a news conference he intends to go ahead with his candidacy. He didn't say whether he expects to win it. But he said he isn't disturbed by the spreading revolt within party ranks which has been marked by demands that he withdraw. Fri.

And he confidently predicted a Democratic victory in November.

The President was asked whether he expects Democrats who are walking out on him now to walk back in again. He said he preferred to wait until November to give them a chance to come back.

Rep. William Colmer, Democrat, Mississippi, Chairman of a 76-man group of House Democrats fighting the President on the racial rights issue, said they wouldn't return if Mr. Truman is the nominee. The Constitution

"There's nothing new in what the President says," Colmer said. "There's nothing to alter the position of those of us who are dissatisfied with his stand on civil rights. We will not support the nomination of any man who includes that in his platform."

There were signs that some of the Dixie Democrats will support Mr. Truman on a veto of the GOP tax-cut bill and in his requests for bigger national defense appropriations. But they repeated their determination to oppose him on the racial rights issue. Atlanta, Ga.

If the Southerners can't prevent Mr. Truman's nomination, many of them plan to deny him their State electoral votes. Some States already have started amending their election laws with that thought in mind. Fri.

Sen. John C. Stennis, Democrat, Mississippi, suggested during a hearing on anti-poll tax legislation Thursday that it might be a good idea to have presidential electors appointed by State Governors instead of elected. 3-26-48

The intraparty bolt against Mr. Truman is broader than the South's revolt against his request to Congress for Federal laws against the poll tax, lynching, job discrimination and racial segregation. Fri. 3-26-48

It spread into some of the big-city Democratic strongholds when the Administration pulled back on its advocacy of immediate partition of Palestine to create a national homeland for Jews. Fri.

Mr. Truman told his press conference Thursday that he still favors partition, but he wants a United Nations trusteeship as a temporary means of governing Palestine. He said it was only a stop-gap proposal until the dispute can be settled without bloodshed between Arabs and Jews. 3-26-48

Truman Seen Bowing Out: Ike Running as Democrat

"I'm not making any prediction that Eisenhower will accept the nomination, but it is being talked," he added.

JACKSON DAY DINNER

DES MOINES, Iowa — (UP) — Agriculture Secretary Clinton P. Anderson accused Republicans of campaigning on the strength of the Democratic farm program.

"No wonder the poor old Republican elephant gets so confused by the similarity between its trunk and its tail that it doesn't know which end to sit on," he said.

Anderson keynoted his speech before 800 Iowa Democrats at a $25-dollar-a-plate dinner, by saying: Atlanta, Ga.

"In the past decade and a half the Democratic Party has done more to help the American farmer achieve peace of mind than all the Republican administrations since the time of Abraham Lincoln."

Elector Candidates' Pledge, Sparkman Plea In Spotlight

U. S. Senator John J. Sparkman's proposal that President Truman withdraw as candidate for renomination topped Alabama's weekend political developments.

The Huntsville senator, a candidate for renomination in the May 4 Democratic primary, previously had endorsed the President.

But, he said in a statement at Washington, he is now convinced the Democratic party will be "cut to ribbons" unless Mr. Truman withdraws. Sun. 3-21-48

The statement brought a comment from Phillip J. Hamm, candidate for Sparkman's seat, that "it looks like Mr. Sparkman won't stay hitched. He is the champion pussyfooter."

Sparkman said the President's "colossal blunder" in urging that Congress enact a "civil rights" program forced him to change his mind. Mr. Truman has urged enactment of federal legislation outlawing lynching, poll taxes, Jim Crow practices and job discrimination.

"Only One Way"

"I have at long last reached the conclusion," Sparkman said, "that there is only one way that this controversy can be settled and only one way to avoid defeat for the the Democratic Party in November—that is for Mr. Truman to withdraw."

As to suggestions that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower would be a presidential candidate the South would support, Sparkman commented: The Advertiser

"Eisenhower is a good man and one behind whom we could unite. But there are others." He did not say whom he had in mind.

A major development during the week was the announcement by Attorney Horace Wilkinson, of Birmingham, that 21 of the 28 candidates for Alabama presidential electors had signed a pledge not to vote for Mr. Truman in the electoral college regardless. Wilkinson is one of the candidates for the 11 places.

Montgomery, Ala.

Solid Vote

Sparkman said he believed the 11 electors finally chosen would vote solidly for some candidate other than the President. 3-21-48

The senator headed the Democratic Party's speakers bureau in 1946.

Lister Hill, Alabama's senior senator, Saturday declined comment on Sparkman's move. Hill is a candidate for delegate to the Democratic National Convention in support of Mr. Truman, although he opposes the President's civil rights proposals.

Sparkman is scheduled to leave Washington next Wednesday for Alabama to press his campaign for re-election. He will speak in Montgomery Thursday night and attend the Alabama Education Association convention in Birmingham Friday.

In charging that Sparkman is a "champion pussyfooter," Hamm said in a statement Saturday:

"He was with Folsom and turned on him. He was with labor and he turned on them. He was for all the people and he turned on them by voting with the monopolists. He was with Truman and is now trying to turn on him.

"What the people of Alabama really want to know is what to expect of Sparkman next. What does he really stand for?"

Hamm, close friend of Gov. Folsom, resigned recently as State Revenue Department commissioner to make the race. The governor was on the stand with him for his opening campaign address.

He has been engaging in an extensive stump tour and Saturday announced an itinierary for 28 appearances during the coming week.

State Democratic Executive Committee Chairman Gessner T. McCorvey conferred with Gov. Folsom Thursday night regarding Alabama law that would require the state's electors to support President Truman if he were nominated by the national convention.

McCorvey, one of the electoral candidates who is pledged not to vote for Truman, contends the act is unconstitutional because: (1). Electors are chosen by the people and not the party, and (3) electors are state officers and the Legislature cannot tell them how to vote.

Folsom said he probably will ask the State Supreme Court to rule whether the 1945 legislative act is constitutional.

The act says electors must vote for the "nominee of the national convention of the party by which they are elected."

They Want To Knock President Out Of Nomination, Avoid Inner Party Fight

The News Birmingham, Ala.

BY JACK BELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—(AP)—Dixie Rebels switched tactics today.

Their aim now is to knock President Truman out of the Democratic presidential nomination to avoid having to fight him within the party.

Their strategy is to try to convince Northern Democrats that (A) Mr. Truman has no chance to win in November and (B) the party should get another nominee less inclined to press for congressional action on anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and similar racial equality proposals. Wed. 2-25-48

Sen. McClellan (D., Ark.) told a reporter: 2-25-48

"The time can come when the party may realize that President Truman can't win. Maybe then we can get another nominee."

McClellan and six other Southern senators met yesterday with two of the protesting Dixie governors still in Washington. The News

THE SOUTHERNERS made clear they are willing to think about a great many other men, so long as the one finally picked is not publicly identified with the president's civil rights program. 2-25-48

They came up with some names.

Sen. Olin Johnston (D., S. C.) said Secretary of State Marshall would be just the man. Marshall has said flatly he will "never" run for public office. Wed.

McClellan, who says he doesn't think President Truman could win in November even with Southern support, plugged Sen. Byrd (D., Va.) as a substitute nominee. But Byrd asked that his name be kept out of that kind of talk.

Another revolt leader said the name of James F. Byrnes, former secretary of state, is on many of the Southerners' minds.

Birmingham, Ala.

BYRD AND BYRNES, however, probably would encounter as much opposition from the North as Mr. Truman is finding in the South.

SEN. HILL (D., Ala.), who has said he is supporting Mr. Truman's bid to return to the White House, poured some oil on the troubled waters. Wed. 2-25-48

"I'm in favor of working this matter out within the present Democratic Party just as we have been able to work out our problems in the past," Hill told a reporter.

None of Mr. Truman's civil rights proposals is ready for a vote in Congress yet. But Sen. Ferguson (R., Mich.) predicted last night that an anti-poll tax bill will be laid before the Senate by week's end.

The July nominating convention in Philadelphia probably will provide the first real battle between the Truman Democrats and the Southerners fighting the president's civil rights proposals.

In preparation for that showdown, members of the Dixie group are discussing a two-fold plan to (1) set up "official" Democratic parties in each of their states and (2) take the presidential and vice presidential candidates' names off those ballots on which they usually appear. The News

The whole idea would be to divorce the state Democratic organizations from the national committee. Birmingham, Ala.

The first formal move may come tomorrow at Richmond. Gov. William M. Tuck has arranged to deliver a special message to a joint session of the Virginia General Assembly then

Truman Lacks F. D. R.'s Finesse In Handling Race Question

The News Birmingham, Ala.

Thurs. 6-3-48

BY JAY G. HAYDEN

WASHINGTON, June 3—(NANA)—Alabama's selection by popular vote of a majority of its Democratic convention delegates, firmly pledged to walk out unless President Truman's civil rights program is repudiated, highlights the dilemma that the Truman managers face in this regard.

The very fact of this Southern challenge makes compromise impossible. President Truman got right down to cases in his recommendation of legislation to prevent racial discrimination. He asked for federal laws to outlaw lynching, abolish poll taxes, establish a permanent FEPC to search out and punish unfair discriminations in employment, and eliminate Jim Crowism in interstate transportation.

For the Democratic national platform to be materially less specific would wreck the party's chance of holding Negro votes—without which, it would have lost half a dozen large industrial states in 1940 and 1944.

But just as certainly if the Truman proposals are embodied in a platform plank, electors from Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina will vote against Mr. Truman, and Virginia, Arkansas and Texas electors probably will do the same.

Up to and including the convention of 1936, in which the two-thirds rule was abolished, Democratic platforms completely avoided any reference to the problem of racial discrimination.

THE 1940 DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM laid great stress on the relief bounties and government jobs that Negro citizens had received from the New Deal and added:

"We shall continue to strive for complete legislative safeguards against discrimination in government service and benefits, and in the national defense forces. We pledge to uphold due process and the equal protection of the laws for every citizen regardless of race, or color." The News

Until 1944 the Republicans were not very specific, but in that year they got right down to cases. After promising an immediate congressional inquiry to ascertain the extent of "mistreatment, segregation and discrimination against Negroes who are in our armed forces," the Republican platform continued:

"We pledge the establishment by federal legislation of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission. Birmingham

"Anti-Poll Tax—The payment of any poll tax should not be a condition of voting in federal elections and we favor immediate submission of a constitutional amendment for its abolition. Ala. Thurs

"Anti-Lynching—We favor legislation against lynchings and pledge our sincere efforts in behalf of its early enactment." 6-3-48

CONFRONTED WITH THAT Republican declaration President Roosevelt looked to be in a bad fix. Negro organizations were demanding that the Democratic platform promise at least as much, but Southern Democrats, then as now, were on the warpath. Texas had actually voted to take its electors away from Roosevelt if he sanctioned racial equality, and Mississippi and South Carolina were threatening to follow suit. 6-3-48

Roosevelt looked both ways and decided that the Southern danger was the greater. So, the Democratic platform of 1944 never once mentioned the word "Negro." It made no mention of particular legislation to guard against discrimination.

Mr. Roosevelt, of course, had done for the Negroes in other ways. But he always avoided putting down on paper anything that would place him in direct conflict with the South. Thurs. 6-3-48

Mr. Truman, in contrast, put his offerings on this subject in a form too definite and positive either for himself to escape or the Southern politicians to swallow.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Hostility To Truman Rages Backstage

The News Birmingham, Ala.

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—Without benefit of publicity, a significant backstage battle is being waged regarding the question; "To nominate or not to nominate Mr. Truman." Tues.

A host of Democratic leaders would like to duck Harry's nomination, but most of them—at least from the North—are afraid to stick their necks out. They are secretly encouraging others to do the sticking, however, and they are quite delighted to hold anybody else's coat. 5-25-48

But despite this hesitancy, more and more Democrats are quietly lining up—with the hope of blocking nomination on the first ballot. If Truman doesn't make it on the first ballot, they figure he's licked.

Illustrating the current inside strategy is what's happening regarding California. The California delegation is pledged to Truman. Under the law it can't switch until after the first ballot. But there's nothing to prevent the California delegation from "seconding" the nomination of Gen. Eisenhower or of anyone else.

Therefore, the strategy now being discussed is for Alabama, first state to vote at the Philadelphia convention, to nominate Eisenhower and then for California to second him.

Truman Has Cause To Worry

Atlanta, Ga. Fri. 3-12-48

WASHINGTON—President Truman's acknowledgment of his willingness to run for a second term was obviously designed to head off the movement started in quiet circles of the party to give the nomination to someone else.

Otherwise, there would have been no necessity for him to make any statement as to his candidacy until right up to the date of the July convention, even if then. President Roosevelt, it is recalled, saw no occasion to announce his candidacy for a second, third or fourth term. He merely allowed events to take their natural course.

It has come to be assumed, as a matter of course, that every President in good health who is serving his first term will be a candidate to succeed himself. No necessity arises for him to acknowledge his candidacy formally for the reason that, being in control of the party machinery, it is virtually impossible for anyone else to take the nomination away from him.

Mr. Truman has been so regarded as a candidate for some time. Up until a short while ago no suggestion had been raised in any responsible quarter that he step aside.

In recent weeks, however, an agitation has sprung up for naming some other man as the party's 1948 standard bearer. The person most frequently mentioned has been Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, retired Army chief of staff, who soon is to take over his new duties as President of Columbia University. Fri. 3-12-48

The agitation for replacing Mr. Truman with someone else at the head of the Democratic ticket has come about through two developments. First, the sharp inroads Henry A. Wallace appears to be making in Democratic liberal support with his third-party candidacy for the Presidency. And, second, the threatened Southern revolt against the President's civil rights program.

Many party leaders are convinced that either one of these two developments, if carried much further, could result in a disastrous, defeat for the Democratic ticket this Fall. Rather than take a chance on failure, some party stalwarts have quietly suggested that the wisest course would be for the President to step down and open the way for a less controversial figure to be nominated.

Not all of the suggestions have been quietly made. Some of the Southern Democratic contingent have been openly demanding such a course. The Constitution

Mr. Truman's top advisers in the Democratic National Committee, Sen. McGrath, of Rhode Island, the Chairman, and Gael Sullivan, Executive Director, evidently saw some danger of the movement growing and went to the White House to discuss the situation. After a lengthy conference with the President, they emerged with the announcement that Mr. Truman would accept renomination. Atlanta, Ga.

The chief purpose of this was to put down the agitation for selecting another party candidate. The President's announcement will have that effect because of the realization that it will be all but impossible to defeat him for the nomination so long as he is out to get it. Fri. 3-12-48

At the same time, what the President has done must be taken to mean that he has some concern over the situation. He would not have been led to make the announcement if things had been different.

OVER-TRADED

EDITOR, The Advertiser: In your editorial, "Truman a Goner Anyway," you state, "The lack of esteem for Truman's abilities—all apart from his anti-segregation advocacy—is a prime key to Southern disgust. The South would not be so scornful in the case of a Cleveland, Wilson or Roosevelt." This is the second reference you have made within a short period that the South's attitude is motivated by a personality rather than a cause.

I believe this to be an entirely wrong conclusion. The South would not swallow the "civil rights" legislation, no matter who proposed it. Until Truman made known his campaign plans, which included "selling us down the river for political expediency," the South had backed his policy, both foreign and domestic. His personality didn't enter in then, and it doesn't now. The Advertiser

While our Southern leaders are weighing methods of preventing the inclusion of the obnoxious planks in the Democratic platform, there are bills pending in Congress that are a daily threat to the South's way of life. It is imperative that our leaders act for us now. The best weapons we have to fight with are our ballots; but they might be the deciding factor. We are determined to use them for the ones who will help keep the South a fit place to live in. It looks as though Truman over-traded. Montgomery, Ala.

TRUMAN A GONER ANYWAY?

Possibly the paramount consideration in whether the South should forsake the Democratic Party in November is whether or not Harry Truman is a goner in any event. 34a(1) Sat. 3-6-48

We have first to face the fact that if the South brought about the defeat of the Democratic Party that would mean a Republican president for four years and very probably a Republican congress. It is more than likely that in these four years a G. O. P. version of Truman's Civil Disturbance program would be enacted—if not before January. Montgomery Advertiser

But if Truman is going to go down in defeat anyway, many Southerners will feel that there is something to gain by deserting the Democratic Party and occasioning the election of a Republican. Presumably it will demonstrate to the G. O. P. that Southern support is available. Demonstrated independence as a two-party region would render the South something to bargain after. Montgomery, Ala.

At the present there are too many unknowns in the equation to predict that this would inevitably follow in the South. We have not yet had time to think our dilemma through. In Alabama even the attendant legal questions are undecided.

That Southern leaders are moving with more ardor than calculation is evident in the Virginia situation. There, Gov. Tuck no sooner submitted to the legislature a plan for depriving Truman of the Virginia electoral college than he had to withdraw it and substitute another.

But meanwhile, there is obvious and widespread revulsion for Truman. The lack of esteem for Truman's abilities—all apart from his anti-segregation advocacy—is a prime key to Southern disgust. The South would not be so scornful in the case of a Cleveland, Wilson or Roosevelt.

It appears at this time that Wallace will deprive the Democrats of critical margins in Northern states—possibly enough to insure Truman's defeat regardless of the South's 127. Sat. 3-6-48

Further, as Walter Lippmann is saying, Truman's election this year would be remarkable in the most favorable circumstances. For a Truman victory would represent the fifth successive victory of a party, and that has happened only twice before in U. S. history.

Unforeseen developments such as international crisis might intervene to restore Truman's ascendancy, but current circumstances daily suggest that Truman is a goner. That must have top consideration in any move to abandon the party.

Not So Solid

34a(1)

Editor Constitution: There is much discussion among the Southern politicians about how to safeguard the Southern segregation laws. You know our own Democratic President has turned YANKEE and has gone so far as to try and do away with all Jim Crow laws.

I thought a Democrat should be loyal to their party and support its platform, but I believe we will have to do something else besides vote for Truman. Atlanta Constitution

Most of the Southern Governors, Senators and Representatives are out to defeat some of the ridiculous legislation. Wed. 3-17-48

They don't think much of the Negroes except during election year.

I don't believe the South is as solid as they think, and the way to show them is to vote for a man who isn't so interested in his personal gains.

Matter Of Fact

By JOSEPH AND STEWART ALSOP

34a(1)

WASHINGTON.

THE MISERIES of Harry S. Truman are becoming so numerous that it is almost inhuman to report them. Nonetheless, it is an inevitably significant political fact that the President has more misery in store for him when the greatest satraps of the Democratic Party gather in Washington March 11. This is the date of the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Democratic National Committee. Several of its members have already let it be known that they will seize the opportunity to tell the President a few home truths. The Advertiser

The opinion that home-truth-telling is needful arises from the change in the man Truman, which the satraps also complain of. Initially, Truman seemed actually to dislike the immense burden that had been laid upon him. There followed a period when he simply and rather admirably resolved to bear the burden as best he could, letting the chips fall where they might. The results of this approach to his duties were good. These good results were in turn gratifying, and now the satraps complain that the President is suffering from a bad case of Presidentitis.

Montgomery, Ala.

NOTHING is more difficult to penetrate than the obscurity which inevitably surrounds the personality and state of mind of a President. It does seem to be true, however, that the President has met his recent misfortunes, his run of bad luck and his chickens coming home to roost with a curious mixture of complacency and sense of being unjustly persecuted. He is no longer so eager to be advised as in the past. He is not even aware how desperate his political situation is. Indeed he has no one to tell him how bad things are, for the voices of the few really competent men with continuing access to the White House are daily drowned by the smoking-car jollity of Brigadier General Vaughan and the smooth reassurance of the pursy Dr. Steelman. Tues.

The first stage of the satraps' reaction to this situation will be to beat the President over the head with the grim facts. It may be expected they will tell him he has almost irretrievably lost the South. (There is a faint hope that the Southerners may be wooed back by naming a Southern vice-president and re-using the 1944 civil rights plank in the 1948 convention platform. But even this hope is too dim to be voiced with real enthusiasm.) What is almost worse, the satraps will also tell the President that he is losing the mass vote in the North and that nothing can win this vote back except strong leadership. 3-9-48

THE DIFFICULTY is that telling the President large numbers of home truths like these, even in the loudest and most menacing possible voice, will neither alter the man nor simplify his problem. At this juncture, in the opinion of the most competent Democratic strategists, there is really nothing much that the President can do to restore himself. The real price of the Southerners is the removal of Truman from the head of the ticket. The only real means of regaining Northern mass support, in present circumstances, is actually to put through the social and other measures which the President has advocated.

The strategists close to the White House count on the inevitable worsening of the foreign situation to bring their man back. But the more impartial Democrats are even unable to see hope in this grim remedy. "Truman isn't the kind of man," one of them admitted bitterly the other day, "that people think they've got to keep in office just because there's a crisis."

If all this is so, moreover, it is necessary to look forward to still another stage in the reaction of the great Democratic satraps. They made Truman, and he has not used the presidency in such a way as to prevent them from un-making him. On a recent trip around the country, one of the President's closest political advisers was shocked to discover how many party leaders wistfully speculated on whether Truman might not be induced to step aside in favor of General Eisenhower. For the present, of course, this is a mirage. But for the future it will certainly have meaning. The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

IT DOES not mean, of course, that General Eisenhower is any more likely to run as a Democrat than as a Republican. Nor does it mean that the President will actually be replaced at the head of his party's ticket in the election. It is simply a sign of very bad further trouble ahead. The Southern Governors are meeting immediately after the Ed Kellys, Frank McHales, Ed Flynns et al gather in Washington for the satraps' rally. It is almost inevitable that the satraps' best efforts will not disclose a formula short of side-tracking Truman for bringing the South into line again. The real trouble will start at the Governors' meeting, when the Southern rebellion is quite likely to become formal and official. Tues. 3-9-48

Then, if the deterioration continues, at least a few of the Northern satraps are quite likely to join in a putsch, sometime in the Spring, to make the President request a successor. The betting is still ten-to-one that the Democrats at Philadelphia will nominate Truman. But after these preliminaries, the convention should be a somewhat melancholy gathering.

Announcement of Candidacy Greeted by Capital Retorts That He Cannot Win

WASHINGTON, March 8 (UP)—President Truman's formal announcement that he is a candidate today failed to shake Southern revolt against him.

Some Republicans claimed that it clinched a Republican victory in November. New York, N.Y.

Southern Democrats in Congress insisted that Mr. Truman was fighting a lost cause and said he could not be elected even if he got the nomination over their objections. Tues. 3-9-48

Some Democrats who are for Mr. Truman would not claim that he would be elected.

One Republican who claimed it clinches a Republican victory was Senator Edward J. Thye of Minnesota. He termed Mr. Truman "the easiest man to beat."

No One Is Surprised

Nobody in Congress was surprised by the formal announcement that Mr. Truman was a candidate for a full four-year term in the White House. Bringing it in the open merely sharpened the criticisms of Southerners who have balked at the racial-rights issue.

Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat, of South Carolina, said he still thought Secretary of tSate George C. Marshall or Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower would be a better candidate. The Times

Senator John L. McClellan, Democrat, of Arkansas, recalled that he was the first to saw publcily that Mr. Truman couldn't win and "I still say he won't win."

Senator Claude Pepper, Democrat, of Florida, who split with the other Southern revolters to stand behind Mr. Truman, declined to comment on the President's chances. New York, N.Y.

Representative William T. Colmer, Democrat, of Mississippi, chairman of Southern revolters in the House, refused to say whether Mr. Truman would lose some of the solid South on the race issue but thought he would have "rough sledding." Tues. 3-9-48

Representative John E. Rankin, Democrat, of Mississippi, predicted that the South would nominate its own Presidential candidate.

Representative Oren C. Harris, Democrat, of Arkansas, charged that Mr. Truman's decision "jeopardizes the welfare of the party and of the country." He said he was going to continue to urge nomination of a candidate "who will stand for a realignment of the true Democratic party."

Senator Brien McMahon, Democrat of Conneticut: "I expected Mr. Truman would announce his intentions to run."

Senate Republican Whip Kenneth S. Wherry, of Nebraska: "The issue is clearly drawn. Do you want continuance of policies, both foreign an ddomestic, which we have had for the past sixteen years? Truman represents the New Deal." The Times

Representative John McCormack, Democrat, of Massachusetts: "Naturally I am very glad President Truman has announced his candidacy and will run for re-election. On his record he deserves re-election. He's done a splendid progressive job." New York, N.Y.

Rayburn Withholds Comment

House Democratic Leader Sam Rayburn: "No comment."

Representative Emanuel Cellar, Democrat of New York—"I admire his statement about civil rights but he will have to do something more than that to bolster up his candidacy. In metropolitan areas repercussions from the wobbly attitude of the Administration on Palestine have become very serious. Unless the Administration's attitude ceases to be mawkish the Democratic party might just as well fold up in districts like my own." Tues. 3-9-48

Representative Sol Bloom, Democrat, of New York: "There is no one else the Southerners can nominate who would stand a chance of re-election. Win or lose, who else are they going to vote for?"

Representative John Bell Williams, Democrat, of Mississippi: "The President has played fair with us by telling us what he wants. Now we're going to play fair with him and tell him he's not going to get a thing he asks for."

Senate Democratic Whip Scott Lucas of Illinois: "I've never had any doubt about his being a candidate and I have no doubt about his being re-elected. He will be elected." Tues. 3-9-48

Senator John J. Sparkman, Democrat, of Alabama, chairman of the Democratic Speakers Committee: "No comment."

Senator Burnet R. Maybank, Democrat, of South Carolina: "The statement is no surprise. Of course, he would accept the nomination. That's just comomn sense. Anyone would be honored to receive the nomination of either party."

TUCK PLAN ADVANCED BY VIRGINIAN GROUP

Times + New York, N.Y.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 27 (AP)—Democratic organization supporters picked up Governor Tuck's proposal to bar the name of President Truman from the November Presidential ballot and hustled it through the House Privileges and Elections Committee today by a unanimous vote. 34a(1)

The action paved the way for quick adoption by the Virginia General Assembly of Mr. Tuck's reply to Mr. Truman's civil rights program. The Assembly will meet tomorrow for the first Saturday session of the term. 2-28-48

Before reporting favorably on the Tuck bill the committee amended it in two particulars. One amendment would leave a place on the ballot for Henry Wallace's third party, which the bill, as drawn, would have excluded. The other would permit only state conventions of political parties to instruct Presidential electors how to cast their ballots, instead of permitting the convention to delegate this authority to a committee.

State Democratic Chairman Horace H. Edwards, Mayor of Richmond, disclosed meanwhile that the Tuck plan caught him by surprise. Sat 2-28-48

"Weren't you as Democratic chairman for the Commonwealth consulted in advance about the Governor's proposal?" a reporter asked Mr. Edwards.

"I was not," the mayor replied.

He said he would have something to say later as soon as he had time to make a detailed study of the Governor's plan.

Meanwhile, state Republicans hit at the Tuck proposal, and the state GOP director, Earle Lutz, said he believed that marking the ballots with party designations would be a violation of the State Constitution.

Group Calls Meeting To Kill Endorsement As 'Standard Bearer'

Members of the Jefferson County Democratic Executive Committee Saturday moved to rescind the body's action in endorsing President Truman as party standard bearer in the November election.

Objections to the president's "civil rights" proposals prompted the move. Sat. 3-13-48

On petition of members, Chairman Holt McDowell has called a special meeting of the committee for 11 a.m., March 22, to consider rescinding a resolution endorsing Mr. Truman for the party presidential nominee. This resolution was adopted at the committee's regular meeting Jan. 29, before the president came out with his "civil rights" program. Sat. 3-13-48

H. A. (Gus) Thompson, committee clerk, said approximately 100 names had been signed to the petition presented McDowell. He explained that a special meeting could be called on petition of 17 members of the 252-member body.

WASHINGTON, March 13—(AP)—Administration officials were reported seeking today to stave off a civil rights showdown until the Democratic Convention in July.

At that time, a party official said, the resolutions committee will be asked to work President Truman's hotly-debated proposals into a compromise plank in the 1948 platform. Sat. 3-13-48

These proposals come before a committee of Southern governors here today. Indications were they would be roundly condemned. And the governors' report might throw new fuel on the fire of a Dixie Democratic revolt.

WITH THIS IN MIND, Mr. Truman's supporters are said to have agreed to leave it strictly up to the resolutions group to decide how strong a pledge the party wants to make toward bringing about race equality. Sat. 3-13-48

The convention group will be made up of members from each state and territory and the District of Columbia.

Thus rebelling Southerners will have a voice in deciding the issue, even if they are outnumbered by Northern and Western Democrats.

National Chairman J. Howard McGrath told four Southern governors recently that he would be willing to go back to the 1944 platform declaration.

That plank said the party believes minorities "have the right to live, develop and vote equally with all citizens," and it urged Congress to "exert its full constitutional powers to protect those rights."

THE ADMINISTRATION, meanwhile, counted Mrs. Lennard Thomas, Alabama national committeewomen, as one Southern convert.

She said after a White House luncheon of the party's executive committee with Mr. Truman yesterday that the president had given her a satisfactory answer to a vital question. That question was whether she could "go back and tell my people that you are not going to tear up our social structure in the South and that you are everybody's president."

She said the president replied: "I do not take back one word I said. I stand on the Constitution of the United States. I'm everybody's president."

Beaming, Mrs. Thomas told reporters:

"We are going to stand together and work for a Democratic victory."

And other executive committee members came out of the meeting with the president saying their slogan would be "Peace and Prices."

Frank McHale, Indiana committeeman, said the Republicans had missed the boat on the high cost of living issue. And he said the party committee is certain that "the mass of the people will make any sacrifice for peace."

Washington Calling

Party Split Kills Truman's Chances

The Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.

By MARQUIS CHILDS

Thurs. 3-18-48 WASHINGTON.

THE first gob of campaign mul is here on my desk. It is a book called "Missouri Waltz," to be published early in April. On the cover is a convict photograph of the late "Boss" Tom Pendergast, of Kansas City, with the number assigned to him when he went into Leavenworth Penitentiary.

There is nothing very new that can be told about Harry S. Truman's relationship with the Pendergast machine, in the final phase, became so vicious and corrupt. But it can be dressed up again for campaign purposes, just as the Moscow radio is dressing up the wicked spectre of bossism linked to corrupt capitalism for the purposes of another kind of campaign.

If a time ever called for self-restraint, that time is now. The Republicans, with a little sober reflection, will surely realize that they can afford self-restraint.

They can afford it because Mr. Truman's defeat is assured. Two factors alone would have assured his defeat—one the defection of the right in the Southern States, and the other the splitting off of the extreme left with Henry Wallace and the Communist manipulators. Many other causes are at work but there is little point in discussing them.

We are living in a perilous interregnum. It will endure for more than nine months. Mr. Truman might have decided at some point after November, 1946, to demonstrate the inherent weakness of our constitutional system by resigning in favor of a Republican, which would have been perfectly possible and legal under the Constitution. The Advertiser

HE APPARENTLY never seriously considered that course, taking even the suggestion as a slur on his courage and integrity. So we see him standing before a Congress that has repeatedly ignored and repudiated him. The vote of no confidence in November, 1946, has echoed again and again in Congress, and the world knows it as well as we do here at home. Montgomery, Ala.

Self restraint is, to be sure, a rare virtue. The temptation at this point to dance on the corpse of the Democratic Party is understandable. This kind of interregnum invites the excesses of victory, and the Republican regulars have waited a long time. Thurs 3-18-48

After 1930, poor Herbert Hoover was caught in the same trap. In my opinion he never even approached an adequate plan for curing and checking the depression. But if he had had the most perfect and far-reaching plan in the world, the Democrats riding high in the House would have thrown it out. And one of the rebels was John Nance Garner, who has today become such a hero of the ultra-conservatives. Thurs.

In 1931, the crisis of depression threatened the entire nation. Banks and factories were shutting down and food was rotting on the farms while millions were hungry. The crisis this time is, if anything, more grave. It is the threat of a war that might be avoided by steady, firm resolution and a broad show of unity. The war that threatens can last for years. It can cost infinitely more in precious lives and treasure than the last holocaust.

3-18-48

RESTRAINT is needed above all to stop the warfare now going on between the executive and legislative branches of the government. The Republican invasion of private and confidential functions of the executive branch is producing chaos. This is not government, this business of deliberately pillorying conscientious public servatns and demanding access to private documents. It is anarchy.

The dark threat across the world should be enough in itself to induce a reasonable self-restraint. But there is another consideration which, while less important, has a bearing on our conduct at this time.

From the screams of outraged virtue that rise up, one would think Mr. Truman was the first product of machine politics in the United States. You get the strange impression that a machine never existed before Pendergast took over Kansas City.

In pursuing Mr. Truman—and the baying of the pack in full cry is not a pleasant sound—we may want to forget that you and you and you and I made the machine possible by our indifference to and contempt of politics—or because the machine served our own private and profitable interests. The Advertiser

Machines, Republican and Democratic, have been a too familiar feature of the political landscape. The Penrose machine in Pennsylvania was no aggregation of angels. Montgomery, Ala

The victory snake dance, if it goes on through the next nine months, can do incalculable harm. Self-restraint is not a luxury because the Republicans can so well afford it. And the need for it is so desperate.

But He Won't Submit Own 10-Point Plan; Hits Anderson Move

McGrath Urges Party To Repel Onslaught; Refers To Reds, GOP

By J. W. DAVIS

WASHINGTON, March 11.—(AP)—President Truman said Thursday that if Congress wants some suggestions from him on how to phrase civil rights legislation, he will be glad to oblige.

But he made clear at a news conference that he isn't going to submit any draft of a bill to carry out his race relations proposals. They have stirred many in the South to anger.

Mr. Truman explained that Congress never feels very happy about the executive branch of the government submitting detailed legislation. Then he added the remark about supplying suggestions if asked.

In another political phase of the news conference, the President opposed the tentative steps Secretary Anderson has made toward leaving the cabinet to run for the Senate from New Mexico.

He said he expects to see Anderson Friday. He told a questioner that he hopes Anderson will stay in the cabinet, that he would oppose his leaving. He said Anderson has done an excellent job.

Mr. Truman declined to expand on his own candidacy for presidency. He said he thought Democratic Chairman McGrath had stated the case thoroughly in announcing Monday that Mr. Truman would accept the nomination.

Quoted Correctly

McGrath quoted him correctly, he added. Fri. 3-12-48

This brought a laugh because Mr. Truman had just a moment before denounced a columnist for quoting him as having said New York Jews are disloyal. That was "a lie out of the whole cloth," the President said.

Still another political point came up in a discussion of Communism and China. Mr. Truman said that there are a great many liberals in China who are not Communists.

These liberals do not believe in government from the top as Communists do, he said. A reporter asked if there weren't similar differences between U. S. liberals and Communists.

Same difference, Mr. Truman replied.

Meanwhile, Chairman McGrath said the Democratic Party is under vicious attack, and must strike back hard.

He told a rally of Democratic leaders that critics have centered on President Truman and have "a super effort under way to discourage Democrats."

Not At Dixie Leaders

"It is being viciously pursued," he added. The Advertiser

McGrath's words at the closed door session were relayed to newsmen by Publicity Director John M. Redding. He said McGrath, in naming sources of opposition, was referring to Communists and Republicans, not Southern Democrats.

"He told them," Redding said, "that we are in the middle of a world crisis, a struggle for leadership, and the stakes are high. He told them to get out and tell the people about it and the attempts to discourage party members." Montgomery Ala

Mayor David L. Lawrence, of Pittsburgh, and Frank McHale, of Indianapolis, reported there was "some discussion" of the President's civil rights program, which has angered many in the South. Fri. 3-12-48

Also, Mrs. Lennard Thomas of Montgomery, Ala., told a reporter she expects "to bring it up for full discussion later."

"I'm against it," she said. "I'm for the South."

The conference is to run through Friday; it was called to discuss convention plans.

Some Southern political leaders are talking of pulling their delegations out of the convention if it nominates Mr. Truman on a platform backing his civil rights program. Montgomery Ala

McHale and Lawrence saw Henry A. Wallace and his third party as a positive menace. Both recommended that the Democrats "go after" the former vice president. The Advertiser Fri.

As for civil rights, McHale said he thought most of those at the conference felt that "civil rights have been a part of the constitution for a long time, and if we're going to hold ourselves up to the rest of the world, it's time we did something about it." 3-12-48

Southern politicians were still circling the White House like Sioux menacing a covered wagon. A lot of the hallooing after Harry Truman's scalp came from men who simply enjoyed listening to the echo, but last week the President heard one statement which hurt. Alabama's Senator John J. Sparkman, former Democratic whip of the House, and hitherto an ardent Truman supporter, demanded that the President remove himself as a candidate.

"There is no use hiding our heads in the sand," cried the Senator. "People in the South are so bitter . . . that they will never accept him as a candidate. I wish very much that he would sense the situation and withdraw." He predicted that the Democratic Party would be "cut to ribbons" in November if Truman were its standard bearer, and urged the nomination of General Dwight D. Eisenhower.* The President, who had firmly announced his candidacy a fortnight ago (TIME, March 15), made no comment.

Last week the President also:

¶ Directed all executive agencies to refuse both Congress and the courts access to confidential information gathered in loyalty investigations of Government employees. They'll Hear Report On Civil Rights Proposals Drawn Up By Southerners

Sat. 2-28-48

By The Associated Press

Gov. Preston Lane of Maryland has summoned Southern governors to meet March 13 in Washington for a committee report on President Truman's civil rights program.

Lane, chairman of the Southern Governors Conference, called the meeting yesterday at the request of the committee headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina. 2-28-48

The Committee, appointed Feb. 9 at Wakulla Springs, Fla., was given 40 days by the conference to prepare a report on the civil rights proposals which have caused so much rage in the South.

Two Georgia congressmen, Cox and Preston, yesterday asked for a special session of the State Legislature to take positive action against the proposals.

THEY RECOMMENDED that Georgia follow the lead of Gov. William Tuck of Virginia, who has asked the Virginia Legislature to bar President Truman's name from the November ballot. The

Such legislative action, however, would not be necessary in Georgia, where state presidential electors and vice presidential electors are free to vote for whom they choose. They are named by the party and appear on the ballot under the party name, not the party's presidential nominee. News

There also is no provision by law for inclusion of presidential and vice presidential candidates on general election ballots in Arkansas, Alabama, Florida and South Carolina.

If the president's name is barred some other Southern states, however, would have to change existing regulations. Birmingham, Ala

IN LOUISIANA, a state law requires Democrats to support their party nominee. Tennessee, Kentucky and North Carolina laws require that presidential and vice presidential candidates be printed on ballots. 2-28-48

Is Harry Truman's word worth anything? At the Chicago convention four years ago the Alabama delegation turned the tide against the nomination of Wallace for Vice-President in spite of the fact that Jim Folsom wanted him. I remember the events of that convention and I remember the hours before Alabama turned the tide for Truman:

Senator John H. Bankhead, Governor Chauncey Sparks and Ed F. Taylor, delegates at large visited Mr. Truman. They talked to him about his attitude toward the South. They knew Wallace's attitude because he had openly stated his desire to end white supremacy in the South.

"I will never forget our interview with Truman" said E. F. Taylor of Montgomery, a delegate at large to that convention. "I wanted to be certain of his attitude towards the South. So, in the conference, I asked him;

"'Senator if you are named vice-President what will be your attitude towards the South and her traditions? The Advertiser

"My Grandfather wore the Confederate Gray and my mother was a Southerner. I will always cherish the South and be her friend and ally,' was Truman's answer. Montgomery, Ala

Later, I remember Senator Bankhead coming to a meeting of the Alabama delegation just before the fateful step was taken to throw the vice-Presidential nomination to Truman. "He will do boys, he is at heart for the South and has given us his promise."

Now we find Truman against the South. We find a few Southerners saying they are for him in spite of his going back on his word with the argument that the Marshall Plan must be adopted. Of course if the Marshall Plan is adopted, it will be by the votes of Republicans who control the Senate and House in Washington. Truman's influence with Republicans is as potent as that of Stalin or Henry Wallace and not more so. And he influences only a handful of Democrats in Congress. Fri 3-12-48

Frank Kent Criticizes Those Who Predicted Truman's Resignation

The Courier

Louisville, Ky.

Sat. 3-13-48

By FRANK R. KENT

IN THE last few days the shape of things politically in both parties has changed very much—so much, in fact, as to leave a number of our most eminent journalistic and political forecasters, prophets and prognosticators looking rather foolish. That is, they would look foolish if anyone checked up on them—which very few do. 34a(1)

For example, there were the "authoritative" predictions concerning Mr. Truman. Dismayed by the situation, it was declared the President was on the point of withdrawing as a candidate to succeed himself. If he did not do so immediately, it was asserted, important "party satraps" intended to tell him personally in "no uncertain terms" that for the good of the party, the country and himself he must step aside; that unless he did so, the National Committee heads would resign; that other disagreeable, not to say disastrous, things would happen to him.

The quiet Truman statement of his candidacy at least has affected a return to the realities. Chief of these, of course, is that there never was any alternative to Mr. Truman's nomination. For better or for worse, the Democratic party is stuck with him. Both he and it will have to make the best of that. All of which has been plain from the start. For the President to have withdrawn, voluntarily or under pressure, not only would have been a craven act but an admission of Democratic Administration failure so complete as to make winning impossible.

The Courier-Journal

Louisville, Ky.

Few Men Are Eligible

Concededly, Mr. Truman has many deficiencies but he cannot be coerced and he does not lack courage. His present position is the only one a decent man who values his self-respect could take. Any other would have made things worse all around, because there literally is just no one to whom the so-called "satraps" could have turned. The Eisenhower suggestion was patently absurd, and a review of the Democratic governors, Democratic senators, Democratic Cabinet and Administrations fields reveals no available man. Nor in the field of private enterprise is there any figure equipped with the following, the record and the personality essential to the job.

Undeniably, Mr. Truman has lost much political ground in the last month. However, it seems timely to recall to the loud-mouthed gentry who still want to sweep him up in the corner and strike a match, that right after the Republicans gained control of Congress in 1946, his prestige and popularity were fully as low as today. At that time a Democratic senator, with considerable journalistic and political support, vociferously demanded that he resign. Yet, in six months Mr. Truman had rebounded to a point where he was running ahead of all presidential aspirants in the popularity polls and the sponsors of the retirement idea appeared extremely silly. Probably this will not happen again, but clearly it is a possibility. In politics, as in baseball and bridge, the rule is always play for the error. In the next nine months there is plenty of room for quite a lot of Republican errors. Sat. 3-13-48

Roosevelt's Combination Falls Apart

It is true that disintegration of the combination that supported Mr. Roosevelt three times seems well advanced. That is not altogether Mr. Truman's fault. It was unavoidable because it was an incongruous, illogical and utterly unprincipled combination, put together by slick and unscrupulous men. It worked wonderfully in one campaign but it would not have worked in 1940 or 1944 save for the war. It is falling apart now, though Mr. Truman (mistakenly, many think) has appealed to its constituent parts on the same policies and along the same lines as his predecessor. Organized labor is lukewarm. The Northern Negroes are no longer a unit. The conservative South has really rebelled; the Communists and radical groups are with Mr. Wallace. Mr. Truman has not held them together but there is not the slightest basis for the belief that any other man in his position could have done better.

The Courier-Journal

Once the country got over its Roosevelt infatuation and the unrestrained use of the public funds and Federal patronage as cement to keep this combination together was ended, it was inevitable that the combination should crumble and inevitable that the Democratic party should suffer. The idea that the combination could be continued indefinitely was never one seriously entertained by the more practical men who helped form it. Any calm review of the facts compels the conclusion that it was Mr. Roosevelt who really wrecked the party, not Mr. Truman. If the latter is defeated, certainly there will be nothing disgraceful nor discreditable about it. A consoling thought is here offered. More often than not in our history the better man has been beaten for the Presidency and some of the best very badly beaten. There are many worse things. Louisville Ky

GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

Will Truman Get Out of the Race?

The Constitution Atlanta, Ga Fri. 3-26-48

WASHINGTON—The Administration's reversal of its position on the petitioning of Palestine causing President Truman as much of a political headache as the threatened Southern revolt.

Since the announcement was made of the change in policy on the troublesome Palestine question the wires have been kept hot with protests to the Democratic National Committee. Sen. J. Howard McGrath, the National Party Chairman, is reported to have been informed by a number of big city Democratic leaders that it will now be impossible for Mr. Truman to carry any of these past strongholds of the party.

From New York, Chicago and Los Angeles the word is the same. A revolt of liberal voters in these key Democratic cities is now threatened in addition to the Southern revolt already under way. Fri. 3-26-48

Top officials at Democratic National Headquarters here are being told there is not a chance of the party ticket winning in these cities, if it is headed by President Truman. Accepted at its face value, that means the Democrats will have to write off the important States of New York, Illinois and California, with a combined vote of an even 100 in the electoral college.

In a tight election the Democrats would need at least two of these big States to win. To lose all three would foredoom them to certain defeat.

As a result, new pressure has been added to the movement for having Mr. Truman step aside and open the way for the coming Democratic National Convention to name another candidate for President. A growing number of party leaders are convinced that therein lies the only hope of the Democrats in the November election. The Constitution

It is too early yet to say whether the movement will succeed. At the moment there is no indication that the White House has been sufficiently impressed. The only word that has been forthcoming from sources close to the President is that his plans have not been changed by the series of unfavorable developments.

In other words, he still stands on the announcement recently made by Chairman McGrath that he will be a candidate for renomination. Atlanta, Ga

Nevertheless, it is coming to be recognized now for perhaps the first time that there is a real possibility of Mr. Truman eliminating himself. It is still nearly four months before the Democrats meet at Philadelphia in July and what he does may depend on events between now and then. Fri 3-26-48

Suggestions are being made privately by responsible party leaders that a group of Mr. Tru- s friends in Congress go to see him for a et discussion on the subject. If party leaders t it up to him coldly and in a friendly way, e are reasons to believe he would be guided their advice.

Supporting this view is the fact that Mr. Truman came up through the practical school of politics. It would not be as difficult to convince him that his defeat was inevitable, for example, as it was former President Hoover in 1932. And certainly if he should become convinced of this, he could have little desire to make himself the victim of defeat. Fri 3-26-48

As to who the Democrats might name in the possible event of the President's self-effacement, the belief is general that the man who lends himself more to a party victory is Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. The Constitution

No one knows whether the popular military hero is a Republican or a Democrat. No one seems to care. Nor is it known for sure whether he would accept the nomination if given to him. He has tended to remove himself definitely from consideration. Yet he stands out s the most likely choice, [illegible] the President step aside.

It may be the [illegible] hope of Democrats for victory next Fall. Atlanta, Ga.

Washington Calling

WASHINGTON.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN and the [illegible] close to him are busy putting [illegible] public and private assurances that [illegible] man in the White House has no intention of removing himself from the political scene by renouncing the Democratic nomination at Philadelphia. They say he will stick to the end, come what may.

But what is happening both here and out in the country makes it possible—yes, probable—that the decision will be taken out of his hands. The professional politicians are moving in to save what they can of the party organization, including their own claims in bankruptcy on what is left of the Democratic machine.

That is the real meaning of the talks that have gone forward quietly here and in New York and Chicago. Speculation turns on a respectable ticket that would best hold together what is left of the party. Montgomery, Ala

Democrats on Capitol Hill in touch with dissidents out in the country are talking in terms of Senator Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, for President and House Minority Leader Sam Rayburn, of Texas, for vice-President. Or the order might be reversed, with Rayburn in the No. 1 place and Lucas in No. 2. Fri. 3-26-48

In this there is no hope of victory. Repudiation of the President by his own party would be too bi[illegible]dicap to overcome. The campaign would be comparable to that waged in 1924 by John W. Davis, who was nominated after the Democratic Party, in the Madison Square Garden convention of that year, had all but destroyed itself over Al Smith, the Ku Klux Klan and the Catholic issue.

THE candidates would give a respectable imitation of a campaign, doing it as cheaply as possible since, naturally, large contributors would not be flocking in to volunteer donations. In this way utter disaster, threatening dissolution of the party, would be averted. As the gloomy professionals cast up the score, that is about the limit of their hopes.

Two events brought about the grim fact-facing sessions of the past week. One was the outright reversal of the Palestine partition decision. That produced open revolt in New York and Chicago, where the Jewish vote is a vital factor. Fri.

The second event was the defection of Alabama's two senators, Lister Hill and John Sparkman. This was like a sudden lightning flash revealing the extent and the depth of the Southern revolt.

Hill and Sparkman are both liberals, both men of integrity. They had announced that they would support the President. But the ground-swell of revolution back home made that impossible.

This, plus the situation with respect to the delegates to the Democratic convention and the Democratic electors to be chosen in the Alabama primary. Of 28 candidates for electors to go to the electoral college and cast Alabama's 11 electoral votes in November, 22 had pledged that they would not cast them for Harry S. Truman. Thus if Hill, running for delegate to the Philadelphia convention, were pledged to Truman, he would be committed to a candidate who could not receive the vote of his state.

Surveying the gloomy scene, the party's professionals realized that Mr. Truman might go down to a defeat as sweeping as that of Alf Landon in 1936. GOP Candidate Landon carried only two states, Maine and Vermont. 3-26-48

IF THE tide of Southern revolt continues at the present flood, Mr. Truman seems likely to lose all of the states south of the Mason and Dixon line with the exception of North Carolina and possibly Florida. Gov. Millard Caldwell, of Florida, has said that he will do everything he can to prevent Mr. Truman's nomination but, failing to prevent it, he will not lead a move to deprive Candidate Truman of the state's electoral vote.

The Southern states would accept a Lucas-Rayburn ticket. They would, in fact, accept almost any other Democrat than the present occupant of the White House.

Thus, by sidetracking Mr. Truman, the Democrats would carry the solid South. They might pick up other scattered states, particularly if the Republicans go back to William McKinley for their candidate. They might save congressional seats in cities which would otherwise go down in the general ruin.

The presidency is a powerful office in more ways than one. But whether the present President could head off such a move, if and when it takes final and definite form, is highly uncertain.

Jess Edwards Says Truman Sold South To Buy Northern Votes

The News Birmingham, Ala

Tues. 3-16-48

Lashing out at President Truman and his "civil rights" proposals, Brighton's Mayor Jess Edwards today charged the president with "selling us into disorder and local self-government into the discard to buy votes north of the Potomac."

Edwards, former Jefferson County legislator and candidate for Democratic delegate from the Ninth District, declared he did not propose to bolt the party "but to save it from treason, stultification and ingratitude."

34a(1)

"I have always been and propose to remain a Democrat," said Edwards, in outlining his position as delegate aspirant. "By that, I mean loyalty to the only party in American history which stands for local self-government and freedom from federal dictation in local affairs. I am determined to do what I can to save that party from imminent betrayal."

"Mr. Truman's message to Congress of Feb. 2 was aimed directly at the South," asserted Edwards. "There is no demand anywhere for federal laws of that nature to discipline Northern people. It is to satisfy the South haters, radicals and revolutionaries centering around Wallace's third party movement." 3-16-48

EDWARDS EMPHASIZED it not only is against our interest but against the public interest that these groups and their objectives should be invited into the Democratic Party, influence our platforms and determine our choice of candidates.

"They belong in a minority party of aliens, discontents and people incompetent to administer representative government," he added.

"The South recognized and threw Wallace out in Chicago in 1944. It was directly responsible for that result and for Truman's selection as vice president and thus for his present position. The Truman program is based on ingratitude, panic and petty selfishness."

Birmingham, Ala

THE MAYOR SAID Mr. Truman is not betraying the party principle of respect for local custom and local self-government because of any increase in inter-racial misunderstanding or because of newly-gained qualification by colored people in the South for participating in our local governments. He pointed out that there has been steady progress in racial betterment and understanding.

"Over one-third of the payroll in Birmingham is received by Negroes from gainful employment," pointed out Edwards. "In the whole world there is no such example of free association between people with the distinctive philosophies and aptitudes of different races as there is in the South." The News

EDWARDS ASSERTED that "it is a brutal thing for Mr. Truman, in these critical times, to raise the issue of segregation and provoke public discussion of the reason why segregation is an imperative condition to our peace and welfare."

Edwards said "I will not vote for a Republican nominee or lend aid and comfort to the Republican Party." But he added that if it became necessary, he would seek to have this state's delegation join with Democrats from other Southern states to disclaim action of the Philadelphia convention, release our electors from any implied obligation to vote for Truman and throw the election into the House of Representatives. 3-16-48

Truman Silent Over Protests Of Southerners

KEY WEST, Fla., Feb. 26—(AP)—President Truman began today what may be his last extended vacation before the 1948 presidential campaign. Thurs. 2-26-48

He relaxed at his favorite vacation spot—the naval submarine base here—after a Caribbean trip which carried him to the largely Negro Virgin Islands.

There was no word from the temporary White House at the Commandant's house of reaction to the trip, which came while Southern Democratic governors and congressmen were protesting his civil rights proposals to Congress.

These proposals include poll tax

Wallace Says Truman Talk 'Prejudice'

NEW YORK, March 19—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace said Friday night President Truman "appealed to prejudice, because he could not answer us with reason," when he "attempted to brand as 'Communists' those who support our fight for peace."

"Millions of Americans who stand firmly opposed to his (Mr. Truman's) policies know that they are not Communists and they will not be frightened into accepting militarism because someone calls them Communists,' Wallace declared in a radio talk (MBS).

The speech was his second on consecutive nights in reply to the President's two addresses on St. Patrick's Day.

In a New York speech to the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, Mr. Truman had asserted he would not accept "the political support of Henry Wallace and his Communists."

The third party Presidential candidate said Mr. Truman "was trying to give the impression that it is only the Communists who disapprove of his policies of supporting Fascists, Kings and reactionaries around the world, that it is only Communists who stand for repudiation of the Truman Doctrine, that it is only Communists who fight his plans to draft our young men and militarize the country."

Roy J. Grimmett, Birmingham salesman and Ninth District Democratic National Convention delegation candidate, announced his platform today, declaring among other things, that he is against President Truman's civil rights stand and will oppose him for the nomination.

Grimmett, 32, said he would go to the convention unpledged and uninstructed. He asserted that the states should have the right to settle such problems as the civil rights program advocated by the president. Sat. Mon. 3-15-48

"I cannot support President Truman as the Democratic candidate," his announcement said. "But I am sure there will be some good Democrat who will look with favor upon our Southern problems. That is the man I will support and that is the reason I believe I should go to the convention uninstructed."

Grimmett criticized both Sens. Hill and Sparkman for what he said was their "two-faced" stand on President Truman and the civil rights measures. Mon. 3-15-48

"I do not see how they can come out for President Truman and be against his civil rights program." Grimmett declared.

Grimmett was graduated from Ensley High School and attended Birmingham-Southern College. He is an Air Corps veteran of the recent war and is a member of the American Legion. Also he is a Methodist.

The candidate stated that Democrats should settle their differences within the party and not by bolting.

"I have qualified as a candidate for elector because I believe in the duty of Southerners to do whatever they can to protect their country and their section from the attack upon constitutional government, which has been deliberately begun by President Truman," said Abernethy. Sat. 2-28-48

"It is my sincere hope that the National Democratic Convention will repudiate Mr. Truman. If Mr. Truman is nominated by the convention and if I am selected as an elector, I will not cast the electoral vote in my keeping for him or any other person who shares his views on so-called 'civil rights' legislation.

"If those circumstances arise, I will cast my vote for some distinguished and trustworthy Southerner who has proved through years of public life that he will not sell the South down the river for the sake of personal political advantage."

Rep. Norman Harris, Decatur, also a candidate for presidential elector, made a similar announcement Friday.

Meanwhile, Gov. James E. Folsom was promised at least one vote in behalf of his presidential aspirations. Atty. Nesbitt Elmore, Montgomery, a candidate for Democratic National Convention delegate, declared that if elected he would cast his "first vote" for the tall governor.

"As to any other vote I may cast at the convention," said Elmore, I shall be guided by the principles which Gov. Folsom advocated in his speech announcing his favorite son candidacy."

McCorvey predicted the state will send to the National Democratic Convention "unpledged delegates who will refuse to vote for Truman o rany other candidate advocating the civil rights bill."

McCORVEY MADE HIS PREDICTION yesterday at Shawmut at a joint luncheon meeting of governors and commissioners of the Alabama and Georgia Bar Associations.

"The South no longer is in the bag," declared McCorvey. "We people in Alabama and in the South just can't take this thing, and the time has come for us to stand up and fight."

He said he believed the South has a good chance of being the main factor in "putting a real Democrat in the White House, a man like Sen. George of Georgia, or Sen. Byrd, of Virginia.

"When the political bosses in the Democratic Party know the South means business, he continued, "they'll drop Truman and select a nominee the South can support."

TWO BIRMINGHAM MEN addressed yesterday's sessions, presided over by Howell Morrow, president of the Alabama Association, and Vance Custer, head of the Georgia bar. Judge William Logan Martin discussed the election and tenure of judges. Roderick Beddow explained the organization and working of an integrated bar which functions under legislative action.

In Montgomery it was announced that four more persons qualified for posts in the May 4 Democratic primary. They are: 2-28-48

Mayor Herbert Meighan, Gadsden, presidential elector.

Mitelle F. Noble, Montgomery, alternate convention delegate from the state at large.

Kenneth Cooper, Robertsdale, solicitor of the new 28th (Baldwin County) judicial circuit.

J. Sam Snoddy, Russellville, seeking to oust Congr. Carter Manasco, of the Alabama Seventh District.

How Truman Announced

34a(1) The Record

The President of the United States was blazing mad and shooting from the hip when Democratic Chairman Howard McGrath and Executive Director Gael Sullivan went in to see him earlier this week. They had expected to have a quiet talk over political conditions and warn Truman of growing revolt inside the party.

But they never had a chance.

Once inside the door, Truman said he was fed up with the lack of loyalty by certain party leaders. He blamed the southern revolt on Senator Byrd of Virginia and described Byrd as the "finest Republican in the Democratic party."

The two callers almost gasped at the vehemence of the tirade.

The President said he wanted his candidacy announced at once. He wasn't going to wait until the meeting of the Democratic executive committee scheduled for later in the week, he said, indicating that he didn't want to have it appear that he had waited for them to ask him to run. The Record

Turning to Matt Connelly, his secretary, who was in the room with McGrath and Sullivan, he asked his advice on the form of the announcement. Connelly suggested that McGrath announce it to reporters when they asked him what he had talked to the President about. Sat.

"Suppose they don't ask me," suggested McGrath.

"Even if they don't ask, you go ahead and announce it," insisted Truman. 3-13-48

Truman also leveled a blast at the "no-good columnist Drew Pearson" and congratulated McGrath for having issued a statement denying a Pearson report that he, McGrath, would like to resign as national chairman.

"It was the best thing you ever did," encouraged the President, adding that McGrath should issue a second blast against Pearson. (McGrath did so at 11:15 that night.)

Palestine Solution Still Possible

By this time, the President had quieted down somewhat, and McGrath had a chance to get in a word about Palestine.

"Come over here, Howard," replied the President, motioning to a big globe.

He pointed to a line on the map where the United States army had built a railroad north from the Gulf of Persia and explained that the Russians were out to get this rail line plus all of the Arab oil regions and the Eastern Mediterranean. At one time, Truman added, he thought the had the Palestine problem all settled, then things turned out differently.

"While I was in Florida I put a lot of time in on this," the President said, adding that he expected to come up with something right away. Columbia, S.C.

Reaching into the third drawer of his desk, the President took out a copy of the Palestine report prepared in part by Bartley Crum of San Francisco who visited the Near East with the Anglo-American Commission. Tr. march 13-48

"That's my bible," said Mr. Truman. Columbia, S.C.

He explained that he thought he had British Foreign Minister Bevin persuaded to put the Crum ideas on Palestine into effect, but that Bevin had backed out.

Note—The Anglo-American commission, which Truman referred to as the "Crum report," recommended a trusteeship for Palestine under the United Nations and urged that Britain continue its mandate until the trusteeship could be set up. It opposed any separate Jewish or Arab state, warning that such division would cause world-wide disorders. The report also asked for the immigration of 100,000 Jews into Palestine immediately, but urged that other countries also open their doors, since Palestine would not be able to hold all Jewish refugees.

Forgotten Vice President

McGrath had intended talking to Truman about a vice presidential running mate, and planned to suggest Senator Lister Hill of Alabama. He thought a southerner on the ticket would win back the South, and that Hill would also be liberal enough to suit the North.

Knocked off base by the vehemence of the President's tirade, however, McGrath forgot all about mentioning Hill's name.

TRUMAN

Truman made a speech against the Jimcrow system which is the bedrock of the Democratic Party's rule in the South. But the Democratic state governors have gathered to defy their party leader. Will Truman back up his nice words about Negro rights with decisive action against the Jimcrow governors? You can bet your last dollar he won't, and the governors know it despite all their hot talk about "secession."

Truman recently "ordered" the end of Jimcrow in the U.S. armed forces. But his own Secretary of Army Royall defied his orders, as did his Secretary of Defense Forrestal. And President Truman cagily pretended that he didn't see what was happening. He thus can garner credit as the big, brave foe of Jimcrow while his assistants—whom he could fire at will if he wanted to—make sure that Jimcrow remains.

Truman keeps on saying that he's a "liberal" and that the GOP is reactionary. He's right about the last all right. But Truman's false "liberalism" is beginning to smell so bad to the people that even his "we-will-love-you-always" followers among the backsliding pseudo-liberals are ashamed to mention his name at mass rallies.

Daily Worker New York, N.Y.

The Americans for Democratic Action, which was organized to act as a liberal "front" for the Democratic Party machine, has found Truman's name so unpopular that they now say they're firmly against Henry Wallace, but "not so firmly" for Truman. They are trying to pretend an "opposition" to Truman since they failed to sell their hero as a popular candidate. Also, the people are not swallowing the "lesser evil" hoax as avidly as the ADA had hoped. Tues 2-24-48

Every piece of election bait that Truman hands out to win the Wallace progressive vote only proves that the third party is the only practical challenge to the profiteers, militarists and war-makers in the land today.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Leak-Outs Will Hurt President

The News Birmingham, Ala.

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON — President Truman was talking to a prominent New York publisher the other day about Palestine. He was not merely talking; he was almost shouting.

Pounding his desk he used words that can't be repeated about "the—New York Jews."

"Those—New York Jews!" the president exclaimed. "They're disloyal to their country. Disloyal." Mon. 3-8-48

"Would you mind explaining that a little further, Mr. President?" interrupted the publisher, whose wife happens to be Jewish. "When you speak of New York Jews, are you referring to such people as Bernard Baruch? Or are you referring to such New York Jews as my wife?"

Truman glared, assured his visitor that he did not mean to include Baruch or the publisher's wife, then abruptly changed the subject.

This conversation is not an isolated case. There have been others, and they illustrate why it is that Truman has received so little credit for the position he has taken officially on Palestine, on civil rights, and for labor.

Ordinarily, Negro voters would be out shouting and drumming up votes for Truman as a result of his civil rights message. But too many times the president has talked to intimates about "the—niggers" in exactly the same way he talked about "the—New York Jews."

These conversations leak out.

Presidential Tangents 3-8-48

ONE OF THE MOST significant conversations to leak out was between Chester Bowles, then head of OPA, and President Truman in the early Winter of 1945-46 when there was still time to save price control.

Bowles, who saw clearly what would happen if price controls were taken off, told the president with great satisfaction that he had worked out a deal with the AFL and CIO not to ask for wage increases if price controls were continued. The News

He explained that if price controls were abandoned, organized labor was all set to ask for a series of big wage boosts, which in turn would lead to more price increases, more inflation, and another round of wage increases. Birmingham, Ala.

However, organized labor had agreed to a moratorium on wage increases if price controls were kept. Naturally Bowles expected Truman to be pleased. He wasn't. Instead, he launched into a tirade against labor leaders. Mon 3-8-48

"Those—labor leaders," he said. "You can't trust 'em. They're wrecking the country. There's only one you can trust and that's John L. Lewis. Aside from him I wouldn't trust any of those—labor leaders."

Naturally this conversation leaked back to Phil Murray of the CIO and William Green of the AFL. It didn't endear Truman to them. But, more important, it upset an agreement by which the present disastrous inflation could have been prevented—all because Truman lost his temper. Incidentally, it was only a few months later that Truman was cussing out John L. Lewis for tying up the entire nation with a coal strike. 3-8-48

In brief, more and more people have got wise to the manner in which the president tangents. He can send messages to Congress which read beautifully on paper, but, when it comes to carrying out those messages, it's all too apparent that Truman doesn't believe in them.

Secret Anti-Lynch Debate 3-8-48

REPUBLICANS HAVE been planning to take in Negro votes with their anti-lynching bill, but it looks as if they would have trouble with their own members, and three staunch Republicans—Reps. John Gwynne of Iowa, Frank Fellows of Maine and Edward Devitt of Minnesota—upset the GOP applecart at a closed door session of the judiciary committee. The News

Speaker Joe Martin and other GOP leaders had decided at a previous secret caucus to make the anti-lynch law applicable to crimes against property as well as persons. Also, they decided to approve Section 1 of the bill, a declaration of racial equality which Democratic foes claimed was a "political stump talk, aimed at further dividing the Democratic Party." Birmingham, Ala.

However, when the judiciary committee met behind closed doors, Gwynne and Fellows joined the Democrats in a close vote to delete Section 1. Mon. 3-8-48

"Let's confine this to an anti-lynching bill and leave out political stump talk, aimed at Southern states, which has no place in legislation," demanded Democrat Francis Walter of Pennsylvania.

GOP Rep. Clifford Case of New Jersey, the bill's author, contended that Section 1 was written on the advice of "experts," who felt that a preamble was necessary.

"I don't care who wrote it," persisted Walter, a Northern Democrat "It's inflammatory and doesn't belong in the bill."

Republican Devitt of Minnesota offered the motion to kill the "crimes against property" provision. This would have made it a violation of the anti-lynch law for two or more persons to conspire to injure the property of another. The motion carried over hot opposition from Republicans Case and John Jennings of Tennessee, who insisted that if it was wrong to lynch a man, it also was wrong to "wreck his store or his home." 3-8-48

"I submit again that this is irrelevant to the problem of preventing lynchings," broke in Walter of Pennsylvania. "This is either an anti-lynching bill or it isn't. Let's hew to the line."

The Republicans also had to accept defeat on a provision that federal grants-in-aid be withheld from any state if a town or community therein refused to pay a judgment to heirs of a lynch victim.

"A state would be penalized for lynching committed within its borders by out-of-state thugs under this provision," objected Democrat Fadjo Cravens of Arkansas.

"Could an appropriation for hot lunches for school children be withheld from a state where a lynching judgment is not paid?" inquired Fellows. Mon. 3-8-48

"Unquestionably," replied Walter. "Any type of grant-in-aid to the states would be affected." The News Birmingham Ala.

That ended the debate.

Mr. Truman Is Willing

The News

No one should be surprised at President Truman's statement that he would run for election if the Democrats nominated him. Mr. Truman has never been the man to quit under fire. One might go even farther and say that opposition tends to strengthen his determination.

Really, however, there was nothing else Mr. Truman could do. Announcement on his part that he would not accept the nomination would have been a declaration of political bankruptcy for him and for his party. The divisions within the party have greatly weakened it as far as 1948 is concerned, but Mr. Truman's withdrawal from the race would have been an open acknowledgment of defeatism from which the party could not have recovered this year.

Birmingham, Ala

Can the Southern rebels within the party prevent his nomination? It is extremely doubtful. While there is some dissatisfaction with President Truman's administration for one reason or another among Democrats throughout the nation, the South's particular cause for revolt is not generally shared. And none of the dissatisfaction elsewhere seems strong enough to lead Northern Democrats to take the obvious risk of throwing over their chances for success in November by rejecting Truman as the nominee.

What then will Southerners do who oppose the nomination of Mr. Truman but cannot prevent it? They have two choices. They can work for a civil rights platform plank which they can accept, which will not do injustice to honest feelings. Or they can break away entirely from the Democratic Party even before the nominating conventions are held. The News

The latter would not be the most sensible course, no matter how much the South may resent Mr. Truman's program of federal legislation on civil rights. For one thing, it is far from being clear that the majority of Southern Democrats carry their hostility to the Truman program to the point of being willing to cast overboard all chances of party success this Fall. Many Democrats among them Alabama's own Sen. Hill, regard loyalty to the Truman international program as of paramount importance.

3-10-48. wed

The best course is for all candidates for delegate to the party convention to make clear their attitudes on all the controversial issues. Then the voters can decide. They can make clear, by their ballots, whether they are against Truman under any circumstances, or would be willing to support him provided the party's platform was acceptable, or whether their loyalty to the party would extend even to sticking by him and the party regardless of its platform.

Mr. Truman's announcement that he will accept the nomination makes it all the more incumbent upon candidates for party posts to make known their stands.

Bow Out, Truman Told For Harmony's Sake

The Constitution

34a(1)

Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 3-20-46

WASHINGTON, March 19—(UP)—Sen. Sparkman, Democrat, Alabama, demanded Friday night that President Truman step out of the Presidential race and suggested that Democrats nominate Gen. Eisenhower as a candidate who could restore party harmony.

Sparkman's statement came as a surprise because he had been considered an Administration stalwart who would try to ease the North-South Democratic split on the civil rights issue.

The Alabama Senator was Democratic Whip of the House before he moved up to the Senate Chamber in November, 1946. He served as Chairman of the Democratic National Committee's Speaker's Bureau in the 1946 campaign.

Sparkman said he had abandoned hope that the North-South split could be healed with Mr. Truman at the head of the party.

"I had clung to the hope that we could work this out inside the party, but it has become increasingly apparent that we will not be able to win with Mr. Truman as a candidate for the nomination," he said. The Constitution

"I hope therefore, that to preserve harmony President Truman will not be a candidate and that delegates to the convention might be free to look elsewhere for a nominee." Atlanta, Ga.

Sparkman said he didn't know whether Eisenhower would be available but suggested that "he'd be a good candidate." He said there are "other good candidates" but did not name them. 3-20-48

Sparkman said he was issuing the statement in line with his "great desire to preserve party harmony and to go before the country with a united front in November." He said he hoped for a "free and open" Democraic convention at Philadelphia his Summer which would adjourn with a united party.

Sparkman's announcement was a blow to Administration supporters who had hoped that Southern applause for Mr. Truman's broadside attack on Henry A. Wallace and Communism this week presaged a return of party unity.

There was little sign, however, that the South was willing to let its civil rights revolt die.

Truman's Tough Position

With President Truman's return to Washington, it may be assumed that Democratic leaders will engage in even more intensive talks respecting the acute and dangerous crisis within the party.

It is now apparent that sentiment in the South in opposition to the president's civil rights recommendations is a formidable obstacle to victory next November. Moreover, certain Southern leaders, apparently gathering confidence, seem to be concentrating now on blocking even the nomination of Mr. Truman.

The talk of leaving the party entirely seems to have been almost entirely superseded by consideration of plans for defeating Mr. Truman either at the convention or in the electoral college.

National Chairman McGrath is reported to have suggested a return to the 1944 platform declaration on civil rights—which was merely a generalized declaration for greater equality of justice and opportunity—as a possible compromise. As to this, Jack Bell, of The Associated Press writes: "The Southerners were reported to have said, in effect, that this would be fine, but not enough. What they want, they made it plain, is for Mr. Truman to take himself out of the November election picture. As one Southerner put it to a reporter, Mr. Truman has become a "personal issue." 3-7-48

Would that issue be built up entirely on the civil rights recommendations? What about the other grave national and international problems facing the nation?

The extent to which those Southern leaders campaigning against Mr. Truman represent the mass of the voters of the South is yet to be made evident. Certain it is that the vast majority of Southerners do strongly oppose the president's proposals. But whether their opposition is such as to lead on to uncompromising opposition to Mr. Truman and defection from the party, if he is nominated, is another matter. The News

Many things can still happen to affect this situation. It may be that some sort of compromise will yet be reached.

Though the Republicans seem to be pushing civil rights action intensively now, with a view to deepening the Democratic split as much as possible, it still may turn out that Congress will not produce much in enacted legislation before the convention.

But, assuming that certain measures were passed—and with overwhelming Republican backing—just what point would there then be to talk of bolting to the GOP? Birmingham, Ala

There are many factors that will surely provide strong resistance to the sidetracking of Mr. Truman. It does not seem likely that he would, at this point, be willing to step aside, thus acknowledging in effect that he had made a crucial mistake. It is to be remembered that his recommendations were based on a report returned by a group of Americans of high standing. Mr. Truman would have strong backing for a stand based on a conception of high principle. Sun

As for the political considerations, a Democratic retreat from Mr. Truman now obviously would have many far-reaching disadvantages. 3-7-48

Dixie Governors Speed Home To Push Anti-Truman Fight

Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 3-15-48

WASHINGTON, March 14.—(AP)—Dixie governors hurried homeward Sunday, to line up support in their announced fight to prevent the nomination and election of President Truman to a four-year term. 34a(1) Montgomery, Ala

"We must act in unison," said Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi. Mon. 3-15-48

A group of Southern governors threw down their challenge to the president yesterday. They called on their people for a last ditch fight against the president if he persists in his demands for anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, anti-job discrimination and anti-Jim Crow laws. Advertiser

President Truman already has said he stands pat.

Governor Ben Laney, of Arkansas, told a reporter that "Truman is not acceptable to our people, even if he repudiates his support of the civil rights program." He predicted that Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina "are certain to go Republican" if Mr. Truman is the Democratic nominee.

To Call Parley

A meeting of Southern Democratic party leaders, called by state chairmen of the Southern States, may be the next step in the anti-Truman campaign.

Governor Wright, before boarding a train for Jackson, said he will discuss such a suggested meeting with leaders in his own state and other Southern States.

National Democratic Chairman McGrath called the governor's proposals "undemocratic."

Gov. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, rejoined today: "His views don't coincide with ours right now." Mon. 3-15-48

As the Truman-Southern rift seemingly widened, the president heard his pastor say today that Christ was rejected because he stood by his convictions.

Without directly mentioning the president's civil rights program, Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, of the First Baptist Church, told his morning congregation, which included the president:

"Jesus would have been gladly received had he been willing to compromise his convictions and accommodate himself to the prevailing ideas of his day." 3-15-48

Asked by a reporter if his sermon referred to the present political situation, Dr. Pruden replied he would not like to "speak on it definitely." But he added:

SPLINTER PARTY

Editor, The Advertiser:

I am in sympathy with the move to prevent the nomination of Truman, on account of his so called civil rights program, but I am not in accord with the effort to disrupt the Democratic Party, either in Alabama or elsewhere. I am not convinced that Truman wants the nomination. The Advertiser

Our party differences can be settled at the national convention by wise counsel and constructive compromise. That is the way it should be. Every great settlement in history is a compromise. The peace that follows every war is a compromise peace. The constitution of the United States is a bundle of compromises. Party policies and issues always derive from a compromise of individual and group ideas and principles. Montgomery, Ala.

Custom and long practice have the sanction of law. By such practice and custom we have implemented the constitutional electoral college plan of electing the president. We have developed the two-party system. Nominations for president are made by the two great national conventions, Democratic and Republican, and the electors who are elected by the people always vote for their respective nominees according to their party affiliations. Under this development either the Republican or Democratic nominee is always elected president. Sat. 4-3-48

The party issues will be determined and the candidates nominated by a majority vote of the delegates of the national conventions soon to be held at Philadelphia. This is proper and approved American democratic procedure and practice under our elective system of representative government.

If any of the delegates are not satisfied with the choice of their respective conventions, should they withdraw and nominate their own candidate thus promoting the "splinter party" system? To do so would only tend to confuse and divide the country, even as Henry Wallace and his gang are now trying to do. It is the "splinter party" system as developed in Europe that has contributed so much to totalitarian government and the spread of Communism on that unfortunate continent. Our two-party system works and has preserved our way of life, but it requires party discipline and party loyalty.

Our next president will have a rocky and difficult road to travel. The American people should be united behind him. We will have to forget our party bickerings and strife in trying to deal with Russian aggression and in our undertaking to achieve and maintain world peace without war, and this must be done—with the aid of Russia, if possible—without her if necessary. We must make democracy work, otherwise the alternative is Communist or Fascist tyranny and slavery.

'Boss' Crump Says He'll Vote Democratic But It Won't Be For Truman

By The Associated Press

Mississippi Democrats threatened outright secession from the Democratic National Convention Monday unless national leaders backed down on President Truman's civil rights program.

And the flames of revolt burned brightly elsewhere in the South—Even as Mr. Truman touched off a separate political row, with the Republicans this time, by accusing his opponents of playing politics. 3-2-48

Top developments in the Dixie rebellion against the President's program of anti-poll tax and other civil rights legislation were: Tues

1—Mississippi's delegates to the National Democratic Convention were asked by the party's state executive committee to walk out unless the party reverses itself on the civil rights issue.

The Mississippi committee laid plans for a fund-raising drive in its campaign to bring the campaign to the "average man." Delegates plan to sell buttons at $1 each to "loyal Democrats." The buttons bear a picture of Thomas Jefferson and the wording "States' Rights Democrats."

2—The South Carolina Democratic Executive Committee opposed the nomination or election of Mr. Truman, and charged the national party with "contemptuous political betrayal" of the South.

3—Memphis Democratic Chieftain E. H. "Boss" Crump said: "I will vote for a Democrat next November but it will not be Truman." Crump added: "In his scheming cold-blooded effort to outdo Henry Wallace and Governor Dewey of New York for the Negro vote, he (Truman) has endeavored to reducing the south to a country of crawling cowards." Advertiser

Laney Hits Plan

4—Arkansas Governor Ben T. Laney formally proposed that the South repudiate the Democratic Party's national leadership. His letter was addressed to the Southern Governors Conference which will meet in Washington March 13. Montgomery, Ala.

5—In Virginia, a bill which would bar the name of Mr. Truman or any other candidate from the state ballot ran into heavy opposition on the floor of the legislature and was sent back into committee. 3-2-48

It was in Virginia, and with this bill, that the legislative phase of the anti-Truman rebellion began last week.

6—Rep. Williams (D), Mississippi, proposed in the House that Mr. Truman "gracefully withdraw" from the 1948 presidential campaign. Tues.

There was Republican political activity Monday, too.

General Douglas MacArthur was brought back into the limelight as a possible presidential candidate. And Senator Vandenberg (R), Michigan, sought to keep his own name out of the Nebraska presidential primary.

Asked For Opinion

The GOP-dominated House foreign affairs committee asked MacArthur to give his opinion on several Far Eastern questions—by coming here from Tokyo or, if he preferred, by writing the committee a letter.

The invitation came after the Hearst newspapers, in front page editorials, said: "If we are to save ourselves from our own follies, we must draft General MacArthur for the presidency." 3-2-48 Tues

The President told a news conference at his Key West, Fla., vacation spot that election year maneuvering "is having a very bad effect" on the settlement of "both foreign and domestic problems." Advertiser

Tartly, Republican National Chairman Carroll Reece said the President's remarks on politics "should be taken very seriously because there is no more eminent authority on that subject than Mr. Truman." Montgomery, Ala.

Chairman Eaton (R), New affairs committee said the administration has produced "a background of prejudice, stupidity and ignorance by its various foreign aid proposals.

WHO KNOWS WHAT? Advertiser

"We have one party downtown (at the White House) in power which doesn't know how to handle the situation and another party on the hill in a like evil condition," Eaton declared. "The leadership leads up North one day and down South the next." 3-2-48

In a like vein, Senator Tues. Taft (R), Ohio, said of Mr. Truman's statements: "It seems to me the Democrats are balking him more than the Republicans." Montgomery, Ala

Both Taft and Eaton were referring to the Southern Democratic "revolt" against the President's civil rights proposals.

Mr. Truman talked gingerly around that situation--including the Virginia move to bar the names of candidates, his own name among them if he runs for a full term--from the state ballot next November.

Every state has the right to make its own election rules, the President said, so long as everybody has a chance to vote.

Senator Hill (D), Alabama, voiced support of the President, however, while opposing the civil rights program. "I shall continue to fight such federal measures," he said in announcing that he wants to be a delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention. Advertiser 3-2-48-Tues Montgomery, Ala.

Presto!

Wed 3-10-48

Now it is established that President Truman—that "nice man," as even Big Jim Folsom admits—is going to run again; and he starts in trouble. Out of natural compassion, and out of an old, sentimental affection for the Democratic Party, I am moved to look at his troubles and tell him how to get in there and win.

His main trouble is, of course, that he has to run against Franklin D. Roosevelt. This is unavoidable, and will continue to be the hard lot of Democratic candidates for the Presidency till memory runneth to the contrary. What Mr. Truman should do about it is to try to make no statements orally that can be made in writing, and otherwise to dodge personal comparison as much as possible. At the same time, he should never forget that the finest words Mr. Roosevelt left with the American people are: "There is nothing to fear but fear itself."

Perry

Mr. Truman's No. 2 Problem

This brings us to Mr. Truman's No. 2 trouble, which we may call Henry Wallace, but which really is the common animalistic fear of dying prematurely. The people do not want war and are sick of the threat of it. A large part of their FDR nostalgia relates in the conviction that we would not be in this miserable dog-and-cat fight with Russia if FDR had lived.

What Mr. Truman can do about it is to put the U. S. back into the UN wholeheartedly and with both feet; go and talk sense with Stalin (or send somebody who can); and chuck a shoe at the State Dept. every time it starts howling on the back fence. It probably would be a good idea to make Henry Wallace Secretary of State, call an honest-to-goodness disarmament conference, and ditch UMT.

Wed. 3-10-48

This would repatriate in the Democratic Party at least nine million of the 10 million votes that otherwise are going to the Third Party—including a lot of good Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians, who have nothing to fear but fear, and plenty of it, ever since we jumped over the UN into Greece, Turkey, Iran and China.

Mr. Truman's No. 3 trouble is the rebellion against basic democratic principles within the Democratic Party itself, called the Southern Revolt. Everybody knows that this whoop-to-doodle has been stirred up by privileged politicians who don't want free elections. The answer to it is free elections.

3-10-48

Where He Will Find The Answer

Mr. Truman will find the answer spelled out on page 56 of Ellis Arnall's book The Shore Dimly Seen. In 1945 when free elections were proposed in Georgia, the local politicians screamed bloody murder. But when Gov. Arnall showed he had constitutional authority to allow the people one free election on the issue itself, and meant to use it, the politicians fell over each other welcoming the free elections law. "These former opponents became publicly the most fanatical converts to the wisdom and virtue of the measure."

The Southern Revolt is aimed at making trouble for Truman at the convention. If Mr. Truman will go to work on the U. S. Senate and get the Federal free elections law on the statute books right away, the wind will go out of the Southern Revolt.

At the convention, the Dixie boys will be falling over each other to cheer the wisdom and virtue of a long-overdue reform that will have exposed them to the scorching will of 10 million never-before voters in their states and districts.

3-10-48

The whole business for Mr. Truman is as simple as that. Of course, he ought to call back Chester Bowles to fight the cost of living, and touch a few other things deftly. But peace outside and democracy at home are his trump cards, if he is running to win.

O'Mahoney Boomed To Run With Truman

By MARQUIS CHILDS

WASHINGTON.

THE TALK about substituting another candidate for Harry S. Truman is regarded by most realists in the Democratic Party as just talk. However desirable it might be in theory, they see two major objections to such a move.

No. 1 is the difficulty of getting agreement between the two wings of the party on a substitute with super voting appeal. A liberal, backing the civil rights program and thereby appealing to the mass vote in the cities of the North, would be rejected by the South as vehemently as Mr. Truman.

Montgomery, Ala.

No. 2 is the unanswerable objection. By the very act of selecting another candidate, the Democrats would be confessing failure so publicly as to make the chances of the substitute practically nil.

Therefore, even though new handicaps seem to pile up each day, realists in the party are thinking in terms of a revised win-with-Truman strategy. They advocate at the outset a frank recognition that New York is hopelessly lost.

Tues 3-2-48

THEY would build confidence around two factors—the West and a vice-presidential candidate who is a recognized liberal of high integrity. On both points the answer they come up with is Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming.

O'Mahoney has a long and impressive record of battle for the small business man and against monopoly concentration of power. His vigorous demand for action when the steel companies raised their price the other day was in line with what he has been preaching for a decade or more. There would be no question of the Communist or fellow-traveler taint. O'Mahoney is a Roman Catholic who believes passionately in free enterprise, seeing in monopoly the real threat to freedom.

Tues. 3-2-48

The realists believe the fact he is a Catholic would add to his appeal. The senator was born in Chelsea, Mass., and has a claim on loyalties in that state with its high proportion of Catholic voters.

O'Mahoney is popular in the West. He has frequently been one of the most effective and articulate spokesmen for western interests. Arrangements are now being made for him to speak at a large dinner meeting of western Democrats in Los Angeles.

WHEN YOU come down to figuring electoral votes, the totals west of the Mississippi are depressingly small. O'Mahoney's own state of Wyoming cast three electoral votes in 1944.

Adding the votes of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming, you get a total of 32. Compared to New York's 47, this looks like small potatoes.

Assuming that the South does not go all the way with its revolt—a dangerous assumption at this moment—you add 32 to the South's 127 and come out with 159. The remaining 107 necessary to elect would have to be found elsewhere.

While this sounds like the logic of despair, there is nevertheless a certain logic in it. It is the logic of concentrating on those areas where the rewards promise to be greatest rather than dissipating money and energy in a shotgun attack.

Tues. 3-2-48

THIS HAS caused great resentment, according to reports reaching here. It contrasts with 14 years of Democratic generosity and encouragement to western project and it comes at a time when the West is eager to develop its own independent industry.

Several of the Republicans swept in on the '46 tide have proved to be ultra-conservative or reactionary. This is particularly true of Senator Harry P. Cain of Washington and Senator Henry C. Dworshak of Idaho.

Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon contributed to the GOP sweep in the West by a whirlwind tour in the Fall of '46. Following a consistently liberal line, Morse is now at odds with his party and the recipient of deliberate snubs from the leadership. This will be a factor in the coming campaign.

In making official appointments, President Truman has given more recognition to the West than any president in a long time. So, the argument of the realists goes, concentrate in the area where there is something to build on.

FRANKLIN, JR., AND ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT'S STATEMENTS urging the Democrats to substitute Eisenhower for Truman bring things into the open with a vengeance. They openly reflect the Northern leaders' discontent with the president, which is almost as strong as the disaffection of the South. Franklin's action is a clear signal of the trend within the labor movement, which young Roosevelt always follows very closely. And it is the president's second blow from this quarter. It can now be disclosed that Mrs. Roosevelt has also written the White House, offering to resign from the American delegation to the United Nations.

The two actions were entirely independent. Franklin Roosevelt notified his mother that he was going to issue his statement but is emphatic that he did not ask her advice. Mrs. Roosevelt wrote the White House some days previously, while her son was in the hospital.

Birmingham, Ala.
Tues 3-30-48

In her letter she declared her strong opposition to President Truman's recent Palestine policy and especially the withdrawal of support for partition. She said she feared this disagreement on principle on an issue before the U. N. might make it embarrassing for her to continue on the United States delegation. She therefore made her resignation available to the president. His decision in the matter has not yet been taken, so far as is known.

Heavy Blow

Birmingham News
Tues 3-30-48

THERE CAN BE NO DOUBT that if Mrs. Roosevelt does retire as a United Nations delegate, it will be a blow to Truman almost heavier than her sons' remarkable declaration for Eisenhower. With the possible exception of Gen. Eisenhower himself, no living American commands the respect and affection of so many fellow citizens as Mrs. Roosevelt. Her wise and steady opposition to Henry A. Wallace's Communist-dominated third party movement has had a deciding influence in holding innumerable American progressives out of the Wallace camp.

Her resignation from the U. N. delegation, if accepted, would inevitably be taken as a tacit indication of the same feelings which Franklin and Elliott Roosevelt have publicly expressed. Nor will this interpretation be far from correct. The Democratic dovecotes in Washington have been hideously fluttering, for some time now, over the entirely authentic report of a warning from Mrs. Roosevelt to one of the most eminent New York leaders. Mrs. Roosevelt frankly said that, as of today, she could no longer support the president.

Birmingham, Ala.
Tues 3-30-48

Furthermore, it must also be understood that Franklin Roosevelt would not be acting, if it were not for a curious and unknown factor in the situation. A number of other Northern and labor leaders have wished to do precisely what Franklin Roosevelt has done. They have been temporarily dissuaded by the Democratic chairman, Sen. J. Howard McGrath, on the ground that opposition to Truman at this juncture will influence the delicate Italian election. The same argument has been used to moderate, for a while, the fury of the Southern revolt. In short, the Roosevelt statements are only the first major trickle through a dam that shows every sign of bursting.

Another trickle is already in preparation. The Americans for Democratic Action, leaders of the non-Communist progressive opposition to Henry A. Wallace, are about to take a preferential Eisenhower-Truman poll of their membership. The outcome is regarded as a foregone conclusion.

Labor For Eisenhower

BUT THE TRUTH IS THAT THE REBELLION against Truman and the sentiment for Eisenhower are both gaining everywhere. Fear that the rank and file may otherwise desert to Wallace has caused the leaders of the labor movement to become strongly and quite frankly Eisenhower-minded. Among the Northern politicians, big Ed Flynn, of New York, is known to be disaffected; Jake Arvey, of Chicago, has hinted at his disaffection in public, and the situation is not much better in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The flames in the South have long been visible.

Altogether, despite the president's optimistic statements, there is now only one factor working for Harry S. Truman's renomination. With the single exception of Gen. Eisenhower, no candidate exists on whom the various wings of the Democratic Party—South and North, labor movement and conservatives—can easily unite. Eisenhower has taken himself firmly out of the race.

There is one thing, however, which is worth remembering. When he talked to friends in the long and difficult months before issuing the letter killing his candidacy as a Republican, Eisenhower always made two points. First, it was presumptuous to reject the presidency in advance. Second, if the nation had need of him in an emergency, he would be ready to serve. It is on the second point that the Democrats for Eisenhower build their hopes.—©.

Governor Calls on Virginia To Bar Truman From Ballot

The Times

New York, N.Y. Fri. 2-27-48

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 26—Gov. William M. Tuck asked the Virginia General Assembly today for legislation to keep President Truman's name off the state's Presidential ballot next November.

To an applauding joint session of the Assembly, the Governor urged a new election statute which would leave Virginia Democrats free to secede from the national party. Under terms of the bill recommended by the Governor—and regarded as certain of swift approval by the legislators—Virginians would vote only for Presidential electors.

The electors would be bound to support the national party nominees, unless they were directed by a state party convention to vote for some other candidate in the electoral college.

There was little question in this predominantly Democratic state that Democratic party electors would be chosen in November. There was equally little question that these electors would not vote for Mr. Truman if he is the Democratic nominee.

States' Rights Issue Raised

The Times New York, N.Y.

The Virginia Governor attacked President Truman's civil-rights program as an "unwarranted" intrusion on states' rights and said that "iniquitous influences" behind the President could lead to dictatorship. He particularly denounced the proposed Fair Employment Practices Commission and said the FEPC bill would create a "ready-made Gestapo for the harassment and persecution of the successful business man." Fri.

Legislation recommended by the Governor also is designed to keep Henry A. Wallace from becoming a candidate in the Old Dominion. Only those political parties the candidates of which appeared on the 1944 ballot would be permitted to place the names of electors on next November's ballots. 2-27-48

This limitation would keep the competition down to Republican, Democratic, Socialist, Prohibitionist and Socialist-Labor parties. The Governor conceded that if one of the three minor parties organized behind Mr. Wallace in Virginia, electors could be listed for the former Vice President. 2-27-48

A bill embodying the Governor's recommendations was introduced a few moments after he finished his address. The Tuck administration holds an overwhelming majority in the Assembly, and legislative leaders were confident that the bill would go through with scarcely a dissenting vote. The 140-member legislature includes only ten Republican members.

Governor Tuck urged other Southern states to follow Virginia's lead.

George Unwilling to Run

ATLANTA, Feb. 26 (AP)—A proposal that Senator George, Democrat, of Georgia, seek the Democratic Presidential nomination was received cooly by the Senator.

Correspondence with Mr. George on the subject was disclosed today by Georgia's comptroller general, Zack D. Cravey. The Times

Mr. Cravey had written that many Georgians, opposed to President Truman's civil-rights program, thought Mr. George should seek the Democratic nomination.

Mr. George replied:

"While I strongly disapprove of the whole course taken by President Truman so far as the civil-rights program goes, I do not wish to be drawn into any contest."

Mr. Cravey is a strong supporter of Herman Talmadge, who earlier this week received control of Georgia's Democratic party from the State Supreme Court. Mr. Talmadge declined comment on the George proposal. Fri. 2-27-48

In his letter to Mr. Cravey, Mr. George expressed the hope that "many of the crackpots, extreme left wingers and uplifters will leave the party, and will be able to reorganize a true Democratic party." New York, N.Y.

Florida Judge Assails Truman

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Feb. 26 (AP)—A Circuit Court judge charged today that President Truman was willing "to destroy Southern civilization" in order to get the Northern Negro vote.

Judge Miles W. Lewis made the statement from the bench to some judymen who were being dismissed. The judge's attack on the President's civil rights program was considered unusual under the circumstances. The Times

The veniremen applauded when Judge Lewis said he did not intend to vote for Mr. Truman. He asked the jurymen to do likewise.

"It is perfectly apparent to me," the judge said, "that Truman and his supporters are willing to destroy Southern civilization. Since he takes that attitude, he is no longer worthy of our vote and support." New York, N.Y.

Judge Lewis said:

"I've tried to do my duty, and I said long ago as a judge of this court that all persons, regardless of religion, race or creed, look alike to me. Fri. 2-27-48

"The time has come when the people of the South must stand together and preserve our institutions."

Bar Anti-Lynching Vote

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—House Democrats blocked Judiciary Committee approval of anti-lynching legislation today by invoking a rule which prohibits a committee from sitting while the House is in session.

Already approved by a three-to-two vote in subcommittee, the measure is sure of approval in the full committee in which thirteen of the twenty-five members are Republicans and only four of the Democrats are from the south. The vote may come next week.

Favorable committee action would pave the way for the early consideration in the House itself which Leo Allen, the Rules Committee Chairman, has promised.

As Southern members of Congress, continuing their protests against President Truman's civil-rights message, blocked action today, there were these other developments:

Senator Harry F. Byrd of Virginia rose on the Senate floor to endorse "without reservation" the special message by Governor William M. Tuck to the Virginia Legislature calling for the selection of unpledged Presidential electors.

Proposal Made and Attacked

Representative Clare E. Hoffman, Republican, of Michigan, proposed to Southern Democrats in a House speech that they enter into a "deal" with the Republican party. He said the South could support a Presidential ticket mutually agreeable in return for having civil-rights legislation killed by the Republican Congress.

Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic National Chairman, refused comenmt on Governor Tuck's action, but attacked Mr. Hoffman's proposal. He contended that it was a "dishonest and contemptible bid for voes" that actually was an "insult to the honor of the South."

"I hope," the Senator said, "that, whatever the future may hold in store for the Democratic party, we shall argue our differences, both among ourselves and between ourselves and the Republican party, on the basis of our convictions and beliefs, and not by any 'deals' concluded with 'but you have to deliver this time.'"

Mr. Hoffman opened his speech, which brought chuckles but no apparent serious consideration either in Republican or Democratic ranks, by noting that there were many newspaper accounts of indignation in the South at the President's proposals.

Talking to Republicans in the House, he said the situation seemed ripe to "make a deal" with the Democrats from the South.

Argues for Deal by GOP

"I do not believe in deals ordinarily," he said, "but I would not be averse to doing it if out of it we could get something for the good of the country.

"Then all right. So I suggest to my Republican friends that we tell these Democrats that, if they will vote for the selection of a Republican, that they and we get together in some kind of conference, agree on someone agreeable to both an delect him, that then we will kill this program of civil rights and satisfy you folks from the South.

"He will make a deal, but you have got to deliver this time."

Senator Byrd, entering Governor Tuck's message in the Congressional Record, said it contained "no weasel words," and that it 'may well become historic and of deep significance as affecting the existing political conditions in our Republic."

The Truman Tangents

The Record Columbia, S.C. Mon. 3-8-48

WASHINGTON—President Truman was talking to a prominent New York publisher the other day about Palestine. He was not merely talking; he was almost shouting.

Pounding his desk he used words that can't be repeated about "the —— New York Jews."

"Those —— New York Jews!" The President exclaimed. "They're disloyal to their country. Disloyal."

"Would you mind explaining that a little further, Mr. President?" interrupted the publisher, whose wife happens to be Jewish. "When you speak of New York Jews are you referring to such people as Bernard Baruch? Or are you referring to such New York Jews as my wife?"

Truman glared, assured his visitor that he did not mean to include Baruch or the publisher's wife, then abruptly changed the subject.

This conversation is not an isolated case. There have been others, and they illustrate why it is that Truman has received so little credit for the position he has taken officially on Palestine, on civil rights, and for labor.

Ordinarily, Negro voters would be out shouting and drumming up votes for Truman as a result of his civil rights message. But too many times the President has talked to intimates about "the —— niggers" in exactly the same way he talked about "the —— New York Jews."

These conversations leak out.

Presidential Tangents

One of the most significant conversations to leak out was between Chester Bowles, then head of OPA, and President Truman in the early winter of 1945-46 when there was still time to save price control.

Bowles, who saw clearly what would happen if price controls were taken off, told the President with great satisfaction that he had worked out a deal with the AFL and CIO not to ask for wage increases if price controls were continued.

He explained that if price controls were abandoned, organized labor was all set to ask for a series of big wage boosts, which in turn would lead to more price increases, more inflation, and another round of wage increases.

However, organized labor had agreed to a moratorium on wage increases if price controls were kept. Naturally, Bowles expected Truman to be pleased. He wasn't. Instead he launched into a tirade against labor leaders. The Record

"Those —— labor leaders," he said. "You can't trust 'em. They're wrecking the country. There's only one you can trust and that's John L. Lewis. Aside from him I wouldn't trust any of those —— labor leaders." Columbia, S.C.

Naturally, this conversation leaked back to Phil Murray of the CIO and William Green of the AFL. It didn't endear Truman to them. But, more important, it upset an agreement by which the present disastrous inflation could have been prevented—all because Truman lost his temper. Incidentally, it was only a few months later that Truman was cussing out John L. Lewis for tying up the entire nation with a coal strike. Mon 3-8-48

In brief, more and more people have got wise to the manner in which the President tangents. He can send messages to Congress which read beautifully on paper, but, when it comes to carrying out those messages, it's all too apparent that Truman doesn't believe in them.

Secret Anti-Lynch Debate

Republicans have been planning to take in Negro votes with their anti-lynching bill, but it looks as if they would have trouble with their own members, and three staunch Republicans—Representatives John Gwynne of Iowa, Frank Fellows of Maine and Edward Devitt of Minnesota—upset the G.O.P. applecart at a closed door session of the judiciary committee.

Speaker Joe Martin and other G.O.P. leaders had decided at a previous secret caucus to make the anti-lynch law applicable to crimes against property as well as persons. Also, they decided to approve section 1 of the bill, a declaration of racial equality which Democratic foes claimed was a "political stump talk, aimed at further dividing the Democratic party."

However, when the judiciary committee met behind closed doors, Gwynne and Fellows joined the Democrats in a close vote to delete Section 1.

"Let's confine this to an anti lynching bill and leave out political stump talk, aimed at Southern States, which has no place in legislation," demanded Democrat Francis Walter of Pennsylvania.

G.O.P. Representative Clifford Case of New Jersey, the bill's author, contended that Section 1 was written on the advice of "experts," who felt that a preamble was necessary. The Record

"I don't care who wrote it," persisted Walter, a northern Democrat. "It's inflammatory and doesn't belong in the bill." Columbia S.C.

Republican Devitt of Minnesota offered the motion to kill the "crimes against property" provision. This would have made it a violation of the anti-lynch law for two or more persons to conspire to injure the property of another. The motion carried over hot opposition from Republicans Case and John Jennings of Tennessee, who insisted that if it was wrong to lynch a man, it also was wrong to "wreck his store or his home." Mon.

"I submit again that this is irrelevant to the problem of preventing lynchings," broke in Walter of Pennsylvania. "This is either an anti-lynching bill or it isn't. Let's hew to the line." 3-8-48

The Republicans also had to accept defeat on a provision that federal grants-in-aid be withheld from any state if a town or community therein refused to pay a judgment to heirs of a lynch victim.

This was stricken out on a motion by Democrat Walter, again supported by G.O.P. Congressmen Gwynne and Fellows.

"A state would be penalized for lynching committed within its borders by out-of-state thugs under this provision," objected Democrat Fadjo Cravens of Arkansas.

"Could an appropriation for hot lunches for school children be withheld from a state where a lynching judgment is not paid?" inquired Fellows.

"Unquestionably," replied Walter. "Any type of grant-in-aid to the states would be affected."

That ended the debate.

Mr. Truman's Challenge

The News
Birmingham, Ala.
Mon 3-1-48

To the Editor of The News:

Having taken a slap at the South, and the sovereignty of every state in his message to Congress, assailing state rights and scrapping the Constitution of the United States, the president then hied to the Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner and proceeded with a 30-minute harange versus the "privileged few." Before him was a reserved empty table, about him were dozens of empty chairs—silent protest of Southern senators and congressmen against his political blunder against the South, its people and all of its traditions.

Shortly thereafter, and with alacrity, according to the press, he boarded the "Sacred Cow" and betook himself to distant lands. I quote a press dispatch: "He will visit San Juan . . . with Puerto Rico's first native-born governor, Jesus T. Pinero, and with William H. Hastile, Negro governor of the Virgin Islands. Three Negro reporters were included in the group of newsmen accredited to cover the president's trip from Washington. This was the first assignment of Negroes to a presidential trip of this nature."

The president informs us that "this is a year of challenge." I propose to meet that challenge "head on." The president deliberately threw down the gantlet and challenged the South, and we shall, with all the power we possess, with all the strength and courage that is ours, and with all the light and intelligence that God Almighty has given to us, bravely and courageously meet that challenge. The News

We need a statesman at the present time as the chief executive of this great nation, and we do not need a politician who belongs to a political ring and machine in the president's native state. I think now there is a good chance that Harry Truman will be re-elected President on a wave of common sympathy. Certainly the volume of brickbats and dead cats heaved his way since the statement of his civil rights program is building him up an impressive claim on this count, assuming the average American voter to be a rather kindhearted cuss like the people who live next door to all of us. Tues. 2-17-48

We must appreciate the appeal of a man every vital hand is against, poor devil. The voter is apt to think nobody can be that bad. The danger of this sort of rationalization is, of course, that, in making excuses for Truman out of fellow feeling, the voter may minimize the promises the President has made – and would be encouraged to make if his Gallup rating continues to reflect the tolerance of which I am speaking. Since his repudiation of Henry Wallace's famous Madison Square Garden speech—as weaselish and uncourageous an act as recent history records—apparently gave no lasting turn to the public stomach, Mr. Truman may be the more easily persuaded that he can back up on his civil rights statement without serious consequences to himself or his party. This would be unfortunate for the Nation whether or not Mr. Truman personally should be forgiven for this.

The fact is that the chances for the reforms he called for in his civil rights note to Congress grow with the vehemence of the political attack upon Mr. Truman, the candidate, from all sides. That attack itself is education with regard to the issues, and the very competitiveness of it feeds the forces in Congress on which enactment of the reform program depends. PM New York, N.Y.

The more violent the noise of the poll-taxers, the firmer the reform stand of progressive Democrats must be to counteract it, for the party's sake; and the more the reforms are put forward as Democratic reforms, the more the Republicans must seek credit for their side. It happens that, with Congress in session, the credit can be won by either side only by legislative action.

Meanwhile, with party harmony the Democrats are hoping against hope that in his Jefferson-Jackson Day speech Thursday night Mr. Truman on the highwire can pull off the miracle of pedaling backward and forward on civil rights at the same time. Republican Chairman Reece is plastering the press with the news that the GOP holds a cozy right on every civil rights proposal the President has made. As Mr. Reece tells it, abolition of the poll tax, anti-lynch legislation, fair employment statutes, etc., were well-known Republican goals before Harry Truman was born. PM New York, N.Y.

These maneuvers prove that the issues Mr. Truman has stirred up have a virtue in them that politicians are compelled to recognize in an election year. What Chairman Reece has yet to explain is why his party, so long in power in the past and in control in both Houses of the legislature at present, has not yet gone beyong lip service to the civil rights program it professes to cherish. His attempt to place the blame on the filibusters is shoddy when only the past is considered. When applied to the present Congress it must be judged by legislative tests that fall due in the session now sitting. Tues. 2-17-48

Mr. Truman's next test comes Thursday night. The best that can be hoped is that he will not recant his own civil rights statements and throw himself again, as after his runout on the speech he approved for Wallace, on the public mercy. Conceivably, the public might again say: "Well, poor Harry," and give him grace, but the event would pull Harry's chestnuts from the fire only at the risk of abating the fire itself, whose heat alone melts the way for the civil rights program among the coldly calculating politicians in this year's legislative halls.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Leaders Troubled By Truman Race

BY DREW PEARSON

WASHINGTON—It has now been nearly four years since Democratic Party moguls met at a secret White House dinner and persuaded Franklin Roosevelt to accept Sen. Truman, of Missouri, as vice president. They knew then, of course, that the chances of F. D. R.'s living through the next four years were slim. The News

Present at that dinner were Ed Flynn, of the Bronx; Mayor Ed Kelly, of Chicago; Mayor Hague, of Jersey City, and Bob Hannegan. Today almost the same Democratic moguls convene at the White House. And despite this week's announcement that Truman is a candiate, they still hope they can deftly dislodge from office the man they put in. 3-11-48

They know in advance that this will not be easy—for two reasons: (1) the embarrassment of breaking the news to Truman; (2) finding another candidate who can win.

Two years ago all this would have been easy. At that time Truman himself was saying he did not want to be president. But no man likes to retreat under fire, and Truman's ideas on this are well illustrated by the staunch support given such friends as Ed Pauley and Brig. Gen. Wallace Graham when they were under fire for speculating.

However, the party moguls have promised each other privately that they will be hardboiled and tell the president the truth—namely, that the chance of victory with him at the head of the ticket is nil.

If they do this, then finding a candidate to take Truman's place will not be easy. Chief Justice Fred Vinson, of Kentucky, would be acceptable to the South, but wouldn't arouse too much enthusiasm in the North. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas is a great administrator and would have the advantage of probably persuading Henry Wallace to withdraw. Henry Kaiser would be popular in the West, with labor and with small business men. Birmingham, Ala.

However, it takes time to build up any candidate. And while it's not too late, the sooner the Democrats get busy, the better their chances. Thurs. 3-11-48

That's the problem facing Democratic moguls as they walk into the White House today.

Progressive Candidate Hails 'Success' of Tour and Notes Unsegregated Rallies Were Held—65,000 Pay $78,000 for Tickets Here

The Times
Sat 9-11-48

By JAMES A. HAGERTY

New York, N.Y.

Speaking at the postponed "Yankee Doodle" rally at Yankee Stadium, Henry A. Wallace, Progressive party candidate for President, declared last night that the significance of his recent campaign through the South lay in the fact that he had been able to hold two dozen completely unsegregated meetings there, not in the violence to which he had been subjected.

Though the attendance fell short of the 70,000 expected by the sponsors of the rally, the American Labor party and the national and state Wallace for President Committees, the spectators, according to a police estimate, numbered about 50,000 when the meeting was opened, with the Rev. John Howard Melish, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, delivering the invocation.

It was said officially that 65,000 tickets had been sold by yesterday afternoon. With admission prices ranging from 50 cents for the bleachers to $3.60 for the box seats, it was estimated that the tickets averaged about $1.20 each, bringing the total of ticket sales to $78,000.

In his speech, Mr. Wallace said that the throwing of eggs and tomatoes and the sight of men, women and children with faces contorted by hate furnished dramatic proof of the known existence of deep prejudice and fascism in the southern states. He predicted that progressive Southerners would triumph ultimately and that the South would be "freed from the shackles in which it has been held by huge corporations with headquarters in Wall Street."

Sat 9-11-48

Mr. Wallace charged that it was the owners of the mines, mills, great plantations and newspapers that incited violence in the South.

"They don't personally engage in lynching either free speech or human beings, just as they don't personally engage in fighting the wars from which they profit," he said.

"But they inflame the passions of others. They have had others do their dirty work. But the ranks of new recruits for their dirty work are narrowing as more and more men and women of the South see how they have been victimized by prejudice—as they see how it has profited the few and brought misery for themselves and their neighbors."

Other speakers at the rally included Paul Robeson and Alfred J. Fitzgerald, co-chairmen of the Progressive party; Representatives Vito Marcantonio and Leo Isacson, O. John Rogge, candidate for Surrogate of New York County and chairman of the New York State Wallace-for-President committee; Ada B. Jackson, Lee Pressman and Irma Lindheim, American Labor party Congressional candidates, and William S. Gailmor, radio commentator.

WALLACE PROPOSES VAST AID FOR SOUTH

Says Government Should Give the Region a Billion a Year, Taxing Absentee Owners

New York, N.Y.

By The United Press.

DURHAM, N. C., Aug. 29 — Henry Wallace today proposed a Marshall Plan for the South under which the Government would give the South $1,000,000,000 a year for four years to aid its industry and agriculture.

The Progressive Party Presidential candidate, speaking at a state convention of his party here, said his "Southern Plan" could be financed by taxing corporations profiting from southern farms, labor and factories.

"I am confident that the people of the South will get more benefit from a billion dollars advanced in this manner than the people of Europe are getting from ten billion dollars of political handouts under the wasteful foreign programs of the bipartisans," Mr. Wallace declared.

Mon 8-30-48

Tonight's speech before the North Carolina progressive party was the fourth in Mr. Wallace's whirlwind tour of twenty cities in seven southern states. He left New York by plane this morning, spoke in Norfolk, Suffolk and Richmond, Va., and flew here for a reception and the convention.

In his seven-day tour Mr. Wallace will not speak at any meeting where white persons and Negroes are segregated and will refuse to stay in hotels which refuse accommodations to his entire staff of seven because it includes one Negro, a woman secretary.

Mon 8-30-48

Laws in some Southern states prohibit non-segregated public meetings. But both Wallaceites and local law officials in some places were side-stepping the issue by agreeing to call Mr. Wallace's audiences "private" gatherings. Under this interpretation, segregation laws will not be applicable.

Mr. Wallace proposed that his Marshall Plan for the South be split evenly between industry and agriculture and be in addition to Federal aid for schools, hospitals, homes, health and social security.

"It is no handout I propose," he said. "There is a simple method to finance it, and the return in increased production, in health and happiness will repay the investment over a few years."

The former Vice President proposed that the $500,000,000 for Southern industry be used to build factories planned, owned and controlled in the South and paying high wages, and to help build homes and machines. The $500,000,000 for agriculture, he said, should be used to help "the honest and industrious Southern farmer establish a sound and solvent agriculture."

"Each year billions, literally billions of dollars of profits are drained from Southern labor in field and factory by large corporations owned by wealthy and powerful men who reside elsewhere," Mr. Wallace declared. "We progressives propose only that the Federal Government, through taxation of these riches, return to the people of the South a part of the stolen fruits of their toil and sweat."

Mr. Wallace said he was not proposing that the Federal Government establish outside bureaucratic interference in Southern affairs "as the bipartisans interfere in the affairs of Europe and Asia."

"I propose this measure," he said, "as part of a program to end —once and for all—outside interference in Southern affairs. This real outside interference in their affairs cannot be ended by the people of the South themselves. It must be ended by a new national party in the North and South dedicated to uprooting the most powerful monopolies which today control both old parties."

In his first speech today, in the Norfolk Municipal theatre and auditorium, Mr. Wallace accused both Republicans and Democrats of hypocrisy in their advocacy of civil rights legislation.

Mon 8-30-48

"The record shows that in their actions not only have they failed to extend civil rights to those who have been denied them, but they have tried to impose new restrictions on existing rights," he said. "They have proclaimed loyalty orders and engaged in witch hunts.

"Far from extending civil rights, the Trumans and the Deweys and their political machines have lent themselves to programs for curbing existing civil rights."

In his Richmond speech, the candidate denounced the Thurmond-Wright States Rights ticket as "an invention to make the Trumancrats look liberal."

He declared that lawyers representing Eastern corporations were behind the Southern party which nominated Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for President and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for Vice President.

"The Dixiecrats are an invention to divert the people of the South from real problems to false ones, from high prices to hot words," Mr. Wallace said. He singled out Senator Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia for attack although Mr. Byrd, a Democrat, opposed the nomination of President Truman and has not switched his support to the Thurmond-Wright ticket.

"Byrd fights against Federal bureaucracy but his own 'political machine' rests on a greater number of office-holders per capita than any other state," Mr. Wallace said.

Mon 8-30-48

Audiences numbered about 1,[illegible]00 each in Richmond and Norfolk. About 90 per cent of each audience were Negroes.

About a 100 persons, virtually all Negroes, heard an address by Wallace in Suffolk at a meeting sponsored by the local Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers Union, CIO.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Aug. 30—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace was booed long and lustily at a ball park rally here tonight after being splattered with ripe tomatoes and raw eggs in three other North Carolina towns.

Atlanta, Ga

An estimated 2,500 persons—about three-fourths Negroes—braved intermittent downpours to cheer and jeer the Progressive Party's Presidential nominee.

In a continuation of the hostile reception he has received at nearly every appearance in the State, Wallace spoke with difficulty to the accompaniment of continuing boos and constant heckling.

"We are progressive," Wallace said, "because we put the man first."

A dozen uniformed policemen and numerous detectives patrolled the ball park to guard against any repetition of the egg and tomato throwing that took place at Burlington, Greensboro and High Point earlier in the day.

Miss Mary Price, the Party's Gubernatorial nominee, could not be heard above the boos and catcalls as she introduced the former Vice President.

Tues 8-31-48

Two separate chants of "Down with Wallace" and "We want Wallace" were started when he began to talk against big business.

Wallace, in his shirt sleeves with a raincoat draped around his shoulders, reiterated his often-voiced plan for peace.

Police at Burlington said they did not know who tossed the missles from a throng of 2,500 on the main street. After two attempts to complete his address, Wallace stepped into an automobile and drove off to Greensboro. Two tomatoes and one egg struck the former Vice President at Burlington.

The barrage at Greensboro was heavier when he sought to speak at the Guilford County courthouse. When a few missles splashed near him he smiled, but he turned angrily upon his audience when others struck him about the head and body.

Wallace spent last night in the home of a wealthy Negro at Durham and stopped at another Negro's home here tonight.

His non-segregation policy promised further repercussions after he leaves North Carolina tomorrow night following speeches at Charlotte and Asheville and smaller cities in between.

Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Conner of Birmingham, Ala., announced he has sent Wallace a copy of Birmingham's segregation laws. Wallace is scheduled for a talk there Wednesday afternoon. City ordinances provide for separation of whites and Negroes by "well-defined physical barriers."

At Jackson, Miss., Gov. Fielding L. Wright announced Wallace will have an escort of State Police there Thursday.

Wallace Pelted With Eggs, Fists Bang His Car in South

New York N.Y.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Aug. 30—Henry A. Wallace, his shock of gray hair stained with the yolk of eggs thrown by sidewalk hecklers, clashed in verbal tilts with angry crowds of Southerners on five occasions today as he continued his political tour.

The former Vice President displayed physical courage as he stood in the sun-drenched streets of four North Carolina towns and engaged in give-and-take discussions while he and his party were pelted with eggs, tomatoes, ice cream cones, peach stones and green peppers.

From the start of his automobile tor of the Piedmont area of this state today, Mr. Wallace was met by hostile audiences, and in the hosiery mill town of Burlington a crowd of 500 persons got away from police "control," banging their fists in anger against the cars of Mr. Wallace's caravan and forcing him to forego his street talk. Tues 8-31-48

As the day neared its end, however, the spectacle of the Presidential candidate of the Progressive party pleading for "a democratic chance to have my say" seemed to catch the sympathy of many Southerners and resulted in cries of "we may not like him but it's only fair to let him talk."

Throughout the day Mr. Wallace, coatless and with the stains of eggs and tomatoes marking the collar and sleeves of his shirt, marched coolly and smilingly through milling groups of men, women and children who jeered and shouted "Hey, Communist" and "Hey, nigger-lover."

Mr. Wallace sought to parry harsh words and menacing gestures with humorous thrusts, asserting several times to the crowds that "I don't mind a little good-natured throwing of eggs and tomatoes, but I'd much rather see that food being fed to children."

When informed that police in Greensboro had taken into custody a young man who allegedly threw an egg that broke against the back of Mr. Wallace's head. Mr. Wallace asked police officers in the vicinity to convey to the chief of police his request that the youth be released "because he really didn't know what he was doing." Tues 8-31-48

Mr. Wallace twice showed anger over developments on his trip. The first time was at Burlington, where he stepped close to several of his hecklers, shook an admonishing finger under their noses and shouted, "Remember that you are in the United States."

The second time was at a press conference, when he expressed a feeling of resentment over the stabbing of one of his youthful adherents at the Progressive party meeting in Durham last night.

President Assails Wallace Egging; Missiles Thrown Again in South

The Times New York N.Y.

Wed. 9-1-48

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31—President Truman denounced today the acts of rowdyism throughout North Carolina against Henry A. Wallace, his Progressive party opponent. As "a highly un-American business" and as violating the national spirit of fair play.

The President's sentiments on the subject were relayed to reporters by Charles G. Ross, White House press secretary, when he was asked whether Mr. Truman had expressed himself on Mr. Wallace's North Carolina reception.

"He expressed himself very vigorously," said Mr. Ross. "He said he thought the throwing of eggs and other missiles was certainly a highly un-American business and contrary to the American spirit of fair play. Mr. Wallace was entitled to say his piece the same as any other American." 9-1-48

President Truman discussed the Wallace reception in North Carolina later in the day with Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who said the chief executive might have something to say on the subject at his next regular press conference.

Mr. White expressed the opinion that "a small minority" had been responsible for the treatment accorded Mr. Wallace. He said the "decent people" of the South would deplore these outbursts of rowdyism by "an irresponsible Ku Klux element."

The Negro leader voiced the opinion in response to questions that Negro attendance at Wallace meetings throughout the South would not be reduced by the unfriendly demonstrations from whites.

"I don't think the Negro will be frightened," he said. "The Negro is not scaring easily these days."

He mentioned as a factor in the situation the presence of a million Negro voters throughout the South whose rights had been strengthened by the Supreme Court's decision in the "white primary case" as well as by a Federal Court ruling in South Carolina.

There were a great many Negroes, particularly war veterans, "who are not going to run any more," according to Mr. White. "They are tired of running."

Mr. White called on the President preparatory to his departure for Paris Sept. 13, for the meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations. He said his organization was one of thirty or forty sending consultants to the meeting.

Bogus Martyr

Wherever HENRY WALLACE has attempted to speak in North Carolina the type of reception he has received has been unvaried. He has been jeered and heckled so loudly that, in most instances, he has had to abandon efforts to speak. The egg and tomato throwing has, too, been the same. All of this establishes a definite pattern for which WALLACE's radical Progressive Party is probably responsible. In fact, the chief of police of Winston-Salem asserts that his men recognized known radicals as the leading hecklers in that city. If the party is responsible for what is happening, that makes HENRY WALLACE a co-conspirator—a self-seeker for the role of bogus martyr. The people of the South will be foolish if they let him get away with it.

He won't get away with it if loyal, decent-minded Southerners make it a point to stifle their curiosity and stay away from his meetings. That is the only sensible way of countering such an obvious undertaking. He and his backers thrive on abuse, and are depending on sympathy to win them some votes among those whose emotions generally determine decisions.

HENRY WALLACE has scheduled some speakings for the MidSouth. He will speak at Memphis. While he is in this area we hope that he will be permitted to go his cockeyed way without incident or unseemly behavior on the part of those who do not agree with him. Trouble is just what he is seeking, because he can make political capital of it in other sections of the country where exists all the political strength to which he can lay claim. Wed 9-1-48

The curest way to kill HENRY WALLACE as a political aspirant is to ignore him. If he is silly enough to let his own backers egg him that is his business. If his rowdy followers go too far, then the police are thoroughly competent to deal with them in legal manner.

Don't be a sucker for a bogus martyr!

WALTER WHITE VIEWS WALLACE WITH SKEPTICISM

The Defender

Sat. 9-25-48

THE New York Herald Tribune for Sunday, September 12 carries a very interesting article as a by-line of Walter White, Executive Secretary of the NAACP and my fellow columnist on this page. I am sure Walter will not object to my quoting him in my column this week because he recognizes the need for truth during this period of political evasions and the attempt of the communists to garner the Negro vote by screaming civil rights from the house tops. To carry on their campaign of racial deceit and political intrigue, they have engaged the services of Henry Agaard Wallace whom they propose for president of the United States.

I think Walter does a very fine job in analyzing Mr. Wallace as follows:

"In the light of his recent performance, Mr Wallace's previous record is distinctly disappointing and inexplicable. Lester Granger of the National Urban League has described him as "an eloquent protester" and "an accomplished denouncer." But Mr. Wallace's record on racial discrimination and segregation while he was Secretary of Commerce is almost totally bad so far as performance is concerned. Not only is there no record of Mr. Wallace acting to end discrimination, there is evidence, some of it detailed by Gardner Jackson in a recent issue of "The Atlantic Monthly," that Mr. Wallace blocked attempts of some of his subordinates to correct discrimination in those agencies.

A NOTORIOUS THEFT

"The outright theft by white plantation owners and landlords of parity checks from Negro tenant farmers under the Agriculture Adjustment Administration is notorious. C. B. Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager, included in grants to white sharecroppers and tenant farmers in the South funds to pay their poll taxes; he refused the same privilege to Negroes and admitted as much in a hearing before a Senate subcommittee.

"The Farm Security Administration, under Dr Will W. Alexander, himself a native of Georgia, repeatedly called Mr. Wallace's attention to the abuses from which Southern Negro farmers were suffering, but to no avail. Later when Dr. Alexander resigned, Mr. Wallace, according to Dr. Alexander, said in a curious voice, "Don't you think the New Deal has undertaken to do too much for Negroes?" Dr. Alexander was replaced by another Georgian, this one markedly at varience in his racial attitude to the liberalism of Dr. Alexander.

"While segregation and discrimination against Negroes were being firmly and swiftly eradicated from other government agencies, such as the Department of the Interior under Harold L. Ickes and in the United States Housing Authority under Nathan Straus, the restaurant at the Department of Agriculture remained tightly segregated. Negro employees of the department continued to eat in a basement room. The same discriminatory policies in employment continued in the department, the only Negro workmen being messengers and charwomen. A study of racial segregation in the nation's capital reveals that the Department of Agriculture and Commerce continue to have among the worst employment practices.

APPEALS MADE TO WALLACE

"As Secretary of Commerce, appeals were made to Mr. Wallace to clean up employment discrimination in the Bureau of the Census, whose racial attitude causes Negroes and many whites to call it "the Alcatraz on the Potomac." Nothing was done.

"Thus the record of performance of the Progressive party's candidate, at a time when he had the power to execute changes precisely as other Cabinet officers and officials like Messrs. Ickes and Straus were doing so, is such as to cause one to look with skepticism upon his present speeches."

Wallace Hurts Negroes' Case

Argus

Saint Louis

The more we think of, and observe the conduct and attitude of Henry A. Wallace, the Progressive Candidate for president of the United States, the more thoroughly we are convinced that he his hurting our cause in our fight for Civil Rights.

Mo. Fri. 10-1-48

Of course, it doesn't take a seer or even a close observer to see what is really going on in the Wallace campaign throughout the nation.

Everybody knows that the Dixiecrats are all out, aiding and abetting Wallace's campaign, not because they love him more, but because they fear Harry S. Truman. Four years ago, the same bunch, the crowd were "ten-to-one," in favor of Truman over Wallace. But today, - - - - why are the Dixiecrats aiding and abetting Wallace?

They know good and well, Wallace can't win or be elected president of the United States at the November election, with the aid of Republican money, the Dixiecrats regard Henry Wallace as their "ace card," to beat Truman, because the president dared to speak out for Civil Rights for all, and they know the President means what he says.

So bitter are the "Dixies" against Civil Rights, that they have made it a personal fight on President Truman and believe us, they do not care from whom they can get the least support to down Truman. And don't believe for one moment that they are shunting Communists.

"Kill Truman," to them means "Dead Civil Rights." No man in America today knows that better than Henry A. Wallace. He knows it to the nth degree. He, Mr. Wallace knows that his campaign against Mr. Truman, is in reality, a campaign against Civil Rights. He knows that "downing" the man who is carrying the Civil Rights ball, is hurting the Negroes' cause, and he also knows that every blow against the President "tickles" the Dixies almost breathless.

All of these facts, we assume Henry Wallace knows. If he does not know these things, his leadership is the more dangerous.

10-1-48

If he prefers the spirit of the Dixies to prevail over the Civil Rights program of President Truman, he is doing not only the Negroes, but this nation a disservice which he will never out-live in this country.

In this connection, we think it proper to mention, that some of the Wallace supporters, while admitting that their candidate can't win, say theirs is a "protest vote."

DO NOT BE DECEIVED. A protest vote will aid the Dixies, looks worst than the woman who cut off her nose to spite her face.

Don't throw your vote away to help Wallace in his spite work.

Racial Cause Holds Wallace

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 30 (AP).—Henry Wallace, 24 hours after being egged in Houston, pledged here tonight he will carry the fight against racial segregation and poll taxes "so long as I live."

In a speech before a mixed audience including Latin American and Negroes, the Progressive Party candidate for President:

Fri

Promised his party will end the unfair treatment of Spanish-speaking Americans and what he said was their use by big corporations as a pool of cheap labor.

Charged El Paso has no secrecy of the ballot and demanded the Justice Department and the House Committee on Un-American Activities should investigate all interferences with free and secret balloting. He called such interferences "true subversion."

10-1-48

Compared the four freedoms of Franklin D. Roosevelt with what he called the four freedoms of Dewey and Truman and Thurmond.

Wallace said he is afraid the Dewey-Truman-Thurmond "four freedoms" are: 1—Freedom for big business to pursue super profits at the expense of people. 2—Freedom from taxes that should be paid. 3 and 4—Freedom from labor's rightful demands for good jobs and security.

Jim Crow Is Target C

CINCINNATI, Aug. 25 — (AP) — Henry A. Wallace said yesterday

"Jim Crow is the offspring of profit-mad tycoons wedded of the proposition of divide and rule."

"Jim Crow keeps profits high and wages low," he declared in a speech prepared for the National Convention of Negro Elks.

"What a comment it is upon the status quo," he said, "when the spokesmen for 15,000,000 Americans had to come to the United Nations to charge that their homeland, the land of Lincoln and Roosevelt, denied them an abundant life, a peaceful life, a free and equal life.

"But this charge was very wisely not directed against the people of the United States, for the people are also victims of the pattern of denial. Jim Crow is not the natural flower of American soil."

The Progressive Party nominee for president continued in the speech his attacks on President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The News

Test For Birmingham

Birmingham tomorrow will be visited by a man who has been both a vice president and cabinet member and now is a candidate for president. But under present circumstances, the visit of Henry A. Wallace cannot be anticipated with complete tranquillity.

News 8-31-48

Wallace is coming here with a chip on his shoulder. The fact that he is a person of moral character and a great zeal for what he thinks right only makes his attitude harder to cope with. Wallace has always been a crusader. He has had something of the martyr complex. Events of the last year or so have intensified those characteristics. The messianic spirit today weighs heavily upon him.

B'ham News

34a(1)

Southerners against whom Wallace is directing his crusade naturally dislike him. More than that, they fear him. They see in his ideas and in his conduct threats to the social forms which they regard as indispensable. And that is the spirit in which many of this community await his coming.

But this, let us remind ourselves, is America. Here we believe in freedom of speech, freedom not only for the doctrines we dislike but freedom also for the doctrines we fear. We are fond of saying that any man in this country has the right to urge any change he desires as long as he advocates only peaceful methods. Tomorrow we will have a chance to prove the sincerity of that claim. Tomorrow, Birmingham's Americanism will be on trial.

The situation will be rendered less difficult if all of us remember the background, the sources of our freedom. That applies to Wallace and his local supporters. It applies to those in authority. It applies to the general public.

News 8-31-48

It will be the duty of authorities to enforce existing laws fairly and impartially. Any deviation from that principle will hurt the South's cause before the nation and before humanity. The law must be interpreted and applied alike to those with whom we agree and those with whom we disagree.

Authorities should be on guard against excessively narrow application of the laws. If the laws pertinent to this situation are good and needed, they are strong enough to stand without undue attention to minor technicalities.

Let Wallace speak. Let him and his followers have their day in an orderly manner. Let the trouble-makers stay away. Let no one play into the hands of those who would intensify our present difficulties and tensions.

Although determined to continue, the former secretary of agriculture from Iowa displayed anger and disappointment yesterday as he was pelted with eggs and ripe tomatoes.

Stopped entirely from speaking and splashed with debris at Burlington, Wallace grasped a bystander by the arm as he turned to his car.

"Am I in America?" he asked.

"Get your hands off me," the unidentified man growled and gave the candidate a push.

Again at Greensboro, his clothes stained with egg yoke and a shell sticking to his head, Wallace cried:

"I don't mind being hit by eggs and tomatoes, but they would be more useful being fed to children.

"The faces I have seen distorted by hatred are of people for whom I have in my heart profound compassion, because most of them have not enough to eat."

There was laughter and more boos.

News 8-31-48

At High Point, eggs and tomatoes again were hurled.

AND AT LAST NIGHT'S rally at Winston-Salem, Wallace was booed long and lustily as he stood in the rain and attacked the Marshall plan, declaring:

"Only with an understanding with Russia can we avoid another war. We (the Progressives) are fighting on the side of the Lord."

The crowd, estimated at 2,500—about three-fourths of them Negroes—set up opposing chants of "We want Wallace" and "Down with Wallace" at one time during his speech. The party's gubernatorial nominee, Miss Mary Price, could not be heard above the boos as she introduced Wallace.

Gov. Gregg Cherry deplored the violence to which Wallace has been exposed beginning with his first public talk at Durma Sunday night, and castigated those responsible.

His six-state Southern tour began quietly enough in Virginia Sunday.

Unsolved difficulties faced him in other states on the program.

THE AUDITORIUM BOARD at Little Dock, Ark., where Wallace is scheduled Friday, denied him the use of its building.

But at Jackson, Miss., Gov. Fieldin? L. Wright promised an escort of state police Thursday and said "I don't think there will be any discourtesy toward him."

Wallace practiced what he preached in North Carolina, attending gatherings at Negro clubs and spending both nights at the homes of wealthy Negroes in Durham and Winston-Salem.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 4 (UP).—Henry A. Wallace came here tonight to close out his turbulent week-long campaign tour of the South, which has been marked by heckling and barrages of eggs.

He came from Nashville, where he got perhaps the best reception of his entire Southern swing. Some 2,000 persons greeted him there and, although one heckler tossed an egg, his Progressive party supporters said the reception was "excellent."

Mr. Wallace was even cheered—when he said his faith was "renewed in the great and God-fearing people of the South." In his own assessment of his Southern trip, Mr. Wallace said it would have "profound" influence on the future relationship between Negro and white people.

At Nashville Mr. Wallace told reporters that he advocated removal of state laws that prohibit mixed marriages of whites and Negroes, and he said the South's churches should take the lead in attacking segregation.

Orderly Group Hears Wallace In Alabama

DECATUR, Ala., Sept. 1—(UP)—Henry A. Wallace arrived here today from a stormy, egg-and-tomato ride through North Carolina and addressed an orderly crowd of 500.

Adv 9-1-48

This stop on his Southern campaign tour was in striking contrast to his experience of the past two days when on five different occasions he was bombarded by rotten eggs and ripe tomatoes. He was hit squarely twice.

Columbia S.C.

Wallace's stand on segregation, however, raised the possibility of further trouble in Alabama and other Southern states in which he will campaign the rest of the week.

But officials along the remainder of his route appealed to the citizenry to leave the eggs in the hen house.

Tomatoes Near Stand

It happened that a truckload of tomatoes was near Wallace speaking stand here, but it had no significance. Tomato grower Bertha Timberlake did a thriving business among housewives on their way to market who stopped long enough to hear Wallace.

Reaction was mostly against the North Carolina egg-throwing incidents.

Adv. 9-1-48

North Carolina editors deplored the episode as a "blot on the name" of the state but they also said Wallace was partly responsible because he "flaunted" anti-segregation laws.

"Disagreement with Henry Wallace does not justify a community debasing itself," commented the Nashville Banner.

The Memphis Press Scimitar said that 'issues cannot be settled with overripe eggs and tomatoes. It's not for the South to tarnish its reputation for hospitality by hurling henfruit."

The Atlanta Journal observed simply that "eggs must be a sight cheaper in North Carolina than they are in Georgia."

In addition to the cost of the eggs, throwing them at Wallace yesterday cost three Charlotte, N. C., men $25 each and court costs today. They were fined for disorderly conduct in police court.

Wallace had a state highway patrol escort through Alabama, heart of the next Dixiecrat political movement which was started over the race issue.

Adv 9-1-48

He is refusing to speak where segregation of whites and Negroes is enforced, as it is by either law or custom in virtually all public establishments and meeting places in the South.

Commenting on the possibility of Wallace running into trouble today, Palmer Weber of Atlanta, Southern representative of the Progressive party, remarked cryptically that Alabama is a "very rugged state."

He said Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor had warned that Birmingham's segregation law would be enforced rigidly. It requires separation of whites and Negroes by "well-defined physical barriers. at public meetings.

Wallace was not listed for a public appearance at Birmingham on his itinerary for the day. A radio broadcast over a statewide hookup had been arranged to originate there at 7 p. m. (CST) a spokesman for Wallace said he might make a public appearance if some way could be found to get around the segregation ordinance.

Party Feelers Sent Out to Lure Him into Family Circle Again

Det. 7-24-48

BY EDWIN A. LAHEY
Of Our Washington Bureau

PHILADELPHIA—Peace feelers have been made to bring Henry A. Wallace back into the Democratic family circle, it was learned here Friday as the Wallaceites opened the founding convention of the "New Party."

Some question of the authenticity of the peace bids existed.

In Washington, Senator J. Howard McGrath, Democratic national chairman, told the Free Press that the emissaries who proposed the Wallace return to the fold were not speaking officially for him.

* * *

HE ADDED, however, that it was his understanding that a large part of the Wallace following was in the mood to consolidate its forces behind Truman, and that he would be glad to discuss the matter with any of the Wallace leaders.

Det. 7-24-48

The first peace proposal to the Wallace people came in a telephone conversation from Robert Straus, former New Deal official, to Rexford Guy Tugwell, co-chairman of the National Committee for Wallace.

Straus, a brother of Michael Straus, Federal reclamation director, is a member of the Democratic committee of Prince George County, Maryland, and likewise a member of the Maryland state committee of the Wallace party.

Tugwell, definitely one of the wavering leaders among the Wallace people, listened to the Straus proposal for reuniting the progressive movement in the Democratic party, and referred Straus to C. B. (Beany) Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager.

LATER, a Washington radio man named Ed Hart telephoned Baldwin in Philadelphia and renewed the peace proposal.

Hart gave Baldwin the impression that he had talked the matter over with McGrath, and was speaking for McGrath.

He advanced the somewhat fantastic proposal that if Wallace came back to the Democratic fold, it might be possible to send him and Harold E. Stassen, of Minnesota, to the Soviet Union to explore the "avenues of agreement" that Wallace talks about in his peace crusade.

Praises His Courage on Recent Southern Tour, but Says 'Discrimination' Was Fostered by Him in Agriculture and Commerce Posts

The issue of human rights has already become one of the most important and explosive issues of the 1948 Presidential campaign, as well as one which affects American prestige throughout the world more profoundly than ever before in history. This is the first of a series of three articles dealing with the records on that issue of the three major candidates for the Presidency. As far as is humanly possible, the yardstick of performance as well as of promise of civil rights will be applied to Messrs. Wallace, Truman and Dewey.

Jun 9-12-48

New York, N.Y.

With respect to Mr. Wallace let it be freely admitted that the stubborn courage exhibited on his recent trip through the South has established a model for other candidates. A man of lesser determination and courage would have found some excuse for abandoning the tour after the first onslaught of eggs, tomatoes and other missiles. Under normal circumstances it was virtually certain that states in the deep South would be more riotous than a more enlightened Southern state like North Carolina.

To the credit of Mr. Wallace and the Progressive party, the non-segregation policy was distinctly in evidence at the Philadelphia convention and in the selection of candidates for office. Both major political parties would be exceedingly wise to take a leaf from Mr. Wallace's book in the nomination of qualified members of minorities, especially Negroes, for important posts.

In the light of his recent performance, Mr. Wallace's previous record is distinctly disappointing and inexplicable. Lester Granger, of the National Urban League, has described him as "an eloquent protester" and "an accomplished denouncer." But Mr. Wallace's record on racial discrimination and segregation while he was Secretary of Agriculture and later as Secretary of Commerce is almost totally bad so far as performance is concerned. Not only is there no record of Mr. Wallace acting to end discrimination, there is evidence, some of it detailed by Gardner Jackson in a recent issue of "The Atlantic Monthly," that Mr. Wallace blocked attempts of some of his subordinates to correct discrimination in those agencies.

The outright theft by white plantation owners and landlords of parity checks from Negro tenant farmers under the Agriculture Adjustment Administration is notorious. C. B. Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager, included in grants to white sharecroppers and tenant farmers in the South funds to pay their poll taxes; he refused the same privilege to Negroes and admitted as much in a hearing before a Senate subcommittee.

The Farm Security Administration, under Dr. Will W. Alexander, himself a native of Georgia, repeatedly called Mr. Wallace's attention to the abuses from which Southern Negro farmers were sufferng, but to no avail. Later when Dr. Alexander resigned, Mr. Wallace, according to Dr. Alexander, said in a curious voice, "Don't you think the New Deal has undertaken to do too much for Negroes?" Dr. Alexander was replaced by another Georgian, this one markedly at variance in his racial attitude to the liberalism of Dr. Alexander.

While segregation and discrimination against Negroes were being firmly and swiftly eradicated from other government agencies, such as the Department of the Interior under Harold L. Ickes and in the United States Housing Authority under Nathan Straus, the restaurant at the Department of Agriculture remained tightly segregated. Negro employees of the department continued to eat in a basement room. The same discriminatory policies in employment continued in the department, the only Negro workmen being messengers and charwomen. A recent study of racial segregation in the nation's capital reveals that the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce continue to have among the worst employment practices.

Jun 9-12-48

As Secretary of Commerce, appeals were made to Mr. Wallace to clean up employment discrimination in the Bureau of the Census, whose racial attitude causes Negroes and many whites to call it "the Alcatraz on the Potomac." Nothing was done.

Men have been known throughout human history to experience a change of attitude. One of the most notable transformations in recent political history was that of the late Wendell Willkie, from a corporation lawyer to one of the great, courageous Americans of all time. But the reformation of Mr. Willkie was not so great as some Americans imagined. The racial employment policies of Commonwealth Southern were not exemplary, and in large measure followed the Southern pattern. But the treatment accorded Negro employees by Commonwealth Southern, a private corporation, was never so rigidly segregated and limited as were the patterns of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce, agencies of the Federal government.

Thus the record of performance of the Progressive party's candidate, at a time when he had the power to execute changes precisely as other Cabinet officers and officials like Messrs. Ickes and Straus were doing so, is such as to cause one to look with skepticism upon his present speeches.

Georgia Mob Mauls, Kidnaps 4 Women Wallace Workers

34a(1) Pres.

New York Star

AUGUSTA, Ga., Sept. 26 (UP)—Five Henry Wallace campaign workers reported tonight that a band of men dragged them from their headquarters here and drove them 10 miles out of town, where they were released with a warning to "stay out of Augusta."

Mor 9-27-48

Four women and one man who had been circulating a petition to get the Wallace party on the Georgia ballot charged that their abductors broke down the door of the house where they were staying in a fashionable section of Augusta and mauled them severely when they resisted.

New York Star

(Associated Press quoted Augusta police chief George Folds as saying he understood some Wallace workers were taken away by 40 or 50 men who kicked in a window and a door.

Women Bruised

(It was the second incident of the kind reported over the weekend. Columbus, Ga., police reported Saturday that seven Wallace workers were taken from a hotel there late the night before by a group of men, at least one of whom was armed. The seven reported they were driven 30 miles out of Columbus and warned not to return.)

Forbes Hill, 23, had a black eye and a torn shirt and two of the women showed bruises when they reported the incident at Grovetown, Ga., 15 miles west of here.

The Progressive workers hiked into Grovetown from the spot where they were let out on the highway. They asked the Georgia Bureau of Investigation to pick them up and return them to Augusta "so we can finish our work."

Wallace headquarters at Atlanta announced that the FBI would be called into the case.

Bettye Ann Kimmel, 22, one of the girls who was bruised, reported the incident as follows by telephone from Grovetown:

Mor 9-27-48

Overpowered

"The five of us were in the house when these men began crowding around outside. We knew that they meant trouble so we locked the door. But they threw themselves against the door and broke in.

"They ordered us to come with them, and when we refused a fight began in the living room. Four men jumped on me and someone hit Mr. Forbes in the eye, either with a pistol-butt or with fist. They overpowered us and made us accompany them."

Eggs, Tomatoes Greet Wallace In Charlotte

TRUMAN FLAYS ACTION

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31—(AP)—President Truman today termed the throwing of eggs at Henry A. Wallace, progressive party presidential candidate, in North Carolina, a "highly Un-American business."

Columbia, S.C.

Determined To Continue

Determined to continue his whirlwind campaign tour of the South despite mounting oppositon, Wallace arrived here to find a crowd already waiting in front of Mecklinburg county courthouse.

In his recent memory were his appearances at two North Carolina points yesterday where he was struck twice by eggs. Wallace's jaw was set in a firm line as he pushed his way from his automobile.

A roar went up from the crowd, and about a dozen eggs and tomatoes were hurled in his direction.

Undaunted by Missiles, Insults or Threats, Crusader Preached Equality Without Fear

Baltimore, Md.

By DOUGLASS HALL

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The South has just received a new baptism of freedom. For seven days, Henry Wallace and his unsegregated staff have defied Southern traditions, customs and laws in order to drench this area with much needed interpretation of true American democracy.

It has been a long journey, punctuated with bitterness, hate, rotten eggs, ripe tomatoes and name-calling, but, undaunted Mr. Wallace has refused to stop.

He has looked down the throats of racially bitter-persons and has called segregation "a sin, whose pay-off is death." Sometimes he has even had to ask the question that every colored person has asked many times, "Is this America?"

Disciple of Democracy

Henry Wallace has come closer to realizing treatment accorded colored persons in the South than any other white man I know.

He was not an Uncle Tom, bowing and grinning in order to get by. He was a militant disciple of democracy, preaching equality of man.

When traveling through Tennessee, nearing the end of the trip I sat and talked with Mr. Wallace.

I asked why he felt that he had to make a personal issue out of this matter of fighting segregation, pointing out that he surely did not have to do so. He could have carried his campaign through the South on a basis of strick observance to the traditional jim-crow laws.

I asked:

Why do you choose to pioneer into the segregation-bound wilderness at a time when it is at a fever-heat? Why do you continue to make yourself a personal target for eggs, tomatoes and other missles hurled by misguided bigots?

Sat 9-11-48

Fighting in His Blood

"I have never been prejudiced," Mr. Wallace told me, "but it was in 1944 when I got the idea that I should do something about segregation," adding:

"I think that I was attending a meeting of the Southern Conference of Human Welfare. Some of my friends have told me since then that they did not expect me to go as far as I have gone in my fight against segregation.

"I guess this fighting is just in my blood—a kind of carry-over from my grandfather, who was a member of the Underground Railroad during the days of slavery."

Threats to Life Received

In addition to getting egg baths, Mr. Wallace has actually received threats against his life.

As he was leaving Sherveport, La., he received a telegram from Georgia, stating that if he visited there, they would not only throw eggs at him, but would add a little "hot lead."

Many times I have seen persons walk up to him and call him a "N---r lover," and make other statements like, "How much N---r blood do you have?" "What N---r house are you going to sleep in tonight?"

Was Mr. Wallace ever afraid?

"I was never afraid," The Progressive Presidential candidate told me, "I just thought the Lord would take care of me."

Birmingham Post

"Eftsoons they heard a most melodious sound . . ."

The Heaviside Layer and the wide world to which it bounces radio waves heard Wednesday evening what we of the South identified as a rare and most melodious sound. It was famed Edward R. ("This Is London") Murrow, of Columbia Broadcasting Company, speaking to his nightly nation-wide audience from Birmingham, speaking tolerantly, understandingly, penetratingly, of this area's conduct and viewpoint as Henry Wallace passed and of our deep conviction that we must be let alone in solution of our problem. Without overlooking many things undone, he told of things we are achieving for ourselves, white and black. Without needing to get himself sunburned and pass for anything but an honest man, he found much to praise.

Mon. 9-6-48

Atlanta, Ga.

Every word was worth its gold-weight to a region whose heaviest of many sins is the sin of not getting its case across to the nation. Can it be that our hope of getting it across is through gentle outsiders like Ed Murrow? Certainly it is not put by those of our own people who are usually selected by outsiders to tell the story and who think it their part to return the compliment by confessing more than they disprove.

Russell Long's victory in Louisiana is partly dynastic urge, it would seem, but partly, too, another success for the famous technique of taxing and taxing to spend and spend and elect and elect. Uncle Earl, with Russell's aid and advice, has taxed Louisianians an additional $80,000,000. With this money he has inaugurated services, institutions and handouts which win the family the votes it needs when election days come.

Those North Carolinians who made out unfairly that the States' Rights mass meeting in Birmingham last July was all Claghorn, clamor, cheapsterism and claptrap must be blushing as the nation is told how the per capita of unruly eggs thrown at Henry Wallace in their state exceeded that in Alabama by hundreds of per cent. Perhaps they will grant our historic right to wave a Confederate Flag and sing "Dixie" now that it is embarrassingly proved for them that human nature is human even in Durham, Burlington, Greensboro, Charlotte and shining Winston-Salem.

Mon. 9-6-48

As President, Mr. Truman did well to lecture North Carolina on its treatment of Mr. Wallace. But the lecture did not come well from Mr. Truman as the individual whose politics-playing with southern misery on the race question created the inflammation Mr. Wallace was exploiting.

Into every politician's life some eggs and tomatoes must fall. Be sorry for Mr. Wallace, but not too sorry. It was all immensely worth his while. Think what a hero he will be when he gets back to Madison Square Garden.

Mr. Wallace helped himself but I think he also helped the States' Rights ticket. His reception in North Carolina told upper South politicians that their people are not so far removed from deep Southerners after all. And he focused southwide attention and feeling on the dream world in which outsiders live when they picture the South.

Mon. 9-6-48

Immortal in that dreaming should be his reported comments at Greensboro, N. C., after being egged and tomato-ed there.

His messiah complex oozing with the eggs, he said: "The faces I have seen distorted by hatred are of people for whom I have in my heart profound compassion, because most of them have not enough to eat."

The laughter which greeted this was sincere. There may be people in North Carolina who don't have enough to eat even in times of farm and factory prosperity, but they were not those Greensboro people.

Segregation Held Reason; Bessemer Talk Also Called Off

Thurs.

Henry Wallace had come and gone today. He made one public address—a radio jab last night at "Northern-owned corporations" who he charged keep the South in "economic poverty and political bondage."

He failed to make two other scheduled addresses—at the courthouse in Birmingham and at DeBardeleben Park in Bessemer. His spokesmen said he canceled those talks because the audiences were segregated.

IN WALLACE'S WAKE here today were memories of the smashed eggs thrown at one of his followers at the courthouse yesterday, a lot of jeers, boos and laughs, and the feeling in general that the public took advantage of the Progressive Party's political sortie here to have some fun.

Only one voice was raised in behalf of Wallace when his Alabama campaign director, J. P. Mooney tried to explain to the more than 2,500 persons at the courthouse yesterday afternoon that Wallace would not speak because whites were separated from Negro listeners by ropes.

"We want Wallace," this lone voice cried. It was drowned out in a chorus of boos and jeers and finally six raw eggs were tossed that found Mooney disappearing from the scene.

In his radio address over a statewide network last night, Wallace drew a comparison between the "courteous reception" he said he received in Decatur and Huntsville and his treatment in Gadsden, Birmingham and Bessemer.

Wallace said his group could not hold meetings in the latter three cities "because the police insisted on dividing free Americans by the colors of their skins." 9-2-48

Wallace charged those cities are "dominated by Northern steel corporations," and added:

"Republic Steel and U. S. Steel's Tennessee Coal and Iron pay no income taxes here, no sales taxes, yet they have political power machines to dominate these cities."

WALLACE DECLARED "the Big Mules" have kept the people of the South in political serfdom "by means of poll taxes, by complicated registration, by white primaries, by crooked politics and by outright intimidation."

The News

"These rich and powerful men haven't been throwing eggs and tomatoes," he continued. "These men never do their own dirty work. They inflame the passions of others with deliberate falsehoods and lies. They never fight our wars—they profit from them. They never personally engage in lynching either free speech or human beings. They have others do their dirty work."

Wallace said he came South "to talk about a program for peace and abundance and raising the living standards of all Americans."

Birmingham

"The courageous men and women of the South who are challenging the Big Mules: the men and women who are building the Progressive Party here in the South are doing a magnificent job of defending the very foundations of our democracy," Wallace said.

Ala.

"In fighting anti-labor legislation; in fighting for $100-a-month old-age pensions; in fighting for $1-an-hour minimum wage; in fighting for free elections and against intimidation of any kind—they are fighting for all the people, workers and farmers and independent business men, white and Negro alike.

"They were fresh eggs," Murrow reported. "At least one was dropped from a window of the courthouse. One spectator standing near the front was hit on the shoulder. The police took away one youth, pursued by cries of 'You've got the wrong man . . . he didn't throw it'.

"There was no police intimidation. The crowd was good-natured. Most of the colored people in my line of vision remained expressionless."

Thurs. 9-2-48

Murrow said people who know Alabama politics estimate Wallace will get from 2,000 to 10,000 votes in Alabama.

"The opinion is widely held that Wallace is making this swing through the South in the hope of influencing votes in the rest of the country rather than in the South," Murrow added.

"I would like to see us spend the same kind of money to help our people that we have spent to support the Chinese dictator and his corrupt generals. If we will spend the same money here in the South, we can develop Southern industry and agriculture in four years to the point where the South will be on the road to a prosperity unsurpassed in any section of the nation. . . .

"TODAY THE SOUTHERN worker and farmer has an income only half the average of several states in the North."

Wallace said he proposed a four-year program for the South which would double the purchasing value of the average Southern income.

He concluded with an appeal that President Truman and Gov. Dewey join him in running a "freedom train" through the South "so that all the people of the South may know that we are on their side and not on the side of those who have corrupted their politics."

ABOUT AN HOUR before Wallace was scheduled to speak at Station WBRC last night, a car stopped near the station, and several men got out.

One of them asked a News reporter where Wallace could be found. The reporter said he didn't know.

The News

The man then produced a card which bore the legend, "Federated Ku Klux Klan."

"There are about 200 of these here," the man told the reporter.

Wallace did not appear at the courthouse west steps where he had been scheduled to speak.

His Alabama campaign director, J. P. Mooney, told the crowd Wallace would not speak to any gathering "that violates the constitution."

Birmingham

"We believe in free speech and free assembly without police interference," Mooney said.

Ala.

Eggs then started falling. One struck a spectator, J. J. Pickens, Birmingham, on the chest. Another hit a reporter on the back. Another splashed the arm of a photographer standing nearby.

Thurs.

Mooney disappeared.

Several voices in the crowd had jeeringly called on Mooney to speak louder, louder."

"What's his name?" one man in the crowd yelled.

9-2-48

"Insky," another voice replied.

* * *

POLICE OFFICERS KIRKLAND and Jamie Moore then attempted to take a man into custody who had been pointed out to them as having thrown some of the eggs.

As they started to cross the rope barrier that separated the white and Negro standing sections, a youth shouted, "Block those policemen."

Officer Kirkland seized the youth who was later identified as Joe Gilbert, of 2324 13th Avenue, North, a senior at Phillips High School.

As the two officers led Gilbert to the sheriff's office in the courthouse, the youth, 17, argued violently with the officers. He kept repeating the words, "free speech."

Later he denied throwing the eggs. Commissioner Eugene Connor talked with Gilbert, then instructed the officers to take him home "to his mother." Gilbert told officers his faher worked for a shipyard company in Mobile.

* * *

SOON AFTER WALLACE LEFT the Courthouse and the meeting had begun to disperse, nine Negro men appeared carrying signs. They said they had intended to picket Wallace with the signs if he spoke.

They said they were civic-minded Negroes of Birmingham interested in the national welfare of their race.

The signs bore legends protesting Wallace's appearance and pointing to progress the Negro has made in the South.

Among them were:

"The colored people want education, not agitation."

* * *

"Mr. Wallace, your program has set the Negro back 50 years. We are tired of being made a political football."

* * *

"Mr. Wallace, we live in harmony with our fellowmen and are not rabble-rousers. Why don't you and all Communists do the same?"

The News

* * *

"Our Parker High School is the largest and finest school of its kind in the world."

"Tuskegee Institute is the largest Negro college in the world. An Alabama institution, not Moscow."

Birmingham

A HALF-HOUR before Wallace was scheduled to talk, Public Safety Commissioner Connor appealed to the crowd, which was more than two-thirds white, to give Wallace a "respectful" hearing.

"Mr. Wallace has a right to address you here today and to say whatever he pleases," Mr. Connor said.

Ala.

"You may differ with him, and that is your right and privilege . . . the people of Birmingham are law-abiding. I believe Mr. Wallace is coming here to obey our laws."

Mr. Connor asked the crowd to remain "peaceful, orderly and lawful."

The Wallace motorcade left the courthouse and passed Smithfield Court, low-cost Negro housing project on Eighth Avenue, North, adjoining Parker High School.

Some 700 persons were waiting for the motorcade when it stopped in front of DeBardeleben Park in Bessemer. All were white. About 30 Negroes stood across the street from the park. Mr. Mooney, Wallace's campaign director here, said Wallace would not speak to a segregated audience.

WALLACE TOLD A NEWS reporter, "I will follow this procedure for the remainder of my Southern tour. I will not speak before segregated audiences."

Wallace kept the windows of his car rolled up during the five-minute stop in Bessemer. He rolled them down only to talk to The News reporter.

Thurs

At no time during the stop did any of the crowd approach within two or three feet of the Wallace car.

9-2-48

Police officers hovered nearby. And most of the jeering was done from a distance.

One man swung his fist at a car behind Wallace containing newspaper reporters.

The crowd broke up as the motorcade pulled away. During the motorcade's run to Bessemer and back to Birmingham, it was paced all the way by an automobile containing six plainclothes men from the Birmingham Police Department. The men had a walkie talkie and kept up a running account of the Wallace trip over the microphone.

Murrow Broadcasts Wallace Visit Account

Edward R. Murrow, national news commentator for the Columbia Broadcasting System, told a nationwide audience last night about the scheduled Wallace meeting at the courthouse steps in Birmingham. Wallace did not speak.

"The lawn in front of the courthouse was divided by newly-made barriers," Murrow said, "the white folks on the right, the colored people on the left. The crowd was good-natured, there was no sense of tension.

"Police Commissioner Connor said Mr. Wallace had a right to address the crowd . . . he was sure the people of Birmingham are law-abiding."

J. P. Mooney, Wallace campaign director in Alabama, then spoke, and a few eggs were thrown.

Mrs. Roosevelt Reveals Doubt About Wallace

Says Former Vice-President's Past Record Doesn't Tally With Present, Queries Sincerity

Afro-American
Sat. 9-11-48

NEW YORK (NNPA) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of former President Franklin D. Roosevelt, said bluntly here last Wednesday that Henry A. Wallace's past record does not "tally" with his present stand on social and racial equality and that she questions his sincerity when he takes such a stand.

Baltimore Md.

Mrs. Roosevelt made the statement at a press conference before addressing a rally sponsored by the local branch of the NAACP at Abyssinian Baptist Church. The former First Lady's blunt pronouncements on the former Vice President were made in reply to a question by a reporter from the Daily Worker, Communist newspaper.

Asked Mrs. Roosevelt whether or not she felt Henry A. Wallace's stand on the race question compared favorably with that of her late husband Franklin Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt frowned, turned almost completely around so as to face the reporter and asked, "Have you ever checked Mr. Wallace's previous record on the race question?"

Doesn't Call Him Communist

Then, carefully pointing out that she does not consider Mr. Wallace a Communist, she emphasized that she felt his views parallel those of the Communists very closely and added that she felt Mr. Wallace often was under the influence of Communists without knowing it.

In her speech to the more than 2,500 persons present, she pointed out that the organization needed money to provide education and enlightened citizenship to its members, adding that "if we expect things to be done for us in a Democracy they will never be done. We must do them ourselves."

Also speaking on the program, Justice Jane Bolin traced the history of the NAACP from its founder in 1909. She credited the NAACP with the recent executive orders issued by President Truman on treatment of minorities in Government and military service.

"As we build peace, we can realize the better life, for all the common people of the South, and all the common people of our country. We will not be stopped by violence or arbitrary arrests. We will not be stopped by discrimination, segregation, or other means by which our enemies try to divide us. 8-6-48

The striking increase in Southern registration this year shows that the people of the South are on the way--- on the American democratic way....to the goals we all share."

Police Commissioner Joe Boyle ordered about thirty police officers to the park to maintain order, and assigned an officer to accompany Mr. Wallace during his entire stay in Memphis. Most of the jeers came from what appeared to be an organized gang of youthful hecklers who arrived on the scene about the same time as the official's car bearing Mr. Wallace and members of his Progressive Party. Alert police officers kept down disturbance.... limited demonstrations to one egg flung at Mr. Wallace's car after his speech was made and he was leaving Bellevue Park and a quid of tobacco which also struck the car. Demonstrators, by their appearance gave evidence of being of the lower economic status which Mr. Wallace had referred to in North Carolina as the victims of the very social order they were trying to preserve through their unsportsmanlike reception of the Presidential Candidate.

Following Mr. Wallace's address, Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference of Human mately 3,500 people. A larger crowd would have been on hand but for change of the hour from 8:00 p. m., which had been widely publicized to 6:30. Hundreds of persons were headed toward Bellevue Park as late as 7:30, a full hour after the new time schedule was set.

These commercial Appeal pictures Welfare, who bolted from the "blue blood" circle of his relatives and friends of Atlanta, Georgia to line up with the Progressive Party, got in the final blows at the Wallace meeting. He stated in part:- Fri

"We are making progress. Less than a year ago, it was not possible for the Freedom Train to come to Memphis. Tonight the 'Freedom Man' has been to Memphis."

Mr. Foreman, in forceful tone, added that had Lincoln been privileged with the opportunity of touring the South in 1860 we would not have faced the awful experience of the South seceding from the Union and the economic plight of this section would not be what it is today. Fri 8-6-48

"Eternal God, our Father, the Father of all mankind, we thank thee for this opportunity and for these, thy children, both black and white. We pray Thee that we might become one even as Jesus prayed. Have mercy upon us and bless this our leader of the Progressive Party, Henry A. Wallace....yea the leader of the people. We thank Thee for this prophet, this servant and lover of all mankind who so clearly enunciates the principles of the Heavenly Father. Grant us courage, not only to see the right, but to do the right so that in November we will go as a solid phalanx and vote for Civil Rights, goodwill, brotherhood, peace, for Henry Wallace. Amen.' 8-6-48

Mrs. Richardson, who presided over the meeting told the audience that every Presidential candidate has a right to be heard, and that we are not able to arrive at an intelligent conclusion about voting until we do hear everyone of them.

MR. WALLACE MAKES AN OFFER

The Times

Tues 8-31-48

New York N.Y.

Henry A. Wallace launched his campaign in the South Sunday night with a typical gesture. Speaking at Durham, N.C., he declared that the Progressive party was prepared to give the South a "real states' rights" program. Under this program, he told his audience, the South would be delivered from the economic bondage in which it is now held by "Wall Street and absentee industrial emperors." Mr. Wallace would achieve this objective with government funds. The South would be advanced a billion dollars a year for the next four years, to be employed for the development of its industry and agriculture. But, it may be asked, wouldn't this place one more burden on the pocketbook of the taxpayer? Mr. Wallace has anticipated this not wholly unreasonable question. The money, he explains, would be raised by the simple process of taxing "the billions of profits drained from Southern labor in field and factory by large corporations." In sum, a form of domestic reparations would be assessed against those who had as it were "invaded" the South by investing their capital there.

From the practical standpoint of economics, Mr. Wallace's generous offer to put the South on a billion-dollar annual dole over the next few years makes no sense whatever. In the first place, the South has been doing quite well under its own steam in recent years. In the second place, while absentee ownership has its drawbacks, capital, after all, is the life blood of industry, and except in very unusual cases, indeed, it conveys benefits to the area into which it flows. As for Mr. Wallace's proposal for financing the huge advances of which he talks, to the extent to which it succeeded its chief result would be the early and complete economic euthanasia of the South.

But it is idle to discuss Mr. Wallace's Durham speech in terms of economics. The politician who makes such fantastic promises has to resort to casuistry, however crude. He has to find a plausible moral basis for his action. This Mr. Wallace does, first, by redefining "states' rights" so as to give it a meaning totally foreign to the accepted one; second, by painting a picture of the South as a section that has long been and is presumably still being systematically plundered by a sinister group to which he applies the label "Wall Street" and "big corporations."

Tues 8-31-48

In this one speech can be recognized most of the standard props of the accomplished demagogue — the divide-confuse-and-conquer technique; the personal devil technique; the substitution of the emotional word or phrase for the intellectually exact one. Every good citizen must deplore the attempts to break up Mr. Wallace's meetings. Logic is the best answer—and logically he answers himself.

In Doubles! . . .

The main motivation of the cancellation of Henry Wallace's projected speeches in Birmingham and Gadsden yesterday seems quite clear.

Mr. Wallace could hardly have been concerned for his personal safety or comfort. He is a courageous, hard-fighting man. He has a positive zest in the acceptance as well as the making of trouble. Moreover, there was every indication of adequate protection for him, little sign that he would have encountered serious hazard in these appearances. The News.

If he was primarily concerned to uphold a principle, he could have done so with due regard for law and sentiment in this community, without yielding on his own conviction. Birmingham, Ala.

But this was a campaign. There was political capital to make. In some other centers of the country, there was a chance that such a protest against local requirements might strengthen his support. He evidently has an intense preference for putting himself in the position of the mistreated, of the martyr.

Whatever he may have gained elsewhere, he only deepened the feeling against him hereabouts and made more firm the conviction he is far from qualified for the high responsibilities he seeks. Thurs. 9-2-48

In three cities in North Alabama he had been heard without serious incident. In Gadsden there was a manifestation of bitter feeling against him. At the courthouse in Birmingham a few eggs were thrown—not directly at him—when word went about that he was about to appear. It seemed likely that with the assurances and preparations of Police Commissioner Connor he could have spoken without disrupting or dangerous challenge if he had wished to do so. But his strategy chose the cancellation.

He went his way more, it seemed to us, in default rather than in valiant service of principle.

It is gratifying that for the most part he was received according to the American tradition of free expression and a fair hearing. Of course any departures from this spirit are to be unreservedly condemned. But, on the whole, Alabama citizens, who gathered for his appearances, strong as was the aversion for him on the part of many, maintained a proper restraint and deportment. That is pleasing and reassuring, particularly after the demonstrations in some other Southern cities. The News

Mr. Wallace did not show as well. The law as interpreted by responsible officials is due a reasonable respect. Regard for the convictions and customs of others, however one may reject them, is also in the American tradition. In both particulars Mr. Wallace and his advisers were lacking. Birmingham Ala.

In his radio address last night, he expressed once more the self-righteousness and blindness of a zealot. He began his talk by repeating the Lord's Prayer. He spoke with seeming sincerity. At times he seemed the kind of a voice in the wilderness as which he likes to conceive of himself—but a lost voice, indeed; almost a pathetic voice at times, and a confused, futile crier of some important truths, but mostly alarms, delusions and distortions. It was as if only he and his followers favored brotherhood and peace, human welfare and progress. His oversimplified and false generalizations attested once more the unreality of his loose and dangerous conceptions and fell far short of the spirit he himself professed to champion. Thurs. 9-2-48

WALLACE KEPT OFF BALLOT IN ILLINOIS

The Times New York, N.Y.

He Tells Rally Court's Action Subjects Party 'to Taxation Without Representation'

Wed. 9-15-48

3A(1)

By CHARLES GRUTZNER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHICAGO, Sept. 14—Henry A. Wallace stepped from an airplane here today and was told that the Illinois Supreme Court had just doomed the Progressive party's chances of having the names of its national and state candidates printed on the Nov. 2 ballot in this state.

The Presidential candidate, who had come from New York, went immediately into a huddle with local campaign leaders and there was talk of organizing a write-in campaign. It was considered possible, too, that the fight might be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. In his address tonight at Wrigley Field, Mr. Wallace made it clear that the Progressive party leaders regarded the blow to their candidates in Illinois as more than a local issue.

"If they steal your Progressive vote," he declared, "they take your property without due process of law, they take a thousand dollars a year in higher prices from each family without a chance to vote for a rollback of prices to decent levels.

"If they keep us off the ballot, they wipe out your freedom of assembly, they threaten new bloody Fridays, new Haymarkets, without a chance to vote for a return of the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act."

Mr. Wallace asserted that citizens to whom a chance to vote for the Progressive party were denied were "subject to taxation without representation, taxation for war preparations without a chance to vote for peace."

The hopes of the Illinois Progressives of upsetting a ruling by the State Electoral Board on Aug. 31 were severed by a single word. The Supreme Court merely "denied" the motion for leave to file a petition for a mandamus to compel the board to put the party's candidates' names on the ballot, without written or oral opinion.

Thus the court refused to consider the question of the constitutionality of a requirement that 200 valid signatures must come from each of at least fifty counties to nominate a candidate for national or state office. Although the Progressive petitions bore three times the 25,000 signatures required throughout the state, the electoral board had found that individual requirements had been meet in only forty-one counties.

Admitting that an effective state-wide write-in campaign would be a task of unprecedented magnitude, local Progressive leaders felt that their work would be lightened in Cook County. Here the party has its greatest strength, and the voting machines will carry the names of Progressive candidates for country, sanitary district and municipal court offices and for the Legislature and Congress. Democratic leaders hailed the ruling.

Mr. Wallace referred, in his speech at the ball park, to President Truman as "the prisoner of the decayed Democratic party machine and of the bankers and militarists he substituted for the New Dealers in Washington." Wed.

In this midwest metropolis, which Mr. Wallace chose in December as the setting for his announcement that he would seek the Presidency on a third-party ticket, he denounced what he called a bipartisan warlike foreign policy and a bipartisan domestic policy of breaking unions and making it asier for big corporations to increase their profits at the expense of higher costs of living for the American people. 9-15-48

"The banking firm of Mr. Truman's (Secretary of Defense) Jim Forrestal placed many loans to rebuild the war industry of German's Ruhr after World War I," Mr. Wallace declared. "The law firm of Mr. Dewey's John Foster Dulles has served many a reactionary and fascist foreign interest. This is not the choice you want—the choice of which bankers are to build a new war center in Germany.

"I say that our democracy is undermined by those who seek to restore to power the enemies of democracy we fought in World War II that it is undermined by those who even today are putting Nazis back into office in Germany. I am determined to fight against the rebirth of a monopolist and militarist Germany."

The speech made a strong bid for the support of houstwives and trade unionists, Mr. Wallace asserting: The Times

"You can blame Truman for pork chops at a dollar a pound, but voting for Dewey won't cut them to 50 cents." New York, N.Y.

He then declared that "the corporation directors who contribute to Dewey and those who contributed to Truman" had "combined to write the union-busting Taft-Hartley Act." Wed. 9-15-48

"We don't want Taft-Hartley enforced by the Republican party which openly supported the Taft-Hartley measure," he continued, "nor by a Democratic party which voted 60 per cent in the House of Representatives to enact it over a phony veto. We don't want strikes broken by a Republican President or by the Democratic President who has broken so many that workers call him "Injunction Harry."

Mr. Connor Defended

To the Editor of The News:

I would like to answer Mr. Carl Statum, whose letter appeared in The Birmingham News on Sept. 6, in regards to Henry Wallace's visit to our city.

I happened to be present when Mr. Wallace made his brief appearance at the Jefferson County Courthouse on Sept. 1. I was there in person, instead of being in Huntsville or some other place and reading about what happened here. I saw with my own eyes, and heard with my own ears, the things which others only read about. The News

I do not believe in Henry Wallace or anything he stands for, but I sincerely believe that, according to the constitution of our country, Mr. Wallace had a right to express his opinion, the same as Mr. Statum expressed his in his letter to The News. I am now taking advantage of my right to publicly disagree with him in regards to our city commissioner, Eugene (Bull) Connor. Thur. 9-9-48

I personally heard Mr. Connor warn the audience over a loudspeaker that Mr. Wallace had the right to speak in our city. He asked the people gathered there to give Mr. Wallace that right, and to refrain from starting any violence of any kind; the penalty for any such disorder being a trip to jail. Mr. Connor kept his word by having the offenders put in jail. I saw them being loaded into the patrol wagon. B'ham Ala

Mr. Wallace had already stated that he would not speak to a segregated audience. Our segregation laws were enforced that day, just as they have been for generations. It was Mr. Wallace's own fault that he did not speak.

I think Mr. Connor and our law enforcement officers did a good, clean job of maintaining law and order at the Wallace gathering. The same way they did when Sen. Taylor and his group came here and attempted to violate our old, established laws.

I have never voted for Bull Connor, but he has shown that he believes in our Southern way of life. Anything that Bull runs for in the future, be it for city commissioner or governor of Alabama, he has may support. Thousands of people whom I know personally, take the same stand.

Rotten Eggs Pelt Wallace In 2 North Carolina Cities

Courier Journal

Barrage Puts A Quick Stop To Speeches

Louisville, Ky.

34 a(1)

From Wire Dispatches.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Aug. 30. —Rotten eggs and ripe tomatoes splashed on Henry Wallace in two North Carolina towns today.

The bareheaded Progressive Party presidential nominee was pelted at Burlington and Greensboro. Tues-8-31-48

Police at Burlington said they did not know who tossed the missiles from a throng of 2,500 on the Main Street. After two attempts to complete his address Wallace stepped into an automobile and drove to Greensboro. Two tomatoes and an egg struck the former Vice-President at Burlington.

Boos, Catcalls Greet Him.

The barrage at Greensboro was heavier when he tried to speak at the Guilford County Courthouse. When a few missiles splashed near him he smiled. But he turned angrily upon his audience when others struck him about the head and body.

"I don't mind being hit by eggs and tomatoes," he cried, "but they would be more useful being fed to children."

Other political stories are on Page 6.

Wallace, his white shirt splotched with yellow and red, continued amid boos and catcalls: "The faces I have seen distorted by hatred are of people for whom I have in my heart profound compassion, because most of them have not had enough to eat."

Laughter and more booing again interrupted him there.

Voices from the audience broke in frequently with yells such as "Rave on, Joe," "There are white people out here," and "Back to Moscow."

Governor Expresses Regret.

Wallace, who started his three-day campaign trip into North Carolina before an egg-tossing crowd at Durham last night, wound up his second day with an appearance here at Southside Baseball Park. A scheduled mid-afternoon speaking engagement outside a plant of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company here was canceled. Members of the Wallace party, which traveled in 15 automobiles, said delays encountered en route had forced the cancellation.

A few eggs and tomatoes fell harmlessly near him during his stop at High Point. No arrests were made.

The eggings came shortly after Governor R. Gregg Cherry had expressed regret that Wallace was booed and his audience egged at Durham. Tues-8-31-48

"A man ought to have the right to talk," the Governor said.

The day was one of upsets for the Progressive Party nominee.

Couldn't Identify Throwers.

Shortly after he had breakfasted on fried chicken and grits at the home of a Durham Negro, Wallace set out for Chapel Hill. On Durham's outskirts his car failed to meet the motorcade bearing his party, so he went to Chapel Hill alone and addressed a small group before the Post Office.

Only part of the group had caught up by the time he reached Burlington.

Wallace had started only his first sentence: "I'd like to take this opportunity—" when eggs and tomatoes began falling about him. Then some struck their mark.

"They were thrown from the back of the crowd, coming in from every angle, so we couldn't see who did the throwing," said Burlington Police Capt. A. H. Garner.

"I'm sorry he wasn't given a chance to speak," said the police officer. Then he added: "The crowd apparently felt differently."

Shirt Thoroughly Splattered.

Only a few in the crowd were Negroes, Garner said.

The egg and tomatoes that struck the nominee at Burlington landed on his arm and shoulder.

There was no estimate of the number that actually hit him at Greensboro, but his shirt was thoroughly spattered. Even before the motorcade had reached Greensboro, police removed quantities of eggs, fruit, and tomatoes from some of the waiting audience. Tues-8-31-48

When Wallace attempted to speak at Greensboro on federal aid to provide hospitals and doctors for the South, there were shouts of "communism."

"Anyone who wants to call that a Bolshevik plot is welcome to do so," Wallace shouted back at them. "I say it is a Christian thought."

Wallace charged that "some Southern congressmen are stooges for great corporations." He did not name them.

"I want to see the South pull together for just one thing," Wallace tried again, but yells from the crowd again stopped him.

Wallace's east-west swing into North Carolina will end tomorrow with appearances scheduled at Charlotte and Asheville.

Wallace was reported to be determined to continue his campaign tour of the South despite today's incidents and the near riot and noisy heckling which greeted him last night at a meeting in Durham.

Young Voters Are Twice As Strong for Wallace As Those Over 50; West Coast Is 1-10 for Him

34 a(1)

Big-City Backers Have 3-1 Edge Over Small Towns

Courier Journal

By GEORGE GALLUP,

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., July 22.—As the political spotlight turns on the first national convention of the Wallace third party, these are the main features about the rank-and-file supporters of Henry A. Wallace: Fri 7-23-48

1. He is proportionately twice as strong among young voters as he is among those over 50 years old. Out of every 100 voters under 30 years old, 8 today say they would vote for Wallace, compared with 4 out of each 100 over 50 years of age.

Wallace vote by age:

21-29 years	8%
30-49 years	7
50 and over	4

2. Relatively three times as many people in the Pacific Coast and Middle Atlantic states support Wallace as in the Solid South. One out of every 10 voters in the Pacific Coast states want him as President.

Wallace vote by sections:

New England	4%
Middle Atlantic	9
Central	5
South	3
West	4
Far West	10

Louisville Ky.

3. Wallace's strength among manual workers is relatively double his support among the nation's farmers, and union members are even a little more inclined to vote for him than unorganized labor.

Wallace vote by occupation:

Professional and Business	6%
White collar	6
Farmers	4
Manual workers	8
Union members	9

4. Voters supporting the third party are relatively three times as numerous in the large cities as in small communities. While every eighth voter in cities over 500,000 population is a Wallace supporter, in the small towns the third-party votes get down to one in 25.

Wallace vote by city size:

Under 10,000	4%
10,000 to 100,000	6
100,000 to 500,000	6
Over 500,000	12

5. But the group where the New Party makes it most powerful and effective appeal are the independent voters, who were so largely responsible for President Roosevelt's successes at the polls. About one in every seven independent voters today says he will support the third-party candidate. 7-23-48

6. Veterans of World War II also give Wallace above-average support, one in 11 of these men today naming him as their choice for President.

Louisville Ky.

The above analysis of the Wallace following is based on the institute's most recent "presidential trial heat" conducted prior to the major party conventions. The survey pitted Wallace against Truman and Dewey, Wallace receiving 6 per cent of the national vote at that time.

While, as shown by an institute poll earlier this week, most Americans believe the third party is run by Communists, it is significant to learn the reasons given by the 6 per cent of voters for preferring Wallace as President.

Experiment Tried

Courier Journal

To uncover these reasons institute interviewers from coast to coast tried an unusual experiment in public-opinion polling. First they asked a national cross-section of representative voters whether they had talked to anyone who planned to vote for Wallace. Fourteen per cent replied they had, and they were then asked: "What is the main reason they give for supporting Wallace?" 7-23-48

In terms of frequency of mention, these are the chief arguments of Wallace voters:

Louisville Ky.

1. Wallace is for the "common man."
2. He is for peace and the prevention of war.
3. Because the nation today needs another party to oppose the major parties.
4. Wallace is fair and not a politician.
5. He will follow Franklin D. Roosevelt's doctrines.
6. He has a good foreign policy.

Wallace Keeps On, Despite Dixiecrats

Wallace Predicts Democratic South

Says Prejudice Will Fail to Enslave People

ADDRESSES 50,000

Blames Northern Firms for Bigotry of Dixie

34a(1)

NEW YORK—The prediction that progressive Southerners ultimately will triumph and that the South will be freed from the shackles in which it has been held by huge corporation in the North was made here last Saturday night by Henry Wallace.

Speaking to 50,000 persons at a rally at Yankee Stadium, which had been postponed one day by rain, Mr. Wallace, Progressive Party candidate for President, who had made a recent tour through the South addressing only unsegregated audiences, charged that it was the large corporations, mills, plantations and newspapers that incited violence in the South.

"They don't personally engage in lynching either free speech or human beings, just as they don't personally engage in fighting the wars from which they profit," he said, adding, "but they inflame the passion of others."

Hatred Breeds Only Misery

Wallace, who on several of his stops was greeted by barrages of thrown eggs and vegetables during, his recently completed tour of Dixie, declared that when the men and women of the South learn how prejudice has profited the few and brought only misery for themselves and their neighbors, the numbers of those who do the dirty work for their exploiters will dwindle.

It was repotted that more than 6,5000 persons paid totaw of $78,000 for tickets to the Wallace rallay, a record for paid attedance at any political meeting. Paul Robeson, noted singer and actor, was among those who shared the platform with Mr. Wallace.

Saw Hope for Future

Continuing to tell of his experiences on his Southern trip, Mr. Wallace stated that fascism was "no longer a second-hand experience with me," asserting:

"I have seen the ugly reality of how hate and prejudice can warp good men and women, turn Christian gentlemen into raving beasts and turn good wives and mothers into Jezabels; but I also saw the kind of courage that promises a new day for the south.

"I saw men and women, white and colored, who have been leading the fight against hate and prejudice and intolerance in the South; I saw them standing up and fighting for the very foudation of our American way of life, standing up to all kinds of intimidation."

Pointing to the disfranchisement of colored persons in the South, the speaker said that in the 1946 ellection, the vote cast to elect 14 representatives in Louisiana and Mississippi was less than the number of votes cast in the 26th District in the Bronx.

He urged his opponents of both major parties to pledge that if elected they would enforce the section of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, which calls for a reduction of the number of Represetatives in any State when any group of qualified citizens is barred from voting.

As We See It

Wallace's Progress On Negro Question

By Abner W. Berry

34a(1)

THERE ARE two persons I know who have been thinking out loud and on typewriters about Henry Wallace's position on the Negro question in 1936. Lester Granger, the non-political Urban League secretary, was the first to muse on Wallace's past in a ning the development of his thinking to where it is now.

"I had been a friend of George Washington Carver," he stated, "but I thought it best to follow the Tuskegee approach—let things ride and hope that somehow they'd straighten themselves out." Mrs. Durr and Perry, he said, convinced him during a meeting in the South that an anti-polltax law was needed, a conviction which he took with him into the 1944 convention.

"I said then to them (Mrs. Durr and Perry), 'Why do we not have a federal law making it compulsory for everyone to vote?' but Perry objected to that." Wallace said that he still thinks such a law is desirable.

AFTER WORLD WAR II, Wallace said, he had read a lot of Latin American literature in the original Spanish. What he found there, he said, convinced him that the color question is one of the main issues of our times.

"I found in that literature a type of racial hatred born of distrust of America," he said. He interpreted this to mean that the descendants of Africans and Indians in Latin America resented being pushed around by Anglo-Saxons. That, he said, spelled danger to the security of the United States.

"And when we began to preach democracy to the world when we really meant to give advantage to a small group of monopolists—" he declared earnestly, the smile on his face giving way to a harder expression, "then I knew we were in mortal danger.

"I want to see our country become really strong by practicing what it preaches."

Somewhere in the course of his remarks (my notes do not reveal the exact spot) he turned to Mrs. Wilson and said: "I understand that you have a large number of Negroes in your district and maybe what I have to say here would interest them."

He said he wanted to explain why he did the things he did because some persons had criticized him for taking the anti-segregation campaign into the South. "It would have no meaning," he answered his critics, "if I were to campaign against segregation in Harlem. You've got to fight Jimcrow at its source—in the South."

HE CLOSED his informal speech with a prophecy:

"If the Anglo-Saxon race does not get right soon concerning the color question, the Anglo-Saxon race is going to lose its position in world affairs."

And he added a strong footnote to the prophecy:

"We (Anglo-Saxons) are on probation before the bar of history."

Now there may be much for Walter White and Lester Granger—and others—to disagree with in Wallace's program. But I don't believe that anyone in possession of full sanity and principle could accuse Wallace of grabbing the Negro issue as a vote-getting device.

Wallace says himself that he was a Booker T. Washington man in 1932. But the 1944 Wallace is fighting for the right to harvest freedom's harvest. And he's fiercely honest about it.

If only his critics would match him on that score and stick to the issues!

Wallace Defends 3d Party Race Against Liberals in Congress

PM New York, N.Y.

Wed. 5-26-48

By John K. Weiss

Staff Correspondent

COOS BAY, Ore., May 25—Judging from the questions tossed at Henry Wallace by labor and student audiences during his junket through Oregon, Washington and California, the third party's attitude toward Democratic Reps. Helen Gahagan Douglas and Chet Holifield in California is regarded as the key issue in the Wallace campaign out here.

Insofar as the Presidential race itself is concerned, there is comparatively little feeling in any of the three far western states that Wallace's candidacy will hurt President Truman, because Truman is considered a hopeless cause in any case.

Liberal Support

On the other hand, Mrs. Douglas and Holifield both have widespread liberal and progressive support here, apart from any party loyalties. There is great eagerness to hear from Wallace himself the reason third party candidates are in the race against them. Wed.

Monday, at Willamette University, and again yesterday at a Portland, Ore. labor meeting, the first question asked the third party candidate was about the Douglas district in California. 5-26-48

Wallace's Answer

Wallace's reply, nearly identical both times, was:

"Mrs. Douglas has one of the outstanding progressive voting records in the U. S. Congress. We are very anxious to elect a liberal Congress this year, particularly to get rid of all Congressmen who voted for the Taft-Hartley Law.

"We urged Mrs. Douglas and Holifield to file in our primary but they refused. On the other hand they both filed in the Republican primary which seems an odd thing for them to have done since they are certainly much closer to our program than they are to the Republican's.

Election Law

"Because of the California election laws it was important for us to have a candidate so that some reactionary Republican could not come in and steal our nomination.

"So we have to fill our slate, and in Mrs. Douglas' district we are running a fellow named Moore (Sidney Moore), who incidentally is a Negro. Wed. 5-26-48

"Whether we fight for Moore or not depends on how the situation works out. If Helen Gahagan Douglas becomes a war-monger, we'll do everything we can to put Moore across. You know some of the liberals get much more hysterical than any right-winger you ever saw. Wed. 5-26-48

Personal Situation

PM

"We have convictions and we mean business. Often it causes difficult personal situations, but we are going down the line." New York,

Wallace explained this last sentence briefly by saying that Mrs. Douglas was one of his closest friends in Congress and that he was deeply hurt that she had declined to cross-file in the third party primary in California. N.Y.

This explanation, incidentally, has been sharply disputed by some of the pro-Wallace forces in California who are still at odds with the decision to run candidates against Mrs. Douglas and Holifield. PM

Not the Fact

They argue that the third party's contention it must enter a full slate to prevent the nomination from being "stolen" is not borne out by the facts. Independent candidates have not been entered in every district and race in California.

New York, N.Y.

This in turn is answered by third party officials who say candidates have been entered in every district where the local party officials felt it advisable. Wed. 5-26-48

They maintain that the Republicans would not bother to "steal" the nomination in a district where third party strength was weak or non-existent.

Wallace Sees Truman About-Face on Bias

PM

New York, N.Y.

By John K. Weiss

Staff Correspondent

PORTLAND, Ore. May 24—In a major campaign speech transcribed for rebroadcast through the entire Far West, Henry A. Wallace, third party candidate, tonight strongly implied that President Truman has about-faced on his entire civil rights program because of opposition from the southern Democrats. Tues. 5-25-48

Wallace reminded Truman that he had failed to make good on a three-month-old promise to wipe out discrimination in the Federal government by executive order.

"If the President's (civil rights) message was more than an attempt to woo votes with lip service," Wallace said, "he will issue that executive order—a good, strong effective order and he will issue it without further needless delay.

"Which is it, Mr. Truman—which is it, lip service or human service?"

Answers ADA

Wallace's address was understood to have been prompted in part by a recent blast against alleged Jim Crow conditions within the Commerce Dept. when he was Secretary of Commerce. This criticism had been raised by the Americans for Democratic Action.

The former Democratic Vice President and cabinet officer took tacit recognition of the ADA charge when he said: Tues.

"I think back to my own days in Washington when I saw, and when I said I knew, that we had a major responsibility to extend and protect civil rights. I made a lot of speeches on the subject. I took some effective—and some very ineffective—actions to help the cause of civil rights." 5-25-48

A Wallace Budget

Wallace contended that the $5,000,000,000 being spent in furtherance of the Truman Doctrine in Greece and China would have developed not only the power of the West, but of the Missouri Valley and other areas.

The third party candidate also reviewed his program for spending the $3,000,000,000 dollars which he said he would save by junking the proposals for Universal Military Training. PM

That sum, he promised, could:

¶ Provide nurses, full-time health services, and 10 new school houses in every county in the nation.

¶ Provide educational facilities for at least 3,000,000 young people a year who are now receiving no education at all. Tues. 5-25-48

¶ Build a trade and technical school in every congressional district in the country.

More Public Power

Wallace renewed his demands for a vastly increased public power program after charging that "economic royalists of private power stand in mobilized opposition to public power." Tues.

"The rivers belong to the people," he said. "And the rivers of sweat that harnes sthe power from the rivers have already paid the people back. Bonneville, because it represents public power, sells that power at the cheapest wholesale rates in the world—and it still makes a profit—and yet we have hardly tapped the power potential of the West." 5-25-48

The Wrong Way

Tues. 4-20-48

The New York Herald Tribune

The Advertiser

There is a cherished tradition in American universities that as long as a faculty member maintains the standards of the classroom, his activities and the opinions he expresses outside of it are his own business. The action of Evansville College, in Indiana, in asking the resignation of Dr. George Parker, a member of its teaching staff, after he had presided at a Wallace rally seems a clear violation of this tradition. Montgomery, Ala.

Mr. Wallace maintains that there is a nation-wide attempt to terrorize his supporters into silence. This theory might be largely discounted as the product of a persecution complex. Mr. Wallace was given valuable propaganda ammunition, however, by the rowdy behavior of his opponents at last Tuesday's rally where Dr. Parker presided. Now further ammunition is provided by the ill-advised action of the president of Evansville College aimed at Dr. Parker himself. Whether the target be the Wallace candidacy or his Communist supporters, surely this is the wrong way to go about defending the American freedoms which the success of these gentlemen would jeopardize so gravely.

11 Wallace Petition Signers Request Pool To Delete Their Names

The Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Thurs. 5-27-48

Eleven Alabamians have requested the secretary of state to take their names off recent Wallace-for president petitions.

One, who claimed to be a member of the CIO Political Action Committee, said he had not signed any such petition although his name was among those listed.

Secretary of State Sibyl Pool's office said most of the letters indicated the signers were either misinformed or did not understand the purpose of the petitions.

They were circulated in support of 11 candidates for presidential elector in the November general election. The would be electors are pledged to Henry Wallace. 5-27-48

Such petitions must be signed by at least 300 qualified voters. The names on Wallace ptitions are now being checked by probate judges in the various counties.

The secretary of state said approximately 280 of the signers have been confirmed as voters with several large counties yet to be heard from. Thurs.

THE issue of freedom versus security is at the root of the present-day dilemma. Nowhere is it better illustrated than in the campaign of Henry A. Wallace to be president. The Advertiser

In the busy Wallace headquarters here, every resource of modern communication is employed to promote Wallace and his doctrines. He demands and gets the facilities of national radio networks. His own paper, The Citizen, is a skillful propaganda sheet. Montgomery, Ala

Yet there are among Wallace's most ardent backers those who would change the system under which we live and, in the last resort, they would use force and violence to change it. They subscribe to the doctrines of Marx and Lenin, who held that the capitalist system was inevitably doomed but that its passing might have to be hastened by sabotage and finally by an armed uprising. Sat.

Some of these backers would accept a dictatorship of the left in order to avoid the evils of a dictatorship of the right. Paul Robeson, one of the Wallace co-chairmen, has said as much. 4-24-48

This is not true, of course, of Wallace himself. He is a deeply religious man, with a passionate, mystical Christianity superimposed on his Scotch Presbyterian background. Nor is it true of most of those who will vote for him in November.

C. B. Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager, says the estimate of a 10,000,000 vote for Wallace is conservative. If Wallace should get the same percentage as the late Robert M. LaFollette, Sr., who ran on a third-party ticket in 1924, his vote would be 12,000,000 according to Baldwin, who has more grass-roots political knowledge than the other aides around Wallace headquarters.

BALDWIN bases his prediction on a large total vote, perhaps as high as 60,000,000. The interest stirred by Wallace, Baldwin says confidently, will bring a big turnout. Furthermore, he believes the advance polls will not express Wallace's true strength, since many timid voters will wait until the secrecy of the polling booth before they express their real convictions. 4-24-48

In my opinion the 10,000,000 figure for Wallace is quite possible. Particularly if the major contest is between President Truman and an ultra-conservative such as Speaker Joseph Martin, the protest vote is likely to be large. Analysis outside the Wallace camp have predicted 1,000,000 votes for the third party in New York.

Naturally, as in the management of any political campaign, the effort is to create a bandwagon psychology. Nor are the Wallace managers averse to having their champion wear the crown of martyrdom. The picture of a peoples' hero persecuted by monopoly wealth and a monopoly press has an appeal to all who feel themselves picked on or frustrated.

Yet the real challenge is the one which the Wallaceites rarely speak of. It comes from the non-Communist left.

The most able and effective leader of the non-Communist left is Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers, who narrowly escaped assassination in his home in Detroit. Reuther licked the once-dominant pro-Communist faction in the UAW and licked them in a tough fight by Democratic means. He has since been engaged in cleaning up the mess they left behind. The Advertiser

Reuther has made the most forthright attacks on Wallace. On the west coast recently, he called Wallace "an agent of Stalin." There was serious thought in Wallace headquarters of bringing suit against Reuther for libel or slander.

Montgomery, Ala.

WHILE the attempted assassination of Reuther may have had nothing to do with politics—and everyone must hope that this can be established—yet the background of the hatred between the two factions of the labor-left cannot be ignored. Certainly it is in the minds of those around Reuther who fought with him against the pro-Communist faction.

This is a symptom—a warning symptom. It is not hard to recall some unhappy historical parallels. In Germany, in the late 1920s and early 1930s, the Communists waged ruthless war on the socialists. Street violence was common. This was at the time that Hitler was consolidating his forces for the Nazi dictatorship. Sat. 4-24-48

Abuse of freedom will bring an end to freedom. It will bring an end to freedom not merely for those who believed it was expedient to exploit freedom in any way they saw fit for the purpose of their new heaven. It will bring an end to freedom for all, including those who believed in it most passionately.

There are no easy answers. But the historical parallels should sober all who have any reason left.

WALLACE OFFERS WELFARE PROGRAM

The Times

Denounces Heavy Spending for Military, 'Penny-Pinching' on Social Security System

34a New York N.Y.

By LUCY FREEMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 21—Henry A. Wallace, Third-party Presidential candidate, outlined in a speech here today his plans to improve the social welfare program of the United States. Thurs.

Mr. Wallace also renewed his criticism of the foreign policy of the United States, declaring that we had bought votes in the Italian election, but had not bought Italian friendship. 4-22-48

In his welfare program, Mr. Wallace proposed social security coverage for every persons, a minimum benefit structure for the social security system of not less than $35 a week, a comprehensive health insurance program to cover every one, family allowance for each child under 18 years and maternity insurance designed to reimburse working mothers for time lost from jobs.

Mr. Wallace addressed a meeting sponsored by the Joint Committee of Trade Unions in Social Work, an associate group of the National Conference of Social Work, which is holding its seventy-fifth anniversary meeting. Officials made it clear that the conference itself was an annual meeting that serves as a forum, not an action group, and was not sponsoring Mr. Wallace's appearance.

He spoke in a room off the main auditorium in which 1,000 persons sat and hundreds more stood along the side and in the rear. As he entered he was greeted with cheers and whistles.

Assails "Old Parties"

The Times

He criticized "the old parties" for rejecting "every demand for a program to guarantee the American people against want on the grounds that military measures and war preparations come first."

"The men who pinch pennies when we talk of social security, health, education, public works and projects for the general welfare engage in mad spending sprees to meet the demands of the military and their big-business allies," he said. "When it's a question of social welfare they don't want to spend a penny." Thurs.

He called the Democratic Party's old-age pension bill "a feeble attempt to win election-year support" and said the Republican Party had no social security program at all. 4-22-48

"Our new party is dedicated to fighting for adequate benefits, benefits sfficient to insure a decent American standard of living," Mr. Wallace asserted. "Upon the basis of a minimum wage of $1 per hour, a sound minimum benefit structure for the social security system would be not less than $35 per week." New York N.Y.

He described the goal of his plan for comprehensive health insurance covering every family in the nation as "health, plus; health abounding; joy in living for all of us." It included cash disability benefits during sickness, which he said involved the extension of the principle of workmen's compensation to the entire field of disability. The Times

Scores Bias in Medicine

New York N.Y.

Mr. Wallace called also for elimination of what he termed "the shameful practices of discrimination and segregation and quotas not only in medical schools but in the practice of medicine." Thurs.

Such a comprehensive social insurance system would re-orient the scope of social work, he declared, adding: "It would eliminate social work as relief, and at the same time liberate social work from its present restrictions and permit it to be even more constructive."

Mr. Wallace declared he was "startled" to learn that the average case worker was earning only half the minimum budget required by a family of four to live "at a healthful and decent standard of living," and was "alarmed" to hear that the turnover in social work personnel was higher than ever.

In discussing the Italian election and the situation in Bogotá, Mr. Wallace charged that the United States "is promoting fascism both here and abroad." 4-22-48

Sen. Taylor Decries U. S. Russ Policy

The Birmingham Age-Herald

Birmingham, Ala.

UNIVERSITY, Ala., May 1—Sen. Glenn Taylor, Idaho, running mate of Henry Wallace, in an address here Saturday, said "the heroes of Stalingrad became the villains of the Kremlin."

"I do not think Russia wants war," he said. "She has plenty of people, territory and resources. I do not believe Russia is in shape for war. If the United States was equally devastated, we would be destroyed from Kansas City east. I do not believe the Russians want to control the world. If Russia had done some of the things we have done I believe we would already be at war."

He pointed out that we have given so many guns to Turkey they cried for food instead. In Iran we, or the Standard Oil Company, have gotten all the oil, he added. Sun 5-1-48

He asked what the American policy would be if the Russians were in a similar position—if the Russians were in Mexico or Bermuda.

"Nobody gets rich out of war in Russia," he asserted. "More money is spent on education in that country than in any nation in the world. I believe the Russians are convinced they are going to be attacked. I do not believe Russia wants A-bomb inspectors in their country because they don't want them to see what they don't have."

HE SAID OUR business men are going to exploit the world. The United States is spending money like a drunken sailor. Everything points toward another war.

"A showdown with Russia means the end of the world. As long as we pursue this get-tough policy it looks like war to me. Wallace's election will show the United States doesn't want war. We are a divided country, but the situation is not hopeless at all to my way of thinking."

If war comes it will be largely the fault of the newspapers, he said as he rapped the press for "misinforming" the people. Sun

"Communism is not a threat to democracy as long as we keep democracy, but we are fast losing our freedoms," he continued.

Sen. Taylor declared: "Segregation is inconceivable to me. I am against it North or South. I believe, in truth, all men are brothers. Never have we had more need for men in Washington who would vote for their convictions and never has their been so few such men."

Taylor was introduced by Dr York Willbern, political science professor, who said—in introducing him—he was a cousin to the speaker. 5-1-48

Miss. Helped Wallace Defy State Law

Afro American

Sat. 4-18-48

JACKSON, Miss.— Henry Wallace should have been jailed here. Instead he was given the biggest State police escort of his entire tour to assist him in breaking the State laws. Baltimore, Md.

According to a law enacted in 1942, Wallace could have been fined $500 or imprisonment of six months, or both. Here is the law.

"No. 2339. Races—social equality, marriages between—advocacy of punished.

"Any persons, firm or corporation who shall be guilty of printing, publishing or circulating printed, typewritten or written matter urging or presenting for public acceptance or general information, arguments of suggestions in a favor of social equality or of intermarriage between whites and negroes, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisionment not exceeding six months or both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."

(Editor's Note: The Mississippi law violates the amendment guaranteeing freedom of speech and freedom of the press.)

The Egg-Throwers Showed Restraint

Tue. 8-7-48

NEW YORK—The restraint shown by the people of the Southern tier under the deliberate goading of Henry Wallace is a reproach to the manners of the rabble of the cities up North. The Southern people, contrary to the slanders of a small element of envious inferiors in the City of New York, are, day by day, the politest that we have. Their superficial manners are pretty and almost fearsome as they mask an alacrity to fight for cause, and their patience is seen to be majestic under dire provocation.

The conduct of these maligned but superior citizens in the presence of the drooling mountebank who howled for war but cowered in Washington while sapling boys from the high school campus were mangled overseas, was an honor to their civilization. In a comparable situation in the Bronx, the intruder would have been beaten to death but for the strong intervention of the New York police. And they would have saved him only to suffer the bigotry of some Pilate who would have stretched an ear to the mob outside and packed him off to prison for inciting riot.

Tue. 8-7-48

The fact that Wallace is a candidate for President should not be a shield. If a man shall run for President as an advocate of some vileness abhorrent to the moral and religious sense of a given community, the importance of the office will intensify the opposition.

8-7-48 Tue.

In his Southern campaign, Bubblehead has ignored the issue of treason through Communism and advocated outrageous violations of the constitutional rights of the State and their citizens and of local sensibilities and custom.

If Wallace had been sincere it was strange that he never thought to go South and live in the homes of Negroes until election time. Similarly, Eleanor the Great revealed no use for them except as cooks and porters until she started a career as a political parasite on the ancient party of the Southern States. Her husband sold lots at Warm Springs containing the conventional African exclusion clause.

For ulterior reasons, principally treason or a milder form of treason amounting to a lingering, disappointed faith in Russia and in Roosevelt, Wallace commands a minor following in a few Eastern cities and, of course, in Hollywood. The Southern people, of purer citizenship and incomparably finer loyalty, might have been understood, though not so readily pardoned, had some angry gang tumbled the cops aside and lynched him.

Constitution

The worst they did, however, was to throw a few eggs and tomatoes and even this harmless protest was the expression of only a few exuberant Crackers arbitrarily classified as trash.

The custom of throwing eggs and garden truck at persons who appeal for public favor has dwindled in the years since the Cherry Sisters coyly strung a net from the proscenium, but it was standard practice not so long ago, and never harmful. No record exists of the death of any Hamlet or candidate from stoning with eggs, cabbage or tomatoes. They were eloquent but harmless. This was sound, native American custom.

Tue. 8-7-48

The pop bottle, on the other hand, is a deadly missile notorious in the major league cities, all of which lie in the Northeast quarter of the country. There were episodes in St. Louis, Detroit and Brooklyn, the last-named the stronghold of the Wallace adherence, so dangerous that the baseball industry was obliged to issue paper cups, retaining the bottles in custody. Indeed, I recall an evening at Madison Square Garden when a large knife was thrown from some gallery and grazed the ear of Mrs. Charles Francis Coe.

The rude note which is made by the pursing of the lips and a violent exhalation is a cultural and political refinement known the world around as the Bronx Cheer.

For a comparison let it be agreed that the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, a "nationalist" and, on information and belief, a candidate, like Wallace, for President of the United States, were to venture similarly into the centers of the strongest emotional opposition.

Parson Smith is an orator of enormous gas and effrontery and, like Wallace, he delights to stir them up. He is said to be a Jew-baiter. His distrust of colored people seems almost as wild and he is a frantic enemy of Communism.

In measuring the civilization and manners of the courteous people of the South toward Henry Wallace, fairness requires consent to the appearance of Mr. Smith in The Bronx, Brooklyn and Atlantic City and in all the Negro ghettoes of the North.

Atlanta, Ga.

His arguments and assertions would be no more unreasonable or untruthful than Bubblehead's have been.

Constitution

Yet if he did try to emulate Wallace here the steady, highly civilized Northern people would riot and might burn down most of a couple of big cities. Not to put a pretty look upon it, Smith would be lynched for trying to exercise his constitutional right to speak his mind.

But of course, Parson Smith would not be allowed to speak his pieces in such neighborhoods. Unlike the civilized Southern citizen, the most violent and insulting critics of Southern culture cannot take it and simply won't.

Wallace Wins Place On Missouri Ballot

The Commercial Appeal

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Sept. 10.—(AP)—Henry Wallace's Progressive Party apparently won a major victory Friday by getting on the general election ballot in President Truman's home state.

After weeks of legal tussling, the Progressives got a ruling from the Missouri secretary of state that their 52,000-name nominating petition was valid.

Sat. 9-11-48

Secretary of State Edgar Nelson's opinion nullified the vehement arguments by a group of Democrats that the names on the petition were fradulent.

Delegates Walk Out On Wallace At Ohio Elk Meet

CINCINNATI, Ohio—Nearly 2,000 Elk delegates who filled about half of the sweltering north auditorium of Music Hall turned out Tuesday night to hear Henry Wallace's bitter speech on "repression scarcity and war."

At the end of his 35-minute harangue, there were less than 1,000 in the hall. Most of the delegates received his talk very coldly. Only three times did they interrupt him by ripples of applause.

Crowds at Three Mississippi and Louisiana Towns Are the Friendliest Yet

By John Chabot Smith

A Staff Correspondent

SHREVEPORT, La., Sept. 2.—Henry A. Wallace avoided the possibility of violent demonstrations r racial conflicts today by using he radio to carry his message to he people of Mississippi and ouisiana. He made only three ublic appearances in small towns as he raced through the two states in a motor convoy traveling more than a mile a minute.

Between Jackson, Miss., and Shreveport, La., he stopped to ad-ress quiet, orderly and generally riendly crowds at Vicksburg, iss., and Monroe and Ruston, a. A few hundred listened at each stop.

Palmer Weber, southern states director of the Progressive party, said Mr. Wallace was unable to speak at Jackson because he was denied permission to use the steps of the state capitol, and could not speak at Shreveport because the mayor said he could not promise there would be no violence. His three audiences of the day, however, were the friendliest yet encountered in the South, and at Ruston he received considerable applause. Several people came up to shake his hand and ask for his autograph.

9-3-48

No Violence Expected

Meanwhile, in Shreveport, Po-ice Chief E. G. Huckabay told old local newspaper men he was onfident there would be no hos-ile demonstrations against Mr. Vallace. It is the duty of my epartment to give Mr. Wallace he opportunity to say what he as to say," Chief Huckabay said.

At neither of the Louisiana tops did the party make the most f the favorable situation. The ot chosen for the Monroe talk as in front of a school next door the St. Francis Sanitarium, in ospital quiet zone where loud-akers could not be used. So of the audience could not Mr. Wallace.

f a dozen boys in the audi-ad noisemakers of the type usly known as "the bird," raspberry," or the Bronx ." This sudden change from gg-boo-rebel-yell routine of states was a surprise and the e crowd laughed.

Fri.

ere were one or two interjec-s from hecklers, and somebody uted "louder." Mr. Wallace ologized for not having his und truck in operation, and a voice in the crowd said something about cutting out the "birds."

One Tomato Hit Car

Mr. Wallace said: "Yes, you can help me a bit if you would." After that he was heard almost without interruption.

One tomato hit the top of Mr. Wallace's car after he got back into it. Several in the crowd exclaimed in disappointment that the good-humored atmosphere of the occasion had been spoiled. "A lot of people are curious to hear Mr. Wallace here in Louisiana,," one Monroe resident remarked.

At Ruston a tape-recording crew from a Shreveport radio station was on hand to record the proceedings. But Mr. Wallace's soundtruck was set up in the wrong place. The radio equipment could not catch what he was saying, and an announcer had to fill in with his own description.

The radio crew asked to interview Mr. Wallace. The request was refused on the grounds that there was no time and Mr. Wallace was going to make a speech from the same station later in the evening.

Many Applaud

Hardly an unkind word was said by the Ruston audience, and many of the 300 listeners applauded. Mr. Wallace watered down his one-time attacks on the "Truman Doctrine" to a mere statement that the South could make better use of the money now going to Greece and Turkey. Yesterday he said "Greek and Turkish dictators"; the day before it was "Fascists in Greece and Turkey"; a few weeks ago his speeches were full of attacks on "Fascism" and the "Truman Doctrine."

Herald Tribune

Mr. Wallace reached Jackson at 5:30 a. m. in his special railroad car, and drove twenty-seven miles for a 6:30 breakfast at the Southern Christian Institute, a Negro junior college at Edwards, Miss. During breakfast, J. Lewis Henderson, Progressive party state chairman, presided over a state convention to nominate nine Presidential electors, some Negro and some white.

New York, N.Y.

At 7:30 Mr. Wallace and his convoy raced back to the state capital in Jackson, arriving thirty minutes later to hand the electors' names to secretary of state Heber Ladner. Then back to the Southern Christian Institute to make a state-wide radio broadcast at 9:15, and on to Vicksburg at the same high speed, with an escort of seven police cars and twenty-one state highway patrolmen. There was one heckler in Vicksburg audience. He was silenced by three words from Police Chief L. C. Hicks: "Shut up, buddy."

Fri. 9-3-48

Pleads for Peace

Mr. Wallace's radio talks on the Mississippi and Louisiana networks repeated essentially what he has told his open-air audiences.

He spoke of his desire for world peace, a higher standard of living and a wider measure of human freedom. He urged Southerners, both black and white, to work together for their common benefit, and explained why he believes the South should have its own industries, owned in the South, and should accept Federal aid to benefit its industry, agriculture, education and public health.

From Shreveport, where Mr Wallace rested in a Negro home, he was to fly to Little Rock, Ark. Tomorrow he will drive to Memphis, Tenn., with several stops for speeches on the way. 9-3-48

Glen Taylor Target of Eggs

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho, Sept. 2 (AP).—Senator Glen Taylor reported today peaches and eggs were tossed at him during a campaign appearance in his home state. The Progressive party Vice-Presidential nominee wound up his Idaho campaign with addresses in Rexburg and Idaho Falls last night.

Senator Taylor and John Derr, of Clark Fork, Progressive party nominee for the Senate, said eggs and peaches were thrown at them when they appeared at a street meeting in Rexburg. Mr. Derr said none of the missiles struck the two speakers, who continued their addresses. Fri. 9-3-48

GLADSTONE WILLIAMS

Wallace Is Getting What He Wanted

The Constitution
Fri 9-3-48
Atlanta Ga.

WASHINGTON—There is no reason to believe that Mr. Henry Wallace, the third-party presidential candidate, is any too unhappy about the rough treatment he has received on his egg-spattered itinerary through the South. After all, it was just the sort of treatment he had a right to expect, minus, perhaps, a few of the missiles hurled at him which found their mark. And even as to the latter, from the way he refused to brush off the goo and continued to speak at one city in North Carolina, with particles of a broken egg shell dangling above his ear, it must be evident that he preferred to wear the stuff as a badge of honor—or something.

Mr. Wallace, in undertaking his Southern tour, deliberately set out to flaunt the laws, the customs and the traditions of the South as regards the issue of race segregation. It was deliberately done for the purpose of provoking incidents which would make headlines in other sections of the country.

The more ripe tomatoes and eggs that are thrown at him, the more attention his tour will get in the national press. If he succeeds in stopping a few specimens of the shoddy fruit, he stands to be made more of a martyr in his role of defender of certain minority groups.

Already his followers in the East are making a hero of him because of the discomfiture he has been subjected to on the Southern tour. Plans have been announced for holding a great Wallace demonstration in New York after he returns, at which it is hoped to see some 100,000 people turn out. Such a demonstration would not have been possible without the indignities suffered by the third-party candidate on the vegetable circuit. This, of course, is what he was aiming at from the start.

Fri 9-3-48

To make sure that he would run afoul of the customs and traditions of the area, he took along with him a Negro girl as secretary.

Now Mr. Wallace, of course, is no stranger in the South. During his long term of Government service as Vice President and Cabinet officer he made many trips to the Southern States. Never before on any of these trips has he seen it necessary to flaunt the customs of the area. Always he was accorded a respectful hearing.

Atlanta Ga.

It must be obvious, therefore, that the present trappings of his Southern trip were designed primarily for political effect. He is out to exploit the racial issue for all that it is worth to him in population centers outside of the South.

He did not undertake the trip with any thought of local gain, except perhaps in corralling a large Southern Negro vote to give him a more impressive national total. He was thinking entirely of the reaction he might be able to produce elsewhere.

Considered in this light, it is all the more deplorable that the hoodlums and tomato flingers along the route sought to make life miserable for Mr. Wallace. Assuming that to have been their purpose, they hardly succeeded at all. On the contrary, they have probably made him quite happy over the affair. He has acquired a wealth of publicity over the punishment taken and he is being made a hero for his experience.

That is precisely what Mr. Wallace wanted all the while. At the cost of stopping a few eggs and some vegetables, along with being shouted down by vociferous boos and catcalls, he has gained a notoriety for his campaign that is hardly its due.

New York Post

Indignity Increases Wallace's Dignity

Perry

Odious comparisons sometimes help to repair manners. I have before me two dispatches, one from Berlin, Germany, one from Durham, N. C. The Berlin wire tells how the City Council's second attempt in a week to meet and get on with its business was broken up by Communists. "Russian-controlled German police of the Soviet sector made no effort to quell the demonstrations." This was very evil.

Thur 9-2-48

The Durham wire tells how an attempt by Henry Wallace to make a campaign speech in a Federal armory was broken up by a handful of riotous hecklers while national guardsmen and the police stood by. "The police did not try to stop the disturbance."

Expensive Vote-Wise

New York, N.Y.

One report echoes the other. Of course the Durham marplots were not "Communists." Nor by any stretch of the fancy could it be supposed that the lackadaisical police in the second instance were from some sector of Durham, N. C., that is "Russian-controlled." The really quaint part is that the Durham hooligans were shouting at Wallace, "why don't you go back to Russia?"

People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw eggs.

In a day or so, I am going on vacation. First, I have a sympathetic opinion or two about Henry Wallace I want to set down. I still find Wallace's refusal to start every day shadow-boxing red herrings admirable — and solidly "American."

His rebellion against this vogue probably is expensive to him vote-wise — however sustaining to his self-respect. Wallace is a little d democrat of the primitive faith and believes in freedom of political thought and expression for others as well as for himself. He makes no exception, even when it is conventional, and would be expedient, to do so. Some call this naive; I call it honesty and like it.

It is a kindred piece of Wallace little-d democracy that he believes every citizen including himself has a right to stand for public office. When he protests to the noisemakers in a North Carolina crowd, "I am a candidate for President. I want to speak to you," he is depending upon some tenet of our political system he has always taken for granted. I take it for granted, too. Wallace may be foolhardy, but he is not presumptuous.

It may be foolhardy of Wallace to come into the South denouncing segregation and insisting upon the right of free assembly. For that he is pelted with eggs and tomatoes. But I must have more respect for a man who denounces segregation to its face than for another who tells it merely into a microphone. And I think Wallace's campaign has gained in dignity by the indignities it has met with in the field.

Thur 9-2-48

Neither Shelter Nor Martyrdom

Wallace, and those who have planned his southern tour, can indeed be ribbed for an indiscretion. Instead of speaking in the armories and public squares, where custom is brittle, the Progressive candidate could have picked other places where, even in the deepest South, there is no question of segregation — the banks, and the offices of the tax collectors. These are the truly neutral grounds, where only the color of money is recognized.

But I say it only for the rib. The Progressive candidate is seeking neither shelter— nor martyrdom, as far as I can tell. He is running for President—and trying to prove, to himself and to all, no doubt, that speech still is free, that men still are reasonable, and that fairness still is more than just a tradition, in America.

WALLACE'S STATEMENT

Daily Worker

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 21.—Following is the text of a statement by Henry A. Wallace denouncing the indictment against leaders of the Communist Party:

I have been asked for a statement on the indictment of the leaders of the Communist party. Although the information about the indictments is limited, there are certain obvious conclusions an American who believes in civil liberties must reach:

1. We Americans have far more to fear from these actions which are intended to suppress political freedom than from the teachings of ideas with which we are in disagreement.

I understand that the Grand Jury which returned the indictments has been engaged in its investigation for more than a year. It is significant to me that after this prolonged investigation the indictments make no charge of the commission of acts of force and violence. They are limited to a charge that these men teach such a doctrine. This is not a new allegation. J. Edgar Hoover has made it before, yet I recall that Hoover, quite rightly, opposed the very objective the indictments seek to accomplish—the objective of outlawing the Communist party.

New York, N.Y.

2. It is interesting and highly significant that these Red scares over the past two or three years have been timed to silence opposition to new turns in the bi-party get-tough foreign policy. Millions of Americans have indicated their displeasure at the refusal of the bi-partisans to enter into real negotiations with the Russians, looking to a peaceful settlement of existing differences.

The indictments are, I feel, an attempt to promote new fears. They are another in a series of diversions created for Americans who are complaining about mounting inflation, the stupid bungling in Berlin and other problems. Both the administration and the bi-partisans in Congress make allegations to make headlines, make headlines to make fear, and make fear to stay in power.

Thurs. 7-22-48

The important thing for democratic Americans is to recognize this practice and defend with all their energy the rights of others to speak freely, no matter how much they may disagree with the points of view of those they defend.

3. While I favor strong action against any individual who commits violence, it has been my observation that violence in the United States, as indeed in other countries, has been generally committed by the very people who would suppress the free speech of Communists and other groups with whom they disagree. When we look at non-Communist countries with millions of Communist voters, we are shocked that there are politicians in our rich, powerful democracy who feel so insecure that they are led to suppress the political freedom of a relative handful of American Communists.

4. Defense of the civil rights of Communists is the first line in the defense of the liberties of a democratic people. The history of Germany, Italy, Japan and Franco Spain should teach us that the suppression of the Communists is but the first step in an assault on the democratic rights of labor, national, racial and political minorities, and all those who oppose the policies of the government in power.

5. I am confident that the courts will eventually find unconstitutional the Smith Act under which the indictments are handed down to the extent that it makes unlawful the advocacy of any doctrine by peaceful means, unaccompanied by a clear and present danger to established government. I think that such an application of the Smith Act clearly violates the First Amendment and infringes the American right of free speech.

Meanwhile, the bi-partisans will play up the indictments and hearings and trials to promote fear. The present situation makes it essential for the administration to create fear through a continued series of crises.

Thurs. 7-22-48

We can expect further Red scares and attacks on other minority groups with charges that their views are hostile to the government. I, personally, have great hostility for many present practices of the administration and the old parties. I fully expect continued attempts to attack the New Pary with all manner of false and inflammatory allegations. The New Party will continue to carry on the fight in defense of the Constitutional liberties of all the American people.

Wallace Candidacy Unwise, Says Powell

Chicago Ill.

Chicago Defender Sat 1-10-48

NEW YORK -- The candidacy of Henry A. Wallace is "extremely unwise" at this time, Cong. Adam Clayton Powell said Sunday in his first public address since his illness.

We might have forced the Republicans to run a great American like Gen. Eisenhower if Wallace had not entered the race, he told his Peoples' Committee at Golden Gate hall.

The Harlem preacher and legislator said he is willing to support Eisenhower 100 per-cent.

He said he does not think the time for a third party is now, adding that he will be all out for one if the Republican and Democratic parties do not change in 1948.

Powell, who suffered a heart attack last May, said he feels Wallace will withdraw if Eisenhower enters the presidential campaign.

WALLACE ASSAILS ARREST OF TAYLOR IN ALABAMA

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 2.—Henry Wallace today assailed the arrest of Glen Taylor for "opposing undemocratic and criminal practices of racial discrimination and segregation."

In a wire to Sen. Taylor, Wallace declared that the Associated Press reported "that you have met with violence in carrying out the new party policy" against segregation.

"This dramatizes the hypocrisy," said Wallace's wire, "of spending billions for arms in the name of defending freedom abroad, while freedom is trampled on here at home. I hope that when you get back to Washington you will raise the question with your Senate colleague, Lister Hill of Alabama, who so ardently supports the arms appropriation, draft, and other military measures."

Wallace Purrs, And the Kremlin Cat---

Atlanta, Ga.

Sat. 4-24-48

Some publishers are very kind to me, sending me occasional books. I have just received Henry Wallace's new book, and a slender one it is, "Toward World Peace."

I sat down and read it, since it is thin in pages, and I want to write about it honestly. I was one of those who, when Henry Wallace was first come to politics, liked him for his freshness and his blunt honesty of expression.

I knew it was not he who "plowed under the little pigs," as his enemies said, that decision being made by the full agricultural committee, which never had the integrity to come forward and speak in defense of Wallace. I knew, too, that he was not a failure, but a successful businessman whose experiments in hybrid corn alone brought him in a sum of about $25,000 each year. When he was talking about corn and fields and soil conservation, things he knew something about, he was good. Maybe he was something of a dreamer, but so is every man who works with the soil and who knows skies and horizons. I want to be honest and admit all this.

Change But Wallace, the agricultural pioneer, who was to do his country a great service in developing hybrid corn and in experiments with pig breeding, became something else. He became a politician. And since he does not know much about politics, he has become a bad politician. That is, by itself, harmful enough. But he has become something else. He has become a tool in the hands of those who use him for something else.

All of us have an ego. All of us like back-patting and we purr when our fur is stroked.

Sat. 4-24-48

But Wallace, obviously, has come to like only to have his fur stroked and he lives always within reach of the eager hands which constantly are outstretched to keep their man purring—because, you see, he purrs their language.

Blind Wallace has become so enamored of his own importance and his vision is so blinded by what is a surprising vanity and consuming ambition, in which hatred of Harry Truman is the driving force, that he is revealed by this little tract of his as little short of a foolish man.

I note that an admirer, with a fellow-traveler reputation, has written a review which says that the sayings of Wallace in this book remind him of the phrases and letters of Paine and of Jefferson. Well, in a sense, they do, and they patently are efforts to take the thoughts of the two and put them into the words and the letters of Wallace.

The Constitution

As long as Wallace is rewriting Paine and parroting the phrases of Jefferson, he does very well.

But when he gets on his own he is not too good.

History In a lofty manner, as if to escape it all, he writes that he leaves to history the judgment of those who consider a totalitarian Russia as they did a totalitarian Germany.

Wallace himself, not so long ago, was saying:

"Communism and Fascism are strikingly similar'. . . like war, they begin and end with physical force, and their final outcome is likely to be as futile and devastating."

Atlanta, Ga.

But now, as the Communists stroke his fur, he purrs out good things about the Soviet course and finds excuses and justifications for it. Now, as he is fed on the lotus of Communism, he purrs the party line of the Communist Party.

His speeches contain not only Paine and Jefferson, but more of Stalin and of the editorials of the Daily Worker.

He wishes that this country would join with Russia in saving the peoples of the world.

Russia has violated every major pledge made at Yalta. Yet, Wallace says:

Sat. 4-24-48

"Russia has been criticized for the part she has taken in the Balkan States and particularly for refusing to permit Western observation and supervision of the elections in those countries. I have not joined in that criticism, for the simple reason that I know if the shoe were on the other foot . . . we would act as Russia has, if not more drastically. . . . Russia simply will not permit us to run the politics of that area no matter what was said at Yalta."

That this is false, he must know.

Here, in the amazing statement above, he excuses Russia for violating her pledged word when this country and Great Britain had followed it to the letter—until Russia deviated from it. Sat

His program for peace is to capitulate to Russia—to turn over world affairs to her. He no longer, then, can be interested in freedom of the individual, because freedom for the individual exists in no country where Russia governs. 4-24-48

His prgram is very remindful of that of a Georgia legislator. He stands for peace, for lower taxes, for more and better pensions, and for more and more Federal aids for everyone.

Neville Chamberlain was as sincere as Wallace. Chamberlain wanted to give Hitler all he wanted, as Wallace wants to appease Russia. He did it in the name of "peace," as does Wallace.

Wallace purrs and the Kremlin cat grins.

Former Afro-American Newsman Wallace Assistant Campaign Mgr

Memphis Tenn.

Memphis, Tenn.

George B. Murphy, former editor and publicist and until this week national commander of the United Negro and Allied Veterans of America, has taken a leave of absence from that organization to accept appointment as assistant campaign manager of the National Wallace for President Committee, it was announced last night (Monday) by C. B. Baldwin, campaign manager for Henry Wallace.

Fri. 4-16-48

Murphy's appointment follows the election of Mrs. Estelle Massey Osborne, chairman of the educational committee of the National Council of Negro Women, as secretary of the New York State Wallace for President Committee. Mrs. Osborne, a faculty member of New York University, is also an officer of the Association of Colored Graduate Nurses.

Murphy served as national public relations director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and before entering the armed services was Washington editor of the Afro-American for several years.

Baldwin said that he would be responsible "for coordinating the activities of the growing Wallace campaign as it affects the Negro people in the varied fields of labor, youth, women's organizations, and cultural and other groups."

In accepting the appointment Murphy said that he was "anxious to get to work quickly in the campaign.

"The Negro people have been waiting a long time for a leader, especially in this critical period, who stands for peace, freedom and the complete abolition of Jim Crow. Henry Wallace is the only presidential candidate whose deeds in this respect match his words.

Wallace Says Democrats GOP Joined

The Record Columbia S.C.

NEW YORK, June 24—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace said today the Republican party's new platform signals "The formal end of the now outmoded division between the Republican and Democratic parties."

It marks, he said in a statement, "the start of a new era in which there will be only the new people's party and the old Republican-Democratic party of the monopolies with its war and depression program." 6-24-48

The third party presidential candidate said the Republicans, in their platform adopted at Philadelphia, stated they would "invite the minority party to join us under the next Republican administration in stopping partisan politics . . ."

"They thus affirmed," Wallace said, "what I have been saying for months—that the old parties are in effect one."

Wallace sharply criticized the GOP platform and charged the Republicans had "ignored their 1944 pledges" for support of the United Nations, social welfare legislation and civil rights lows.

Last night, Wallace released the text of a letter in which he said his new party would support "progressive candidates" for Congress, regardless of party differences in the presidential race. 6-24-48

The letter was addressed to G. J. O'Donnell, president of the Trades and Labor Assembly in St. Paul, Minn., who had wired Wallace asking him to help unite the liberal movement in Minnesota behind the Senatorial candidacy of St. Paul Mayor Hubert Humphrey.

Wallace Aide Klan Victim

The Courier

7-10-48

MACON, Ga.—The Ku Klux Klan burned an eight-foot cross in the front yard of the home of Larkin Marshall, candidate for U. S. Senate on the Wallace ticket, last week. Marshall's home is on Miller Field Road. The burning took place shortly before midnight.

The senatorial candidate and his wife were at home at the time of the burning, but were not aroused. A next door neighbor, Will Ford, called them. When Marshall went out in the yard, the cross was on fire from one end to the other. The persons who fired the cross had fled and left no clue as to their identity except the cross itself.

Pittsburgh Pa.

A controversy over Marshall's running on the Wallace party ticket while being head of the Bibb County Citizens Democratic Club has raged since the convention here several weeks ago.

11 WALLACE MEN GET BALLOT SPOT

Times-Picayune

(The Associated Press)

Montgomery, Ala., May 31.—Eleven presidential elector candidates pledged to Henry Wallace, appeared today to have won a place on the ballot in Alabama.

Petitions seeking to put the Wallace candidates on the ticket in the November general election are all in order and apparently meet the requirements of law, the secretary of state's office said.

The candidates are independents and were required to have the signatures of at least 300 qualified voters on each petition. The secretary of state's office said probate judges had checked the names and found at least 427 voters, more than enough.

WALLACE REPLIES TO BOOM FOR 'IKE'

Democrats Think General Is Reactionary, He Says

Times-Picayune

(The Associated Press)

Katonah, N. Y., July 4.—Henry A. Wallace said here that Democrats booming Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower for the presidency "have reason to believe that Ike is reactionary." New Orleans

Wallace offered Eisenhower "a membership card in the New Party" if he would come out against segregation in the Army, the Taft-Hartley law and universal military training.

Wallace made his remarks at a rally held on the lawn of the estate of a friend and neighbor, Dr. Samuel Rosen, in northern Westchester county, a Republican stronghold.

"It is interesting to note that the Eisenhower boom is coming from the South—Georgia and Alabama—and from Ed Flynn (Bronx Democratic leader)," the third party presidential candidate said.

"They have reason to believe that Ike is reactionary because of his testimony on the draft and UMT and because he upheld segregation and the Baruch proposals for a wage freeze.

'Record Looks Bad'

"I'm not sure Ike knew what he was doing but the record sure looks bad.

"I'd like to hear him say he's against segregation, against Taft-Hartley, against UMT and the no-group Air Force. Then we'd give him a membership card in the New Party and a chance to add genuine political service to his country to his record as a general." Mon. 7-5-48

He told the gathering that "no matter who the Democrats may nominate, I want to make it clear right now that I shall not retire from the race."

While he had said previously he was in the race to stay, this was Wallace's first pronouncement on the subject since the new Eisenhower boom began.

"This has never been a personal matter with me nor has it been a political matter," he added. "It is a crusade for peace.

"We're not going to give up because of any deal. We believe our stand has had a definite influence in the fight for peace."

Dewey 'Real Enemy'

He continued:

"I am told that the Communists were in favor of a third party. Maybe I was unconsciously following the Communist line. The Communists favor peace with Russia. I favor peace with Russia. Of course a lot of Methodists and Quakers feel the same way. Maybe we all are part of a Red plot."

Turning to the Republicans, Wallace identified Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the GOP presidential nominee, as the "real enemy" of the New Party in the 1948 campaign."

He said he originally believed that he would get more votes from Democrats than from any other source but that now he expected to get a lot of Republican support, too.

Wallace reiterated his argument that the Republican and Demo-

PROTESTS MOBBING OF WALLACE SUPPORTERS

April 29, 1948

Press Service of The NAACP

New York, N.Y.

NEW YORK, April 29.--Investigation of alleged intimidation of Wallace supporters in Logan County, West Virginia was urged today by Walter White, NAACP secretary, in a wire to Attorney General Tom Clark.

Charges of "intimidation, bribery and coercion" by law enforcement officers against Negro supporters of Henry A. Wallace were forwarded to the Association by the Rev. Clive Knowles, state director of the West Virginia Wallace for President Committee. Thurs. 4-29-48

"Our Negro circulators of petitions in the southern area have been threatened by armed law enforcement officers," the Rev. Mr. Knowles said in his wire. "Also offered bribes to 'beat up' other circulators. Petition signers have been intimidated into removing names from petitions."

In his wire to the Attorney General, Mr. White cited the non-partisan position of the NAACP but added that "mob violence used against any person because of his political beliefs is a violation of law and negation of the democratic process. May we therefore urge investigation by your department of these charges and appropriate legal action if they are found to be accurate." Thurs. 4-29-48

Expects 95% of Georgia's Negro Vote to Go to Wallace

Daily Worker

New York, N.Y.

By Mary Southard

MACON, Ga., April 6.—Macon is one of the oldest Black Belt towns in central Georgia. It is the county seat of Bibb County, stronghold of the big Bibb textile mill chain which has spearheaded mill owner resistance to the organization of Georgia textile workers. Wed.

But Macon is also a stronghold of the democratic movement of the Negro people of Georgia. The leader of this movement is L. Marshall, co-chairman of the Georgia Wallace for President Committee and president of the Macon Progressive Democratic Club. 4-7-48

Mr. Marshall, who I interviewed in his editorial office, is a man of many enterprises. He owns a clothing store, edits the Macon World, which after two years has a circulation of 7,000, and is a director of a Negro real estate development in Macon, Marshall Homes.

In the editorial office in back of his store, I told Marshall about the case of the Ingram family.

Marshall, who grew up in Americus, said: "I know every by-path and pig-trail, and it's a hostile town."

He recalled the Angelo Herndon case, which Benjamin J. Davis took to the Supreme Court and won, fighting for the rights of Negroes to serve on juries.

He digressed a moment to speak of Ben Davis' father, who was one of the most courageous men he had ever known. Daily Worker

"There was one man you couldn't budge," he said, smiling. "They fired into his house, they did everything you could think of, but he just didn't scare, and he kept on fighting."

He felt that a fund to help the Ingram family should be started immediately. Gov. Thompson is desperately looking for votes, he noted, and a lot of pressure on Thompson from Negro and liberal white citizens would go far to help Mrs. Ingram. New York, N.Y.

GEORGIA'S ONLY HOPE

Mr. Marshall's warmest enthusiasm was for Wallace and the building of a third party in Georgia.

"In the Governor's race the only hope for Georgia," he said, "is a strong third party candidate, and such a candidate could win with the support of the Negro and liberal white vote here." 4-7-48

He minced no words in attacking certain Georgia Negro leaders who are now trying to get Negro voters to support Thompson.

"I decided to beard the lion in his den," he recounted.

"I went to Atlanta to see Col. A. T. Walden (leading NAACP lawyer) and C. A. Scott (publisher of the Atlanta Daily World, and Scott Syndicate News), and I asked them point blank what hope Negroes could have in a man who had joined six southern Governors against a civil rights bill, and that I thought anyone who could do such a thing was either a knave of a fool."

"I am sure," he went on, "that 95 percent of the Negro voters will vote for Wallace and Wallace candidates in Georgia. They may not speak up like I do. As for me, I have only one time to die, and I'm going to keep on speaking up for what I think is right."

180,000 NEGRO VOTERS

He estimated that there are now about 180,000 registered Negro voters in Georgia. There were some 125,000 in 1946, and thousands have registered since then.

The Progressive Democratic Club of Macon is holding meetings every night now in a campaign to register Negro voters. They already have over 14,000 to their credit in Bibb County, and their goal is 24,000 Negro voters out of a total county population of 100,000.

"It will be hard going and no picnic to get Wallace and the People's Party on the ballot," he said, "but we will get him on." The law requires 55,000 signatures to a petition to get Wallace on the Georgia ballot in November.

I asked Marshall about the outbreaks of KKK parades and terror in Georgia.

SUBVERSIVE Daily Worker

"The Klan is a subversive organization, which incites to riot," he said. "It should be suppressed. We have a pledge from our sheriff here to permit no Klan parades in Macon. As for Thompson, he's on the fence. He wrote the white primary bill, doesn't deny it, and yet he's busy day and night soliciting the Negro vote. New York, N.Y.

"I agree with Don West that he ought to send state troopers to protect the polls on voting day, if he means business at all. All this agitation against the civil righas bill has kindled the KKK to action again. Wed.

"I feel that it's the job of the federal government to protect the polls at the general election in November. Maybe they will claim they can't interfere in the primaries, but they can insure the right of Negro voters at the polls in November. And I know that such a measure will be necessary." 4-7-48

The founding convention for the Georgia People's Party will be held in Macon in early May. Mr. Marshall will be there os one of the founders and leaders of the people's movement in Georgia.

Wallaceites Don't Follow Line

Tues. 5-4-48

PRINCETON, N. J.—The followers of Henry A. Wallace are not a group with homogeneous ideas on public issues. Although it might be expected that the supporters of a new disciple in politics would be of like mind, many of the people who say they plan to vote for Wallace do not agree with the views he has expressed on leading subjects.

They might best be described as a "conglomeration of protesters," who support Wallace more because they are against other parties than because they are drawn to his particular ideas and pronouncements. For example:

Although Wallace has made a big point of opposing the European Recovery Plan, polls among the Wallace supporters find that approximately one-half of them favor the ERP, while about one-fourth oppose it and the rest express no opinion. While it is true that ERP has less support from Wallace followers than from Democrats or Republicans, there is certainly no clear agreement among Wallaceites about backing up Wallace's own position.

The following table gives a comparison of the vote on ERP by people who favor President Truman, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey or Wallace for president.

	Truman	Dewey	Wallace
Approve ...	62%	55%	47%
Disapprove	12	22	28
No opinion	26	23	25

Polls also find that a majority of Wallace followers agree with the general American public in thinking Russia would start a war to get what she wants, although Wallace has tended to belittle the so-called Russian menace.

Wheras Wallace has often decried the large sums of money being spent today for the army and navy, a majority of Wallace followers polled by the Institute say they favor increasing the size of the air force, and as many favor increasing the navy as oppose it. Only with respect to the size of the army is the weight of opinion among Wallace followers in favor of his position against a large army.

In short, the big fact is that while the majority of Truman followers support his position on the Marshall Plan, Russia, and the armed forces, the men and women who plan to vote for Wallace do not show a similar degree of agreement with their leaders on such issues. The main thing which the members of Wallace's "Gideon's Army" have in common is being against all other candidates.

Nationally the Wallace vote today runs between six and eight percent in polls by the Institute. Translating this national percentage into votes depends, however, on whether the Wallace party can get on the official election ballot in all states, which is not likely.

If the voting turnout in November is at the same rate as it was before the war, the total vote would be approximately 58,000,000. The Wallace vote based on polls at the present time would theoretically run to between 3,500,000 and 4,600,000—if the party were able to get a place on the ballot in all 48 states.

The Wallace percentage today lags far behind the record of the elder Robert LaFollette and his Progressive Party in 1924, which polled 16½ percent in the election, and the Bull Moose Party in 1912, which polled 28 percent. It compares roughly with the vote polled by Eugene Debs on the Socialist ticket in 1912, six percent. The trend of third party sentiment is shown in an accompanying chart.

Tues. 5-4-48

Wallace's real threat to the Democratic party lies in his ability to cut into the Democratic vote in key states. In New York, for example, Wallace polls some 15 percent and that is enough to rob the Democrats of their lead in the state and put New York over into the Republican column. The situation in Pennsylvania is similar. Atlanta, Ga.

A Few Reasons Why We Are Opposing Wallace

Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

Tues 4-13-48

(1) On the basis of the record, a Third party can't win in 1948. This is a crucial year and the Negro can not waste his vote on a wild goose chase. This year, above all, we must seek unity and make every vote count.

34a(1)

(2) Mr. Wallace deserted the party that has done more to relieve our condition in the South during the past fifteen years than all previous administrations since the time of Lincoln up to 1933.

(3) We believe his action is motivated primarily by his desire to enhance his own personal prestige and powers plus a desire for revenge against President Truman. He could have helped us and his country more by remaining in the Democratic party and fighting for a liberal program than withdrawing and possibly contributing to the return of reactionary control of the national government.

(4) We sincerely feel Mr. Wallace's foreign policy stand of appeasement will bring us to war rather than peace—a thing the masses of people everywhere desire. Chamberlain appeased Hitler and we had to fight. Appeasement of Stalin will also inevitably lead us to to war. Daily World

(5) Mr. Wallace has no power with which to actually help the Negro. The name Wallace is too closely linked with Russia and communism of which we are opposed. His name is a liability and a hindrance to Negro advancement in the South. We have enough problems now and don't desire any dead weight on our hands. Atlanta, Ga.

(6) We are opposed to any Third Party movement which might tend to divide our people and thereby reduce our voting strength beyond the two traditional major parties—Democratic and Republican. Only after we are convinced that there is no hope for our people within either of these two parties will we consider any Third party. Tues.

(7) Integration into one of the major two parties that now have power is the sensible courses for our people to pursue. 4-13-48

(8) We feel the influence of the Wallace Third party movement may have the effect of contributing to a victory for the Talmadge forces in the primary election in September. We hope that the Talmadge forces will be defeated in the primary and then we will not be confronted with the question of what to do in the general election this November. But we should not be required to cross that bridge until we get to it.

Wallace Hailed by Leader of NAACP

Foreign nations question the sincerity of the United States when it preaches freedom and equal rights for all men and then denies democratic rights to millions of Americans in their own country, Magistrate Joseph A. Rainey, of Philadelphia, said Sunday. He spoke to supporters of Henry A. Wallace for president at the Olivet Baptist Church, 554 Winder. 4-19-48 Mon.

SPEAKING UNDER auspices of the Progressive Party, of Michigan, the president of the Philadelphia branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, compared Wallace to "another great liberal," Thomas Jefferson.

Meanwhile, Michigan women supporting Wallace for president will inaugurate their campagin with a luncheon Saturday at the Hotel Book-Cadillac. The luncheon will be in honor of Mrs. Wallace. Mon.

The chief speaker at the affair will be Mr. Elinor Gimbel, chairman of the national Women for Wallace Committee. 4-19-48

Mrs. Annabelle McLay, of Birmingham, sister of the candidate, is the chairman of the Michigan committee, and Mrs. Kathleen Hendrie, also of Birmingham, is in charge of luncheon arrangements.

Wallace Wins Place In Eight States

The News-Age-Herald

NEW YORK, June 5—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace has won a place on the ballot in eight states and has failed to qualify in only one so far, his campaign manager said Saturday.

C. B. Baldwin, director of Third Party forces, said Alabama and Utah were the latest states in which Wallace had been certified on the ballot.

34a(1)

The independent presidential candidate previously had qualified in California, New Jersey, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York and Cook County, Ill.

In addition, Baldwin said sufficient signatures have been filed to put Wallace before the voters in Maryland, West Virginia and Oklahoma. Birmingham, Ala.

A court fight over formal certification is on in Oklahoma.

The 11 states have 211 electoral votes out of the total of 531.

Florida is the only state in which the new party has failed to meet the qualifying deadline, Baldwin said. Sun.

This is the one state in which the Wallace strategists had no hopes of getting on the ballot from the start. 6-6-48

His chances also are dubious in Ohio, where the secretary of state yesterday ruled that Wallace could not have a place on the ballot. But this decision is being appealed to the courts.

Wallace Hits 'Tin Gods' as Men's Judges

The Post

Washington D.C.

Henry A. Wallace said last night that the "controlling elements" of the Republican and Democratic parties "are the greatest enemies of a free America."

34a(1)

Wallace spoke at a $6.50-a-plate dinner at the Statler Hotel, sponsored by the Washington Committee for Wallace. 6-26-48 Sun.

In a prepared address, he said the "most paralyzing weapon" of these controlling elements is the word "subversive."

"Anybody who wants to change anything today can be labeled subversive with impunity by the false tin gods who have assumed for themselves the right to sit in judgment on the thoughts of America's citizens," he said.

Topsy—Turvy Morality

He described as a "topsy-turvy morality" one in which:

1. Representative John Rankin (D., Miss.) is a "member of a committee investigating the loyalty of decent citizens."

2. William C. Bullitt, former United States Ambassador to Russia, and George Earle, one-time Governor of Pennsylvania, "can demand that we drop atom bombs on Russia with no fear of an FBI investigation." The Post

"Like the Nazi leader who boasted that re reached for his gun when he heard the word 'culture,' our American gualeiters are whipped into frenzies by ideas of peace, equality and brotherhood," Wallace said. Sun.

The third-party candidate found that Washington has changed since the "vigorous, progressive days of the New Deal." 6-26-48

"Things have retrogressed so far that if you stick a pin into a map of Washington, you can hardly avoid stabbing a military man or an alumnus—a loyal, devoted alumnus—of Wall Street."

Charges Double Talk

Wallace said it was "a safe bet that Mr. Truman will be right 50 per cent of the time ni what he says." Washington D.C.

"He has spoke on both sides of just about everything," he added.

"We can now say of President Truman's civil rights message that the views in the message 'are not necessarily those of the sponsor.' We can go no further. We can say positively that they are not the views of Mr. Truman. Sun.

"While his civil rights message stated that the Secretary of the Army had been instructed to get rid of segregation in the armed forces, Mr. Truman did nothing when Mr. Royall (Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall) said that if he had to carry out such orders he would resign from the Cabinet." 6-26-48

In his attack on Congress Wallace said:

"The Eightieth Congress was the Congress that ignored the needs of the people. It was the Congress of puppets who pranced and danced for the plaudits and profits of the National Association of Manufacturers, the real estate associations, the power lobbies, the monopolistic railroads."

Wallace Group Clears $10,000 Above Expenses First Months

Birmingham News
Birmingham, Ala.

WASHINGTON, June 16—(NANA) — The Wallace-for-President Committee cleared about $10,000 during the first two months of its operations, above total expenditures of $55,417, a detailed report to the clerk of the House of Representatives states. 6-16-48

The report was submitted by C. B. Baldwin, Wallace's campaign manager. It revealed that 40 New York residents were among the heaviest contributors, with individual gifts as high as $5,000.

The total in the initial report of all contributions—exclusive of other money-raising ventures, including admission paid for the privilege of listening to Wallace—is $65,647. Since this report was filed, however, the Wallace committee has moved into high gear, with an ever rising flow of funds from faithful followers filling the coffers.

Wed. 6-16-48

EXPENDITURES for the committee were running at about $55,000 for each two-month period. These also have risen, as later reports filed with the clerk of the House will reveal. Salaries paid by the Wallace-for-President Committee were not less than $200 a month. Baldwin's totaled approximately twice this figure.

A coincidental touch involving a subcommittee report, issued last Friday by the Thomas committee on un-American activities on Communist activities in Miami, linked the Wallace campaign expense report in a manner likely to give ammunition to critics attacking Wallace. 6-16-48

Theresa Cantor, according to the report made public by Rep. Richard Vail (R., Ill.) is listed as the organizer of a Miami meeting on Feb. 18 for the purpose of raising funds to fight deportation proceedings against alien radicals. Well-known Florida Communists attended. A total of $2,000 was raised.

* * *

ON FEB. 18, according to Baldwin's report, Miss Cantor was paid $500 by the Wallace-for-President Committee for expenses for a Florida meeting.

The Vail report revealed testimony by witnesses, including Florida police officials, who termed Miss Cantor a Communist.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, a member of the executive board of the Communist Party, spoke at the meeting.

One expenditure listed a payment of $91.42 to Wallace for travel expenses. Telephone and telegraph tolls to the Southern Conference of Human Welfare headquarters in Washington totaled $10.50. This organization has been cited by the Thomas committee as a Communist-front group.

Fifteen Haled Into Court After Janitor Objects to Presence of Colored Student

Sat. 7-10-48
Baltimore

CHICAGO—(ANP) — Presence of a colored student at a Wallace-for-President meeting held at the home of a white University of Chicago student caused the false arrest of 15 party members, they revealed this week.

The members, meeting at the home of Mrs. Lola Davis, were arrested on complaint of the building janitor, Conrad Valentine. They were taken down to the Hyde Park police station and charged with disorderly conduct.

Charges were dismissed the following day by Judge Joseph Druker in Boys Court.

Plan to File Suit

The Afro-American

A five man committee of lawyers from the Civil Rights congress and the Progressive party met July 1 to discuss the filing of suit against the janitor and the building's manager, McKey and Poague, Inc. Baltimore, Md.

Miss Avada Lacefield of Ardmore, Okla., was the colored student at the meeting. Neighbors describe her as quiet and orderly. Members of the group said they knew of Valentine's prejudiced attitude because of an incident in December. Then he objected to the presence of colored guests at a Christmas party in the building.

Label Them 'Communists'

Hyde Park district police also have a reputation for harassing interracial gatherings in this area. When they arrested the group, Capt. Matt Murphy branded the youths as a "branch of Communists." Sat. 7-10-48

The students were drinking iced coffee when police made their entry. A search of the house for evidence of "communism" revealed nothing to the police. They didn ot even find any liquor in the apartment. Miss Lacefield said that the janitor saw her enter, and made two trips to the apartment after she arrived. 7-10-48

Arrest Of Magistrate Joseph Rainey In Phila. Draws Protest From Wallace Group

New York Age
New York, N.Y.
7-24-48

By CONRAD CLARK

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—C. B. Baldwin, of New York, campaign manager of the National Wallace for President Committee, on Saturday sent a telegram to Director of Public Safety, J. P. Malone, protesting the arrest of Magistrate Joseph Rainey of this city on the night before.

The wire, in demanding that "you instruct your police to conduct themselves in a legal manner and to desist from any attacks upon our party or the citizens of Philadelphia", further added that, "we will not tolerate either racial or political discrimination against members of our organization."

New York Age

Rainey was arrested for disorderly conduct and for resisting arrest on Friday night by the police of the 4th Ward Police Station.

The incident first began with the arrest of a John Jenkins, who was driving a "Merry Go Round" sound truck in the area of the 24th Ward (4th Congressional District) where Rainey is seeking election to Congress on the Wallace ticket.

New York, N.Y.

Sponsored by the Philadelphia Progressive group, the truck was advertising the coming Shibe Park Rally, which will be held on Saturday, as a part of the Party's convention.

Police stopped the truck and asked Jenkins for his permit to operate the vehicle. He showed a standard form given him for the purpose, but officers said that it was not a proper permit and took him to the Police Station in the 24th Ward.

7-24-48

Notified by Reba Glassman, who was also in the truck, Rainey accompanied by a photographer then went to the station and asked Police Sergeant Youngblood, who was in charge, if Jenkins was there, but the officer refused to give any information to the Magistrate.

It was Rainey's intention to ask for Jenkins' release in his custody, a customary procedure and privilege on the part of any Philadelphia Magistrate.

Later Youngblood did say Jenkins was at the station but that he had not been arrested, but was only brought to the station to be told that "the equipment was too loud."

New York, N.Y.

On protesting that it was not necessary to take the man in custody to tell him that, Youngblood then is said to have told the magistrate, "you're getting too fresh; get out of here, or I'll throw you out".

Rainey refused to leave without obtaining the information he wanted as to the whereabouts of Jenkins, and said the officer began to push him and called two other officers to assist.

On Rainey's continued protest to leave, he was then arrested on the two charges.

On Saturday the case was heard before Magistrate Hobson Reynolds, Negro Republican candidate for State Senator in the same Congressional District of Rainey.

New York, N.Y.

Louis S. McCabe and Harvey Schmidt represented Rainey, and more than 250 persons attended the hearing. Youngblood charged that Rainey had tried to push him. 7-24-48

Testifying in favor of the magistrate, who weighs about 150 pounds in contrast to the officer who weighs more than 200 lbs. were Mrs. Rainey, his wife; Jack Irvin, the photographer who took pictures of the "pushing", and Mrs. Goldie Watson, the campaign manager of Rainey.

WALLACE'S RIGHT TO BE HEARD

The [illegible]

Whether Henry Wallace's non-segregation tour through the South will be helpful to interracial relations there, whether it will help break down the barriers of prejudice that stand between the man of color and that equality of opportunity that is a basic American principle is, we believe, beside the point. The real point is that under our political system Mr. Wallace is entitled to a hearing, and this regardless of whether he is discussing his own befuddled brand of economics (as this newspaper regards it) or expressing his unquestionably sincere zeal for better human relations. Some misguided hoodlums have been attempting to deny him this right. President Truman speaks for all good Americans when, as he was quoted yesterday, he described these outrages as "a highly un-American business."

Wed 9-1-48

The first three days of Mr. Wallace's tour through the South saw less violence than had been feared. Yet yesterday showed the same ugly pattern as the two preceding days. And one rotten egg thrown at a candidate for the Presidency of the United States is one too many, whether it is thrown in the South or in the North. That is not the way men settle political differences in the United States. We settle such matters in free discussion and then in decision at the ballot box on election day.

New York, N.Y.

The decent people of the South are as ashamed of the exhibitions some of its citizens have given as are all decent Americans, we are sure. We should like to see them insist that their officials and their police give Mr. Wallace whatever protection is necessary to allow him to continue his tour peacefully. To alllow the North Carolina exhibitions to continue, and to increase in intensity, will be to surrender to the Ku Klux Klan mentality that happily has been on the wane there the last few years. Mr. Wallace's tour offers an opportunity to the South to repudiate it in the best way it could be repudiated, by efficiently seeing to it that it isn't allowed to operate.

34a(1) The Constitution

Atlanta, Ga. Sun 4-25-48

Henry Wallace is a two-to-one choice for President over President Truman, his nearest rival, according to results of a poll conducted at Morehouse College and Atlanta University.

Of more than 300 students participating, 56.3 percent favored Wallace, while Truman received 23.0 percent of the votes cast; Dewey 12.6 percent; Stassen 2.4 percent; Vandenberg .9 percent; Jim Folsom, Joseph Martin, Eisenhower, A. Phillips Randolph and Earl Warren .3 percent each, leaving 3.3 percent undecided.

The poll, conducted by the student committee of the Wallace for President Committee, showed the following additional results:

The Constitution

Some 70.3 percent said they would support A. Phillip Randolph, President of the Sleeping Car Porters Union, in his effort to end segregation in the Armed Forces by refusing to serve in the Army until segregation is abolished; 23.6 percent said they would not support him and 6.1 percent were undecided.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Southern Governors' plan for regional education met serious defeat, 91.3 percent voting against it and only 4.3 percent for it.

Sun

Students voted 57.1 percent against Universal Military Training and favored aid to Europe through the United Nations rather than the Marshall Plan by a vote of 47.8 percent for UN, 27.1 percent for the Marshall Plan, 6.8 percent undecided and 18.3 percent no answer. 4-25-48

Wallace Appeals For Negro Vote.

34a(1)

The Columbia Record

Tues 8-24-48

Columbia, S.C.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 24—(UP) —Henry Wallace, Progressive party presidential candidate, appealed today to the 15,000,000 Negroes in the United States to vote for him and "turn the Jim Crow bigots out."

In a speech prepared for delivery to the Negro Elks convention Wallace compared his new party to "the abolitionists of earlier years."

"Jim Crow has passed a sentence of death against 15,000,000 Americans, and that is why we must say that they are fighting for their very lives," Wallace said. "You here, and 15,000,000 outside this hall, to whom you are related by history, have much to be in motion about."

Wallace said President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, "are only more sophisticated versions of their more articulate brother, the candidate of the Dixiecrat party."

He charged President Truman with having "presided over the gradual liquidation of civil rights for the citizens of the United States, 145,000,000 of them."

Mob Violence At Evanston's Wallace Meeting

The Columbia Record

Mon. 4-12-48

Columbia, S.C.

In his recent speeches and pronouncements Henry Wallace, third party candidate, has not distinguished himself for his judicial temperament. He hasn't even distinguished himself for his insight or adherence to facts. He has been deliberately provocative, not hesitating to resort to half-truths or less, appearing more often to champion the interests of the Soviet Union than of the United States.

It isn't strange, therefore, that he should arouse indignation and even hatred.

But, under the American system, Henry Wallace is entitled to have his say even when he is wrong. He is entitled to express his views without molestation.

And the resort to violence in the attempt to break up a Wallace meeting at Evanston, Ind., the other night is a violation of American principles, more important than Wallace or his opponents. Among the basic liberties guaranteed every American citizen are those of freedom of speech and of assembly. It is all very well to disagree with Wal- The members of the Evanston mob v within their rights in this. More they were right, from The Record's point of view. But there was no need for them to express their disapproval of Wallace's policies by storming the barricaded auditorium in which Wallace was speaking and attempting to deny him and those who wanted to hear him their constitutional liberties. They have a way of expressing their disapproval. It is at the ballot box in November.

Mon.

"Over there in that auditorium," one of the demonstrators gathered outside the Evanston auditorium told the mob, "is a group of people who would destroy your freedom." Yet he, himself, was participating in the destruction of the freedoms of all the people by attempting to deprive Wallace and his followers of their freedoms.

The Record

The psychology of the Evanston mob was the psychology of every lynching mob—the desire to take the law into their own hands and by violence accomplish their purposes. And the Evanston incident occurred, like every real lynching occurs, only through the failure of the law enforcement officers at the scene to be prepared to do what was necessary to retain control and to uphold law and order. It represents a police failure and it reflects upon Evanston and the state of Indiana. 4-12-48

Cultured Nashville Gives Henry Wallace Splendid Reception

The Nashville Globe

34a(1)

Candidates Speech, Based On Bible And Constitution, Well Taken By Large Crowd

Fri 9-10-48

Nashville, Tenn.

Race Prejudice is the "Achilles Heel" of the United States, former Vice Pres. Henry Agard Wallace told a crowd of some 3,000 who greeted him here on Saturday of last week, when he reached Nashville on his Southern tour in the interest of his candidacy for the presidency on the Progressive Ticket.

The candidate received the most heart-warming reception in Nashville of any place he had visited and at the end of his brief, but eloquent speech, from the steps of the War Memorial Building, Mr. Wallace appeared reluctant to leave the city and his large crowd of listeners appeared reluctant to sete him leave.

Mr. Wallace had made such a speech as will make an impression on any intelligent audience as the one that had assembled to hear him in Nashville. Apparently his crowd was made up in a large measure of church people, people from labor organizations and from our educational institutions. Some 500 or more of his hearers were colored. It might not be accurate to say that all or any large percentage of those who heard Mr. Wallace speach will vote for him. But his hearers very generally were out to go on record in silent protest against the hoodlum receptions that the candidate has received in other parts of the South. They were anxious for him to see Nashville as she really is—a city of culture and a city of people able to appreciate a man who says he bases his views on fundamental principles of true Americanism.

34a(1)

Mr. Wallace used the teachings of the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as the basis of his address. When it had ended there was little disposition to call the candidate a "dangerous Communist" which is the picture the reactionary press has painted of him.

Sat 9-10-48

No fault could be found with anything Mr. Wallace said. And when he told of how he had done as Christ had done when not received by people in the places he visited—that is, shook the dust of those cities off his feet, and that the candidate's action had been approved by a Baptist preacher in one Southern town, it had a sobering effect on any who had come to jeer or engage in cowardly attacks on the speaker with eggs and tomatoes.

Fri 9-10-48

There was one newspaper account of an egg being thrown, but much suspicion attaches to that episode, despite the picture of a nenwspaper photographer who apparently had been spattered by a thrown egg. Persons who were quite close to Mr. Wallace never saw any egg throwing. There was no commotion such as one would expect from such an incident. But admittedly a sensational story about Candidate Wallace with pictures of him or any spectator being hit by an egg is something that will sell newspapers.

Mr. Wallace in his reference to race prejuudice being the "Achilles Heel" of the United States—iis most vulnerable spot—stated that the South Americans distrust this nation's claims of being a democracy, largely because of the way its colored citizens are discriminated against. The speaker's intentions were to show thoughtful people how weak our defense of this country can be if South of the Border millions of the nation's neighbors can be convinced by foreign governments that the United States practices race discrimination while it preaches Christianity and democracy.

34a(1)

Mr. Wallace called upon the South to abide by the teachings of the Bible and the Constitution, including all of its amenndments. It was the kind of speech that made people think rather than cheer, without doing any thinking, which is the usual strategy candidates employ to win supporters.

The "biggest hand" Mr. Wallace got was when he paid tribute to Mr. Jennings Perry, former editor of the Nashville TENNESSEAN, now a columnist on the New York STAR, who made a lasting name for himself by his brilliant fight to secure repeal of the poll tax.

Fri 9-10-48

In taking note of the attacks on him for showing friendship for Russia, and thereby getting charged with being a Communist, Mr. Wallace first stated that he was opposed to any Americans who held allegiance to Moscow. He said also that he was opposed to those Americans who held allegiance to London and Rome. He stated that he has been flaying those Americans who show an allegiance to London at the same time he flays those who hold allegiance to Moscow, but the daily papers in every place refuse to print what he says about London.

Mr. Wallace was introduced by Jordan Stokes III, colorful leader of Progressive elements of this city. There was no attempt made to segregate the persons who attended the speaking, as had been done in Birmingham, which city Mr. Wallace passed up making a speech when the authorities tried to rope off the people along racial lines.

Even in Memphis, Mr. Wallace was able to speak to an unsegregated audience and in Knoxville he spoke to an unsegregated crowd in a large colored church of Knoxville.

Trumanites and Dixicrats are the chief enemies of Mr. Wallace's candidacy in the South. Republicans are not disturbed because they feel he merely is dividing the Democrats and providing a "haymaking" opportunity for the Republicans. As a result of the Wallace candidacy, according to a broadcast made last Sunday night by Walter Winchell, Mr. Truman, in the opinion of the Democratic high command, will not carry over two states north of the Mason and Dixon Line.

21,000 Pack Chicago Hall To Hear Henry Wallace

Daily Worker

By Ruby Cooper New York, N.Y. Mon. 4-12-48

CHICAGO, April 11.—This city outdid itself in its reception for Henry Wallace Saturday night when more than 21,000 persons packed the giant Chicago Stadium to capacity with another estimated 4,000 turned away. Rocking the huge stadium with thunderous applause throughout the rally, the vast throng gave the new party's presidential candidate and his running-mate, Sen. Glen Taylor, a dramatic demonstration of the powerful existing support for the third party in this second largest city of the nation. 4-12-48

Akin to the oviation given Franklin D. Roosevelt in the same hall in 1944, the rally surpassed in size, applause and financial contributions any ever addressed by Wallace throughout the country, including Madison Square Garden in New York, a spokesman for Wallace said after.

FIRST TIME TOGETHER

It was the first public rally at which the two candidates heading the new party ticket appeared together.

Wallace looked around the Stadium and asked: "I want to know if you feel as good as I do having Senator Glen Taylor running with me?" Daily Worker

From the huge audience there came back a rolling road: "Yes."

"We have made great progress in the fight for peace since our historic meeting here at the Chicago Stadium less than a year ago," Wallace went on. New York, N.Y.

"A year ago we were unorganized. We were many hearts separately dedicated to work for peace. Our voices were barely heard. 4-12-48

"But tonight we are strong. We have organizations which can speak the language politicians understand—the language of votes," he said, as resounding cheers echoed through the Stadium.

TUGWELL PRECEDES THEM

Preceding Wallace and Taylor on the platform had been Rexford G. Tugwell, former adviser to Franklin D. Roosevelt; Rebecca Styles Taylor, nationally prominent Negro women's club leader; Albert Fitzgerald, international president of CIO United Electrical Workers, and Paul Robeson.

"We have a program of our own and we have inspired leaders," Tugwell told the rally. "There are millions of us—enough to stand alone. Enough, maybe, to win an election. Enough anyway to establish a movement which will grow until it wins." 4-12-48

Mrs. Taylor said: "Negro women of America are no longer like helpless birds beating their wings against an iron cage. They are free citizens who will exercise without fear, without compromise their rights at the polls; they will [illegible] their ballots to stop the bullets that are being fashioned for the wanton slaughter of our fellow men. They will vote for the champion of the common man, Henry Wallace." 4-12-48

FITZGERALD GETS OVATION

Introduction of Fitzgerald drew an ovation from the crowd, including a real cross-section of trade union members in the city. "I can already report to you that many millions of rank and file workers of CIO, AFL and Railroad labor are already mobilizing to support labor's candidates in 1948, to support Wallace and Taylor," the UE president said.

"As chairman of the National Labor Committee for Wallace I am confident that by November, 1948, labor will come forth to support Henry Wallace for President just as they came forward time after time to elect Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Alluding to efforts of CIO leaders to have the Democratic Party nominate a candidate other than Truman, Fitzgerald said "it is not enough to talk of lifting the face of the candidate so long as the driving forces of the Democratic Party remains the big city bosses and Southern reactionaries.

Daily Worker

"And no war hero, however distinguished, of no Supreme Court justice, can expect the support of Labor so long as this unholy alliance controls the Democratic Party and so long as the Truman Program of war, strike-breaking, compulsory military training, double-talk on Negro rights, and attacks on political freedom continue."

ROBESON SINGS

An especially heavy ovation greeted Paul Robeson, who introduced to the Mid-West the new party's campaign song. The Battle Hymn of the People's Party, in which the entire audience joined in singing. New York, N.Y.

Presentation of the vice-presidential candidate, Sen. Taylor then set off a demonstration of cheering and prolonged applause. Mon.

Wallace was introduced by Dr. Maude Slye, famous cancer scientist, who was presented by Studs Terkel, prominent radio disc jockey, with the words: "As France has its Madame Curie, so America has its Maude Slye." 4-12-48

In his denunciation of the war hysteria promoted by the bi-partisan coalition, Wallace said "I have been asked many times to join in the highly emotional attacks on Communists, attacks which provoke violence and lead to the suppression of civil liberties. Mon.

"I will not join a chorus that has no purpose but the suppression of civil rights," he declared firmly. "I do not fear the Communists or the ideas of Communism, if we keep and extend our democratic system." 4-12-48

An estimated $35,000 was contributed to the Wallace campaign to an appeal for funds from William Gailmor, New York radio commentator. More than half the audience rose and waved dollar bills when Gailmor asked the rally to dramatically show its support for Wallace and the new party.

He Replies to Prediction He Would Quit Before Election —Hails Rail Labor Plan

New York, N.Y.

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho, May 26 (AP)—Henry A. Wallace said today that he would remain in the 1948 presidential race until the last votes were counted in November. He replied to a Chicago address by Arthur Krock, chief Washington correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES, who said he believed the former Vice President would abandon the race before November. Thu. 5-27-48

Mr. Wallace also handed reporters prepared statements on the demands of railway labor leaders for government ownership of railroads and settlement of the General Motors labor dispute. He said the action of the Railway Labor Executives Association was "highly significant" in that it "looks toward possible public ownership." 5-27-48

"The statement has significance for every citizen interested in stopping the course toward fascism on which we are headed by the bi-partisans," he added. Times

The third-party candidate predicted that the General Motors settlement might establish a pattern to be followed in other plants and industry. He voiced the hope that this pattern could be "forced on Big Steel, the key industry which has been adamant in its refusal to meet the workers' demands."

Calls on Senate to Pass Anti-Lynch Measure

New Orleans, La. Mon. 5-24-48

(The Associated Press)

New York, May 23.—Henry A. Wallace called on the Senate today to pass an anti-lynching bill and other civil rights legislation before recessing the present session of Congress.

The third-party presidential candidate, in a letter sent to Senate Leaders Vandenberg, R., Mich., and Barkley, D., Ky., said:

"I must protest with all the force at my command the failure of the Senate judiciary committee, reported in the press last week, to vote out the anti-lynch bill. . . . I respectfully urge, on behalf of the members of our new party that the Senate reconsider the decision of the judiciary committee and move for passage of the anti-lynch bill and other civil rights legislation before recessing the Congress."

He mentioned specifically the pending anti-poll tax act and the fair employment practices bill.

Wallace added: The Times-Picayune

"I am confident that determined action of the leadership of both parties will defeat a filibuster. And such action on the part of both parties will serve notice that the rights of Negroes shall not continue to be the subject of partisan politics." New Orleans, La.

The former vice-president said he believed no legislation "could be of greater importance to the protection of millions of Negro citizens in a period of growing attacks on their Democratic rights." Mon. 5-24-48

New York, N.Y. Sat. 4-17-48

One thousand Columbia University students attended an "Enlist For Peace" rally called yesterday noon by the Columbia chapter of "Students for Wallace." Howard Fast, writer, who was barred from speaking on the campus last December, was the principal speaker. The rally was held in the university's McMillin Academic Theater.

The student audience approved a resolution urging that Congress defeat legislation for a draft and universal military training. Walter Wallace, national co-chairman of Students for Wallace (no relation to Henry A. Wallace), submitted the resolution. One hundred and sixty-three dollars was contributed by the students to support the Wallace Presidential campaign.

Fast Denounces Leaders

Mr. Fast denounced President Truman, Secretary of Defense James Forrestal and John Foster Dulles as "obscene, hideous people who can sign a death warrant that will murder 50,000,000 people without a thought." He said they were "no longer of the same species as you and I." The Times

He attacked American "military participation in the war in Greece" and "American support of the dictator Chiang Kai-shek." He continued: "Truman, Dulles, Forrestal, the du Ponts and the Rockefellers, who have no decency or morality, are turning Americans into a new anti-democratic imperialistic nation that in time will rule the world. New York City

"We have one man who is leading a great national movement. They are terrified of this man because he is honest and an idealist. That man is Henry Wallace. He can't be stopped. He will be swept into office." Sat. 4-17-48

Professor Opposes UMT

Sat. 4-17-48

Prof. Walter Rautenstrauch, Professor of Engineering emeritus at Columbia, said universal military training would reduce enrollment in colleges by 60 per cent.

"America's youth will not be free to choose its education," he declared. "UMT would rob our youth of the most important opportunities in their lives." Times

Referring to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's position regarding Negroes in the armed forces, the Rev. Ben Richardson, executive-secretary of the Harlem Committee for Wallace, said: Times

"A man with a mentality like that cannot run an institution like this (Columbia University), much less be president of our nation."

Before the rally, Dorothy Ozeroff, graduate history student at Columbia, pushed Bob Persons, graduate economics student wearing a military uniform and a baby bonnet, around in a baby carriage. A sign on the carriage said, "I won't raise my son to be a soldier."

Other students distributed circulars and appealed for signatures to a petition urging defeat of universal military training. Two students sold copies of "The Daily Worker." New York, N.Y.

Floridians to 'Stick-in' Wallace on Ballot

7-18-48

TAMPA, Fla.—Unable to get on the ballot for the national election in November, the People's Progressive Party of Florida decided at a state-wide conference, held in this city, to vote for Henry Wallace for President by the "stick-in" vote.

Ironically, Tom Watson, state attorney general, the most reactionary office holder in Florida, ruled that the "stick-in" vote is legal.

Five per cent of the registered voters in the state must re-register from the old parties into the People's Progressive Party in order to assure it a place on the ballot in the Democraatic (white) primary, held the first week in May.

When the National Wallace for President Committee met in New York and mapped out strategy many months ago, "Florida was the only state given up as hopeless," so the country's press reported. The Wallace workers in the "Sunshine State," who formed the new party last February, however, didn't give up but, rather, set 35 thousand registered names as their goal.

BUT THOUSANDS OF NAMES in the city of Tampa alone, where the cigar workers successfully campaigned for Wallace, as well as elsewhere in the state, were declared illegal by county registers who ruled that those who registered for the New Party must do so in person at the county court house. Thus thousands of properly signed blanks, giving addresses of the signers, were thrown out too late to rally these voters to comply with the new and unexpected ruling.

Shortly before last Sunday, the state attorney general made his ruling public, doubtless to favor politicians who eye the illiterate vote which is best obtained by the "stick-in" method of voting. The state representatives of the new party and the heads of various committees as well as active workers from all over Florida, voted unanimously to take advantage of this opportunity to register a huge protest vote from among its members and supporters against a state law which makes it almost impossible for a third party to get on the ballot.

The Florida law further provides that 5% of the votes cast in the general election, on two successive national elections, will place the minority party on the ballot—eight years hence. The alternative is for the new party to register the same five per cent of the number of voters who will vote in the forthcoming May primary—before it is known exactly how many will register in the Democratic (white) primary. Such is the election law in this southern state of white supremacy.

The Southern State

THESE RESTRICTIONS only served to stimulate the large number of self sacrificing members of the People's Progressive Party of Florida and through their officers and leading committees they decided to print thousands of such "stick-in" vote-stickers for distribution to their members, friends and many registered voters in the Democratic party.

Tampa will be broken down into blocks and Wallace campaigners will work block by block, visiting every house to urge use of the "stick-in" vote.

7-18-48

Along with this decision, the conference voted to continue the state-wide petition campaign of signatures urging Secretary Gray to place the new party on the ballot.

John M. Coe, chairman of the new party in Florida, presided and secretary Marjorie Haynes reported that Mr. Coe had just concluded a speaking tour through the North and Central parts of the state. "There is a growth of activity throughout the state," reported Coe.

It must not be left out that at all these mass meetings Negroes sat next to white persons and in most cities it was for the first time in the history of the town. All Wallace meetings are non-segregated. They have been since Wallace came to Tampa and Miami, Fla.

WALLACE COMES HERE UNNOTICED BY CROWDS

The Times
New York

Henry A. Wallace, Progressive party nominee for President, arrived unnoticed by the crowds in Pennsylvania Station at 3:38 P. M. yesterday on a train from Philadelphia.

"The convention has been a success," he told interviewers. "It has indicated to us that we will roll, roll and keep rolling along."

Mr. Wallace, who was accompanied by Mrs. Elinor Gimbel, head of the women's division of the new party, continued: Tues

"The crowd of young people at the convention has given the new party hope that even though we lose in 1948 they will be with us in years to come."

24a(1)

Mr. Wallace was interviewed as he walked rapidly to the taxi stand on Thirty-first Street where he took a cab for Grand Central Terminal. He said he was going to his home in South Salem, N. Y., where he planned to work in his garden and "pull weeds." 7-27-48

The candidate appeared tired but forced a smile as he was interviewed. He wore a light blue summerweight suit, a Panama hat, white shirt, red tie and black shoes. He carried a brown valise.

Negroes in Ohio Town Sign Up for Wallace

By Elmer O. Fehlhaber

RAVENNA, O., April 25.—This semi-industrial town of 12,000 persons, about 40 miles southeast of Cleveland, was selected by my wife and myself to test a statement we had heard made by William Z. Foster, National Chairman of the Communist Party, at a rally in Cleveland.

Both of us had been circulating petitions in Portage County, where Ravenna is located. We had seen all kinds of people, farmers, students from Hiram College and Kent University, industrial workers and others.

34a(1) Pers.

We had found that because of the barrage of propaganda by the press and the radio against Henry Wallace that collecting signatures sometimes was slow, that it was necessary to spend consideable time in explaining the details of the new party program.

New York, N.Y.

We recalled the words of Foster that "the Negro people constitute the most progressive section of the population" and we decided that Ravenna would be a good place to test this contention.

PICK NEGRO AREA

Not knowing too much about Ravenna, we were uncertain just where to go but with the aid of a friendly postman we were directed to a neighborhood where he informed us about 500 Negroes resided.

Despite his careful directions, we had difficulty in locating the settlement. We went out Route 14, the main highway to Cleveland, and nearly missed the turnoff. It was a dirt road and we found that in this unincorporated comunity, which lies just outside Ravenna, there is not a single paved street.

Mon. 4-26-48

And we found that there is a reason why the Negroes were pushed into this spot where they are denied municipal government.

NO RUNNING WATER

The residents call the place "Township" for they are under the jurisdiction of that governmental body. And the white officials of the township, although people have been living in the area since 1926, still refuse to spend the necessary funds to provide running water.

"Township" is a collection of ramshackle structures, most of which were obviously constructed by the inhabitants. They are neat and behind practically every home is a garden that is being prepared for spring planting.

FIRST STOP

Daily Worker

We made our first stop by a group of men who were digging a ditch by the side of a road.

Some had heard of Wallace, others hadn't. I passed out literature and then one man, who had heard Wallace speak over the radio from the new party conference in Chicago, took over.

He signed himself and urged the others to sign.

"We need a man like Wallace," he said.

New York, N.Y.

FDR WON'T DIE

He scanned a picture of Roosevelt on a piece of literature.

"That man," he said, "will never die."

4-26-48

We split up then, my wife heading for one group of houses while

It was from these two men that I learned that the Negro people have been hit hard by unemployment in Ravenna. Many of them had been employed at the arsenal whose war time production jumped the population of the town by thousands. The arsenal has only a small crew now.

New York, N.Y.

I asked if any Negroes were employed in the large plant of the Cleveland Worsted Mills in Ravenna. This plant is under contract with the United Textile Workers, CIO.

Daily Worker

"Not a one," was the answer.

I forced myself to end my interesting conversation and go on to other homes. The reception was unvarying. Those who knew of Wallace signed without hesitation. Those who were unfamiliar read over the literature and then signed.

Incidentally, the old myth, about women not signing without their husband's permission was thoroughly shattered. And in a number of instances, the women folk were more aggressive from a point of political action.

Mon. 4-26-48

I turned in another direction. I approached a man coming out of a house.

He shut me off rather coldly when I offered the petition with an explanation. I did not press him but gave him some literature.

I had taken only about a dozen steps when he called out: "Hey, wait a minute."

As I returned there was a broad grin on his face. He reached for his petition.

Mon.

"I didn't understand you," he explained. "Of course I'll sign for Henry Wallace."

EX-COAL MINERS

At the next step I found two former coal miners working in a garden. One of them was from Belmont county in the Ohio valley and we soon found that we had mutual acquaintances in the coal fields.

4-26-48

They signed the petition and we went on to discuss the victory of the coal miners in the pension fight.

"They beat that man Truman," the Belmont county miner said.

Hampton Prof. Helps Head Wallace Group

RICHMOND, Va.—(ANP)—Dr. L. F. Palmer, professor of education at Hampton institute, was elected vice chairman of the Virginia Wallace-for-President committee at a meeting here May 9. Five other Negroes were elected as officers and committee members.

5-21-48

Meeting in the hall of the American Veterans committee, the 100 or more Wallace supporters mapped plans for a state party convention June 26-27 and named an executive board to direct Mr. Wallace's campaign.

Mrs. Virginia Foster Durr, of Alexandria, Va., was elected state chairman of the Virginia Wallace-for-President committee. She is the wife of Federal Communications commissioner Clifford L. Durr.

George Elwood, who has established offices here, is executive secretary of the Virginia Wallace-for-President committee. He reported after the meeting that the Mosque might be the place of the June convention. Elwood also said that the group is anxious to get the support of Negro voters since it is firm in its opposition to all types of racial discrimination, segregation, inequalities, and restrictions.

GALLUP POLL The Constitution

Where Is Wallace's Strength?

Atlanta, Ga.

By GEORGE GALLUP,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

PRINCETON, N. J.—As the political spotlight turns on the first national convention of the Wallace Third Party, these are the main features about the rank-and-file supporters of Henry A. Wallace:

1. He is proportionately twice as strong among young voters as he is among those over 50 years old. Out of every 100 voters under 30 years, eight today say they would vote for Wallace, compared with four out of each 100 over 50 years of age. Fri. 7-23-48

WALLACE VOTE BY AGE

21-29 years	8%
30-49 years	7
50 and over	4

34a(1)

2. Relatively three times as many people in the Pacific Coast and Middle Atlantic States support Wallace as in the Solid South. One out of every 10 voters in the Pacific Coast States wants him as president.

WALLACE VOTE BY SECTIONS

New England	4%
Middle Atlantic	9
Central	5
South	3
West	4
Far West	10

7-23-48

3. Wallace's strength among manual workers is relatively double his support among the nation's farmers, and union members are even a little more inclined to vote for him than unorganized labor.

WALLACE VOTE BY OCCUPATION

Prof. and Bus.	6%
White Collar	6
Farmers	4
Manual Workers	8
Union Members	9

4. Voters supporting the Third Pary are relatively three times as numerous in the large cities as in small communities. While every eighth voter in cities over 500,000 population is a Wallace supporter, in the small towns the Third Party vote gets down to one in 25.

WALLACE VOTE BY CITY SIZE

Under 10,000	4%
10,000 to 100,000	6
100,000 to 500,000	6
Over 500,000	12

5. But the group where the new party makes its most powerful and effective appeal is the independent voters, who were so largely responsible for President Roosevelt's successes at the polls. About one in every seven independent voters today says he will support the Third Party candidate.

6. Veterans of World War II also give Wallace above average support, one in 11 of these men today naming him as their choice for president.

Taylor Sees 200,000 Georgia Wallace Votes

34a(1) Constitution

Sat 5-8-48

Vice Presidential Candidate Glen Taylor predicted here Friday that he and Henry Wallace would poll 200,000 votes in Georgia in the presidential election this November.

The Idaho Senator said support from a third of the State's electorate was due to an awakening in the South of Negroes and "so-called poor whites" who do not want to go back to conditions existing before the war.

Taylor, keynote speaker at the Georgia Wallace-for-President Committee's founding convention in Macon today, arrived here Friday with his wife and six-year-old son, John Paul, from Washington.

People who want peace instead of billions spent for a "suicidal and idiotic war" also will support the Wallace ticket, Taylor affirmed. Constitution

"I'm not an appeaser or 'peace at any price' man," he said. "I'd vote for universal military training and the draft if I were convinced Russia was a threat to world peace."

Taylor said he was brought up in Texas to believe in segregation. He said he now believed the Southern "fetish" against Negroes, propagated by men who wish to divide and conquer, would subside with a little forbearance by both whites and Negroes if segregation were eliminated by law. Sat 5-8-48

Regarding the Macon convention, Taylor said he would refuse to speak if any city authorities insisted on a segregated audience. Don West, Vice President of the Georgia Wallace-for-President Committee, said. Macon officials had agreed to an unsegregated private meeting.

Wallace Arrives In Little Rock Without Incident

News Birmingham, Ala. 34a(1)

Candidate Target Of Eggs, Tomatoes In Louisiana Cities

Fri-3-12-48

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3 — Henry Wallace arrived by plane in Little Rock early today virtually unnoticed and without incident.

The Progressive Party presidential candidate flew here from Shreveport, La., arriving at 12:38 a.m.

The former vice president and a party of 21 stepped from the plane into waiting automobiles and were whisked to the union station where he boarded his private railroad coach.

THERE WAS NO reception for Wallace as he brought his presidential campaign to Arkansas just after leaving Shreveport.

As he left a Shreveport radio station for the airport an estimated half-dozen eggs splashed about Wallace's car. 3-19-48

Wallace was refused four places sought for a speech before choosing to talk to his Arkansas followers by radio this morning.

The Progressive Party candidate, safely in the plane at Shreveport before eggs struck it brought with him to Little Rock conflicting memories of his tour of yesterday through Mississippi and Louisiana.

IN LOUISIANA, TOMATOES were hurled in Monroe and his car was spattered with eggs in Shreveport. 3-19-48

The egg-throwing came after he had completed a talk at a Shreveport radio station.

As he emerged, half a dozen eggs splattered his car. They were hurled by unidentified persons in a crowd of several hundred who gathered at the station. Wallace was not struck.

Shortly before that Wallace's campaign manager said in New York that "powers in Southern political life" have organized the disturbances which have punctuated Wallace's Southern tour.

C. B. BALDWIN said in a statement, "it is clear now that these outbreaks were not spontaneous but organized and encouraged by the powers in Southern political life."

In the radio address here Wallace said he is hated by some for his "idea of human freedom" because "it means equality for Negroes."

Asking "who gains from making race prejudice a flaming sword," Wallace asserted:

"The answer does not lie in the South. There is a long chain that links unknown hoodlums in a North Carolina or Alabama mill town with men in cutaway and finely tailored business suits—men who are found in the great financial centers of New York and Boston—men who make a dollar and cents profit by setting race against race in the far away South."

Before coming to Louisiana Wallace breakfasted at a Mississippi junior college for Negroes, attended the state convention of his party, accompanied party officials to the capitol to start procedure for putting Wallace electors on the Mississippi ballot and made a radio address—all before 9:30 a.m.

He spoke at Vicksburg to an unsegregated audience and then crossed the Mississippi River into Louisiana.

Wallace Carries On After Hectic Carolina Scenes

Writ May Be Sought Against Segregation At Meeting Here

Henry Wallace, only two days away from his scheduled visit to Alabama, today moved farther into North Carolina, a state which greeted him yesterday with a mixture of eggs, boos and cheers.

Wallace ended his first day south of the Mason-Dixon line at the home of a wealthy Negro at Durham, N. C., a few hours after his oratory was interrupted by egg hurling, pickets and catcalls.

Mon. 8-30-48

AT BIRMINGHAM, where Wallace is scheduled to speak on the courthouse steps at 4:30 p.m. Wednesday, leaders of the Progressive Party of Alabama said they were studying the possibility of obtaining a court injunction to prevent Public Safety Commissioner Eugene Connor from enforcing city segregation laws when Wallace talks.

J. P. Mooney, campaign director for the Progressive Party, criticized the County Commission's action in issuing a permit for Wallace to speak here subject to compliance with city and state segregation laws.

Mooney charged the commission's action was "dictated by Police Commissioner Connor."

"Never before in the history of Birmingham," Mooney said, "have the police required that open-air political meetings be segregated."

W. D. Kendrick, County Commission president, replied that the commission issued the permit "on our own hook, on our own responsibility. . . . Mr. Connor doesn't tell the County Commission what to do."

COUNTY COMMISSIONER Earl Bruner issued this statement:

"As a county commissioner, I voted to permit the Progressive Party to hold a meeting on the courthouse steps. I did this simply to permit them the right of peaceable assembly, provided they comply strictly with all ordinances and laws. This they will be required to do. 8-30-48

"It makes little difference to me whether or not Henry Wallace makes a political speech in Birmingham. My considered opinion is that we would be better off if he continued his rabble-rousing elsewhere." Mon.

Another development in Wallace's coming visit was the disclosure that officials of the City Park and Recreation Board have denied use of city parks for the Wallace meeting. 34a(1)

King Sparks, Jr., park board superintendent, said a delegation from the Progressive Party asked him for permission to use McLendon Park. He said this permission was denied because a baseball game is scheduled for Wednesday afternoon there on the spot where the party wanted to hold its meeting. The News

He told the delegation there were three other reasons why the meeting could not be held at other city parks. Birmingham

1. The city's parks are dedicated or deeded as white parks or Negro parks, and therefore mixed meetings of the races would violate those deeds. Ala.

2. City ordinances prohibit "the co-mingling of the races."

3. The park board has a rule that city parks may not be used for religious or political meetings.

WALLACE IS SCHEDULED to appear in the following Alabama cities Wednesday: Decatur, Huntsville, Guntersville, Gadsden, Birmingham, Fairfield, Bessemer and Tuscaloosa. Mon.

Wallace addressed the North Carolina convention of the Progressive Party yesterday to climax a day of whirlwind activity which included speeches earlier at Norfolk and Richmond, Va.

* * *

OBVIOUSLY PLEASED with his reception in Virginia, the former vice president declared upon arrival in Durham, N. C.: 8-30-48

"If what I saw in Virginia today, and what I see here is any criterion of what we'll get further on, then I'll be satisfied." Mon.

Inhospitality flared for the first time shortly before Wallace reached the downtown armory where the Progressive convention was held. A group of men mostly veterans, police said, marched into the meeting carrying critical banners.

"Send Wallace to Russia"—"Wallace is a Mockery of Southern Conventions"—"Wallace, the Hitler of Today," the banners read.

A chair hit one of the banner carriers as the crowd, estimated at 1,300 whites and Negroes, sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

The presidential aspirant was barely into his speech when boos and firecrackers interrupted.

He proposed a $4,000,000,000 federal aid program for the South and as he attempted to continue his message, eggs were thrown into the audience from the side doors of the building.

The crowd rose to its feet and Wallace pleaded:

"Please sit down! Please sit down!"

At another juncture when interrupted, Wallace told the audience:

"WHAT YOU ARE DOING here tonight will be published all over the world. I hope newsmen will not play up the violent demonstration in view of the more important things that have taken place here today."

Continuing his address the Iowan said the South's basic problem is that it's people "receive only a tithe of the fruits of their labor." The South has proved that it is capable of producing as well as other parts of the country, he added.

"I propose that the federal government advance a $1,000,000,000 a year for four years to aid Southern industry and agriculture. And this should be in addition to federal aid for schools, hospitals, homes, health and social security."

He proposed that half the money be used for industry to build Southern owned and controlled factories paying high wages and the other half be extended to agriculture "to help the honest and industrious farmer establish a sound and solvent agriculture."

He asserted that billions of dollars are taken from the South annually by corporations owned by non-residents. "We Progressives propose only that the federal government, through taxation, return to the people of the South a part of the stolen fruits of their toil and sweat." The News

WALLACE SAID HE welcomes support from all those who "believe in peace." Birmingham

"I advocate some of the things that Communists advocate. But I also advocate some of the things that the Methodists advocate. I don't care whether it is the Communists who believe in peace, or whether it is the Methodists who believe in peace—I want the support of all the men of good will who believe in peace. Ala.

"Men of ill will who owe allegiance to some foreign capital whether it be London, or Rome, or Moscow—I don't want their support." Mon.

EARLIER IN THE DAY Wallace opened his Southern swing with talks at Norfolk and then Richmond, Va.

At Norfolk he ripped into both Democrats and Republicans, accusing their policy-makers of using the "language of peace and the language of brotherhood for the purpose of deceiving.

"We are closer to war, closer to chaos, further from peace than we were two years ago."

Moving swiftly to Richmond, Wallace took up the cudgels against the States' Rights Democrats.

"The Dixiecrats are an invention to divert the people of the South from the real problems to false ones, from high prices to hot words, and from the great issue of war and peace to the rantings of demogugues. 8-30-48

"The men who have held the South in bondage . . , are frightened. They must retain their poll tax barriers to political freedom. They must retain their wage differentials and the flow of their dividentials and the flow of their dividends out from the South. They must wield the club of segregation to defend their profits.

"So, they conjure up the Dixiecrats and they prepare a diversionary circus."

Wallace Treated Wrongly

News

To the Editor of The News:

Today (Sept. 2) as I read your paper I was disappointed in the behavior of the people of our city. I was disappointed in our city commissioners, especially Mr. Bull Connor.

I think it's time for a change to be made in our city. I am a native of Birmingham and I'm proud of it, but I don't think the people of Birmingham are getting a chance to hear this political question on both sides.

I happened to be in Huntsville yesterday and was fortunate enough to hear Mr. Wallace speak. The people in Huntsville were very respectful toward Mr. Wallace. He wasn't denied the privilege of speaking. His talk interested me much, and his ideas are fine. I'm not for communism in any way. I'm for right and whoever it hurts doesn't make any difference to me. Right is right, and because a few political leaders in Birmingham failed to do their job, the people of Birmingham were denied a right. 8-6-48

I'm sure Mr. Wallace did not feel free to speak. There is a law against violence, and not a law against free public speech, yet the city commissioner, Mr. Connor, stood by and with the police let a group of men demonstrate mob violence.

Why weren't the guilty ones put in jail where they belong? Because, in my opinion, the big political machine in Birmingham is against Mr. Wallace and didn't care what happened to him. Birmingham, Ala

I'm not a member of the Progressive Party. I was born a Democrat and I'll die a Democrat. But as long as our City Commission is infested with men like Bull Connor we will get one side of politics, just as we have in the past. Wake up, people of Birmingham, don't let Mr. nobody deny you the right you deserve. You should have heard him (Mr. Wallace) speak. I'm not for him but if it had been anyone, whoever it might be, whatever he might say, right or wrong, you will never know. Mr. Wallace should have been shown more respect.

What Kind of Logic Is Johnson Using, Anyhow?

Star. New York N.Y.

Deutsch

It is hard to assess accurately at this point, the results of Henry Wallace's dramatic tour through the South in terms of permanent impact on that region's "peculiar institutions." I, for one, feel that it represents one of the most important contributions to racial democracy ever made in the course of a presidential campaign.

Infinitely more important than the egg-throwing incidents is the fact that Wallace, bravely penetrating into the deepest recesses of racial prejudice, has demonstrated that even there it is possible for relatively large numbers of white and Negro citizens to gather together in peaceful assemblage on a non-segregated basis. The wonder is not that Wallace's daring deed evoked some violent reaction, but that it did not evoke more. In many key communities of the South, Wallace has torn wide open the fabric of discrimination; it remains for genuine democrats to extend the breach.

It was inevitable that Wallace would be angrily denounced as a trouble-maker, disturbing the peace of places where idyllic racial harmony had reigned before. The same cry was raised when William Lloyd Garrison and his fellow-abolitionists dared condemn slavery on its home grounds; it was repeated, in another context, when the pioneer labor organizers invaded the unorganized sweatshops of the South. Wed. 9-22-48

The highest realm of unreality and unfairness is reached, however, by those pro-Truman Southern liberals who now try to pin on Henry Wallace the blame for the election of Earl Long and Herman Talmadge as governors of Louisiana and Georgia, respectively. What kind of logic do they use when they imply that the Wallace tour was directly responsible for the Long and Talmadge victories, while maintaining complete silence on the President's noble but provocative Civil Rights message? Wed. 9-22-48

I happen to think that the Truman stand on civil rights was magnificently courageous — one of the truly first-rate accomplishments of the Truman regime — even if it did madden Southern reactionaries to the point of sabotaging their own party and disturb some Southern liberals who had neatly accommodated themselves, in varying degrees, to the undemocratic pattern of racial discrimination.

It took a civil war to emancipate the American slaves; the task of obtaining full civil rights for their descendants will not be achieved without friction. Some Americans may be willing, even eager, to pass on this task to posterity; others among us, Truman and Wallace with the rest, feel the job belongs to our generation.

One Southern liberal, Gerald W. Johnson, writing in the Star recently, asked, plaintively, "What was Wallace doing in Greensboro, N. C., anyway?" Which reminds one of Zero Mostel's isolationist Senator, who wound up his tirade against American participation in World War II with the crack: "What the hell was Pearl Harbor doing in the middle of the Pacific, anyway?" Wed. 9-22-48

The same news commentator compared Wallace's invasion of Greensboro and points south with Sir Oswald Mosley, "with all London to choose from, staging his parades in the Jewish quarter." The unfortunate analogy would better have been presented as a contrast, not as a comparison, as any unprejudiced citizen could see. True, Wallace might have made his impassioned appeals for racial justice in Harlem without disturbing the equanimity of the Southland. So, too, Jesus would have been less disruptive of the status quo had He kept His messages confined to His twelve, instead of invading the temples to drive out the money-changers. Star. N.Y. N.Y.

And I might add, as a postscript, the conviction that Henry Wallace approaches more closely the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount than either of his two major opponents in the presidential campaign.

Wallace Party Not On Oklahoma Ballot

The Post

Oklahoma City, June 12 (AP).—Henry A. Wallace's Progressive Party was denied a place on Oklahoma's July 6 primary ballot by the State Supreme Court.

The court ruled that the Progressives did not constitute a political party under Oklahoma election statutes.

In New York meanwhile the national Wallace for President Committee invited "ordinary Americans" to help the third party write its platform at its convention next month.

Washington, D.C.

Rexford G. Tugwell, provisional chairman of the platform committee, announced that hundreds of organizations had been asked to send representatives to preconvention committee sessions.

Sun.

The sessions, which will be open to the public, are scheduled for July 21 and 22 at Convention Hall in Philadelphia. The convention to nominate Henry A. Wallace for President will open in the hall July 23.

Wallace Is Urged To Drop 'Mad Course'

Brainerd, Minn., June 12 (AP).—Byron Allen, Detroit Lakes, keynoter of the State Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party convention, today urged Henry Wallace to "abandon his mad course" and withdraw as a third party candidate for the presidency.

Allen, DFL candidate for Governor in 1944, is a long-time personal friend of Wallace.

6-13-48

"While there is still time," Allen said at the party's convention, "I call on Henry Wallace to abandon the mad course which can only lead to his own destruction and the destruction of the admintration of President Truman and the defeat of people like Paul Douglas of Illinois, Helen Gahagen Douglas of California and Hubert H. Humphrey; all of whom died in the ditch with him in 1944."

Wallace's Love For the 'Common Man'

The Constitution

NEW YORK—Wherever Bubblehead Wallace went in his sordid masquerade as a friend of the common man, the town reporters wrote frisky descriptions of the tailboard clowning of William S. Gailmor, the thief who wheedled the money out of the crowds. The fact that this gaping Mortimer Snerd, who was Vice President of the United States for four years, selected a notorious thief to handle the loot for him and his party, is a reliable measure of his mental balance. The citizens may never learn what vastly greater lunacies he committed when he was not only Vice President but Chairman of the Board of Economic Warfare by Roosevelt's appointment. In that position, armed with special powers and protected by an iron curtain of "security," he had a billion to squander and the power to ship to the household gods of his spiritual home the secret yeast that makes the atom bomb go boom and all the plans and formulae that other agents of the Government couldn't keep out of his hands.

Fri.

He once told me that there was nothing he would not do to help Russia, and on that basis we may take it that whatever Wallace had access to, Stalin has now. Agents of Congress have found evidence of Henry's generosity to Russia, but they have learned also that he had the mumbling cunning of a town but' and managed to conceal fact in well-designed confusion. We may never know all that he did or what happened to the money.

The false character of a compassionate and utterly generous Mahatma, with insinuations of divinity that has been painted on Wallace by a few dreary Washington God-seekers of the corps of press club pundits, is an alarming reproach to the publishers who let such fools run wild.

It is an affront to intelligence to ask us to believe that Wallace did not know he had a thief for a tub-thumper at his rallies. But we can grant that Gailmor either muscled into the troupe to do the best he could for himself or that the Communists put him there knowing his indifference to the inhibitions of honesty and his incapacity for shame. In either case, the Communists, having unshakable suspicions of one another in all fiduciary matters, undoubtedly watched him during the count-up and frisked him for forgotten jack.

Henry Love, in the San Diego Union, gave an excellent description of Gailmor's work on tour with Wallace.

"Evangelistic methods were used by William Gailmor, Wallace's New York fund-raising specialist," Mr. Love wrote. "The total of collections was not announced immediately. At the climax of his talk, Gailmor asked the audience to take out $1 bills.

" 'Don't give them to the ushers,' he said 'We want a demonstration here tonight. Stand up and wave the bills. We want a pictures of the people giving in mass support. Wave the bills! Now, ushers, get those!' "

For another phase of Henry Wallace's feeling for the so-called common man, I lead you to a tenement on East Forty-ninth Street, New York, and up four flights to a smelly, crowded, two-room flat where a white-haired man lies on an iron bed. He raises the covers over his head to smother his cough. He is a T. B., a veteran of World War I, who hasn't been out of the house in years. His name is Jim Minnerley. His wife is careworn, tired and dressed in frayed, old, cheap stuff. She is just in fron her work as a hotel chambermaid where she gets $25 a week, and is stewing up something for their dinner. Mrs. Minnerley brought Jim back from the veterans' hospital a skeleton weighing about 80 pounds. She had the luck to find this little cell in poverty row and took it because at the fourth floor the sun comes in from the west in the afternoons until it drops below the high buildings close by. From her pay and tips she crowded Jim with milk and two fresh raw eggs a day until his weight went back up to past 100.

When Henry Wallace was sneaking around the Roerich cult on Riverside Drive, Mrs. Minnerley invested $1,000 in a bond on the 26-story lamasery promoted and erected by Henry's rich friend, Louis L. Horch.

The Constitution

Horch and the brethren in the cult solemnly announced that they were giving this booby-trap to the people of the United States. It happens, however, and they very well knew, that there is no such legal person as "the people of the United States," so without embarrassment Horch went to court and grabbed back the skyscraper for himself. He is still Henry Wallace's Friend, confidant and partisan. He was planted in a key position in the Department of Commerce by Wallace with power to either let or hinder the shipment of anything whatsoever to Soviet Russia. He says he is poor but he still owns the skyscraper and has a Summer place at New Canaan, Conn. Horch still lives in the lamasery on the Drive while Jim and Mrs. Minnerley exist in the East Side walkup.

Mrs. Minnerley has given me her $1,000 bond a banknote job in the yellow tint of our old gold notes. It isn't worth a damn.

I profess none of the knack of Wallace's trained thief in stimulating the humane juices.

Atlanta, Ga.

But I would be glad to accept and deliver to these victims any contributions that might be sent to me at King Features Syndicate, 235 East Forty-Fifth St., New York 17, N. Y. Dollar bills, fives, tens, checks money orders or change will be acceptable. I promise to see that the forgotten man, and his wife, of the great lamasery deal, get every cent of the money.

When the kitty reaches $1,000 we will formally deliver the phony bond to Bubblehead with the compliments of the common man.

WALLACE CHARGES SHAM ON 'RIGHTS'

New York, N.Y.

Says Truman Does Not Believe in Platform—Dewey Choice Aids Him, He Avers

By LEWIS WOOD

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, June 25—Henry A. Wallace, Presidential candidate of the New party, charged tonight that President Truman did not actually believe in the platform of civil rights which the Chief Executive outlined recently in a message.

The former Cabinet officer spoke at a dinner of 500 of his followers in the Hotel Statler. Sharing the program were Canada Lee, the Negro actor, and William Gailmor, the radio commentator, who has accompanied Mr. Wallace on his campaign travels. Dr. Joseph L. Johnson, dean of medicine at Howard University, was chairman.

Mr. Wallace devoted his message to the civil-rights issue and predictions of the effect of victory for his party would have in the South.

Earlier in the day, at a press conference shortly after his arrival in Washington, he hailed Governor Dewey's nomination as "a major service to the New party."

Gibes at Dulles as Adviser

He issued a statement expressing gratification that the Republicans had given him as an opponent "a wholehearted supporter of bi-partisanship." He noted also that Mr. Dewey's principal adviser on foreign affairs was John Foster Dulles, "one of the architects of the present policy of cold war."

The Times

However, Mr. Wallace said, "it isn't the men but the policies of the dominant forces in the old parties which is of importance; they are both supporting the cold war." Consequently, the Republican convention had no more significance than "a race between horses from the same stable," he asserted.

New York, N.Y.

The erstwhile Vice President came here by airplane and, according to his aides, spent most of the day in private conferences.

Sat.

In his speech, Mr. Wallace lost no time in criticizing Mr. Truman, from whose Cabinet he was ejected in September, 1946, after a Madison Square Garden address on foreign policy.

6-26-48

At the outset he remarked that John E. Rankin, the Mississippian, after spending thirty minutes at the White House last week, "exhaled confidence" that there would be unity in the Democratic party on civil rights.

"If we ever had any hesitancy before, Mr. Rankin has dispelled our doubts," Mr. Wallace said. "We can now say of President Truman's civil rights message that the views in the message 'are not necessarily those of the sponsor.' We can go further. We can say quite positively that they are not the views of Mr. Truman."

Lauds Thaddeus Stevens

Mr. Truman's statement in the West that the recently ended Eightieth Congress was the worst in history except that led by Thaddeus Stevens came in for condemnation by Mr. Wallace.

Extolling Thaddeus Stevens, Mr. Wallace said that the post-Civil War Congress, "far from being the worst in our history, probably was the best Republican-controlled Congress we ever had."

He went on to denounce the Eightieth Congress as made up of "puppets who pranced and danced for the plaudits and profits of the NAM (National Association of Manufacturers), the real estate associations, power lobbies and monopolistic railroads." It was, he recalled, the author of the Taft-Hartley Law "to suffocate labor unions."

Sat. 6-26-48

The Republicans as a party, he asserted, "have paid better lip service" to civil rights than the Democrats; but "even so, the Republican plan is weaker this year than it was four years ago." Here he read from a newspaper story that Republicans at Philadelphia ignored Negro delegates, preferring to deal with white Southerners who head the official slates.

"The Republicans," he added, "remember the name of Abraham Lincoln, but they wilfully forget the principles of Abraham Lincoln.

"When the New Party convenes in Philadelphia," he promised, "it will give no quarter to Jim Crow—to prejudice—to intolerance—to bigotry. The New Party, when it comes to power, may be forced to compromise with other political forces on technicalities involved in one or another piece of legislation. But on the fundamental proposition of full rights for all citizens we shall not compromise."

Sees "Common Folks" Injured

The Times

Republicans and Democrats long ago agreed to end partisan politics at the Mason-Dixon Line, Mr. Wallace charged. He said that for years the Southern Democratic Congressional bloc, "tied by threads of gold to Northern capital," has voted with Republican leadership against the interests of the "common folks." New York, N.Y.

In large measure democracy in the South is a "fraud," according to Mr. Wallace. He drew a dismal picture of a Southern "sick economy nursed by sick politicians." He deplored the absence of the vote in the District of Columbia, where, he said, with a one-third Negro population, home rule "would strike a powerful blow at Jim Crow and all its ugly ways." 6-26-48

Wallace Says Truman FEPC Move 'Gesture'

Columbia, S.C.

NEW YORK, July 28—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace says President Truman's executive orders aimed at eliminating discrimination in the armed forces and calling for a Fair Employment Practices system for federal employes are only "gestures."

The anti-discrimination order is "an empty gesture" and the employment order "another obvious political gesture." The New Party presidential candidate said in a statement yesterday. wed.

"Mr. Truman's nightmares over the rapid growth of the progressive party." Wallace said, "have forced him to face the issue of discrimination, but once again he has made only an empty gesture. He has wrtiten into executive order the language of the south...He fails utterly to attack the heart of the matter—segregation." 7-28-48

Commenting on the President's order concerning a fair employment practices system, Wallace said: The Record

"His belated effort to establish an FEPC in government service, issued on the eve of his politically created special session, is another obvious political gesture—and a milquetoast one at that."

Wallace said he was repeating his challenge to Mr. Truman and GOP presidential candidate Thomas E. Dewey "to debate with me—and to debate with me in the south before non-segregated audiences." Columbia S.C.

Wallace said he had sent telegrams to all radio and television networks and independent stations demanding "equal time to reply" to President Truman's address.

There was no immediate comment from network officials here.

Wallace's Candidacy Raises Big Question

Journal Guide

Sat 1-10-48

(34a(1))

By LOUIS LAUTIER
FOR NNPA NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The effects of the announcement last Monday night of Henry Wallace that he is an independent candidate for President in 1948 are hard to assess at this time.

Long an exponent of fairplay for colored people in this country, his candidacy will have a sentimental appeal to colored voters, but whether he can attract enough of their votes in pivotal states to influence the next Presidential election remains to be seen.

Wallace's chances appear to be best in New York, California, and Illinois. If he causes any serious defection of colored voters from the Democratic ticket in those three states, it will be well-nigh impossible for President Truman to be reelected.

The colored vote, however, is at peresnt fluid. Its trend back to the Republican party, as shown by the 1946 Congressional elections, has been retarded by Mr. Truman. The report of the President's Civil Rights Committee has made colored voters "Stop, Look and Listen."

REPORT MAY CHECK TREND

If Mr. Truman himself takes any steps to implement that report, the movement of colored voters back to the Republican Party may be altogether stopped.

On the other hand, Republicans in Congress may be expected to make a determined bid for the colored voter. On the agenda for action in the next Congress are such long-sought measures as anti-lynching, anti-poll tax, the bill against discrimination in employment, and a resolution to amend the Senate cloture rules to stop filibustering.

If the Republican controlled Congress passed the Ives bill against discrimination in employment and the anti-lynching bill in the face of a filibuster by southern Democrats, they will have an arguable case with the colored voter.

A talking point in their favor is the fact that they refused a seat in the 80th Congress to the late Theodore G. Bilbo. On the other hand, Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi, is a liability to the Democratic party insofar as the colored vote is concerned.

RANKIN SOUNDS OFF

Commenting on Wallace's announcement, the race-baiting Mississippian said:

"Henry Wallace's fulmination will have little or no effect on President Truman's chance for reelection.

'Wallace's quixotic appeal to the Communist element of racial minorities sounded as silly as did the report of the so-called Civil Rights Committee on segregation, Governor Dewey's speech on the so-called FEPC, or Senator Taft's persecution of the late Senator Bilbo. They were all trying to play up to these radical racial groups, many of whom follow the Moscow line."

One of the admitted difficulties facing the Wallace candidacy is getting his name and that of his running mate on the ballot in the various states. Because of the procedure to be followed of — nomination by party convention or primary or petition signed by thousands of voters—make it impossible in some states for the third party candidates to go on the ballot.

SOME HEADWAY MADE

In Illinois, however, where 25,000 signatures distributed over fifty counties are required, some headway has already been made. The Progressive party has already qualified in Cook county by polling more than 5 per cent of the entire vote in the judiciary election of Nov. 4.

In that election, against a coalition ticket of fifteen Democracts and six Republicans for twenty-one judicial posts, Professor Homer Carey of the Northwestern University Law School polled 313,630 votes, coming within 11,000 votes of upsetting the combined major party organizations.

In the same election, Earl Dickerson ran next to Prof. Carey, polling 216,750 votes. Sidney A. Jones was behind Dickerson with 182,357 votes, and Richard E. Westbrook placed seventh among the coalition candidates, with 158,685 votes.

The surprising strength shown by Dickerson, Jones and Westbrook may be partially explained by the fact that no colored candidate had been placed on the coalition ticket, and voters in the heavily populated colored wards voted the Progressive ticket.

In announcing his candidacy last Monday night on a platform of "peace and abundance" for all, Mr. Wallace, recounting his activities, reminded colored voters that:

REMINDS VOTERS

"In speeches in the North and in the South at non segregated meetings I have stated the simple truth that segregation and discrimination of any kind or character have no place in America."

Later in enumerating in his speech the things for which he was fighting, Mr. Wallace declared "We are fighting to end racial discrimination."

Mr. Wallace's announcement of his candidacy followed by one day an address prepared for delivery at the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity convention in Tulsa, Okla.

The snow storm in New York City delayed Mr. Wallace's departure. He arrived in Chicago behind schedule and was forced to change his plans. Instead of proceeding to Tulsa, he telegraphed his speech, and Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, read it to the Alpha convention.

END TO DISCRIMINATION

In his Tulsa speech, Mr. Wallace called for an end to discrimination. Declaring that colored and white Americans alike, have been "too tolerant to intolerance."" Mr Wallace urged "a day-to-day offensive to demand complete justice" for colored people.

fig's oS

"The abolition of Jim Crow must have top place on the agenda of a program for national defense.," Wallace declared. "Until it is abolished the words 'democracy' and 'freedom' and 'justice' used so glibly to support our foreign policy will ring hollow throughout the world."

Referring to the role of the Roosevelt New Deal in improving the living conditions of the colored people, Wallace added, "I make these points only to emphasize that whatever we white, unprejudiced, democratic Americans have done; whatever the New Deal did, has been far less than enough. . . . Today we must be as stubborn in our devotion to principle as the abolitionists of a century ago. The times demand i.. The defense of our country demands it."

Following the pattern of his recent declarations that 1948 is a year to "come out fighting," Wallace spelled out in the speech a complete offensive "to end Jim Crow in America wherever it exists—North or South."

SET PRECEDENT

In his recent tour of the South, Wallace set a precedent by speaking only before unsegregated audiences. This was the first time a major political figure in America was able to successfully challenge Jim Crow barriers erected in the South by such hate groups as the Ku Klux Klan and the Columbians.

The Wallace civil rights program, expected to be a major element in the presidential campaign, was launched at the Alpha convention in a five-point platform, calling for a federal anti-lynch law, an end to poll taxes, the right to vote for every colorer American, equal and unsegregated education, and a permanent FEPC.

Wallace challenged both parties on their failures to keep campaign promises for portions of this legislative program.

Wallace concluded his speech by pointing out that a colored child born today has a life expectancy of 10 years less than that of a white child born a few miles away because of unequal health facilities. The newly-declared presidential candidate, promised:

"I say those 10 years—those 10 extra years for millions of Americans are what we are fighting for. I say that those who stand in the way of the health, education, housing, and social security programs which would erase that gap commit murder. I say that those who perpetuate Jim Crow are criminals. I pledge you that I shall fight this with everything I have."

Wallace's False Claims

The Record
Columbia, S.C.

"The horrors of peace."

That is what Henry Wallace is—a horror of peace. Democracies, as someone, somewhere, profoundly once (or twice) has said, don't make war. It is the promise at last of true peace on earth. But in the meantime, being a democracy in a world that includes Russia and the split atom means utter exposure to people like Mr. Wallace when they come with suicidally false claims of a copyright on peace. Because he claims such a copyright, and plies it with drama and abandon, Henry Wallace is winning a much larger popular support than most people believed he would. This column predicted as much, as loudly as it could, when the Wallace third party was announced. Tues. 3-2-48

It is a pitiful comment on the way we hate war and need to be saved from it that so many of us will flock to a man who comes talking peace when there is no peace in him, when what he really means to his country is a threat not only of war but of defeat at war by another country devoted without stop or scruple to war in every dimension—class war, ideological war, international war, cold war, hot war.

The only defense against the menace of Henry Wallace as a peace-horror 3-2-48 is to use this public hate of war as he is using it, to talk peace as loudly and dramatically as he does, and to do so in terms that show him up for the dreamy, deadly charlatan he is. Secretary Marshall, Senator Vandenberg, President Truman and others who are so deeply and responsibly engaged in the practical, detailed, torturesome problem of peace, may think they have no time to go before the country with loud generalizations, and that it is not necessary. But it is tremendously necessary, and they should find the time. Tues. 3-2-48

Of all the books about Roosevelt the most readable, and perhaps revealing, is Jim Farley's, it seems to me. Some of the others have been written from the inside looking out and some from the outside looking in, but Jim's is written with benefit of both observation points. No one was ever quite so much "inside" as he was, and, by that token, so perceiving of what he saw later when he was "outside." With enough time and history between him and both situations now for genuine objectivity, he has written a book which probably paints the political Roosevelt more faithfully than anyone else has or ever will. There is a Roosevelt he leaves out, but others will be doing that one for all time to come. 3-2-48

Few things in his relations with Roosevelt ever hurt him so much as the indifferent letter he had from the President after Pearl Harbor, when he offered his services. He prints the letter in his book, but I had seen it before. He showed it to me once during the war, at the Tutwiler hotel in Birmingham. It was dog-eared and worn from being carried around in his pocket, and the tears were streaming from his eyes. "My dear Jim," Roosevelt had written in reply. "Thanks ever so much for your nice note. I knew I could count on you. As ever yours —F. D. R." The Record

Rabun on Wallace

The Constitution Wed. 1-14-48

Editor Constitution: Even the most casual observer of the news must realize that there is a concerted and obvious attempt on the part of many labor, business and political figures to discredit Mr. Henry Wallace as an Independent candidate for the presidency of the United States. Every newspaper carries some new tirade against him. Atlanta, Ga.

If Mr. Wallace is as innocuous as some pretend, why all the hubbub and fuss? Big dogs seem to have the kind of animal sense which causes them to ignore small dogs. What are the "big dogs" so agitated about in the case of Mr. Wallace? Wed. 1-14-48

Could it be that Mr. Wallace actually has a platform of the people, even if extreme left-wingers pledge him their support, and the "big dogs" of the Democratic and Republican Parties have none? Christianity and democracy are beginning to actively insist, in some men's souls, for the consideration of the real welfare and peace of the masses of earth's people, at home and abroad.

1 have not talked with Mr. Wallace, except in a common language of mutual understanding which spans all time and distance, but I am convinced that he is not running "against" Democrat or Republican, Truman or (?). Mr. Wallace is running "for" the presidency of the United States, to preserve government "of the people, for the people, by the people."

No cause is lost until its adherents admit defeat and quit. The cause of humanity is true religion's real mission. Though Mr. Wallace be repudiated as long as he lives, by some people, and though he fight a losing battle from the start, he is to be congratulated upon some of his enemies and understood among some of his "supposed" friends. Many Americans will be proud that one who is not afraid of the current has launched out into the stream, even if throwing himself away, breasting the tide of popular thought and opinion in attempting the rescue of humanity from destruction. Wallace Urges Royall Be Fired For Segregation

PM New York, N.Y.
Mon. 2-16-48

Henry A. Wallace, third party candidate for President, yesterday called for the resignation of Secretary of the Army Kenneth Royall and the ouster of Defense Secretary James Forrestal and Commerce Secretary Averell Harriman.

Speaking at a rally of the Harlem Wallace for President Committee, at the Golden Gate Auditorium, Lenox Ave. and 140th St., Wallace charged that Royall "reaffirmed the basic policy of segregation" less than a week after President Truman told Congress he had given instructions to end discrimination in the armed forces.

"If Mr. Truman's administrative policy is the same as his vote-seeking policy," he added, "we have the right to expect his immediate demand for the resignation of Mr. Kenneth Royall as Secretary of the Army."

Expects Little From Message to Congress

Wallace said he found little to be hoped for as a result of the President's recent message to Congress. PM Mon. 2-16-48

"There is little reason to expect action," he said. "I know—yes, I have first hand knowledge—that a cabinet officer does not differ publicly with the dominant policy of the Administration and remain in office." New York, N.Y.

He urged the dismissal of Forrestal and Harriman as a demonstration of the President's "sincere devotion to the United Nations decision on Palestine, and as evidence that he means what he says when he speaks of civil liberties.

(Harriman succeeded Wallace as Secretary of Commerce after Wallace resigned the post at the request of President Truman on Sept. 20, 1946. The last of the original Roosevelt cabinet, Wallace was ousted when he came into disfavor with the Administration over a Madison Square Garden speech criticizing our foreign policy.)

Third of Congress Backs Jim Crow

PM New York, N.Y.

Wallace criticized the House Un-American Activities Committee as a "major fortress of Jim Crow," and charged the committee attacks the liberals, progressives and Communists because they have demanded "equal justice under law."

Declaring that at least a third of the members of Congress are "avowed supporters of Jim Crow," Wallace said: "I say those who perpetuate Jim Crow are criminals."

"Southern Governors and Senators," he added, "have no more reason to fear action on Mr. Truman's civil rights message than we have to expect it. Mon.

"They are angry that the President has even paid lip service to fundamental democratic principles." 2-16-48

Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP), who also spoke, urged that 10 Negroes be nominated for Congressman from various sections of the country. Mon. 2-16-48

More than 6000 persons, including heavyweight champion Joe Louis, were in the hall.

At an earlier meeting Wallace spoke on behalf of Leo Isacson, ALP candidate for Congress in the special elections tomorrow in the 24th C. D., in the East Bronx, at the Hunts Point Palace, 163rd St. and Southern Blvd. PM

He declared that Mayor O'Dwyer's appeal for him to return to the Democratic Party was made because "the Democratic high command in Washington is scared to death," and indictaed he had no intention of withdrawing from the race for the White House.

Wallace attacked the Truman doctrine, declaring it is at the heart of the Administration's contribution to "the unnecessary, shameful mass murder in Palestine." New York, N.Y.

"The Democratic politicians," he said, "are torn between their need to appease the oil trusts and their desire to retain a portion of what they call 'the Jewish vote.'"

Frequent cries of "Wallace for President," arose from the audience of 3500. An additional 5000 persons heard his remarks over loud speakers in the street.

Other speakers included Marcantonio, Councilman Michael J. Quill and singer Paul Robeson.

The invitation, his office said was in reply to more than 1000 persons who have sent him telegrams and letters since he announced his 3d party candidacy for the Presidency. Mon. 1-5-48

"I feel that big business is more than taken care of," Wallace said, "but I am particularly anxious to hear what ordinary people themselves feel are the issues affecting them in their locality, and their recommendations for action on a national scale to improve conditions."

Messages can reach him at 40 E. 49th St., N. Y. C.

DuBOIS BACKS WALLACE, 'ONLY MAN' FOR NEGROES

(34a(1)) Daily Worker
New York, N.Y. Fri. 1-2-48

Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, distinguished scholar, journalist and Negro leader came out for the third party candidacy of Henry A. Wallace in the latest issue of the Chicago Defender.

Written before Wallace announced his candidacy, DuBois in his column The Winds of Time asks his readers to back Wallace's candidacy.

Fri. 1-2-48

"We Americans of Negro descent," he wrote, "do not want to be put in the embarrassing position of having to choose between fools and demagogues, or giving up our right to vote in 1948."

The full text of the column appears below.

I wonder how many of my friends and readers will join me in a New Years Message to Henry Wallace, asking him to run for President on a third party ticket in the next Presidential election? Tell him that we are asking this for selfish reasons, because we Americans of Negro descent do not want to be put in the embarrassing position of having to choose between fools and demagogues, or giving up our right to vote in 1947. Daily Worker

CANDIDATES Fri. 1-2-48

There is not before us a single candidate for whom a Negro can vote with self respect. There is no dependence to put upon President Truman; what he says today has nothing to do with what he said yesterday, or what he may say tomorrow. He is simply devoid of that understanding of public affairs which gives him any right to speak or act for a great nation. If we turn from him to the other candidates, what do we see? New York, N.Y.

There is Robert Taft of Ohio, who is following in the footsteps of his father and trying to appease the South. He is willing to give the South money for education to let them spend five times as much on whites as on Negroes. He wants an FEPC without teeth.

There is Dewey of New York, a complete opportunist politician, saying just as little as possible about anything that is of moment to the American people, so as to get into the Presidency without commitments and without revealing his lack of knowledge of the great questions fronting the country. 34a(1)

There is a small and voluble politician from Minnesota, Stassen, who is trying to capitalize upon the provincialism of the Middle West by every possible caper, and thus stem the world tide of Socialism which is overflowing the world and is a part of our own organization of industry. Fri. 1-2-48

ONE MAN, ONE WORLD

In this great crisis of the history of the world, there stands forth in America one man, and one man alone, who is worthy of leadership and of support and that is Henry Wallace. Suppose we admit without argument that the chances for Mr. Wallace to carry the country in the next election are about nil, and that, not because the country does not want him, but chiefly because of the "rotten burrough" system which we have in the South, by which the will of the people cannot be expressed in any national election; a situation in which this great country, as leader of democratic methods of government, cannot and will not govern itself in a democratic way. Fri. 1-2-48

Nevertheless, we can protest even if our protests put a reactionary Republican in the White House or a Southern-supported Democrat. At least we can let the country and the nations know that there are people in the United States who are not stupid, who are not to be bought with graft or fooled with lies. It would be infinitely better for us to throw our votes away upon a great man who stands for real democracy than to shame ourselves, our people, or our country by voting for the impossible group of candidates who are trying to jostle and yell themselves into the Presidency.

Students Organize for Wallace

New York, N.Y.

By Lou Diskin

WHEN THAT gallant Gideon's army starts to gather behind Henry Wallace in the days ahead, it will find the advanced echelons well occupied by thousands of young people. Thurs.

Henry Wallace is number one on young America's hit parade.

Last June, when Wallace addressed a huge youth lobby in the shadow of the Capitol Dome, he was greeted with the chant "We Want Wallace For President." That was no passing burst of youthful exuberance. 1-1-48

TAKE THE college campuses as example.

"Students for Wallace" committees were organized and are known to exist at about 40 colleges throughout the country. Young Democrat and Young Republican clubs exist on only 5 percent of the campuses. The Wallace committees are no fly-by-night affairs. Thurs. 1-1-48

Many of them have been in existence for as long as six months.

At the University of Michigan a corps of hep students have built up a ward and precinct-type organization that would make any old time political boss drool with envy. They have based their organization on the dormitories and co-op houses with delegated committees representing the various colleges that make up the university. In January, the Michigan boys and girls will play host to a mid-west Students for Wallace conference which aims to extend this kind of carefully organized movement throughout the region. Daily Worker

Even more impressive is the record of the University of California. Everything grows big in California. Wallace for President movements are no exception. Last Spring the former vice-president spoke to 20,000 California students on the U. of C. campus. Immediately after, various school organizations set up a Wallace Committee. A couple of weeks later thousands of "Wallace in '48" buttons sprouted on sweaters and coat lapels alongside fraternity and sorority pins. The Committee has already established "get-out-the-vote" brigades and issued an impressive educational brochure that has had nationwide circulation.

It wasn't so long ago that 6,000 students stood in a cold penetrating drizzle to hear Wallace speak. Now the Harvard Students For Wallace Committee expects to welcome over 300 delegates from 30 New England Colleges in February. 34a(1)

So it goes right across the country. In New York City 45 college leaders conferred with Wallace and urged him to run. They represented such diverse groups as YPCA, the NAACP, AVC and the National Student Association. Thurs. 1-1-48

At the University of Texas students are planning special collegiate caravans to tour the state this summer. When Wallace spoke at several colleges in up-state New York, recently, every single meeting broke all records for size. New York, N.Y.

WHAT IS particularly impressive is the way this movement is cutting across previously established partisan lines on the campus. For example, at the University of North Carolina, a dues paying Wallace club of 100 includes members of SDA, the collegiate offshoot of ADA.

All this has happened before Wallace declared himself a candidate. 34a(1)

TO ANYONE familiar with the temper of young America, these developments come as no surprise. Henry Wallace, speaking out against UMT, for peace, for greater educational opportunity and academic freedom, is just the kind of voice the country's youth have been straining to hear. His vigorous call to action on youth issues is not the only basis for his special appeal. Henry Wallace carries forward the magnificent heritage of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Daily Worker

One facet of Roosevelt's greatness was his ability to articulate the most deep rooted aspirations of young people in a manner that gave them the courage and determination to fight against imposing obstacles. In the crusade of Henry Wallace, American youth has found the same kind of inspiration, the same dynamic leadership which opens up vistas of hope and positive accomplishment where Trumans and Tafts offer despair and destruction.

It is as though Roosevelt is speaking once again when Henry Wallace declares, "Don't let yourself be stampeded. Believe in the potentials of a free America. Fight for that potential. Show your elders the way." New York, N.Y.

The challenge will not go unheeded. Thurs. 1-1-48

The Wallace Campaign

(34a(1))
The Record
Columbia, S.C.

When Henry Wallace announced himself as a third-party candidate he did not announce on any New Deal platform. He had nothing particular to say, for example, about labor. He did, of course, include in his announcement speech a paragraph or so, aimed at the Negroes. Tues. 1-13-48

Most of the speech, however, was an attack upon the bi-partisan foreign policy, calculated to appeal to three groups—the pro-Communists, the pacifists and the isolationists.

Those who have been assuming that Wallace's candidacy will draw almost entirely from the Democratic party will have to sit down and do a little more calculating. If Wallace sticks to his idea of a platform as contained in his announcement speech it may be that he will draw more votes from the Republicans than from the Democrats.

Take the Negroes. There were indications that the majority of the Negroes in the crucial states, once weaned away from the Republicans by Roosevelt, were back in the Republican fold in the last Congressional elections. If they now vote for Wallace—and what was the purpose of that picture showing him shaking hands with Paul Robeson, if not to attract Negro support?—it will be at the expense of the Republicans rather than the Democrats. The Record

And what of the pacifists and the isolationists? Most of them seem to be in the Republican camp also. If Wallace attracts any large number of them, he must attract them from the Republican party. Columbia, S.C.

How They Build for Wallace in Baltimore

New York, N.Y. Thurs. 2-5-48

VISITING Baltimore, I found many people there already doing door-bell ringing for Wallace and a good response rolling up in union ranks. Maryland's first milestone on the road towards next November will be reached on Feb. 15 with the mass Founding Convention for a new political party in the state.

This is planned to be a real people's convention with delegates coming from every organization, farm area, shop, block committee, apartment project "or wherever people come together and are concerned about the future welfare of their country."

The sponsoring Maryland For Wallace Committee consists of many prominent progressive leaders in the state. The next objective, following formation of the party, will be a petition campaign to place its ticket on the ballot by April 3. What struck me in discussions with Wallace campaigners was the way the campaign is digging into the neighborhoods of Baltimore and among unionists. Others could learn from the initiative shown in Baltimore.

WALLACE WORKERS are systematically canvassing the neighborhoods block-by-block. They have one question: "Would you like to serve on a committee in this block to work for Wallace?" Thurs 2-5-48

"Thats' all we ask them now," one of the campaign leaders told me last Sunday night. "We don't take time now to talk or argue. We want everybody who is already for Wallace to start working. Give the people in the neighborhoods an organization and initiative and the campaign will roll fast."

He said the reports of canvassers that had already come in for that Sunday showed more than 400 people signed up to serve on block committees. New York, N.Y. He added that on an average about 30 percent of the people asked agreed to serve on the committees.

No one in Baltimore expects the response to continue at this high rate, but the results so far indicate the potential strength that is being aroused in that semi-southern city. The Negro communities show the best response. Daily Worker

One Wallace campaigner, owner of a store in a Negro community, employs a Negro cashier. She asked 97 customers if they want to serve on a committee. Ninety-five agreed. She is now forming them into committees within a two-block area.

THE SAME SIMPLE, but nevertheless most effective method, is getting under way among unionists. Walter McManamon, international representative of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and secretary-treasurer of the labor division of the Wallace committee, said his group expects to bring 200 union and shop delegates to the convention.

They are not waiting until the slow machinery in many locals gets moving on resolutions and other official forms of expression. This is welcomed where early action is possible. Daily Worker

But the main emphasis is on formation of Wallace groups in the plants, or through unofficial steps in the locals, with as many leaders and shop stewards involved as are ready to go. New York, N.Y.

The big majority of top-level leaders in Maryland's AFL and CIO are not yet showing any inclination for Wallace. Many of them, like those of the steel union, are very hostile. But a considerable number of local officers and shop stewards are defying top leaders and joining the Wallace committee.

Serving on McManamon's committee are some of the most influential rank and file leaders—the kind who have the ear and trust of the membership. Included are leaders of shipbuilding, steel, textile and others under right wing top leadership.

From a practical standpoint, they told me, local membership meetings of most unions are hardly a barometer of rank and file sentiment. One of the Bethlehem Steel locals with 8,000 members gets about 50 or 60 to a membership meeting—not even all its shop stewards. Thurs. 2-5-48

The Wallace labor division is putting its emphasis on building up committees in the departments and in the blocks of steelworkers' homes. That's where the work really counts most. Some of the slow-minded leaders will think faster when they see how the members are going.

Baltimore's experience is interesting precisely because progressive-led unions are relatively weaker there. They have made up their minds that the Wallace base is far wider there than might be shown by a check of paid union officers in the city, and they are out to prove it.

335,000 Sign For Wallace in California

Daily Worker

New York, N.Y. Wed 2-4-48

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 3 (UP).—The Independent Progressive Party spearheading the Henry Wallace-for-President drive in California, announced today it has secured nearly four-fifths of the signatures necessary to win a place on the 1948 state ballot.

Chairman Hugh Bryson said the party has secured 335,000 signatures and expects to obtain another 90,000 before the Feb. 26 deadline. A total of 270,000 registered voters must sign a petition to get on the ballot, and the party explained it intends to secure enough signatures to cover any losses due to disqualification. Wed 2-4-48

Blind Alley

New York, N.Y.

Mr. Henry Wallace has made it clear again that he is no Communist, that if the CPers vote for him for President it will be in support of a "Wallace platform," not a Communist platform. Last month, in his New Republic column he made the same thing clear, even bothering to point out that "I have never met Stalin nor have I ever been in European Russia." I don't know how many other occasions he has taken to make it clear. By now, however, it should be clear to Mr. Wallace himself that it is no use, that he is wasting his breath, for which he has better uses. Tues. 2-3-48

Perry

I make this observation as one who appreciates Mr. Wallace very much, who would like to see him get a fair hearing in the press and in the political forums. He will not get such a hearing, though he goes to wash his hands of Moscow three times a day on the public square. All he will get from these mean ablutions is the charge that he doth protest too much.

The press and the public know Henry Wallace is no Communist. Those who are for him and those who are against him know it. Those who are for him would much rather for him to hew to "peace and prosperity" than interrupt his hewing to throw sticks at the barking dogs; and those who are against him are going to keep right on calling "Communist" at him no matter what he says. PM

He can't get away from the charge, but his enemies hope that he can't get away from the disclaimers. As long as he can be kept saying: "Of course, I'm no Communist," he can be kept in a field of debate that is like a quagmire—bottomless and endless. It is not, properly, a field of debate at all, but a trap; and a man who allows himself to be lured into it or prodded into it delights only those who wish him ill—who planned it that way. Tues. 2-3-48

There is only one inspiring reply an American can make to the Red-smear attack, it is: "Nuts!" There is only one aim in that kind of attack, it is to decoy a debater out of the path of reason into the blind alley of inarguable prejudice. It is a strategem of avoidance of debate.

Mr. Wallace has spent enough time around Washington to know that no poll-taxer ever argues the right to vote, but only the utterly unrelated question of "miscegenation." If the ruse works, if the champion of a free suffrage, however sincere, follows, however disdainfully, upon the false grounds, the poll-taxer has him; prejudice takes over, and sense goes by the board. It is the same device, employed to the same purpose, when baiters drive honest liberals, who have minds to speak, upon the seamless treadmill of whether they are or are not "Reds." New York, N.Y.

Mr. Wallace ought not to permit himself to be goaded. He has said enough on the head. He should have said "nuts" at the beginning, and gotten right along with his work. If the Commies want to come along and shout hooray, where will they come from—save from the Democratic Party or the Republican Party—or wherever it is they have been throwing their right to vote around in the past? PM

An American (and particularly, I'd think, a cornfield American like Henry Wallace) does not have to apologize for saying what he thinks, or doing what he does, politically—even if it's running for President. Tues.

He doesn't have to beg pardon and deny he's a minion of Moscow every time, or any time, he sneezes. That's beneath him—a whale of a way beneath him. And, as I have said above, completely futile. 2-3-48

The Red-baiters ask nothing better than to get their man denying. It puts him out of countenance, and ties up his attack. But it will not state their campaign on him, though he swears upon a stack of Bibles that "of course" e's not what they have known right well from the beginning that he isn't.

Negro Newspaper Backs Candidacy Of Wallace

Sun. 1-18-48

The Worker New York, N.Y.

The Macon World, influential Georgia Negro newspaper endorsed the third party candidacy of Henry A. Wallace on Jan. 3. "Every Negro in America," it declared, "should march down to the polls and cast their ballot for Henry Wallace." The World predicted that "millions of Negroes throughout America will rally to his standard. They will not forget that he would have been President of the United States today if he had not taken their side in the great national convention that nominated Truman Vice President.

"His pledge of peace and prosperity will get a respectful hearing in 1948 in a war weary world. His traducers who condemn him for his outspoken criticism of his own country's brand of democracy will indulge to their heart's content in calling him a Communist, but name calling will not change the issue."

THE WORLD declared that "Negroes believe in our system of government . . . but those same Negroes believe that they should enjoy to the fullest every right guaranteed by the Constitution and they will be satisfied with nothing less."

The Worker

The editorial went on to quote the "Freedom Pledge." "I am an American, a free American, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my own way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those that govern my country . . ."

New York, N.Y.

"It is this brand of Democracy that Henry A. Wallace stands for," declared the World. "If this brand of Democracy as outlined in the freedom pledge obtains, then we need no change, but if not we do. Ask ourselves the questions and make our own decision." Sun. 1-18-48

United Hatters Board Urges Him to Withdraw Candidacy

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Jan. 28—The twenty-four man executive board of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union, AFL, today called upon Henry Wallace, "in the interest of liberalism," to withdraw his candidacy for President "so there will be no division of "progressive forces in 1948."

34a(1) 1-29-48

A resolution adopted by the board at its semi-annual meeting said that, for the first time in American labor history, the entire trade union movement was mobilizing its forces for political action and added: The Times

"The decision that will be made in 1948 will affect the direction of history. Therefore, it is essential that all genuine liberal forces work together with labor to overcome the reaction that threatens from the extreme right and the advancing tide of totalitarian aggression that threatens from the extreme left." New York, N.Y.

The union leaders said that in this situation they strongly opposed attempts now being made to weaken the ranks of labor and liberal forces by running a third ticket in the 1948 Presidential race.

The executive board issued a call for the next biennial convention of the union to be held in New York starting May 16. Thurs. 1-29-48

Wallace Says He Doesn't Think Commies Out To Sabotage U.S.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 3—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace says he doesn't believe American Communists seek to use force to overthrow the United States government. 34a(1)

He also challenges President Truman, "and other candidates for public office," to refuse support of groups advocating restrictions of civil rights or control of the nation by violence.

Wallace repeatedly emphasized these points Sunday in opening his third-party presidential campaign in Ohio.

A standing crowd of 2,500 heard the talk and reportedly contributed $26,000 in sums ranging from nickels and dimes to $5,000.

"THE MOST frequent charge made against American communism is that they advocate the violent overthrow of the government of the United States," Wallace said. "I have not seen evidence to substantiate the charge." The News

Wallace asserted he was not a "Communist or Socialist or Marxist of any description." He said he could find nothing criminal about persons advocating social and economic ideas differing from his own.

Wallace challenged President Truman and other candidates to pledge: Birmingham, Ala.

"I shall not knowingly accept the support of any individual or group advocating the limitation of Democratic action for any other individual or group; nor the support of any individual or group which would restrict the civil liberties of others for reasons of race, color or creed; nor the support of any individual or group advocating the violent overthrow of the government of the United States."

Wallace Strategy Board Includes Benson, Baldwin, Tugwell, Robeson

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

Thurs. 1-29-48

Jo Davidson Also to Serve

By ROBERT L. RIGGS

The Courier-Journal Washington Bureau.

Washington, Jan. 28.—A board of strategy for Henry A. Wallace's presidential campaign was announced today by his New York heaquarters. 34a(1)

The members cover a left-wing range which runs all, the way from a practical politician with experience in third-party activity through former brain trusters of the New Deal era clear up to admirers of Soviet Russia's way of life.

Head man of the campaign, or at least front man, will be Elmer A. Benson, a graduate of Minnesota's farmer-labor party which, until the death of former Governor Floyd B. Olson, was an effective third party in that state. A former Governor and former United States senator, Benson will have the title of chairman of the National Wallace for President Committee.

Baldwin to Be Real Head.

The Courier-Journal

The actual operating head of the campaign will be C. B. Baldwin, who was one of the staunch New Deal lieutenants in the later days of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Baldwin, who trained with the late Sidney Hillman's Political Action Committee, will have the title of campaign chairman. He is at present executive vice-president of the Progressive Citizens of America, spearhead of the Wallace movement.

Serving with Benson as cochairmen of the national committee will be Rexford Guy Tugwell, one of the first members of the Roosevelt brain trust; Jo Davidson, the sculptor, and Paul Robeson, actor and singer. The committee's treasurer will be Angus Cameron, editor in chief of the book-publishing firm of Little, Brown & Company.

Louisville, Ky.

May Attract Negroes.

Thurs. 1-29-48

So far as the vote-getting power of the three cochairmen is concerned, only Robeson is likely to have much appeal. A militant fighter for economic and social rights of the Negro, he may attract members of his race to the Wallace candidacy.

Tugwell and Davidson, however, serve chiefly to provide an appeal to intellectuals. Now a professor of political science at the University of Chicago, Tugwell, as undersecretary of agriculture when Wallace was Secretary, was the chief target of anti-New Deal Democrats and Republicans during the Roosevelt Administration. He became so vulnerable that Roosevelt eased him out in 1941 by appointing him Governor of Puerto Rico.

Openly Admires Russia.

Thurs. 1-29-48

Robeson is openly an admirer of Russia, although when reporters covering the recent P.C.A. meeting in Chicago asked him if he were a Communist, he replied, "It's none of your business." His feeling stems largely from his bitterness against the status to which a Negro of his education and artistic achievements is relegated in this country.

He puts it on the simple basis that the fact that he is a Negro does not keep him from getting a hotel room in Russia, as it does in this country and as it does in some European countries since the wartime influx of Americans. He identifies racial discrimination with fascism, regards Russia as the world's champion against fascism and Wallace as the American champion in the fight against fascism in this country.

Tried to Pin Him Down.

Thurs. 1-29-48

When reporters at the Chicago meeting tried to pin him down on the difference between a Fascist dictatorship and the current dictatorships in Russia and Yugoslavia, he replied that he would rather have a good dictatorship than a bad one. "I wish," he said, "that the dictatorship of the North over the South had lasted long enough for my race really to become free." Louisville, Ky.

Baldwin, the campaign's chief architect, is a native of Virginia who looks 10 years younger than his age of 45. He owned and managed an electric-appliance store before he became a Wallace assistant in the Department of Agriculture in 1933. 1-29-48

Wallace reception in Negro dentist's home after reported ban

The Tribune
Sat. 4-24-48
Los Angeles Calif.

Indianapolis hotels reportedly barred presidential candidate Henry A. Wallace and his sidekick, Paul Robeson, a Negro dentist opened his home to them for a reception, the National Wallace for President Committee reported this week.

The tea added $2,000 to the Wallace campaign fund.

The Wallace Campaign Committee charged that reservations for the singer and the candidate were made 10 days in advance at the Warren hotel. "A week before the scheduled appearance of the pair the hotel reported it had no record of the reservation," the committee said.

A canvass of Indianapolis major hotels and "several smaller ones" found that no rooms were available to the two leftist politicoes, the campaign committee charged. It was then that Dr. Theodore W. Cable, the Negro dentist, offered his home.

The committee did not say whether or not Wallace stayed in the dentist's home.

Police Raid Mixed Dance Of Wallace Supporters

Seven Men Face Charges of Selling Whisky Illegally, Operating Lottery

Wash. D.C.

A police raiding party of 35 men broke up a dance, sponsored by supporters of Henry Wallace early yesterday and arrested seven men, either for illegal sale of whisky or operating a lottery.

The dance, sponsored by the United Negro Allied Veterans of America, a pro-Wallace group, was at Laborers' Hall, 525 New Jersey ave. nw.

When the police party, led by Capt. Howard V. Covell of the First Precinct, entered the hall the orchestra quickly struck up the National Anthem, a strategem that briefly halted the officers in their tracks.

But when the last strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner" had faded, police went to work.

Dance Attended by 350

Police said about 350 persons were at the dance, half of them white, half of them Negro.

Arrested were Winston Carl Edwards, 30, of 2914 Sherman ave. nw.; Sidney Goldreich, 25, of 3812 Florence dr., Alexandria; Walter Ernest White, 23, of 1313 49th st. ne.; Shirley Windfield, 23, of 2327 Virginia ave. nw.; Edmund Stephan Majchrzyk, 24, of 516 2d st. nw.; Bernard C. Campbell, 29, of 1007 15th st. se., and Frank E. Trusclair, 27, 2911 Sherman ave. nw.

Police identified Edwards as national chairman of the United Negro Allied Veterans of America and Goldreich as acting chairman of the Veterans for Wallace organization.

Each was charged with keeping and selling whisky without a license and operating a lottery and released in $2000 bond. They will be arraigned today before United States Commissioner Cyril Lawrence.

Names of All Taken

White, Windfield and Campbell were charged with illegal possession and sale of whisky and freed in $1500 bond each. Bond for Majchrzyk and Trusclair who were charged with operating a lottery was $500 each.

Mon 10-11-48

Police took down the names of everyone present. About a dozen persons at the dance refused to divulge their names, so they were loaded into patrol wagons and taken to police headquarters.

At headquarters, they finally revealed their names, were booked for investigation and released. Several of this group told reporters they were members of Henry Wallace' Progressive Party.

Captain Covell said afterwards that he wanted it made clear that politics had nothing to do with the raid, that it was made because information was received that whisky was being sold illegally at the dance.

"We raided the Gold Key Club and other clubs where they sold whisky without a license," said Captain Covell, "and there was nothing political about those raids."

Party Official Protests

However, the Progressive Party of the District felt differently about the raid. The party's chairman for the District, Clark Foreman, called upon President Truman "to show his advocacy of civil rights by taking immediate measures to correct this new wave of intimidation on the part of the District police."

Foreman said this was the second time in 10 days that local police broke up "parties composed of white people and Negroes, apparently on the theory that any such party is subversive." He declared the "real reason" for the raid was police "disapproval of the political views which they attributed to those at the party."

Capt. Covell said the raid was organized after he received information that whisky was being sold without a license at the dance. He said he first verified the information by sending detectives to the hall.

Warrant Is Obtained

After that a warrant was obtained from United States Commissioner Lawrence naming Edwards and Goldreich.

LOS ANGELES — (ANP) — Presidential Candidate Henry A. Wallace accompanied by a number of his supporters made a special tour of Central avenue, main thoroughfare of the east side Negro business and residential district last week.

Riding with him in the parade of 12 automobiles were Sidney Moore, pro-Wallace candidate for congress; Mrs. Charlotta A. Bass, recently appointed co-chairman of the national Women for Wallace committee; Augustus Hawkins, local assemblyman, and others.

Wallace stood up and waved at the crowds all the way in the 50 block drive. Banners screaming "Votes for Wallace," "We want equal rights," "Down with jim-crow" and like messages hung from the sides of the autos.

The cavalcade was preceded an hour earlier by a truck with a public address system announcing that the Presidential candidate would appear.

Other Los Angeles activities included a press conference at the Ambassador hotel and a short speech before 200 at a luncheon at Elks temple. Wallace also held a conference with labor leaders at the Alexandria hotel and attended another banquet.

Mrs. Bass, in speaking of her support of the third party candidate, said"I feel that Henry Wallace and he, alone c n inspire that faith in the American people which will lift us out of the depression of racial bigotry into which we seem to be seeking."

SNACK . . . Henry Wallace refuses to eat in cafes where Southern segregation laws are enforced, so many of his meals are eaten from baskets. Here he has lunch at a stop outside Birmingham. With him is Clark Foreman, national treasurer of the Progressive Party.

Mr. Wallace Again Fails To Note

We have editorially condemned the egging of Henry Wallace in certain sections of the South, even though Henry asked for it, and sought it.

We also have called attention to the fact that candidates in other sections get heckled and abused. The late Wendell Willkie got pelted with fruit and abuse in the East and Middle West. It is not a sectional product, but national.

There was, however, one interesting item coming out of the egging. Henry Wallace spoke of the egging as totalitarian in character. In a very minor sense it was.

But, in the name of common honesty, why doesn't Henry Wallace speak out against all the violence and restriction of civil liberties and free speech in the Soviet Union, which he admires so much. Why does he not mention the fact that we have no political concentration camps, and his accepted Soviet Union does. We have freedom of speech and freedom to form opposition parties. Russia does not. At the worst, ours get egged. Theirs get shot if they so much as get reported for speaking of opposition.

Henry Wallace has been revealed as being dishonest intellectually and politically. That is why his campaign is losing what force it had.

"The organized mob violence of the South will conquer the nation, or democracy will prevail equally everywhere. It must be one or the other. It cannot be both. Norfolk Police Acted Wisely

Journal Guide

34a(1)

(An Editorial)

Sat 9-11-48

For many days it was not certain that either Norfolk or Richmond would permit the WALLACE meetings to be held unless the segregation required by law for public meetings was observed. The WALLACE backers insisted that the meetings would be unsegregated, and WALLACE refused to address any but unsegregated gatherings.

Norfolk Va

Rather than run head-on into the laws and customs prevalent in the South, the Progressive Party officials designated the meeting here as a private one, with admission by invitation only. Ultimately, Richmond and then Norfolk police authorities announced that they would accept the private meeting claim and make no efforts to enforce segregated seating in the audiences.

That was a wise decision. As we pointed out in an editorial in our issue of August 21, the "Communists could desire nothing better than to have Norfolk's police department put on a strong-arm act at their 'by special invitation' meeting here . . . Strong arm tactics never do these movements an harm."

Now that the authorities have been intelligent enough to avoid making a martyr of WALLACE, as some less enlightened communities further South are doing, we repeat the plea made in our earlier-mentioned editorial that the city do something "to close up the gambling joints, policy dens, prostitution houses, 'club' saloons, illegally operated night clubs, and other rackets which consume the earnings of their patrons and fill the cities with thievery, banditry, mayhem, and murder."

Sat 9-11-48

They have earned the gratitude of the enlightened citizenry of Norfolk, and they can earn an even greater measure of public thanks by proceeding with more success with such a cleanup program.

POLITICS:

The Egg and Wallace

Newsweek

Henry Wallace picked the hottest week of the year to invade the South. And wherever he went, temperatures rose still higher:

34a(1)

▶ In Durham, N. C., on Sunday, Aug. 29, his presence set off a free-for-all between Dixiecrat pickets and his own followers. Two of his followers were knocked cold, and one, a University of North Carolina student, was stabbed. Wallace declared: "Nothing can intimidate me."

▶ Next day in Burlington, N. C., he found a crowd of about 700 waiting in a downtown section. No sooner had he started talking, than eggs started flying. One broke on his arm and ran down his rolled-up shirt sleeve. Demonstrators shouted: "Why don't you go back to Russia?" Wallace angrily shook his finger in the faces of several and said in a quavering voice: "Are you in the United States?" But he left without making an attempt to deliver his speech.

▶ He was egged again at his next stop, Greensboro, N. C. This time, however, he braved the barrage and kept talking.

'Jim Crow' Keeps Profits High, Wallace Tells Negro Elks

Courier-Journal

Louisville Ky

Cincinnati, Aug. 24 (AP)—A 5-hour parade of some 30,000 persons today climaxed the appearance here of Henry A. Wallace at the national convention of the Negro Elks.

Shortly after the Progressive Party presidential candidate had spoken at Music Hall, branding "Jim Crow" as the "offspring of profit-mad tycoons wedded to the proposition of divide and rule," lodge members along with numerous bands and drum corps began forming a line of march.

Wallace told the convention that Jim Crow keeps profits high and wages low.

Wed 8-25-48

"What a comment it is upon the status quo," he declared, "when the spokesmen for 15,000,000 Americans had to come to the United Nations to charge that their homeland, the land of Lincoln and Roosevelt, denied them an abundant life, a peaceful life, a free and equal life."

In a renewal of his attacks on President Truman and Governor Thomas E. Dewey, the Progressive Party nominee asserted that Truman and his party "have presided over the gradual liquidation of civil rights for the citizens of the United States, 145,000,000 of them.

"Mr. Truman's silence has been the eulogy over the graves of Negroes, some in the uniform of the United States Army, lynched in the South under his administration."

Wed-8-25-48

He added that Dewey "has had a number of lynchings in the state over which he presides. . . . These go on unchecked in the State of New York."

Approximately 2,000 persons were in the hall when Wallace began his 35-minute speech. The speech was received coldly and only three times did the listeners' interrupt with light ripples of applause. About 1,00 persons remained in the hall until the end of the speech, and applause lasted less than a minute.

After Egg-Tomato Tour, Says He Tasted 'Fascism' In South

Sat 9-11-48

NEW YORK, Sept. 11—(AP)—Henry A. Wallace, back from his hectic Southern tour, got a booming reception last night from a crowd of 48,000 at Yankee Stadium.

Sponsors called the rally the biggest paid-admission political meeting in the history of the United States.

Wallace, interrupted frequently by long and thunderous applause, told the throng that he had tasted the ugly realities of fascism" during his tour of the South.

But he said the important thing about the tour, during which he was pelted with eggs and tomatoes at some stops, was not the "ugly spewings of hate and prejudice."

"The significance of our Southern trip," he said, "lies in the two dozen completely unsegregated, peaceful meetings which we were able to hold."

THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY presidential candidate was given a roaring six-minute ovation as he stepped to the speaker's stand. Amid the cheering, clouds of confetti, thrown into the air, floated down from the stands.

Wallace, smiling broadly, stood waving to the crowd.

At the outset Wallace departed from his text to declare he condoned "neither the German stoning nor the Russian shooting" that has marked rioting in Berlin this week.

Sat 9-11-48

He urged that America be the "peacemaker, not the warmonger" in Europe, and said "the quicker we make peace" with Germany and Russia, "the better for all of us."

The former vice president said his party is made up of "those who stand against the course which leads to war."

He said "It does not matter if they call us red or black, if they lie about us or egg us or stone us. We will not join the Republican-Democratic poker match which governs out of the backroom—from the bottom of the deck."

WALLACE SAID that during his Southern tour he had tasted Fascism "neither so fully nor so bitterly as millions of others. But I have tasted it. And in tasting it I have reinforced my solemn resolution to fight it wherever it appears so long as I live."

He called upon the two major party presidential candidates — President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey — to join him in a pledge that whoever is elected will enforce the 14th amendment. "That section of our constitution calls for the reduction of the number of congressmen for each state where the right to vote is abridged," Wallace said.

At one point, he paused in his address to call Paul Robeson, Negro singer and national co-chairman of the Progressive Party, to his side.

"There is no reason," Wallace said, "why Paul can't stay at the same hotel as I."

The "Yankee Doodle" rally marked the opening of Wallace's New York State campaign. The meeting was originally scheduled Thursday night, but was postponed because of a rainstorm.

BEFORE WALLACE'S ADDRESS, a group of musicians entertained the crowd. One song took a dig at President Truman's civil rights program and his piano playing. The lyrics said: "He plays on the white keys but not the black keys; he's afraid of offending the South."

Another song, referring to Dewey's presidential aspirations, said, "He'll be awfully crowded with Wallace in there."

A rally official said 60,000 rally tickets were sold Thursday — for from 60 cents to $3.60 each and more were sold yesterday. Total sales amounted to approximately $72,000, he said.

Another estimated $50,000 was raised during a fund-collecting period that preceded Wallace's address in addition to "bill-a-head" contributions gathered by ushers from the audience.

Sponsors had predicted an attendance of 70,000. By turnstile count, 45,000 paying customers went through the gate before the meeting began, and sponsors estimated 3,000 were admitted later.

Police estimated the crowd at 50,000.

WALLACE NAME ON EIGHT BALLOTS

Times-Picayune

New Orleans

(The Associated Press)

New York, June 5.—Henry A. Wallace has won a place on the ballot in eight states and has failed to qualify in only one so far, his campaign manager said today.

Sun. 6-6-48

C. B. Baldwin, director of third party forces, said Alabama and Utah were the latest states in which Wallace had been certified on the ballot.

The independent presidential candidate previously had qualified in California, New Jersey, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New York and Cook county, Illinois.

In addition, Baldwin said sufficient signatures have been filed to put Wallace before the voters in Maryland, West Virginia and Oklahoma.

A court fight over formal certification is on in Oklahoma.

The 11 states have 211 electoral votes out of the total of 531.

Florida is the only state in which the new party has failed to meet the qualifying deadline, Baldwin said.

This is the one state in which the Wallace strategists had no hopes of getting on the ballot from the start.

6-6-48

His chances also are dubious in Ohio, where the secretary of state yesterday ruled that Wallace could not have a place on the ballot. But this decision is being appealed to the courts.

Wallace Gets a Welcome After 2 More Eggings

The Courier-Journal

Louisville, Ky

Asheville Gives Him a Peaceful Reception; Truman Call Barrages 'Highly Un-American'

Wed 9-1-48

From Wire Dispatches.

Henry A. Wallace weathered two more assaults of eggs and tomatoes in North Carolina yesterday, but received a peaceful reception in the mountain resort city of Asheville, N. C.

The Progressive Party presidential candidate was egged in Charlotte and Hickory for the fourth and fifth times in two days of speechmaking in North Carolina. But the conduct of those gathered to hear him in front of the Buncombe County Courthouse at Asheville was in sharp contrast. Less than a dozen half-hearted boos came from the crowd of about 1,500.

He's Hanged In Effigy.

He thanked the audience for its "cordial reception" and said elsewhere in the state his appearances were disturbed "by a few irresponsible persons."

Then he attended a reception given by Dr. Karl Schaffle, a physician, at his home in an exclusive residential section. Whites and Negroes mingled freely.

Several blocks away, Wallace was hanged in effigy.

The largest crowd of the trip turned out in Charlotte in front of the Courthouse. The crowd numbered about 2,500 persons.

It was a good-natured crowd and the hecklers almost drowned out Wallace's words, but the police had it in complete control. Just before Wallace finished, however, a barrage of eggs and tomatoes came hurling through the air, striking some of Wallace's group and also a number of spectators. One of those hit was Mary Price, Progressive Party nominee for Governor.

Wed 9-1-48

3 Men Are Arrested.

As he finished his talk in Charlotte, Wallace pointed to a monument near by that was erected in memory of the men who framed the historically famous Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence in 1775, a colonial move to throw off British control.

"Try to remember the Mecklenburg declaration," Wallace shouted, "and try to keep that kind of democracy in your minds."

The monument bears an inscription from the declaration which reads, "When protection is withdrawn allegiance ceases."

Three men were arrested at Charlotte by some of the 80 policemen on hand to maintain order. Charged with disorderly conduct, they posted $100 bond for appearance at a hearing today. Three also were arrested Monday at Greensboro in the egging there.

The party then drove to Hickory, a small manufacturing town in the middle of the state, where about 500 persons assembled in the main street to greet the Wallace group.

Quits Talk Abruptly.

There was a great burst of booing and heckling when Wallace first walked to the loudspeaker set up on the sidewalk. He asked for a chance to talk and suddenly the crowd became very quiet.

Wallace then declared, "I'm going to make a statement that you probably won't like." He remarked that when he had been Secretary of Commerce he had "set up a department to help Negro businessmen because Negroes should have the same business opportunities as whites."

The crowd broke out into jeers of "nigger lover" and "Communist" and then began to hurl rotten eggs and tomatoes.

Wallace and a score of people close to him were splattered. The barrage was so heavy that Wallace quit his talk bruptly and paraphrased a passage from Scripture for his tormentors.

"As Jesus Christ told his disciples, when you enter a town that will not hear you willingly, then shake the dust of that town from your feet and go elsewhere," Wallace said before turning on his heels and entering his automobile, parked a few feet away.

At Washington, President Truman sent word to newsmen that he considers egg-and-vegetable showers are "highly un-American" and a violation of "the American concept of fair play."

Blames Progressives.

The Chief Executive added: "Mr. Wallace is entitled to say his piece the same as any other American."

In Winston-Salem, N. C., where Wallace was jeered Monday night, Police Chief John M. Gold said much of the jeering and egg-throwing was inspired by the Progressives. Some of the hecklers, he said, have been identified as members of the Communist Party.

Wed 9-1-48

Gold said a leader of the Progressives in Winston-Salem was pointed out as one of the crowd "who got the heckling off to a good start."

When told of Gold's views, Wallace broke into a big laugh, and commented: "I wish I knew who they are."

Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, blamed the egging of Wallace on an "irresponsible hoodlum Ku Klux element."

Promises of protection, along with warnings that racial segregation will be enforced, went out to Wallace as he headed toward Alabama in his tour of the South.

One Alabama Mayor, Herbert Meighan of Gadsden, wired Wallace meanwhile that "Your presence is not desired here." Wallace is scheduled to speak in Gadsden at 1:30 p.m. today.

Assurances of protection against physical harm came from Gadsden's Police Chief Gay Boman, Birmingham's Police Commissioner Eugene "Bull' Connor, and from Governor James E. Folsom.

The latter said he didn't believe anyone will hurt Wallace, but he ordered special protective measures at the request of Alabama Progressive Party leaders. A State Highway Patrol escort has been arranged for the presidential candidate and his party.

Denied Steps of Capitol

Wed 9-1-48

The State of Mississippi will provide a Highway Patrol escort for Wallace, but will not let him speak from the steps of the Capitol at Jackson.

Governor Fielding L. Wright disclosed that the Capitol Commission, of which he is chairman, refused a request that the Progressive Party presidential candidate be allowed to speak in front of the Capitol.

Wallace is scheduled to reach Jackson tomorrow.

Wright, vice-presidential nominee of the States' Rights Democrats, appealed to Mississippians to extend to Wallace the "courtesies that would be shown any visitor within our borders."

Governor Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, presidential nominee of the States' Righters yesterday pleaded that Wallace be given a hearing in the South. Governor Gregg Cherry of North Carolina previously had denounced those responsible for Wallace's treatment in his state. North Carolina's Republican state chairman, Sim A. De Lapp, called the violence "unpardonable."

Wallaceites Told City To Enforce Segregation Law

The News

Birmingham, Ala.

Third Candidate Heads Into Dixie; Chief Gives Warning

Sat 8-28-48

If and when Henry Wallace speaks within the Birmingham city limits Wednesday, he will speak to a segregated audience—if he speaks at all.

That much was made clear Saturday by Police Chief C. Floyd Eddins, who asserted it was his duty "to see that the segregation laws are enforced and that's what I'm going to do."

* * *

THE CHIEF SAID he didn't know what specific plans had been made for the scheduled visit here of the Progressive Party's presidential aspirant.

But he insisted that the segregation laws of the city would be enforced regardless of whether the proposed meeting was held indoors or outdoors.

Meanwhile, county commissioners were expected to make a decision today on whether to issue a permit for Wallace to address a meeting on Courthouse steps here at 4 p.m. Wednesday.

Request for the permit was signed by J. P. Mooney, Route 3, Bessemer, as president of the Alabama Progressive Party, and Robert Travis, Jr., 613 North 13th Street, Bessemer, as party secretary.

The request stated that the meeting would be "mixed—white and colored."

* * *

TRAVIS SAID final arrangements have not yet been made, but the tentative itinerary calls for Wallace's presidential entourage to make stops at Huntsville at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday, at Gadsden shortly after noon, at Birmingham at 4 p.m. and at Tuscaloosa after the Birmingham meeting.

Travis said Wallace's group then would proceed to Jackson, Miss., where the group planned to spend the night.

Possibility of a hotel incident here was dismissed when the Wallace program planners decided not to spend the night in Birmingham.

Such an incident occurred, however, at Durham, N. C., where Wallace's reservations to stay at a white hotel there Sunday were canceled.

Wallace party supporters announced he will stay at the home of a Negro in Durham.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT came from Miss Mary Price, North Carolina chairman of the Progressive Party at Durham. Wallace's secretary, Mrs. Viola Scott, a Negro, will stay at the home of another Negro, she said, and three white members of the Wallace group will stay at a Durham Negro hotel.

Frank Grantham, manager of the Washington Duke Hotel at Durham, said he had informed Miss Price the hotel could take reservations only for white guests and further that Negroes were not permitted to visit the rooms of white persons.

Wallace is scheduled to arrive in Durham late Sunday on a Southern swing in his campaign for the presidency.

The News

The Associated Press said Wallace has protested to Gov. William Preston Lane, of Maryland, that all major Baltimore hotels have denied facilities to the Progressive Party for a dinner next month.

In a telegram to the governor Friday, the Progressive Party presidential candidate said that the hotel facilities were refused because of an "admitted policy of racial discrimination."

"Several hundred Baltimore citizens were refused reservations for the alleged reason that Baltimore hotels do not permit attendance of Negroes at political functions," Wallace said.

He urged the governor to use his office to "urge Baltimore hotels to end their un-American practice of discrimination."

The dinner is scheduled for Sept. 12.

Birmingham Ala.

IN A LETTER to County Commission President W. D. Kendrick, Alabama Progressive Party President Mooney stated, "It is our opinion that any attempt to curb, interfere with or prevent such a meeting is only an attempt to deny freedom of speech and freedom of assembly to the people of Jefferson County.

Sat

"Many citizens remember that this same space (the courthouse steps) has been used heretofore for many similar meetings.

"In order that there be no misunderstanding as to our request, we desire that the citizens of Jefferson County and vicinity have the opportunity to hear Henry Wallace on the day of Sept. 1, if they so desire."

8-28-48

In Baltimore, officials of two hotels said they had turned down the Progressive Party request for use of their banquet halls because their facilities already had been booked for the date sought.

Most others denied they had refused a Progressive Party request for reservations.

WALLACE BACKERS FORM JERSEY PARTY

Independent Progressives Hear Taylor Attack the Major Parties on Peace Issue

New York Times

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEWARK, N. J., June 5—The Independent Progressive party, supporting Henry A. Wallace's Third party candidacy for President, was founded today at a convention in the Armory at which Senator Glen H. Taylor of Idaho, Mr. Wallace's running mate, charged Republican and Democratic parties "with joining in a conspiracy to deprive American people of their civil rights in order to stop the forces for peace."

In an afternoon address Senator Taylor said that Third party candidates and leaders were "being dismissed from their jobs in many places" and called upon the 1,228 delegates from eighteen of the state's twenty-one counties "to meet this organized persecution and intimidation with courage."

At a press conference later he predicted 20,000,000 votes for Mr. Wallace if 60,000,000 ballots were cast—"just enough to win."

In reply to a question he said: "I never was a Comunist and never will be; neither is Henry Wallace. But I wouldn't answer that question if it were asked by a Congressional committee."

Among the resolutions adopted was one characterizing the Mundt-Nixon bill as "a thought control measure, fashioned after Fascist regimes of Germany, Italy and Japan." Another called upon Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll to remove John Borg, publisher of The Bergen Record, as a member of the Port of New York Authority for permitting publication in his newspaper of an editorial "containing thinly veiled anti-Semitism in connection wih the establishment of the State of Israel."

Sun

James Imbrie, Wallace candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey, and Mrs. Katherine Van Orden, candidate from the Twelfth Congressional Distrist, also spoke. Prof. Walter Rautenstrauch of the civil and industrial engineering department of Columbia University, was chairman.

3d Party Certified in 8 States

Certification of the Third party in Alabama and Utah has brought to a total of eight the number of states in which the new party, which is supporting Henry A. Wallace for President and Senator Glen H. Taylor for Vice President, is now assured of a place on the ballot, C. B. Baldwin, campaign manager of the National Wallace for President Committee, announced yesterday.

In addition, Mr. Baldwin said, the Wallace organization has completed requirements for putting the Wallace-Taylor ticket on the ballot in three other states and is awaiting official certification. These eleven states have 211 electoral votes and a population of approximately 53,000,000.

Mr. Baldwin said that the new party is now officially on the ballot in Alabama, California, New Jersey, New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Utah and in Cook County, Illinois. In New York, Mr. Wallace and Senator Taylor will run as the candidates of the American Labor party.

6-6-48

The three states in which sufficient signatures have been filed to put the Wallace-Taylor ticket on the ballot are Maryland, Oklahoma and West Virginia. A court fight over formal certification is under way in Oklahoma.

Of the states where the deadline for putting the new party candidates on the ballot has passed, the Wallace organization failed only in Florida. In Ohio, where the Secretary of State on Friday barred the new party from the ballot, an appeal has been taken to the State Supreme Court.

WALLACE WANTS ALABAMA STONING

The Advertiser

We read in the capitalist press that Henry Wallace was going to open his campaign in Alabama. Suspecting that this was just some capitalist mischievousness, we consulted the communist press. And it was confirmed in the communist newspaper, The New York Daily Worker—Wallace's chief press support—that "Old Bubblehead" was, sure enough, going to open his campaign in Guntersville, Ala.

Sun 8-22-48

The Daily Worker announced:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Henry A. Wallace will open his campaign in Alabama on Sept. 1 with a series of non-segregated meetings. He will center his attention on textile workers and Negro and white steel workers, coal and ore miners.

Guntersville, Ala.

Progressive Party leaders here are busy planning for Wallace's one day tour of open air meetings throughout the state. Wallace will arrive by train in Guntersville, Ala., one of the Alabama cities touched by the TVA project. Following a speech here he will continue his state tour by motor caravan.

The caravan, escorted by the Alabama State Highway Patrol, will drive first to Huntsville, where Wallace will address and picket with textile workers who have been out on strike for almost five months. The caravan will then go to Gadsden . . . By noon Wallace and the caravan will enter Birmingham . . . He will address steel workers and coal miners in this southern heart of J. P. Morgan's steel empire . . .

In addition to Alabama, Wallace will campaign in six other southern states. The Atlanta Constitution is doubtless correct in guessing that Wallace is coming South first in the hope that there will be incidences which he can capitalize elsewhere in the nation.

Wallace knows that he cannot hope to win strength in the South. Yet he will open his campaign in Alabama, where the state's vote has already been awarded to Thurmond, and he makes a point that he will defy Jim Crow law and custom. Obviously this wacky and vicious man hopes to be stoned.

Sun 8-[illegible]-48

Be it remembered that Birmingham City Commissioner "Bull" Connor [illegible] sucker for Wallace's running mate, Senator Glen Taylor. Bull did just what Taylor desired—took him to the clink for violating the city's segregation statute. That gave Taylor a martyr's scars in the East, where ignorant people believe anything said of the South so long as it is derogatory.

Of course, the act advanced Bull's political stock. But we hope that this time, Bull will not be outsmarted by a dimwit. Nothing could please Wallace more than to be arrested in Birmingham on a Jim Crow violation. Let it be recognized aforetime that Wallace is coming to Alabama to be stoned.

Wallace Is Ignored In His Invasion Of Texas

The Columbia Record
Wed. 9-29-48
Columbia S.C.

Henry Wallace invaded Texas Monday to begin a three-day stumping tour of the Lone Star state.

He was still hammering away at the race issue, calling for the enactment of federal laws prohibiting segregation and racial discrimination, still insisting that at all meetings at which he appeared there should be no segregation.

The laws of Texas require that the white and Negro races be segregated at public gatherings, but the Dallas authorities wisely choose to ignore any violation of the statute by the Progressives. The only public meeting scheduled for Dallas was a party rally in an old dance hall, called the Yacht club, outside the city limits.

34a(1)

And this, of course, defeats the Wallace purpose. He cannot make any votes out of being ignored.

It is the policy that should have been followed by North Carolina and the other Southern states, which wasted good eggs, tomatoes and peaches on the Wallace party on the occasion of his first Southern invasion a month ago. In contrast to his stormy reception then, his appearance in Texas was quiet and unnoticed.

Trying to recapture some of the old frenzy, Wallace recalled the disturbances that marked his other visit to the South. He said that violence occurred "where Northern money was invested" and after saying that Texas was dominated by "huge oil interests" described the Southern reactionary as "a Southerner controlled by Northern money—a Republican who has put on false whiskers," evidently ignoring the fact that his description could also be applied to himself as a former Republican, now wearing at least two sets of false wiskers.

Wed 9-29-48

But the South had learned its lesson and ignored the insult. It isn't playing into Wallace's hands any more. It has arrived at a system of simply ignoring him, which is the severest punishment that can be meted out to a politician.

Wallace's campaign, not only in the South, but everywhere, is slowing down. The Communist hand behind the Progressive party is becoming more and more apparent and other voters are falling away from him. Even in the Northwest where he claimed his strongest support outside of New York and California Wallace is on the downgrade.

Wallace Cancels Reservation When Hotel Bars Negro

Black Dispatch

LOUISVILLE — (ANP) — Henry A. Wallace, Progressive party presidential candidate, cancelled hotel reservations here last week because the management refused to register a Negro traveling with him.

Oklahoma City Okla.

Herbert H. Monsky, attorney and state chairman of the progressive party, said on Aug. 23 that he had sent the following letter to the hotel management.

" . . . I have been instructed to advise you that if you are not prepared to register Mr. Wallace and all members of his party, without regard to race, color or creed, these reservations should be canceled.

"This letter is to confirm my telephone conversation with an assistant manager who, when I explained the situation, informed me that it would be necessary to cancel these reservations and that he was doing so."

Wallace arrived in Louisville by plane Tuesday, August 24, for a party rally. Members of his party were housed in private homes rather than accept rooms in segregated hotels without accommodations for Negro members of the group.

Wallace Replies To 'Prodigal Son'. Aubrey Williams

34a(1)

CHICAGO—(AP)—Henry Wallace, replying to the urging of his old friend Aubrey Williams to repudiate the Progressive Party, said Sunday the Progressives later will welcome such "tired liberals" as "prodigal sons."

"Tell us when you get your belly filled with husks, Aubrey, and we shall go out and kill the fatted calf," Wallace said.

Williams, the former National Youth Administrator, Saturday published an editorial in his ~~farm~~ publication at Montgomery, saying the Communists are "using" Wallace to weaken and defeat the efforts of the U. S. to reach an understanding with Russia.

He said Wallace should repudiate the whole thing and "come on back home."

Wallace said in his reply:

"The Progressive Party has done and will do more to provoke real understanding in the world tha nany single political force. The get tough policy is demonstrating its complete failure every day. Without any appeasement whatsoever, without any sacrifice of any American public interest, it is possible to have peace with Russia."

Wallace Seeks Presidency

The Informer Light House

CHICAGO, Ill. - Henry A Wallace Monday declared himself an independent candidate for president of the United States.

Sat 1-4-48

His bolt from the two major parties and formation of a new progressive party followed the day after Wallace made a fighting "declaration of independence" for American Negroes in an address prepared for the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity national convention in Tulsa, Oklahoma. A blizzard that blanketed the east coast prevented Wallace from attending the convention but his speech was read before the cheering audience by Dr Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

34a(1)

In the Monday night nationwide broadcast over the Mutual network announcing his candidacy, Wallace called on farmers and workers, whites and Negroes, small businessmen and professional people to join him in the fight "against war, privilege and discrimination."

New Party Need Declared

"When the old parties rot, the people have a right to be heard through a new party," he declared. "They asserted that right when the Democratic Party was founded under Jefferson. They won it again when the Republican Party was organized in Lincoln's day. The people must again have an opportunity to speak out with their votes in 1948."

The Lighthouse

Wallace's call for an end to discrimination made in his candidacy speech was presented as a full-bodied program for equal rights for the Negro people in his Tulsa address. Declaring that Negro and white Americans alike have been "too tolerant of intolerance," Wallace called for "a day-to-day offensive to demand complete justice' for the Negro people.

"The abolition of Jim Crow must have top place on the agenda of a program for national defence," Wallace declared. "Until it is abolished the words 'democracy' and freedom and justice' used so gilbly to support our foreign policy will ring hollow throughout the world."

Referring to the role of the Roosevelt New Deal in improving the living conditions of the Negro people,, Wallace added, "I make these points only to emphasize that whatever we white, unprejudiced, democratic Americans have done whatever the New Deal did, has been far less than enough ...Today we must be as stubborn in our devotion to principle as the abolitionists of a century ago. The times demand it. The defense of our country demands it."

Fights Jim Crow

Following the pattern of his recent declarations that 1948 is a year to 'come out fighting," Wallace spelled out in the speech a complete offensive "to end Jim Crow in American wherever it exists North or South."

In his recent tour of the South, Wallace set history-making precedent speaking only before unsegregated audiences. This was the first time a major political figure in America was able to successfully challenge Jim Crow barriers erected in the south by hate groups as the Ku Klux Klan.

The Wallace civil rights program, expected to be a major element in the presidential campaign, was launched at the Alpha convention in a five point platform, calling for a federal anti-lynch law, and end to poll taxes, the right to vote for every Negro American, equal an unsegregated education, and a permanent FEPC.

Wallace challenged both parties on their failure to keep campaign promises for portions of this legislative program.

Makes Pledge

Wallace concluded his speech by pointing out that a Negro child born today has a life expectancy of ten years less than that of a white child born a few miles away because of unequal health facilities. In a moving pledge to the Negro people, the newly-declared presidential candidate, promised:

"I say those ten years--those ten extra years for millions of Americans are what we are fighting for. I say that those who stand in the way of the health, education, housing and social security programs which would erase that gap commit murder. I say that those who perpetuate Jim Crow are criminals. I pledge you that I shall fight this with everything I have."

Temporary offices for Wallace were set up at 40 E. 49th street in New York.

NAILS

In a drive to force the gray market out of business, the nation's nailmakers have decided to more care fully police distribution and to increase production. Nail production in the next 90 days will be concentrated on "60" standardized types and sizes of nails most commonly used in home construction." At present, the steel industry is producing "over 125 different kinds of nails."

Progressive Party Head Plans To Reach Memphis This Afternoon For Address In Bellevue Park Tonight

By The United Press

MONROE, La., Sept. 2.—Mississippi and Louisiana, where patriotism means States' Rights and white supremacy, bent over backward Thursday to see that Henry A. Wallace got "courteous" treatment.

Wherever the Progressive Party presidential candidate went in the two states, he was escorted by details of watchful state troopers.

Wallace was weary after three turbulent days of Southern travel during which he had been the target several times of rotten eggs and ripe tomatoes.

Not A New Idea

It was not the first time a campaigning presidential candidate had gotten egged at political gatherings. During the 1940 presidential campaign, the late Wendell Willkie running on the Republican ticket against Franklin D. Roosevelt, was also splattered with raw eggs and nan occasional tomato.

In Alabama, Wallace had refused to speak to audiences that were segregated.

Thursday he was escorted through Mississippi by seven carloads of state police, and the Louisiana patrol picked him up at the state line.

Things went smoothly until he got to Monroe where another barrage of old vegetables threatened. A couple of tomatoes spattered against his red Ford automobile as he stepped inside to resume the trip.

A burly state trooper turned in the direction of the crowd and growled:

"No more of that."

Wallace spoke on a downtown Monroe street corner. He praised the South's resources and humanity.

Crowd Is Displeased

But the crowd did not like it when he said, "there's no reason in the world why the South cannot rise to the level of the North."

Jeers and catcalls interrupted his brief speech.

"Let the man talk," several persons pleaded.

Fri 9-3-48

Wallace's day started this morning with breakfast at Southern Christian Institute, a negro junior college, at Edwards, Miss.

The gathering turned into a Mississippi Progressive Party meeting to plan ways of getting presidential elector candidates on the November ballot.

Wallace went to the State Capitol with the Mississippians to present the list of candidates to Secretary of State Heber Ladner, who took them under advisement.

Wallace Shuns Louisville Hotel Barring Negro

Tues 8-31-48

LOUISVILLE — (AP) — Hotel reservations here for Henry A. Wallace, Progressive Party presidential candidate, were canceled because, party officials said, the management refused to register a Negro traveling with Wallace.

Wallace will arrive here Tuesday for a rally.

Members of his party will be housed in private homes as a result of the inability of the local party committee to get rooms in nonsegregated hotels.

WALLACE CITES HIS RECORD OF AID TO NEGRO FARMERS

The Worker

Special to the Daily Worker

New York New York

Sun 10-3-48

DALLAS, Tex. — Henry Wallace defended his position on the Negro question here today, mentioning Walter White by name as one who had criticized him without a substance or a shadow of truth.

Wallace said it was not true he had neglected Negro sharecroppers when he was Secretary of Agriculture. He pointed out that through the Farm Security Administration he had aided them. He said he had visited Negro sharecroppers personally to ascertain their needs.

"As presiding officer of the Senate," he added, "I tried to line up Republican Senators to support anti-polltax legislation when it came over from the House."

The former vice-president said he was not successful in these efforts on the polltax, but that he did learn the logjam against civil rights legislation in the Senate was bipartisan.

Sun 10-3-48

He admitted that he had not been as concerned about the Negro question as he is now. His experiences in World War II, he said, speeded his development along that line.

"Walter White, who is playing around with Truman, and some others have criticized me, but there is no substance of a shadow of truth in what's being said."

Considers Treatment
In North Carolina
Is Un-American

Tues 8-31-48

President Truman Asked "Fair Play", today for Henry A. Wallace, Progressive Party Presidental candidate who has been pelted with eggs, booed and harrassed on a North Carolina speaking tour.

Through Press Secretary Charles Ross, Mr. Truman sent word to reporters that he considers the tr treatment given Wallace

"A highly un-American business." He said Wallace is entitled to say his piece."

THE WHITE HOUSE also announced that Mr. Truman will make a campaign speech Sept. 18 near Dexter, Iowa, and from there will tour on West. Details of the trip, other than the engagement at Dexter, are incomplete.

The national plowing match will be held at Dexter Sept. 18. So Mr. Truman's address likely will be the major "farm speech" of his election campaign. His campaign will officially open with a "labor speech" at Detroit on Labor Day.

Wallace went, ahead with his Southern campaign, meanwhile picking up more support in the North from the American Labor Party.

Tues 8-31-48

In New York, a state convention of the American Labor Party nominated Wallace and his running mate, Sen. Glen H. Taylor, as its candidates.

Elsewhere on the political front: The head of the CIO United Electrical Workers, who is backing Henry A. Wallace, said there will be no split in the labor organization over the issue of endorsing President Truman.

* * *

ALBERT J. FITZGERALD, president of the 600,000-member United Electrical Workers, told that to reporters when he went into a meeting of the CO executive board at Washington. Nobody is going to bolt the CIO, he said.

The executive board faced its toughest campaign puzzler in eight years in trying to endorse Truman without sacrificing important left-wing unions.

Louisiana Democrats, in a primary election watched by congressional investigators, chose senatorial and House candidates. The administration of Gov. Earl K. Long was a hot campaign issue.

Russell Long, the governor's nephed and 29-year-old son of the late Sen. Huey P. Long, bid for the Senate seat left vacant by the death of Sen. John Overton. Young Long, as a state legislator, helped draft his uncle's controversial state program of higher taxes, bigger old age benefits and similar measures.

Negroes Blast Use of 'Uncle Tom' Pickets

Sun Worker - Sun 9-26-48

By Sylvia Hall

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—The entire Negro community of Birmingham is still up in arms about the nine Negroes who picketed the Wallace meeting with Dixiecrat-worded slogans. The slogans, contrary to the true militancy and asspirants of the Negro people, are being refuted by letters to the editor in local daily papers, the local Negro newspaper, and by a resolution of the Birmingham NAACP.

The resolution, signed by the President and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the local NAACP and approved by the branch membership, declares:

"As a means of expressing the feelings of the massess of Negroes toward the recent incident of the nine Negro men picketing the proposed Henry A. Wallace Progressive Party political rally scheduled for Sept. 1, on the steps of the County Courthouse

"Resolved, That it be made known publicly by means of newspapers and other publications that we deplore the actions of such groups and consider it a treacherous stab at the Negro's fight for first-class citizenship.

"Resolved, That we do not condone such action, but rather condemn and denounce any such actions on the part of any group or groups participating in such.

"Resolved, That it be made known that the wording of the placards carried by these nine men does not express the sentiments of the majority of thinking southern Negro citizens, if any.

Sun 9-26-48

"Resolved, That it be made known that we are non-partisan, and that the same actions would be taken on any group picketing with banners carrying such statements at any political rally, regardless of party."

THE VICIOUS REMARKS on the placards were exposed in a column of the Birmingham World by Emory Jackson, editor of this local Negro newspaper.

In answer to the sign, which read, in part, "We live in harmony in the South," Mr. Jackson pointed out that "within 126 days in the Birmingham area, nine Negro citizens were killed by police." He went on to add, "For the first time in the history of the Birmingham outdoor meetings on Sept. 1 were jimcrowed."

One sign boasted Parker High School, largest Negro high school in the world. Mr. Jackson states that Parker High School is the largest "unaccredited" high school in the world. "It has no gym, an inadequate library, no athletic field, a meager and restricted curriculum. Parker High School is a big high school simply because Negro citizens of Birmingham are denied enough high schools," he added.

Mr. Jackson also answered the red-baiting placard which read, "The Negro has accomplished more in the South in the past 100 years than Russia has in the past 1,000 years." His reply: "It is foolish to seek to compare the progress of a racial group of one country with another country. Russia has risen to a first-rate power since World War I, but the Negro is still a long way from a first-class citizen in the South after more than 80 years since the Civil War."

A LETTER to the editor, appearing in one of the local dailies, spoke out against the Negro pickets. After refuting many of the slogans, the letter said, "The whole concoction seems to have been inspired through some other source and demonstrated by the nine Judases."

Cornelius Maiden, local AFL organizer, believes that the men were "forced to do it." Knowing the situation in the Hodcarriers local union, in which all nine men claim membership, Mr. Maiden declared that the local's white business manager has "dictatorial power over those Negroes."

No Eggs for Wallace At Dalton Speaking

The Constitution

Sun 10-17-48

Atlanta, Ga.

DALTON—(UP)—Henry A. Wallace came South again yesterday, charging that the kind of violence he experienced on a previous trip is "an evil that can cost this nation its very life."

But Wallace got a peaceful reception in this North Georgia Mountain town, in contrast to his last trip South when he was pelted by critics with ripe eggs and squashy tomatoes in North Carolina.

The Progressive Party candi-candidate for President charged that his party workers had been subjected to "terrorism" in their drive to get on the ballot in Georgia.

Recently a number of Wallace-ites claimed they were chased out of Augusta and Columbus when they showed up to get signatures on a petition then necessary to make Wallace eligible for the November election ballot. Since, the Legislature removed the requirement that new parties had to have a petition from five percent of the population, Wallace is on the Georgia ballot.

Wallace drove here from Chattanooga, Tenn., and addressed a quiet crowd of about 800 attending a 12-state meeting of the Church of God. It was a non-segregated audience, but only a few Negroes showed up.

Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Sept. 23.—(AP)—Aubrey Williams called on Henry Wallace today to "repudiate" the Progressive Party and "come on back home."

Henry Wallace return to the Democratic Party? Probably the average Alabamian reading that finds himself muttering: "We don't want that traitorous bubblehead back in our party."

But that is an incomplete thought. It is no matter to Alabamians if Wallace returns to the Democratic Party. That is forgetting that the majority of Alabamians have left the National Democratic Party the same as Wallace. We are no more members of the National Democratic Party than Wallace. He left it to join up with a third party, the Progressive Party. Most Alabamians left to join up with the fourth party, the States' Rights Party.

Wallace Carries Anti-Segregation Crusade South; Defies Violence, Jim Crow Meetings and Accommodations

The Black Dispatch

Okla. City Okla.

Sat 9-11-48

ABOARD THE HENRY A. WALLACE SPECIAL TRAIN MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Raising on his banners the dramatic cry, "Segregation is sin!" Henry A. Wallace, Progressive party candidate for president, braved open hostility and violence as he carried his campaign into the deep South last week.

Traveling by airplane, special railroad car and motorcade, the former vice president established a historic precedent in a whirlwind tour of major cities and small towns of seven states. In Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Tennessee, again and again Mr. Wallace announced his program for the industrial and agricultural development of the South, for doubling the Southern income "for black and white alike."

He called for "a new political awakening and full, free voting everywhere in the South."

Explaining that the Progressive party is the only party whose candidates practice what they preach, Mr. Wallace refused to speak at segregated meetings at Gadsden, Birmingham and Bessemer, Ala. He also rejected reservations at hotels which refused accommodations to the Negro members of his party. Traveling in his official family were Edith Roberts, secretary, and Louis Burnham, party coordinator for the Southern states.

Sat 9-11-48

In Durham and Winston-Salem, N. C., Mr. Wallace was the house guest of prominent Negro businessmen. George W. Logan, theatre owner, restauranteur, was his host in Durham, and Carl Russell, leading mortician of Winston-Salem, provided the hospitality of his spacious home in Camel City.

Beginning with addresses before audiences totaling more than three thousand Negro and white Virginians in Richmond, Norfolk and Suffolk, the Progressive party standard bearer moved on to North Carolina where he encountered the first evidence of "white supremacy" violence. A group of young white hoodlums, parading as war veterans, picketed the Durham armory where Mr. Wallace addressed the closing session of the nominating convention of the Tar Heel Progressives. The Durham police offered no protection to the meeting and permitted the disrupters to enter the armory brandishing their picket signs and yelling provocative insults. The audience of 1,500, half of whom were Negroes, remained calm and sang their party songs. After the pickets were thrown out of the hall by a group of pro-Wallace students from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, they returned, singled out Danny Harris, one of the Chapel Hill students, and cut him severely on the wrist and back.

The pattern of violence continued in Burlington, Charlotte and Hickory, N. C., where eggs, tomatoes, ice cream cones and assorted missles were used instead of knives and fists. On several occasions, Mr. Wallace was pelted by eggs, but he smiled good-naturedly, reaffirmed that his program is one of friendship for and among the Southern people, Negro and white, and expressed his regrets that the eggs could not have feen used "to feed hungry children."

Negroes turned out in large numbers at all points of the tour. In many instances they mingled freely in the crowds. In some instances, obviously reacting to the vicious intimidation with which the Dixiecrats had reacted to the Wallace tour, they stood at the edge of the court house audiences. In all cases, they listened intently and applauded with vigor the frequent references to the Progressive Party platform on equal rights.

At Durham, Mr. Wallace was introduced by Louis Austin, militant editor of the Carolina Times, and Progressive candidate for the state legislature. Prayer was offered by Rev. W. T. Brown, young minister of Maxton, N. C., candidate for the U. S. Senate.

Among those who greeted the former cabinet member at Little Rock, Arkansas, was John Johnson, Negro elector of the party. Other Negro electors and party officers were among the welcoming delegates at Jackson, Mississippi and Memphis, Tennessee.

Sat 9-11-48

High points of the tour was an unsegregated meeting of 5,000 at Memphis' Bellevue park on Friday. Scattered boos of 'teen-age hecklers failed to drown out the vigorous applause as Wallace reiterated his call for a world of peace, security and abundance, and called for the total elimination of Jim-Crow in American life.

An elderly Negro in the audience proclaimed "This has never happened in Memphis before." And Clark Foreman, national treasurer of the Progressive Party, in closing the meeting, said: "This is a new day for Memphis and the South. One year ago, the Freedom Train could not come to Memphis. But today the Freedom Man has Come!"

Sat. 9-11-48

With the applause of the interracial audience ringing in its ears, Mr. Wallace and his party moved on for appearances at Nashville and Knoxville which would conclude the Southern tour.

NAACP CONDEMNS "NINE OLD MEN" WHO PICKETED WALLACE MEETING

Daily World Wed

Birmingham, Ala.-- 9-15-48

In a blistering resolution released for publication last 34a(1) Saturday, Sept. 4, the Birmingham Branch of the NAACP condemned and denounced "the nine Negro men" picketing the Henry A. Wallace unfilled speaking appearance at the Birmingham Courthouse, Wednesday, Sept. 1. Atlanta, Ga

The men, descrived by the daily press as a "civic group" and "former Tuskegee students" carried placards presenting information claiming that the Wallace program hasset the Negro back 50 years and "Down with the FEPC", and other material. The NAACP's resolution said further "We deplore the actions of such groups and consider them a treacherous stab at the Negro's fight for first-class citizenship." 34a(1)

BACKGROUND CHECKED

Newspapers report checking into the background of the "nine Negro men" have been unable to find whether any of them ever attended Tuskegee Institute. Equally, reporters have not been able to check where the placard-bearing "nine men" are identified with any organized civic group.

The pickets gave their names as Major Kitt, 2701 4th Ave., South; Albert Tucker, 1004 7th Ave, North; George Odum, 316 27th St; Red Coney, 513 8th Ave., S.W.; Robert Batie, 412-A 3rd Ave., N.; Percy Poole, 1514 6th Ave., W. and Burton Lee, 329 Beater St.; Jessie James Coper, 3515 First Alley, No; Joe Griffin, 136 First Ave., N.

ALL IDENTIFIED

They all said they were members of Local 559 of the American Federation of Labor. Tucker was identified as vice-president of the local and as a steward and Sunday School teacher of the St. John A.M.E. Church. The "nine men" all of them appearing to be elderly men, told the white reporters that they represented merely civic-spirited Negroes. Atlanta, Ga 34a(1)

Cornelius Maiden, former organizer for the American Federation of Labor's national office, who is now with the Cooper International of the AFL said that through his work in connection with his local he believed that "the men were forced to do it." He added that "they are members of a common laborer's union" and that "those fellows really didn't know what they were doing." He described them as "men who could scarcly write their names." He added that a man he identified as William J. O'Neal, white business manager, had dictorial power over those Negroes."

TELEGRAM SENT

Wed. 9-15-48

The day before Wallace was scheduled to speak, Sept. 1, the Birmingham Branch of the NAACP sent the following telegram to County Commission President W.K. Kendricks and Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor:

"We protest the denial of free political expression and free and peaceful assembly to Henry Wallace by your insisting upon conditions for his speaking appearance Wednesday in Birmingham, never before required in outdoor gathering of its kind.

The NAACP condemns compulsory segregation laws and will seek by legal and moral ways to rid America of its curse and disgrace. Segregation is the symbol and essence of second-class citizenship".

The text of the NAACP's resolution said:

As a means of expressing the feelings of the masses of Negroes toward the recent incident of the nine Negro men picketing the proposed Henry A. Wallace Progressive Party political rally scheduled for Sept. 1, on the steps of the County Courthouse.

Resolved, That it be made known publicly by means of newspapers and other publications that we deplore the actions of such group and consider it a treacherous stab at the Negro's fight for first-class citizenship. Daily World

Text of Wallace's Speech at Yankee Stadium

The Times

Following is the text of the speech prepared for delivery by Henry A. Wallace, Progressive party candidate for President at the rally in the Yankee Stadium last night:

Just two years ago I spoke to many thousands of you who are here tonight.

I said then as I say tonight that peace is the basic issue of the 1948 election campaign.

I say now that the first job of national defense; the most important job in maintaining the peace is the job of conquering hate here at home, the job of protecting the civil rights of all Americans.

This is a great American meeting.

34a(1)

It is a meeting in the best American tradition—a meeting of men and women of all races, all creeds.

Sat 9-11-48

Last week—in smaller gatherings—we proved that such meetings can be held in the much-maligned Southern states. We proved that such meetings—meetings of all the people—can be held wherever men respect the Constitution of the United States; and wherever they respect the Christian principles of brotherhood on which so much of our modern civilization has been built.

The news reported from the South last week was news of eggs and tomatoes. It was news of violence and threats of violence.

And there were eggs. And there were tomatoes. And there was violence and there were threats of violence.

Yes, and there were the ugly spewings of hate and prejudice; and the sad sight of men and women and children whose faces were contorted with hate.

Significance of Trip South

But the significance of our trip south was not the dramatic proof that there are seeds of violence and fascism and deep prejudice in the Southern states. The significance was not in proving what is known.

No. The significance of our Southern trip lies in the two dozen completely unsegregated, peaceful meetings which we were able to hold.

The significance lies in those meetings in Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee which were held—even as this meeting tonight—in the best American tradition.

We held such meetings by insisting on our American rights to freely assemble and freely speak.

And if there is one message above all other messages which I bring you as a result of that Southern trip, it is this: Fear is a product of inactivity and the greatest remedy for fear is to stand up and fight for your rights.

In the course of private and public life I have traveled many places. I have experienced many fields. I have had a wide variety of emotional experiences. But I have never had such deeply moving experiences as those of the first week of September, 1948, when I traveled South to campaign for peace.

I had seen the victims of mass prejudice in a DP camp.

I had seen and felt—as any decent human being must feel—for the Jewish orphans interned in Italy.

I had visited foreign lands—Latin America, China and many parts of Europe, and had my heart go out to victims of oppression.

I have deplored and felt that I truly understood the plight of workers who have faced picket line violence.

Says He Found Fascism

I had been South before—many times—and I thought I understood the plight of our Negro citizens.

But I discovered last week that my understanding was only the limited understanding; the sympathetic feeling of a friend for a man who is afflicted.

To me fascism is no longer a second-hand experience—a motion picture, a photograph or the deeply moving words of a great writer.

It is no longer a mere definition of an economic and political system in which freedom is stifled by private power; in which prejudices are bred and nourished; in which man is set against man for the profit of powerful and greedy forces.

No, fascism has become an ugly reality—a reality which I have tasted.

Sat 9-11-48

I have tasted it neither so fully nor so bitterly as millions of others. But I have tasted it.

And in tasting it I have reinforced my solemn resolution to fight it wherever and whenever it appears so long as I live.

Last week—when I had a chance to live—to live very briefly and relatively mildly—the kind of life which millions of Americans live every waking hour, last week I learned what prejudice and hatred can mean. I learned to know the face of violence, although I was spared the full force of violence. I saw the ugly reality of how hate and prejudice can warp good men and women; turn Christian gentlemen into raving beasts; turn good mothers and wives into Jezebels.

I didn't like that part of what I saw. I didn't like to see men and women fall victims to the catchwords of prejudice and the slogans of hate, even as the poor people of Germany were victimized by the catchwords and slogans of Hitler and Streicher.

34a(1)

Saw Hate Mongers in Action

I saw how a few hate mongers carefully placed in a crowd of decent folks can set off a dangerous spark.

I saw a young college student—a Progressive party worker—who was severely cut across his chest and arms by the agents of hate.

Times

I was a passenger in the car of a prominent business man in a Southern city as he raced down dark streets and alleys to elude all who might be following us, so that he could take me, unknown to anyone else, to his home for dinner.

He was a courageous man. The precautions he took were necessary. His business in that Southern town would have been ruined, if it were known that a candidate for the Presidency, a former Vice President, was having dinner at his home.

I saw an irate landlord rouse a quiet neighborhood where I had gone quietly to rest and work on a radio speech at the apartment of a young couple.

I saw how fear is bred and perpetuated and capitalized—and I didn't like it.

Met Courage That Brings Hope

But I also saw the kind of courage; the kind of real, deep human fighting spirit which promises a new day for the South and for the world.

I saw men and women, white and Negro, who have been leading the fight against hate and prejudice and intolerance in the South.

I saw them standing up and fighting for the very foundations of our American way of life—standing up to all kinds of intimidation. And from them radiates a contagious spirit; the same kind of spirit of resistance which stopped the armies of Adolf Hitler in half a dozen European countries.

Sat 9-11-48

I heard Clark Foreman say so truthfully that "Down here, to believe in the Constitution means you are automatically called a Communist"; and I heard a young college student, a veteran, add: "It's like General Carlson said, 'To be called a Red here is a badge of honor.'"

I am confident that their spirit—the spirit of the progressive Southerners—will triumph in the South. I am hopeful that our trip helped build their forces; helped rally new strength; helped along the movement which will free the South. Rich in resources—proud and courageous, the South must be—and will be—freed from the shackles in which it has been held by huge corporations with headquarters only four miles south of here—not in Virginia, not in Tennessee, but in Wall Street.

'Steel Keeps People Divided'

The free South and the feudal South live side by side in the State of Alabama. In one day we received courteous receptions and held free meetings in the best American tradition in Decatur and Huntsville and Gunthersville in the great TVA area; and on the same day we could not hold meetings in Gadsden and Birmingham and Bessemer, cities which are dominated by Northern-owned steel corporations. We did not hold meetings because the police insisted on dividing Americans by the color of their skins. We did not hold meetings because the constitutional right to freely assemble and speak was denied by the police authorities of those company towns.

Here—in Alabama—in a single day, we saw the economic basis of hate and segregation.

In the steel towns it is profitable to keep labor divided.

North against South, race against race, farmer against worker—the profits of the men who own the South are multiplied by keeping the people divided.

But their days are numbered.

The good people of the South have learned their scriptures. They know the fundamental Christian doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. They know that "God hath made of one blood all the nations to dwell upon the face of the earth." They know that we are all members, one of another. Just as surely as men everywhere, they want the Kingdom of Heaven here on earth; and they are not going to be stopped any longer by those who spew hate.

It is the owners of the mines and mills, the great plantations, and newspapers who incite violence.

'Owners Don't Fight, But Inflame'

They don't personally engage in lynching either free speech or human beings, just as they don't personally engage in fighting the wars from which they profit.

But they inflame the passions of others. They have had others do their dirty work. But the ranks of new recruits for their dirty work are narrowing as more and more men and women of the South see how they have been victimized by prejudice—as they see how it has profited the few, and brought misery for themselves and their neighbors.

And the workers and farmers and independent business men of the South are turning from the false leadership of those who have been styled "Southern liberals"—they are turning from those who have preached the tolerance of intolerance, tolerance of segregation; tolerance of murderous Jim Crow. They are learning that such men are only slightly to the left of Hitler and Rankin.

They are learning that no man can believe in both segregation and democracy.

In a radio interview the editor of an Arkansas paper asked me about FEPC. He wanted to know if I would interfere with the right of men to choose their own associates. And I replied that I considered that a most important right. I replied that it was precisely my devotion to that right that leads me to fight segregation—segregation which deprives both white and Negro from freely choosing their own associates.

I told this same man; this same champion of segregation that while I knew we couldn't legislate love, we most certainly could and will legislate against the acts of hate.

Calls for Pledge to Cut Congress

Throughout the South we spoke for the full protection of all citizens under the Constitution of the United States. Tonight, I want to call upon the candidates of the Republican and Democratic parties to pledge with me that whosoever shall be elected, he will enforce the second section of the Fourteenth Amendment no less than the other provisions of the Constitution. That section of our Constitution calls for the reduction of the number of Congressmen for each state where the right to vote is abridged.

In 1946 the votes cast to elect fourteen Congressmen from Louisiana and Mississippi were less than the votes cast in the Twenty-fifth Congressional District here in New York.

John Rankin and thirteen others, all together, received less votes than are cast here in the Twenty-fifth District.

That is not only unfair to the people of New York's Twenty-fifth District; it is grossly unfair to the people of the Southern states whose freedom has been limited by the failure of the Congress to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment.

If every Congressional candidate, if each of the Presidential candidates will take a pledge to secure constitutional reapportionment on the basis of the next census, I predict that we shall see an end to the many hindrances to free suffrage in the South.

We pledge ourselves to enforce this constitutional right.

"Proud of Our Enemies"

In pledging to live by the Constitution, we have earned enemies. And we are proud of our enemies.

The men who stand for Jim Crow.

The men who stand for Taft-Hartley.

The men who support fascists in Greece and China.

The men who prefer an atmosphere of war, because they profit by it.

Sat 9-11-48

The men who hated Franklin Roosevelt and the New Deal and who now find their unity in hatred for the Progressive party.

These men, Republicans and Democrats, bound together by hate, are using every mechanism which bipartisan fear can suggest to defeat congressional candidates who stand for peace.

The Democrats, the Republicans, and the self-styled Liberals have joined hands to support single candidates against the candidates of the Progressive party; against candidates of the American Labor party.

They have joined hands in their bipartisan wrath against two men with the best liberal and labor voting records in the Congress of the United States.

They have honored—these corrupt and dangerous men—they have honored two real servants of the people, Vito Marcantonio and Leo Isacson. They have honored Leo Isacson with a single opponent. They have honored Vito Marcantonio with a joint campaign of vituperation and hate.

They are afraid of our strength. They saw what the people could do last February when they sent Leo Isacson to the Congress.

They have seen, time and again, the devotion of Vito Marcantonio's constituents to that dynamic champion of progressive principles. They have reason for their fear—and though they have combined their resources and efforts, we shall lick them on election day and return Vito Marcantonio and Leo Isacson to the Congress.

Scores Bipartisans' New Allies

It is with great sadness that I note that the bipartisans have some new allies; fearful men who call themselves liberals and leaders of labor; men who cry out against Wall Street running the country and then ask workers to give dollar bills to keep President Truman and his Wall Street gang in Washington.

I say such action, such double talk, such duplicity is shameful, immoral, and corrupt.

These illiberal liberals; these labor leaders who fight monopoly with words, but whose actions support the candidates of monopoly, these men make possible the Truman double talk. They make it possible for Truman to condemn Taft-Hartley while using it to destroy unions and the Wagner Act; to call for civil rights, while maintaining segregation in the Armed Forces and conducting loyalty purges; to call for price controls after killing them; to call for peace, while preparing for war.

Times

The surest proof that we of the Progressive party are not impractical in our politics is in the alliances of hate which have been formed against us.

Some of the liberals, some of the Pied Pipers of labor will tell us that they have compromised because Roosevelt compromised; but they slander a great man when they draw that comparison.

Roosevelt, by the deftest political maneuvering in all history, made many a political deal, but always advancing the cause of the common man.

Progressives Held Not for Sale

The men who are bargaining with corruption today hope for no gains, no advancements. They are bargaining to minimize losses. They are fearful men. They are men who might well heed the lesson that the only cure for fear is to stand up and fight for right.

The bipartisans have learned that the Progressives are not for sale. They have found out—through their leading agent in New York City, Mayor O'Dwyer, that the party in which Fiorello LaGuardia was proud to enroll himself is not for sale.

Bill O'Dwyer found it out when he tried with his fanciest offers to get John Rogge to quit the race for the surrogate's bench. Bill O'Dwyer heard Vito Marcantonio say "no." He heard John Rogge say "no." And he knows that John Rogge will conduct the kind of dynamic, fighting campaign against corruption which he himself should have fought against Tammany.

O'Dwyer, who has Trumanized his local administration by serving the same interests as the Republicans, by pitting police against strikers, by fighting inflation with increased subway fares, by invoking local loyalty orders; Bill O'Dwyer has found that Progressives know double-talk when they hear it.

As President Truman has demonstrated that he could not fill the shoes of Roosevelt; so Mayor O'Dwyer has shown that he cannot fill the shoes of LaGuardia.

Name Calling Discounted

Yes, our "no sale" sign has earned us many names. But it does not matter if they call us red or black, if they lie about us or egg us or stone us. We will not join the Republican-Democratic poker match which governs out of the backroom—from the bottom of the deck.

The shop-worn, the discredited, the cheap political tricksters have joined with those who all their lives have practiced black reaction. They have set up one camp, though there are many banners.

Sat 9-11-48

And what are they joined against? What are we that they should forget old feuds to fight against us?

We are those who stand against the course which leads to war.

We are those who would take from the hands of monopoly the power to say who shall starve and who shall feast.

We are those who protest a policy toward minority groups that is administered by a policeman's nightstick. We are those who feel attacked whenever the color of man's skin or the color of his political beliefs is the official excuse for brutality, whether in Mississippi or in Harlem, whether at home or abroad.

We must go now into every building of this city, into every suburban home, onto every street corner. We must tell the people who we are. We will stand up and take the jeers of hirelings.

We must work—we will work, so that on Nov. 2, Americans can clearly choose.

The meanderings of Bubblehead Wallace in good purpose, deplorable as it may [illegible] to Henry, monwealths are more polite [illegible]dient to

The campaign of disparagement of these States has been growing in volume for 15 years and is the work of two agencies, the Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, a sinecure for a few overprivileged elegants, and the Communist Party. Both of these have contrived to make use of outlets which were less likely to be suspected of special motives. The advancement outfit made a connection with the ever-susceptible New York Herald Tribune whereby the AACP President, one Walter White, a Negro so pallid as to walk in peril in Harlem after midnight, should publish its propaganda in the Sunday section in the guise of impartial observations.

The H-T, its ethics gone numb, ran White's early pieces with no line to identify him as press agent for a touchy cause. It was a snide deception of a piece with the publication of essays against the American Legion by Charles G. Bolte, the founding father of the American Veterans' Committee, with no line to warn the reader that this too was pleading by an interested party. On being exposed, the H-T quietly complied with the rule of good faith in journalism. And, in due course, the AVC's Communists debauched this wet-eyed society of campus ideologians, vindicating the suspicions of all honest observers.

Mon 9-20-48

Henry Wallace made himself as offensive to the white population of the South and to most of those Negroes who prefer progress in peace to solution in blood, sweat and tears. His decision to live only in the homes of prominent Negroes was a patronizing affectation by a slobbering mountebank who hadn't even learned the tricks of the journeyman demagog. He never promoted Negroes in the Department of Agriculture or Commerce when he was Secretary and it never occurred to him to sleep in a colored man's bed and spill salt in his home until he went traipsing in election year under a banner which impugned the Negroes' patriotism.

Through all this, Bubblehead was treated with the good contempt of men of both races who were in a moral position to despise him. He was egged slightly but never stoned and of the tomatoes thrown none ever hit him, a warning, perhaps, of the decline of the South as the source of major league ball players.

But a few years ago, in New York, when Fritz Kuhn and the Nazi Bund held a rejoicing in Madison Square Garden, it took all the spare cops in town to keep some 50,000 level-headed, patient New York exponents of tolerance and forbearance from throwing the edifice at him, brick by brick. Kuhn was anti-American, anti-Semitic, dishonest and unpopular. Wallace is, if not anti-American then, anyway, more friendly to the enemy than to his own country. He is anti-white, a notorious liar and no more beloved in Alabama than Kuhn was in the Bronx.

In the Southern States, Wallace generally was let to speak his maundering piece. People called him a few names and hit him with a few eggs which caused no injury. The cops were few by contrast with the mighty cordons which were necessary to protect Kuhn that night. Obviously the Southern people could be trusted to restrain themselves.

In New York, Madame Kirsten Flagstad came to sing nonpolitical songs and was placarded long in advance by frantic incitations to assault or even homicide composed by illiterates on the foundation of motivated gossip against her late husband, and published in daily papers. No modern Southern paper would consider printing such brutal counsel. Mr. Flagstag was said to have been a Norwegian Nazi

In the New York district which sends Vito Marcantonio to Congress to follow the party line, an electioneer named Scottoriggio was kicked to death in daylight for all around to see, because he was opposing Marcantonio. This was a lynching as brutal and unmistakable as any in Southern history. Marcantonio, of course, and he an old office protege and political disciple of LaGuardia, was the political beneficiary of the murder done in a district where he usually knows all.

Mon 9-20-48

In New York it was that the Furriers' Union, run by the Communists, which for years terrorized both the furriers and the employers by the consent of Democratic city administrations. The Ku Klux Klan never was more brutal or stronger in the modern South.

In New York, the Council of the CIO openly announced the compulsory draft of all its members at the instant order of Communist bosses for picket duty, which means riot and insurrection. No such private army ever before had been ordered into being anywhere in American history.

The most dramatic mob pictures in the newspaper files are a series of three shots of a rioter killing a citizen with a ball bat in Minneapolis. The rioters were proteges of Floyd Olsen, the Governor, a Roosevelt New Dealer. The first picture shows the goon with the bat taking his swing. The second shows the impact. The third is the follow-through as the citizen falls dead before a thousand witnesses, including police, and the goon follows through.

No arrests.

This is particularly pertinent in view of the fact that it was the Mayor of Minneapolis who insisted on the adoption of a drastic anti-lynching program in the Democratic National Convention this year. As a closing point, St. Paul was so lawless that even a so highly immunized New Dealer as Homer Cummings, when he was Attorney-General, refused to let the FBI trade information with the St. Paul cops, remarking that something was rotten there.

Eisenhower No Bar to War Drive: Wallace

34a(1) Presi

Daily Worker

New York, N.Y. Wed. 4-7-48

By Ruby Cooper

EVANSVILLE, Ind., April 6.—Democratic nomination of General Dwight D. Eisenhower will not stop Henry Wallace's campaign for the Presidency on the Third Party ticket, the former vice-president made clear today at a press conference here.

Opening his three-day swing through Indiana, which will conclude on Saturday with an appearance at a national Third Party conference in Chicago, Wallace said of Eisenhower:

"It is not a question of personalities—it is a question of what the party stands for."

Wallace's remark was an inferential slap at the General, who has refused to make any break with the bi-partisan policies of the Democratic and Republican Parties, which Wallace has called "war and depression policies. Wallace also declared there was no chance the Democratic Party would reverse its war policies regardless of which candidate it nominated.

At a mass rally tonight at the Coliseum here, Wallace called for public ownership of the military aircraft industry of the nation. The aircraft industry, he declared, "is helping foment the present war hysteria" and in the interests of peace "we must remove the drive for profits which leads private interests to urge more armaments and war-like actions." 4-7-48.

Evansville played a major role in the war in production of Thunderbolt fighter planes.

VISITS PICKETS

Wallace's address here capped a crowded day of activities that included an early press conference, visits to the picket-lines of striking electrical and packing house workers, and meetings with student, professional and labor groups.

His visit to the tent serving as strike headquarters for the 2600 Seeger Manufacturing Co. workers, members of the CIO United Electrical Workers Union, brought strikers swarming from the picket line to greet him. Daily Worker

Shortly after, he strode over to the nearby strike headquarters of the 500 Swift & Co. packinghouse workers to assure them of his support. New York, N.Y.

INTIMIDATION

An effort to intimidate workers, including Negroes, in this former Ku Klux Klan stronghold from attending tonight's meeting was seen in an announcement that a parade of veterans would also be held tonight to protest Wallace's appearance. Wed. 4-7-48

The parade is being organized by a group styling itself "The Spirit of Kilroy," claiming a membership of 400 veterans from among workers at the Briggs auto plant, a CIO-UAW shop.

Investigation reveals the group as sponsored by the right-wing Association of Catholic Trade Unionists and organized some months back to secure Reuther-pledged delegates to the last UAW convention. Its leader and spokesman, Arthur Robinson, was formerly a close co-worker of Homer Martin, one-time UAW president who was ousted from the union as a company stoolpigeon. Daily Worker

The move for the parade follows days of rampant hysteria against Wallace supporters in the UAW-organized Briggs, Chrysler and International Harvester plants. Sellers of tickets for the Wallace meeting had been threatened with violence and discharge from their jobs. Workers were told by the ACTU-Reuther clique that spotters would be stationed at the Coliseum doors.

Despite this, advance sales of tickets were large, and the parade was announced as a last minute move to cut down attendance. Wed

Alluding to this campaign of intimidation, Wallace told a press conference here he would receive a much greater vote than sample polls indicate because "many people have become hesitant to say how they will vote." New York N.Y.

'What Makes Wallace Run?'

34a(1) Presi

Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

"The loquacious, neighborly Henry Wallace had turned silent. Old friends who called to ask him about his plans were startled at the change in him; the warm, blue-gray eyes had turned cool and silent, and an impenetrable wall seemed to rise around him when visitors stated their concern over the course he seemed about to take. . . ."

This paragraph is an early one in what I consider to be one of the most skillful, but cleanly, honestly done political articles of the year entitled, "What Makes Wallace Run?" It appears in the March Harper's, and I recommend it earnestly.

All who knew Henry Wallace in the old days knew that something had happened to him. He always had a genius for self-delusion. But, the man who is before us today is a puzzling one. Hale strips him naked. Tues. 3-16-48

Editor

When Wallace became editor of the New Republic there was an upsurge in the circulation of that magazine from about 40,000 to 100,000.

But there it stopped. (The hopes were for 400,000.)

An old friend whom I had talked long hours with in China, whom I had visited in New York after his return while he was writing one of the better books on China, turned down a job at a great financial sacrifice to go with Wallace on the New Republic.

I got an excited call or so from him and once rushed an article to him. Therefore, I was puzzled three months later to hear from him that he was quitting—the New Republic was a confusing place, Wallace was the chief cause of the confusion . . . there was something gone wrong with Wallace . . . and he would tell me all about it some day when we met.

William H. Hale

Now comes William Harlan Hale, who also was one of the editors of the New Republic, with his article, "What Makes Wallace Run?"

It was Hale who resigned when Wallace determined to be a candidate and still contribute to the magazine. Hale felt it was unethical and committed the magazine, which, of course, it did.

But now, without malice, without anger or any meanness at all, he has so stripped Henry Wallace of integrity and intellectual honesty that I do not see how the man can fail to suffer, save in the eyes of the Communists whose willing captive he seems to be.

Ghosts

Apparently the New Republic circulation didn't go on up to the estimated 400,000 because Wallace didn't have it.

But, even more than that, Hale reveals that Wallace drained himself dry of any real ideas in a few weeks and that frequently, thereafter, the Wallace articles were ghost-written under his name.

Writes Hale:

"Then, after he had been at the job only a few weeks, the flow of his positive ideas began to dry up. Many of the Wallace editorials of the early months of 1947 dealt simply with abstractions ('We must develop a new science of the general welfare') or with pot-shot polemics ('We are clutching a large empty paper bag containing a secret—i. e., the atom bomb—that is no secret.') Even these were sometimes written by ghosts. The editor began to absent himself from editorial conferences and took no part in the magazine's daily work. His mind seemed elsewhere. Political cronies who had opposed his switch to editing appeared more frequently at his door. He took again to making speeches."

It will surprise many to read from one who saw the man revealing all the pettiness of a spoiled child. He was bitter about Roosevelt and especially about Harry Truman. His vanity, his liking for cheers, his willingness to hear only what was pleasing to him, are all shown by the man's own acts. It is not the wise, patient man we thought we knew.

The Communist infiltration continued until—as Hale says in a great line: "Wallace was seeing more and more of fewer and fewer persons."

Commies

The nation's well-known fellow travelers surround Wallace with their silken threads as a cocoon is bound, until:

"In March, 1947, before these influences had closed in on him, Wallace was still able to write an editorial in which he stated that the fundamental reason why most Americans hesitated to risk an all-out effort for peace with Russia was that they 'are convinced that both the Communists and the Soviet Government are intent on dominating Europe and eventually the world.' Not that Wallace shared this conviction, but he felt it worth while to state its existence—implying that it was up to the Soviets to act in such a way as to dispel it.

"But within a few months his attitude had changed. When in late Spring his editors presented him a draft of an editorial that in specific terms spelled out those widespread American suspicions of Soviet policy which the Kremlin might do well to answer or remove, Wallace pocketed it. Some weeks later his answer came back: he would not, he said, write anything critical of Soviet policies.

"Why not? was the immediate question. Because he didn't see how by himself he could affect Soviet policies, was the reply. But he could affect American policies. Criticism must stay at home. Tues-3-16-48

"This was just where his new friends wanted it to stay. He must paint America's political rulers an unrelieved black, thereby letting the opponents of those rulers stand out in white. And that didn't mean only the domestic opponents, such as Wallace himself; it meant the foreign ones, too."

In all of this the Wallace the nation knew, or thought it knew, has been swallowed up. The man of good will is gone, the bringer of promises, the independent—all these are gone. He had "turned into a voice of frustration, had fallen into the shadow of forces which he either did not comprehend or could not control."

The nation fears it is the latter.

And the nation knows who does control those who "Make Wallace Run."

Many things were envisioned for Henry Wallace, but never the role of a puppet.

Is Wallace the New Deal's Sole Heir?

Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 3-23-48

WASHINGTON—The pattern is always the same, whether in the United States or in Europe. First there is no more than a little gentle footy-footy between a non-Communist liberal or Left-Winger and the Communist. Then, he suddenly finds himself their political and intellectual prisoner. The liberal is then compelled to turn and rend the non-Communist Left and liberal movement of which he was once a part. And finally, he is forced into the kind of petty political and intellectual dishonesty which is the stock in trade of his Communist captors.

Henry A. Wallace has now completed this process. Very few of his followers are Communists. They are rather perfectly sincere and honest people, who have joined the Wallace movement in a desperate search for peace. Certainly few of them understand the remarkable extent to which the shaggy Wallace, with his simple eminently American appearance, has become the captive of a group which clearly serves a foreign interest.

Yet this can be very simply illustrated by the story (which will no doubt be denied) of certain meetings in New York City. Almost every week, and usually on Wednesday evenings, a small and select group gathers in a house in downtown New York. The political coloration of this group may be judged by the fact that the host is none other than Mr. Frederick V. Field. Mr. Field is a known Communist, a former contributing editor and principal angel of the now defunct Communist magazine, "The New Masses." The purpose of the meetings is to do "research" for, and to plan the general tenor and content of, the frequent speeches of Henry A. Wallace. Tues. 3-23-48

The actual writing of the Wallace speeches is a task usually performed by Wallace's clever and literate chief ghost, Mr. Lew Frank, who is understood to be a non-Communist in the same sense that Wallace himself is a non-Communist. Mr. Wallace thus provides the voice. Mr. Frank provides the words. But the select company to which Mr. Field plays host provides the ideas.

This should surprise no one who has followed Mr. Wallace's speeches and noted their increasingly startling resemblance to the editorials in the New York "Daily Worker." What is surprising is the extent to which he is allowing himself to be used to slaughter the whole Left and liberal movement of which Franklin Roosevelt was once the leader and of which Wallace himself was once a part.

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas and Rep. Chester Hollifield, of California, are two of the dwindling band of Roosevelt New Dealers and Left-Wing liberals in the House. Both have devoted their political lives to the Left and liberal movement. On the fifteenth of this month both received telegrams from the Wallace movement in California. The telegrams pre-emptorially ordered them to appear in person before the satraps of the Wallace party in California, "not later" than four days from that date. They were told to have answers ready on a series of questions on foreign policy and other matters.

The telegram to Mrs. Douglas pointed out that 30,000 Wallace signatures had been secured in her district. In the last election, Mrs. Douglas' margin of victory had been in the neighborhood of 5,000 votes. There was no need to spell out the threat. The Constitution

Emergence of a Wallace candidate would spell certain defeat for Mrs. Douglas, and by splitting the liberal vote, insure the election of a Republican. And the telegrams specifically queried the two Representatives on their attitude toward ERP, which it is the announced objective of the Communists, and thus of the Wallace movement, to wreck. Mrs. Douglas courageously replied reaffirming her support for ERP. So did Mr. Hollifield. Atlanta, Ga

Mrs. Douglas and Mr. Hollifield were clearly marked for the slaughter when the telegram was sent, although there is reported to be some sentiment in national Wallace headquarters that to kill off a pair with so unblemished a liberal voting record would be too crude. The decision may thus be reversed. If it is not, Reps. Douglas and Hollifield will doubtless soon undergo the same campaign of political assassination which Mr. Paul Douglas, of Chicago, has already been subjected. Tues. 3-23-48

Mr. Douglas, an able liberal and New Dealer, and Democratic candidate for Senator in Illinois, has been ticketed for defeat by the Wallace forces because he has supported ERP. The result will almost certainly be the election of the "Chicago Tribune's" fair-haired boy, Sen. Curley Brooks. Mr. Douglas has been publicly described by Wallace propagandists as an advocate of immediate war against Russia, and a friend of the Taft-Hartley Act. Both charges are, of course, lies.

What is surprising is that Wallace, while proclaiming himself the sole inheritor of the New Deal, can lend himself to this sort of political murder of the old New Dealers.

Majority of Negro Students Favor Wallace

New York, N.Y.

Sun 34a(1) 3-7-48

By Mary Southard

BIRMINGHAM.—If the 1948 election were held now and Southern Negro college students held the deciding vote, Henry Wallace would be the next president of the United States by a substantial majority. This fact came out in a poll of youth opinion conducted among Negro college students by the Southern Negro Youth Congress during January.

Almost 4,000 students of 11 colleges in seven southern states gave Wallace an absolute majority of 58 percent in a field of six candidates. New York's Gov. Thomas Dewey ran a poor second with 16 percent of the votes cast, and President Truman trailed Dewey by three percentage points.

Gen. Dwight Eisenhower got nine percent of the vote, and Harold Stassen and Robert A. Taft one and three percent, respectively.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELVE Negro institutions of higher learning in the country were invited to take part in the poll. Twenty colleges responded with orders for some 12,000 ballots. Results reported here are based on a sampling in 11 colleges which have reported findings to date.

235 votes cast.

The leading question in the poll and the results obtained in the schools listed are as follows:

"If you were voting today for President for which of the following men would you cast your vote?"

Candidate	Number of votes	Percentage of votes
Wallace	2,233	58%
[illegible]wey	607	16%
[illegible]man	506	13%
Eisenhower ..	341	9%
Stassen	96	3%
Taft	43	1%
Total	3,826	100%

A considerable number of students who did not vote for Wallace in the poll nevertheless consider his candidacy advantageous to the Negro people. 3-7-48

IN REPLY to a further question—"Do you think the candidacy of Henry Wallace will help or hurt the Negro's democratic aims in the 1948 elections?"—2,916 or 79 percent of those polled answered that it would help; 713 or 20 percent felt it would hurt, while one percent or 53 students were undecided. 3-7-48

The strength of the Roosevelt tradition among the Negro people was reflected in replies to the question: "If Franklin D. Roosevelt were running this year on a third party ticket would you vote for him?" Nearly 3,000 or 89 percent of the students said they would vote for him on a third party ticket.

The small vote for Truman in the poll indicated a considerable lack of faith in President's professed devotion to the cause of civil liberty. The Worker

The poll revealed no important differences in the votes of veteran and non-veterans, or between men and women students. New York, N.Y.

Will Run Wallace On Third Ticket In Michigan

Daily Worker New York N.Y.
Thurs. 1-1-48 Pres. 34a(1)

By William Allan

DETROIT, Dec. 31.—Henry Wallace's name will be on the Michigan ballot in 1948 on a third party ticket, it was decided by 150 leaders of labor and civic groups meeting here last night. Daily Worker

A state convention to organize a third party will be called in the state capitol, Lansing, in mid-February and a campaign launched to obtain the needed signatures.

It requires 9,600 signatures in at least 10 counties with a minimum of 100 in each of 10 counties with no more than 35 percent coming from one county. Deadline for presentation of signatures is May 3d. N.Y.

Elected secretary of the Wallace-for President group was Allan Saylor of the UAW-CIO. A steering committee was established, representatives were present also from a number of outstate cities, including Flint and Ann Arbor. 1-1-48

Saylor reported that several hundred telegrams had been sent from Detroit to Wallace the day following his announcement, congratulating him and pledging support.

SEES MICHIGAN CARRIED

The call for the third party convention is now being circulated throughout the state with the objective of obtaining several hundred signatures on it. Thurs

Congressman George Sadowski (Dem) from this city's first congressional district, when asked for a comment on Wallace's chances, said he wouldn't be surprised if Wallace carried Michigan. 1-1-48

Wallace's sister, Mrs. Angus D. Mclay of Birmingham, Mich., said: "His decision to run took courage and I'm glad Henry has it. He knows fighting challenge on discrimination, segregation and Jimcrow." 34a(1)

The Michigan Citizens Committee of Professionals, Middle Class and White Collar Workers said: "The Wallace candidacy is being greeted with hope and unbounded enthusiasm in our state because the people now have a choice between progress and reaction." Daily Worker

Sixteen leaders of Ford Local 600, UAW, wired Wallace: "We admire your courage and we're for you." They were: James Couser, financial secretary, Bill Johnson, recording secretary, Percy Llewellyn, former executive board member; William Cooper, president Motor Building; Ed. Lock, president Plastic Building; Virgil Lacey, president Tool and Die Building; Tom Yeager, president Miscellaneous Building; George Popp, president Jobbing Foundry; Jack Poole, president Machine Shop Foundry; Joe Hogan, president Axle Building; Bill McKie, trustee; Art Speed, trustee, Joe Crenshaw, assistant education director; Carl Smith and Stanley Raniszinski, plant review committee; William Adams, compensation director; John Gallo, recreational director. 1-1-48

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 31.—A jam-packed audience of over 5,000 last night cheered Henry Wallace at his first public rally as an independent candidate for President at the Municipal Auditorium here.

At the unprecedented, record-breaking political rally, hundreds of persons had to be turned away when the auditorium doors were closed after Fire Department restrictions were lifted to permit an estimated 500 individuals standing room only. Thurs. 1-1-48

Awed political observers here expressed amazement at the turnout, based on paid admissions ranging individually from 50 cents to $2, and quickly contrasted it with a recent rally for Republican aspirant Harold Stassen in the same hall, when slightly under 4,000 attended by free admission.

Sponsored by the Wisconsin citizens for Wallace Committee, the meeting was hailed by its chairman Charles Whitlow, nationally famous, park planning authority, as "the beginning of the revival of the great progressive movement of Wisconsin." New York, N.Y.

GETS THUNDEROUS OVATION

Greeted with a thunderous ovation, Wallace alluded to the great progressive traditions of Wisconsin, birthplace of the Republican Party in 1854 and the LaFollette third party in 1924.

Recalling these great political stirrings of the people, Wallace told the huge audience that "I am convinced the time has come again for an independent candidacy," as the auditorium rocked with applause. Daily Worker

Presenting his Wallace Plan for peace as opposed to the Marshall Plan and sharpily hitting the two old parties, Wallace's speech was continuously interrupted throughout with outbursts of applause.

Significance of the unprecedented attendance was further highlighted by the news boycott of the meeting by the Milwaukee press up to the day it was held when stories of Wallace's announcement as a candidate were carried and incidental mention of the rally was made following Wallace's declaration of candidacy in Chicago the night before. New York, N.Y.

Sponsors of the rally disclosed ticket sales boomed and a deluge of the abuse he will have to take but I'm sure he will stand by his convictions." New York, N.Y.

Sam Sage, secretary of the Wayne County CIO Council, with 325,000 dues-paying members said: "The CIO's opposition to a third party will not prevent many within the CIO from trying to change that policy." Daily Worker

Coleman Young director of organization for the CIO Council and leading Negro trade unionist said: "This is a great day for the common man in America and the Negro people will never forget Wallace's requests arrived for places at a luncheon, persons from all parts of Wisconsin trekked to the rally after Wallace's historic announcement, it was reported. Among these were three farmers from the northern tip of the state who flew down in their own plane, in order to hear Wallace. Thurs.

Appearing along with Wallace at the rally was Paul Robeson, who was also accorded a tremendous ovation and called back by the audience time and again for encores. 1-1-48

A specially heavy burst of applause greeted Robeson's dedication of the song Joe Hill to the workers of Allis-Chalmers here, who conducted a nearly one year-long strike.

In response to an appeal by William S. Gailmor, radio commentator, the audience contributed over $4,000 toward a campaign fund for Wallace and other independent candidates in Wisconsin.

Jersey Citizens Group Endorses Wallace

Daily Worker

The executive officers of the New Jersey Independent Citizens League yesterday pledged its unanimous support for Wallace's "magnificent fight for peace and prosperity" and announced plans to circulate petitions to place Wallace's name on the state ballot.

The officers also announced that the state ICL convention will be held Saturday, Jan. 10, in Newark.

A regular New York Port membership meeting of the CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards voted unanimously to back Wallace. A telegram signed by 150 members was dispatched to the former vice president extending "our heartiest congratulations on your decision to run as an independent candidate for President of the U. S."

A group of 84 Maryland labor officials and shop stewards signed a joint statement hailing Wallace as the "spokesman for the Common Man" and pledged to support his candidacy. The labor leaders declared: "America needs a man of the calibre of Franklin Roosevelt. You embody the spirit of FDR's domestic and foreign policy."

The statement was released by Walter McManamon, international representative of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and Irv Dvorin, port agent of the Marine Cooks and Stewards.

Leon Strauss, executive secretary of the CIO Furriers New York Joint Board, wired his congratulations to Wallace and pledged full backing. Nathan Solomon, president of CIO Retail and Wholesale Local 830, on behalf of all the officers of his local, also wired support. New York, N.Y.

Michael J. Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers, issued a denial of press stories which said he had endorsed Wallace. Quill said there would be no statement until the question has first been discussed by the union's members and officials. Thurs. 1-1-48

Foot Forward

PM New York N.Y.

I think it must be observed that this Wallace-against-the-field business has gotten off rather handsomely. Wallace himself has "lit running," an earnest invigorating to a political atmosphere gone flaccid with stalemates and stalling. His prompt Milwaukee address, resurrecting the most popular concept of the United Nations, already quickened the scene. Thurs. 1-1-48

Perry

This is not to say without reservation that President Truman's own renewed pledge to the UN, in his New Year's statement, is not entirely his own: The President recognized the people's hope in the world peace organization many times before. The coincidence is worth noting, nevertheless, and seems a happy one.

The simple fact that the magic of the word peace is thus acknowledged and bowed to, and that in this connection prominent men courting the public favor bespeak, chorally the "implementation" of the UN, is charming. At other times, no such unanimity of faith in the UN has been apparent. So I say the New Year, an election year, starts well.

Faith in Collective Security

It is Mr. Wallace's proper part, of course, to go beyond the mere desirability of harnessing the UN more firmly to the peace problem—to propose ways in which the coupling actually may be accomplished. Presidents—and Popes—can speak loftily of purposes, but a man in the role of challenger must be precise; he must analyze situations and offer remedies.

Mr. Wallace's view of the world situation at the end of 1947, after a year in which the unilateral Truman Doctrine has been dominant in our foreign policy, is that our relations with Russia have not improved but have worsened, and that the spots around the globe where trouble may break out have multiplied. This is a view that can be checked at every window. The opening prospect, as

Mr. Wallace sees it, is equally dreary, since the Marshall Plan "as applied" is characterized by the same one-sidedness, the same aim of division, the same cold belli-cosity. Thurs. 1-1-48

It would be better, it would make sense, Mr. Wallace believes, for us to approach the ineptness of this approach to world reconstruction, short of war; for us to back up, while there is time, and positively re-invest our faith in common effort and collective security; he suggests that we turn over the Marshall Plan to the UN, and by so doing at once rescue that enterprise from the suspicions cast upon it by what we are doing in Greece and grace the UN with that implementation for peace which all, as the New Year begins, wish it might have.

Wallace's Remedy

Wallace's proposed Remedy
Makes Sense

would make the Marshall Plan a world plan, supported by all nations according to their abilities and good will and addressed to the recovery of all peoples according—not to their politics—but to their needs and deserts; it would provide nothing for supplying guns to anyone. It would furnish the UN with the administrative chore it has lacked, infuse its shadow with substance, and make good humanity's war-bred resolve to live and help live. . . . What is wrong with all that?

Louisville Ky.

The answer is, nothing. It is a very reasonable plan for getting down to cases in the development of the UN to keep the peace. It is admirably laid on the table for comparison with other plans—and no-plans—in an election year. It has competitive value and, one may surmise, inspirational value.

Thurs. 1-1-48

It does, obviously, presuppose the relegation of the Truman Doctrine. That is an obstacle. But that is an obstacle only as big as false pride, as durable as reluctance to admit error. It should yield to the popular preference for peace, rallied and applied. Indeed, it has budged.

Large Negro, Labor Wallace Vote Seen

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—A large Negro and labor vote for Henry A. Wallace was seen here by Edwin A. Lahey, Chicago Daily News columnist. "My guess," said Lahey, "is that the Negroes of the United States will 'throw their vote away' on Henry Wallace as surely as they cast it effectively for Franklin D. Roosevelt during his lifetime. Democratic or Republican bagmen who try to buy the influence of the few Negro newspaper editors who 'can be had' will simply be wasting their money.

"I go out on this limb because Wallace's feeling about racial discrimination amounts to religious fanaticism, and I believe that most of our colored citizens respond warmly and instinctively to his fervor."

Meanwhile, endorsements for Wallace continued to mount here, Local 194, Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, representing 4,000 workers, this week unanimously endorsed Wallace at a General membership meeting. The Joint Board of the Chicago Fur & Leather Workers Union similarly voted unanimously to support Wallace. Mon

TRUMAN 'EVASION' SEEN BY WALLACE

President's 'Communist' Talk an 'Appeal to Prejudice,' Rival Says in Reply

N.Y. Times

N.Y.

34a(1)

Henry A. Wallace, third-party candidate for President, declared last night that in branding those who supported his fight for peace as "Communists" President Truman "appealed to prejudice because he could not answer us with reason." Sat. 3-20-48

This was the former Vice President's answer to the President's assertion at the dinner of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick Wednesday evening that he did not want and would not accept "the political support of Henry Wallace and his Communists." Mr. Wallace spoke from radio station WOR over the network of the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Mr. Wallace declared in his second radio speech on two consecutive nights that President Truman was trying to give the impression that it was only the Communists who disapproved of his policies of supporting fascists, kings and reactionaries around the world and his plans to draft our young men and militarize the country.

"But millions of Americans, who stand firmly opposed to his policies, know that they are not Communists and they will not be frightened into accepting militarism because someone calls them 'Communists,'" Mr. Wallace said.

Mr. Wallace also attacked the proposal of Warren Austin, United States, chief American delegate to the United Nations, for a temporary United Nations trusteeship for Palestine instead of partition.

"Today the United States shocked the world by abandoning her support of the United Nations decision to partition Palestine," he said.

Cites Affirmation of Faith

The former Vice President said that in a hundred speeches in the last year he had affirmed his faith in this country and its institutions and stated his convictions that we are being led to slaughter by men who put profit and property above human needs. He added that he was both a business man and a farmer and liked to make a reasonable profit from developments he had made in agricultural science, but was opposed to monopolies and cartels which profit at the expense of the general welfare.

"In this past year," he continued, "I have challenged Mr. Truman and his bipartisan supporters to show a single American principle or a single American public interest which would have to be sacrificed to make peace with Russia."

Saying that Hitler had made good use of the red-baiting weapon but made his first attack on the Western democracies, Mr. Wallace charged that the Administration was following the same course today with American democracy and not Russia as the intended first victim of its attack. He declared that this policy would not work because the cry of "Red" and "Communist" would not cause housewives to forget the grocery bill, or fool veterans in need of housing or fool trade union members by a charge that every strike for decent working conditions and living wage is "Communist-inspired." Sat. 3-20-48

Six Proposals Summarized

At the end of his speech, Mr. Wallace summarized six proposals which could contribute to establishment of a durable peace.

First—Call of the Truman Doctrine which was the declaration of the "cold war" and substitute policies of genuine economic aid through the United Nations.

Second—Get international control of the Middle Eastern oil and the other great reservoir of raw materials which private firms have exploited.

Third—Repair our share of the damage done to the United Nations, and our responsibility is great, even though the Administration would like to shift all the blame to others.

Fourth—On the home front we have to fight against the restrictions on civil liberties and make our democracy really work.

Fifth—We must stop the trend toward militarism of America which is so profitable to a few entrenched interests and so dangerous to the freedom of all.

"Last and certainly not least," he asserted, "we must look the situation over carefully and calmly find out just what major differences we have with the Russians. Having cleaned up our own delinquencies in matters of civil liberties and interference in the political affairs of Greece, Turkey, France, Italy, Latin America and many other places, we can talk with the Russians about the ways to expand freedom everywhere."

Mr. Wallace then challenged Mr. Truman and all other aspirants for the Presidency to join him in the following pledge: Sat 3-20-48

"I shall not knowingly accept the support of any individual or group advocating the limitation of democratic action for any other individual or group, nor the suport of any indivdual or group which would restrict the civil liberties of others for reasons of race, color or creed, nor the suport of any individual or group advocating the violent overthrow of the Government of the United States."

Mr. Wallace added that candidates who accept the support of the "race supremacy fiends," and of those who would limit the democratic actions of trade unions, who would restrict free speech and who support intimidation and the campaign of hate and fear, "can't join in this pledge."

"Those of us who believe in democracy pledged it with pride," he said.

Editor, Daily Worker:

Thurs. 3-11-48

I most sincerely regret that I shall be unable to renew my subscription to the Daily Worker. The simple explanation is that I have been discharged from my job and have been unable to find other employment. My unemployment compensation is insufficient even for minimum food requirements.

Just before I was discharged, a member of the management came to me and asked: "What do you think of Henry Wallace?"

I replied: "I am going to vote for him if I live till election day."

The fellow looked at me fiercely and said: "Do you realize that you may son be put into a concentration camp or shot before a firing squad?"

I answered: "Yes, but I'm willing to live or die for the things that I know to be right and just."

I was discharged two weeks later and have not found employment since. When warm weather cuts down my gas and light bill, if I can save enough from my unemployment compensation, I shall at least subscribe to The Worker. Without these papers, I shall feel that my only trusted line of communication will have been cut. May God bless you and your papers in the good work you are continue in your endeavor until justice among all men has been doing, and may you be able to achieved. Thurs. 3-11-48 J. S.

Wallace Seeks to Aid Negroes

Henry A. Wallace made public yesterday two telegrams he had sent to members of the United States Senate. The first, sent to Senator Wayne Morse, protested as "outrageous" a proposal pending before the Senate Labor Committee for a separate hospital for Negro veterans in Virginia. In the second telegram, to Senator Homer Ferguson, he asked for passage of the Wagner-Morse-Case anti-lynching bill. Tues. 2-3-48

West Side Poll Shows Majority for Wallace

Mon. 1-5-48 34a(1) Pres., Daily Worker New York, N.Y.

A straw poll of nearly 9,000 persons on Manhattan's West Side showed that more than half would vote for Henry A. Wallace on a third party ticket in 1948, it was disclosed yesterday. Five chapters of the Progressive Citizens of America conducted the poll Saturday afternoon between the area of 59th and 116th streets on Broadway.

Of the 8,911 persons polled, the results were:

5,092 for Wallace

2,231 against Wallace

888 undecided Daily Worker

The voters were given a ballot which read: Would you vote for Wallace on a third party ticket in 1948? Three boxes on the ballot called for a yes, no or undecided check. Mon. 1-5-48

NO UNDUE INFLUENCE

The polltakers were extremely careful not to influence the decision and the 150 persons involved in the canvass noted that the greatest enthusiasm for Wallace came from Negroes, young people and workers. Many of those who indicated they were against Wallace were vociferous in their opposition and told Wallace and the poll-takers to "go back to Russia." Mon. 1-5-48

Many of the citizens polled asked the question whether Wallace's entry into the race might not result in the election of Sen. Robert Taft.

Wallace also received an absolute majority in another poll taken by Estelle M. Sternberger, WLIB commentator. She asked her listeners for their presidential preferences and found that Wallace was tops with 640 votes, Truman with 143, Stassen with 105, Eisenhower with 72, Taft with 38, Warren with 23, Pepper with 12, MacArthur with 12 and 143 were undecided.

CONSIDERS CANDIDACY

On the vice presidential side, Democratic Sen. Glen Taylor in a exclusive interview in the current issue of Union Voice said he would "consider" running on a third party ticket. The trade union paper is the organ of seven CIO locals in the city. Daily Worker

Interviewed by Irving Baldinger, Taylor declared that while he had not yet discussed the matter of runing with Wallace, he added, "of course I would consider it." Taylor has already been quoted in the press as being "honored" because Wallace considered him a "marvelous" choice.

New York, N.Y. Mon. 1-5-48

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Harlem Democrat, joined the band of Wallace attackers by calling his candidacy "unwise." If Wallace hadn't announced his candidacy, the Republicans would have been forced to run Eisenhower, Powell claimed.

ROME, N. Y., Jan. 4. — All-out "energetic and active support" to the independent candidacy of Henry A. Wallace was unanimously voted yesterday by the membership of CIO United Electrical Workers Local 331, one of the largest labor organization in this part of the stated.

Daily Worker New York, N.Y. Mon. 1-5-48

The local, which consists of the 2,500 workers at the General Cables Co., declared that its members, "consisting of Republicans, Democrats and independent voters," pledged its "wholehearted endorsement for the third party ticket for peace and security."

In another action, the local pledged its support to the Remington-Rand workers in nearby Ilion and urged Gov. Dewey to call upon James Rand to honor his contract with the UE. The local pointed out that Rand's policy would lead to industrial unrest.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 4.—Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union has hailed what he said would be the return of the Roosevelt touch and inspiration to American politics as result of Henry Wallace's decision to lead a party of opposition to the Republican-Democratic bipartisan setup in 1948.

34a(1) Pres. Daily Worker New York, N.Y. Mon. 1-5-48

"Win, lose or draw, Wallace will bring to the 1948 elections the Roosevelt touch and the Roosevelt inspiration, something that the leaders of the present major parties never had and the last thing they ever wanted regardless of how much the American people desired it," said Bridges' statement. WALLACE PROPOSES CAMPAIGN PROMISE

He Asks Candidates Bar Help of Un-American Groups, But Would Accept Communist Aid

The Times New York, N.Y. Mon. 2-2-48 34a(1)

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 1 (UP)—Henry A. Wallace, third-party Presidential candidate, called today upon President Truman and other political candidates to take a pledge repudiating the support of any un-American group or individual.

Mr. Wallace told about 2,000 supporters at a "Wallace-for-President" state-wide organization rally that he would accept the support of American Communists, however, because he saw "nothing criminal" in the advocacy of different economic and social ideas.

"The most frequent charge made against the American Communists is that they advocate the violent overthrow of the Government of the United States," the former Vice President said. "I have not seen evidence to substantiate the charge, and I do find a Supreme Court decision that this conclusion is unwarranted. The Times

"Any Communists who support the independent ticket will be supporting our program, not the Communist program. I am not a Communist or Socialist or Marxist of any description, but I find nothing criminal in the advocacy of different economic and social ideas, however much I may differ with them." New York, N.Y.

The Proposed Pledge

Mon.

The pledge proposed by Mr. Wallace was as follows: 2-2-48

"I shall not knowingly accept the support of any individual or group advocating the limitation of democratic action for any other individual or group; nor the support of any individual or group which would restrict the civil liberties of others for reasons of race, color or creed; nor the support of any individual or group advocating the violent overthrow of the Government of the United States."

Three groups of candidates could not take the pledge, Mr. Wallace said. He said they were candidates who supported the Taft-Hartley Law; those who believed in "white supremacy," and those who would limit the free flow of ideas in this country.

At a pre-rally press conference, the third-party leader said "multitudes of Americans" were coerced into remaining silent on political issues. But he expressed confidence they would record their true sentiments at the polls.

"The people are so scared that they won't talk out," Mr. Wallace said. "They are afraid they will lose their jobs if they speak out between now and election time."

Mr. Wallace declared that he would not end his independent candidacy and rejoin the Democratic party ranks unless the Democratic organization became he "party of peace." He added hat he would not run as the vice residential candidate on a ticket eaded by Mr. Truman.

When asked if he had surveyed is strength in the country, Mr. Vallace said the effects of his andidacy would be "qualitative, ot quantitative." He added that o matter what the outcome of his andidacy, it would be of very great value in preventing war.

Change in Congress Predicted

The Times

Mr. Wallace predicted the election of a more progressive Congress this year and said it would not be a Republican Congress because he only knew "two or four progressive Republicans."

Mr. Wallace said he had faith that the courts of Ohio would allow him to be put on the state's ballot next November as an independent candidate. His supporters said petitions seeking to place him on the ballot would be circulated in about three weeks after establishment of a permanent Ohio campaign committee.

The Iowan said his third party was not designed to defeat Mr. Truman this year and set the scenes for election of himself in 1952. New York, N.Y.

"We are not waiting to capitalize on catastrophe; we are working to avoid it," he told the meeting. 2-2-48

Mr. Wallace suggested that after the November election Mr. Truman meet with Premier Stalin of Russia to work for peace. He said a change of personnel was necessary toward this end because the present administration had carried its policy so far they could not change it.

Mr. Wallace was enthusiastically received at the meeting and a total of $26,000 was pledged to aid his campaign.

5,000 Seaman Tell CIO: We Want Henry Wallace

34a(1) Daily Worker

Thurs. 1-22-48

By Bernard Burton

New York, N.Y. Thurs.

The CIO Executive Board, which meets in Washington today, will be presented with signatures of more than 5,000 members of the National Maritime Union endorsing the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace.

Ferdinand Smith, secretary of the NMU and a member of the CIO Board, said yesterday he would bring the petitions to Washington and ask "for further support to he third party movement [illegible] by Wallace."

At NMU headquarters, 346 W. 17 St., Smith said that, in addition to the signatures, which were collected in 10 days, the majority of all elected NMU officials in nearly all parts have individually endorsed Wallace. This includes 19 of the 30 members of the National Council, top policy making body of the NMU.

As Smith spoke to reporters a seaman from the S..S America, flagship of the American Merchant Marine, handed him another 200 signatures. He was Leo Silverman, deck delegate, on who said the signatures were collected in two days.

ADDRESSED TO WALLACE

Silverman, still in his sailor's togs, said that a ship's union meeting on the homeward voyage had formally endorsed Wallace, with only one negative vote. There are 600 crew members on the America nearly all of whom, Silverman asserted, will sign the Wallace petition. Daily Worker

The petition, addressed to Wallace, declared that, since the death of President Roosevelt, "the Democratic Party has joined with the Republican Party in support of the Wall Street drive toward reaction and war. We have from our own experience learned the nature of this drive. In 1946 we needed a wage increase: Truman, with Republican support, threatened us with troops." Thurs. 1-22-4

The seamen pledged to back Wallace "for peace and security, for a rededication to the Roosevelt program."

Smith declared that a report on rank and file actions for Wallace will be presented to the National Council meeting in March, witl recommendations for formal action. He pointed out that the last NMU convention adopted a resolution on political action "to the extent of the establishment of a third party."

CITES AUTONOMY

Following the last convention, Smith said, the NMU Council adopted a "more specific" political action resolution, with special commendation for Wallace. He declared the Council action was in line with national CIO convention's political action stand which pointed out that labor could not depend on the major parties.

"Contrary to what any official may have said about the third party," Smith stated, Wallace endorsements do not conflict with CIO policy. Daily Worker

Asked what course the NMU would take if the CIO Board repudiated Wallace, Smith replied, "We will follow the CIO's traditional policy of each international union having its own autonomy and determining its own policy." Thurs.

In a recent telegram to Philip Murray, Smith took issue with the CIO president's stand against any CIO body endorsing presidential candidates. The telegram said that such an act was interference with the autonomous rights of CIO affiliates. New York, N.Y.

Seven NMU port membership meetings have endorsed Wallace, Smith declared. They are New York, Providence, Seattle, San Francisco, San Pedro, and Galveston and Port Arthur in Texas. San Francisco voted $300 to assist in the campaign. Ships which have reported endorsements include the America, Marine Shark, Marine Tiger, Malcolm Stewart, Front Royal, Bunker Hill, South Bend Victory and L. P. Sinclair. 1-22-48

Wallace Forces Plan to Run Negroes for Some House Seats

34a(1) The Courier-Journal

Louisville, Ky.

Special to The New York Times and The Courier-Journal.

Washington, March 1.—Henry A. Wallace's third-party forces will bid for a big Negro vote this fall, it was learned today, by running Negro candidates for Congress in favorable districts throughout the nation.

Agreement in principle to this proposal was reached, it is understood, in conferences in which Wallace and C. B. Baldwin, his campaign manager, participated directly. Louisville, Ky.

Selection of the actual districts will be left to the individual state organizations in the movement, but tentative plans call for two condidates in New York City—one in Harlem, the other in the Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn—two in Chicago, one in Cleveland, another in St. Lou and other single candidacies in Philadelphia, Atlanta, and Los Angeles. The Courier-Journal

There also is reported to be strong sentiment for the nomination of a Negro to stand for the United States Senate in Illinois. There have been Negro members of the House in recent years, but no Negro has held a Senate seat since Reconstruction days. 3-2-48

TOUR TO GO ON

Hotels Will Not Take Mixed Group

By DOUGLASS HALL
(Special Correspondent)

Baltimore, Md

DURHAM, N.C. — A small group of men carrying picket signs denouncing "Henry Wallace," "Mary Price" and the "Progressive party" created a riot inside the City Armory on Sunday night in an effort to break up the convention and prevent Wallace from speaking.

About 50 persons took part in the "free-for-all" which lasted about 20 minutes. When guardsmen and policemen finally got them quieted down, several persons lay cold upon the floor.

The picket signs were torn to bits, and the "rebels" were pushed out of side doors. One shot was fired by a guardsman in an effort to get order. Others drew pistols as the ruckus seemed to be getting out of hand.

One Stabbed in Back

When a cop pushed one of the picketers out of the hall, the cop was called "a 'd-m' Communist" by the raging intruder. At least one man was stabbed in the back i the outside of the hall and bled quite a bit upon the street.

About half of the persons at the convention were colored and they seemed to be contented in sitting back and letting the "white folks fight it out among themselves."

While the fighting was going on in the hall, none of the delegates, except those in the immediate rioting vicinity, bothered to get excited about it. The majority continued to sing a Wallace folk song.

Hecklers Throw Eggs

The small hall, which had a seating capacity of about 1500 persons was filled to overflowing. Persons were not permitted in the balcony. Several hundred stood in the rear and about 1000 milled around outside.

34a(1)

All during his speech, Wallace was heckled by about one dozen persons who stood in one corner of the building. About a half dozen more "hecklers" were scattered throughout the hall.

One was stopped in the act of throwing an egg. Others set off firecrackers. That they were young Dixiecrats was evidenced by the fact that they continually shouted, "We want Thurmond" (R. Strom Thurmond, Dixiecrat Presidential candidate).

Wallace, however, remained cool, except for the time that he pointed his finger at the mob and shouted, "I can stand here just as long as you can yell."

A Durham reporter was hit by an egg.

During his speech, made as policemen stood around to keep order, he made his first campaign promise. He told the group that he would give Southern voters a billion dollars a year in the form of a Federal subsidy to Southern industry and farmers if he were elected President.

Not to Call Off Tour

Wallace told the AFRO that he had no idea of calling off his Southern tour. He spent the night in the home of G. W. Logan, owner of a local theatre, when the white Washington Duke Hotel canceled his reservation upon learning that some members of his party were colored.

Lewis Alston, vice-president of the Wallace party in the State, stated that he had very much difficulty in getting accommodations in colored homes for Wallace.

Several Refuse Homes

He stated that among those refusing were George Cox, A. T. Spaulding, officials in the North Carolina Mutual Insurance Company. Mrs. Ethel Hubbard, local teacher, stated that she was afraid of losing her job.

After about three hours, Mr. Alston stated he obtained four accommodations at Mr. Logan's home. The rest of the party stayed in colored homes and in the Biltmore Hotel.

Wallace was met at the airport by a mixed group, numbering about 500. Throughout Sunday, white and colored persons ate and carried on general convention business in the "colored" section.

In Norfolk

At noon on Sunday, Wallace spoke to an audience of more than 1000 persons in the Centre Theatre at Norfolk. Although, the crowd gave only light applause, it did give freely to the Progressive Party fund, contributing $1185 at the exhortation of Dr. Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

In his speech, Wallace said:

"We are not getting defense and security, because the men who collect and spend our billions—the Democrats and Republicans who are in power in Washington today—are not interested in either the brotherhood of man or peace on earth.

"I do not charge that they want a hot war—an atomic war—a war of incalculable destruction.

"But I do charge that they don't want peace; that they do want and carefully seek to perpetuate the sense of crisis, the fear, which is so profitable to them; and so costly to the average citizen....

"We are closer to war, closer to chaos, further from peace than we were two years ago. Minor differences have been blown into major incidents. Toughness has bread toughness."

In Suffolk

A little later Wallace spoke to a group of 100 CIO Food, Tobacco and Agriculture Workers at Suffolk. He told them that the labor leaders are leading labor astray by giving their support to Mr. Truman.

In Durham

Speaking in Richmond at the WRVA Theatre to approximately 1300 persons, 70% of them colored, Wallace said:

"Many years ago, Henry Grady wrote that a New South was rising. But the tide of the New South—what I would call the progressive South—has been held back by a wall of privilege resting on the twin pillars of segregation and poll-taxes....

"When I find a Harry Byrd who fought every Roosevelt reform more bitterly than any Republican ever did, whose voting record is worse than any Dixiecrat's, still content to remain within the Democratic Party of Harry Truman, I grow a little suspicious. I smell a little something.

"The Byrd who maintains power through a poll tax could not support a Truman who really acted to abolish the poll tax. The Byrd who profits from the low wages and high profits of segregation could not lend his support to a Truman who would really abolish it."

Principal business of two conventions which preceded the rallies at which Wallace spoke was the nom- candidates for the Senate and House.

... ...ma F. Durr of Alexandria was nominated as a candidate for the U. S. Senate and Jerry O. Gilliam of Norfolk for the House of Representatives.

ASHEVILLE, N. C. — Henry A. Wallace said goodby to North Carolina Tuesday night.

He did it with an obvious sense of relief, but with dogged insistence that he still loves his fellow men, including the North Carolinians who have strewn his path with eggs, tomatoes and other splattery missiles.

It was only here in Asheville, where Wallace spoke to several hundred persons gathered in a downtown square, that no missiles were thrown. Wallace thanked the crowed for its good behavior.

ditionary force boarded a special Pullman at this mountain resort for a two-day foray into Alabama and Mississippi.

Wed 9-1-48

* * *

THERE THE Dixiecrats, by good report, take an even more violent view of Wallace's racial views than the "enlightened" citizens of North Carolina.

A predominantly white crowd of about 3,000 greeted Wallace with vigorous hostility at the Mecklenberg County Courthouse in Charlotte.

They gave a new turn to North Carolina hospitality by hitting one another with eggs and tomatoes, instead of Wallace and his party.

Not one of the eggs or tomatoes hurled at Wallace struck him. All overshot the target.

A few of the newspaper men and secretaries in the Wallace party were splashed with the flying garbage. But most of it landed on hostile citizens.

* * *

ONE CHARACTER who moved up close to Wallace and distinguished himself for the shrillness of his booing voice, was hit squarely in the kisser with an egg. Right at the peak of a high note.

The Charlotte crowd, like other hostile gatherings in North Carolina, effectively drowned out Wallace with their boos, epithets, and shouts of derision.

This trip is rapdily developing as the tour of lost political speeches, because of the systematized, if not organized, way in which Wallace's voice is blotted out in bedlam once he begins a speech.

Wed 9-1-48

One of the mob at Charlotte tore a breast pin off the dress of Mary Price, Progressive Party candidate for Governor of North Carolina.

WALLACE HIMSELF had drawn attention to the pin, which was in the form of an American eagle, by pointing out that it "had a left wing and a right wing," and that "both are necessary for the American eagle."

As he faced the bitter crowd on the lawn of the courthouse in Charlotte, Wallace tried to remind them that the ground they stood on had been hallowed by the Scotch-Irish pioneers.

These pioneers had settled Western North Carolina and issued the Mecklenberg declaration, calling for separation of the American Colonies from England even before the Declaration of Independence was signed in Philadelphia on July 1776.

"I come from the same kind of people that settled this land," Wallace shouted above the hecklers, "and I won't be intimidated."

HIS CHALLENGE increased the volume of hatefulness from the crowd.

Wed 9-1-48

Wallace tried in vain to say that the South desperately needed economic improvement to give its citizens the same standard of living enjoyed by citizens in the North, but the crowd would not hear him.

Pointing to a statue on the Courthouse lawn commemorating the Mecklenberg County Rebels of 1775, Wallace shouted:

"If you won't listen to me on the basis of that declaration—" but he couldn't even finish. His voice was submerged by the din of the resentful crowd.

A flying wedge of policemen walked him back to his automobile. The motorcade left town, while people hurled obscene curses at Wallace, his staff and the reporters following him.

WALLACE HAD a State Police escort on the automobile trip from Winston Salem to Asheville.

An orange was thrown at the Wallace car as the motorcade passed through Salisbury, N. C. It narrowly missed the candidate, splattering on the car just below his window.

Only one sign greeted Wallace in Salisbury: "To Hell with Henry." A few curious and hostile citizens watched the motorcade wind through the town.

A CROWD that greeted Wallace at Hickory, N. C., was smaller than the other crowds along the way but outshone the others in general ugliness.

Wed 9-1-48

They screamed "nigger-lover" at Wallace and hurled rotten eggs and tomatoes as the candidate tried to say that Negroes should be permitted to vote.

A policeman protecting Wallace at Hickory was struck in the face with an egg. Some of the missiles splattered the candidate, members of his party and reporters.

As he took leave of the bitter crowd at Hickory, which was notably free of negroes, Wallace said:

"Christ said to his Disciples that, if in any town they won't listen to you, then shake the dust from your feet and go elsewhere."

New York, N.Y.

"There was quite a crowd," said Police Captain A. H. Garner. "We had Mr. Wallace surrounded by a group of officers so that he could begin speaking. About that time, eggs and tomatoes began falling. They were thrown from the back of the crowd, coming in from every angle, so we couldn't see who did the throwing."

Wallace tried to speak a second time after the missiles struck. But the continued booing was so intense his words were lost.

Conflicting Thoughts Appear In Comment On Egg Barrages

Courier Journal
Mon 9-6-48

Louisville Ky
Pres.

EGG pelting of Henry Wallace on his Southern tour drew strong disapproval from most Kentuckiana newspapers which gave the incidents editorial comment, but at least one cheered.

What the editor of THE BEREA CITIZEN wrote was typical: "We who oppose Mr. Wallace's ideas will some day find ourselves on the losing team if the only defense we have for (our ideas) is violence. I wouldn't be surprised at all that if for every egg and tomato thrown at him, Mr. Wallace gained a hundred votes if only out of sympathy."

About this sort of talk, however, THE MADISONVILLE MESSENGER expostulated: "Folderol, tommyrot and eyewash! The tossing of fruits, vegetables, eggs and whatnot is a grand old American custom, a method of venting disapproval which was greatly in vogue when the Founding Fathers set up this great way of life of ours, which has endured this many years in spite of the Henry Wallaces, great and small, the lunatic fringe and the Reds so prevalent now in our fair land."

THE HENDERSON MORNING GLEANER seemed to share THE CITIZEN'S sentiments—with reservations: "There is only one position that an American can take in discussing the egg-throwing . . . to condemn it as incompatible with the land of freedom and free speech. . . . But how that man did ask for what he got—in conduct so reprehensible that many will be constrained to say that they do not approve of egg throwing, but if they are going to throw them we don't know a better target."

Said THE SHELBY NEWS: "It is the duty of true progressives and true Americans to work to keep the Wallace vote low this fall."

THE PARK CITY DAILY NEWS reviewed some of Mr. Wallace's remarks, and added: "It appears that Mr. Wallace is concerned only with the field of thought, and blind to any accompanying action. Perhaps, to many, the democratic principles of Jefferson and Lincoln's anti-slavery stand seemed as radical as Marx's philosophy did to a later generation (a point THE NEWS attributed to Mr. Wallace). But can Mr. Wallace forget that there were no secret police under Jefferson, or that the Lincoln Administration conducted no purge trials and set up no one-party system?"

Mon 9-6-48

THE JEFFERSONVILLE, IND., POST, which has been discussing the local gambling situation, said editorially: "This publication is not fighting gambling. We're fighting a condition. The State laws say gambling is illegal. The City laws say gambling is illegal. What we are fighting is the right which has been extended to a group which enables them to break State and City laws."

THE CORYDON, IND., DEMOCRAT declared that simplification of taxes is one of the objectives of Governor Schricker, campaigning for re-election. THE DEMOCRAT added: "Taxes have become too numerous, too many overlapping tax laws and too many levies where the cost is almost all borne by the consumer. Although some towns and cities are in need of more income to met expenses and to make needed improvements, we are strongly opposed to any State laws which would authorize cities and towns to levy special local taxes."

THE NICHOLAS COUNTY STAR said it is supporting President Truman in spite of his stand on civil rights legislation, adding: "In conducting a bolt of the Democratic Party, the States' Righters are serving no gainful purpose. Along with the lunatic fringe which will vote in some states for Henry Wallace, they can help to elect a Republican President."

THE CORYDON, IND., REPUBLICAN said that the only time the U. S. Senate "ever voted directly on a subject involving civil rights," was on Senator Brooks' proposal to exempt armed force members from poll tax requirements, and "both Senator Truman and Senator Barkley voted 'nay'—opposed the amendment to exempt the boys in uniform from paying poll tax for the privilege of voting."

THE PRINCETON LEADER gently chided Senator Barkley for claiming Democratic credit for high wages and farm product prices but blaming the Republicans for inflation. THE LEADER summed up: "Coming right down to the nub of the case (of inflation), it is not so much the wage increases won by organized labor which make the ruinous spiral of rising prices so damnable. It is the fact that Big Business, when it grants a million-dollar wage increase, tacks on, all too frequently, another two or three millions in increased costs to the consumer, with the wage boost as an excuse."

There was some comment on the Indiana case of three small boys attempting to hang a fourth, reportedly in comic book fashion. Said THE MADISONVILLE MESSENGER: "Nobody can object to a comics industry move to set up a sort of Hays office to police its own product." Said THE MAYFIELD MESSENGER: "It is easy to make the general charge that comic books, or any other medium of entertainment or information, tend to corrupt the minds of their readers. But it is much harder to produce factual evidence to support the charge. In the Indiana incident there appears to be a rare piece of such evidence."

Mon 9-6-48

THE MT. STERLING ADVOCATE was strongly opposing the drys in a local option election set for September 15: "There is no question but that 'dry' communities have a tendency to increase drinking on the highways as people will go after liquor, wherever it is to be obtained, and all too often they do not refrain from drinking until they return home—thus making our highways more dangerous than they have ever been."

Henry Wallace Comes a Cropper In Birmingham

Louisville Ky

JACKSON, Miss.—A cheap piece of rope, suitable for mooring the dog or hanging out the clothes, gave the state of Alabama a technical knockout over Henry Wallace yesterday. No blood spilled; few eggs splashed.

Henry was feeling fine, if a little tired and dusty when he reached the industrial city of Gadsden yesterday afternoon. He had spoken in Decatur, before a mildly curious, apathetic crowd of a couple of hundred. There were only a few boos to greet him. No overripe fruit, hen or otherwise, flew through the air, although one business opportunist thoughtfully had opened a vegetable stand featuring ripe tomatoes on an adjoining corner.

He wasn't booed, and was even cheered a little in the next town, Huntsville, and only mildly heckled in Guntersville by some young people who seemed to be thoroughly enjoying themselves. And then he went to Gadsden.

Fri 9-3-48

GADSDEN has a segregation ordinance on its books, as has Birmingham. This is to say that the races are legally separated, even if kept apart by a gossamer strand of thread. Gadsden had the area in front of its courthouse roped off. There were signs hanging from the ropes saying "white" and "colored." Some American Legionnaires were quietly picketing the building, with signs accusing Henry of taking his orders from Uncle Joe Stalin. There was a flock of cops.

They were evidently there to protect Henry, because the arrival of his sound-wagon was met with reverberating jeers. This proved disquieting to Henry, whose master of ceremonies swiftly proclaimed a state of constitutional violation—citing the roped area—and police intimidation. This is a fine point of technical identification, mastered only by Mr. Wallace. When he is preceded by a police escort, that is good. When he arrives at a scene where police are stationed beforehand to keep order in a crowd which might get out of hand and chaw him up, that is police intimidation.

So Henry's mouthpiece announced that the golden voice would not be heard, and the caravan proceeded to Birmingham. There, again, segregation had been arranged, and a slew of cops assembled by the courthouse. Police Commissioner Bull Connor had kept his off-going shift on hand, and had called out all the deputy sheriffs on the ledger. Here the first egg of the day sailed through the crisp warm air, and smote a Birmingham Post reporter on the shoulder. The egg was fresh.

Fri 9-3-48

MR. WALLACE'S advance man again announced that a state of constitutional violation existed, that police intimidation was present, and declared with a sob that the "Greatest Living American" once more had been stricken dumb by circumstances beyond his control. Another brief shower of eggs squashed on the steps, and the caravan proceeded to the industrial suburb of Bessemer.

Here Mr. Wallace got nowhere a-tall. A menacing ring of men moved toward his sedan, a red Hudson, and he hurriedly locked the door. The police, stationed there to intimidate the people and prevent the circulation of free speech, kept a solid band between the advancing mob and Henry. Henry went away from there, with his words unsaid.

So it may be said that Birmingham won. Mr. Wallace proved a constitutional point to his own satisfaction, but was effectively [illegible]ed and, while he was unmarred by eggs, he laid three nice round ones in a row.

After Meeting Negroes Appear With Signs

Rebuking Candidate

Montgomery Ala

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—(AP)—A shower of eggs greeted J. P. Mooney, Progressive Party campaign chairman of Alabama, Wednesday after he announced that Henry Wallace had cancelled his Birmingham speech because of segregation.

Police had stretched a rope on the west side of the Jefferson County courthouse to separate whites and Negroes.

Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor estimated that 3,000 persons had gathered to hear the Progressive Party's candidate for president. Approximately 250 were Negroes, who stood on the North side of the rope.

Mooney took the speaker's platform.

"The Progressive Party of Alabama had hoped to present to you the greatest living American, the man President Roosevelt chose for Secretary of Agriculture and Vice President of our great country," he said.

"However, the Progressive Party will not take part in any gathering that violates the constitution of the United States.

"We believe in free speech and free assembly without police restriction or police intimidation."

No Arrests Made

After he finished, about a dozen eggs sailed from the crowd toward Mooney. None hit him. Police started to arrest a boy, but he said he didn't know he wasn't supposed to throw eggs. He was not arrested.

Commissioner Connor addressed the crowd before Mooney's appearance.

Thur 9-2-48

He asked the crowd to "help me see that he (Wallace) has a respectful and full hearing of whateveh he has to say. Birmingham mus not inpure her good name by being unkind to any visitor within her gates."

He urged the audience to make it "a peaceful, lawful and orderly meeting."

After the meeting nine Negroes appeared at the scene bearing signs critical of Wallace. They told reporters they had intended to picket. They described themselves as civic minded Negroes interested in the national welfare of their race.

Words on the signs included:

"Mr. Wallece, your program has set the Negro back 50 years. We are tired of being made a political football."

"The Negro has accomplished more in the past 100 years than Russia has in the past 1,000 years."

"We, the colored people, want education, not agitation."

"I'd rather live in the South and know where I stand than live elsewhere and have no standing."

Wallace and his party prepared to go to nearby Bessemer, Ala., for a radio address.

Cancels Speech

Earlier, Wallace cancelled a speech at Gadsden, Ala., beucsae police stretched rope on the court house lawn to enforce segregation.

He had spoken in three other Alabama towns today and in each case a few Negroes stood shoulder to shoulder with white listeners. Everywhere his reception was peaceful.

His remarks on racial relations even drew a few scattered cheers at Decatur and only at Guntesville, where the crowd sang "Dixie," was he loudly booed.

Wallace had insisted on nonsegregation audiences as a condition for his appearance. City officials in Gadsden and Birmingham both cited local ordinances requiring regregation at public gatherings.

34 a (1)

The announcements that he would not speak at Gadsden and Birmingham were made by the Pogressive Party chairman for Alabama. The crowds that had gathered booed the announcement.

Thur 9-2-48

Wallace's tip through the state was in marked contrast to his North Carolina visit, where cowds heckled almost continuously and showered him with eggs and tomatoes.

His first stop was at Decatur, Ala., where the famous Scottsboro rape trials were conducted between 1931 and 1936. An estimated 600 persons gathered on the court house lawn.

"I do not come South to preach disunity," Wallace told them, "but to advocate that we all pull together. There is too much hatred in the world and I say it is possible to deveiop Christian cooperation."

Outlines Views

He outlined his views on international relations, concluding, "the cold war can end and we can stop sending hundreds of millions to Greece, Turkey and China to back fascist regimes. Then we could spend billions for more TVA's."

As he ended his talk, Wallace thanked the crowd for its courteous reception. Mingled cheers and boos came back.

His motorcade moved on to Huntsville where he was met with possibly the largest crowd yet to hear him on the Southern tour. Police estimates placed the audience at between 3,000 and 4,000.

Thur 9-2-48

The response from the predominantly white crowd, however, was apathetic. Only weak applause greeted him, but the booing and heckling also was weak.

Wallace laughingly recalled his experience in North Carolina and described it as "those jovial little disturbances." He blamed the egging he got on "reactionaries who are backing the Dixiecrats."

Only at Guntersville, an unscheduled stop, was the response heavy with boos and catcalls. Signs reading "Down With Communism" and "Down With Wallace" were pareded in front of the court house.

Henry Wallace's Southern Campaign Has Been a Sensational Failure

MEMPHIS.—You know how in the movies when a naive character pulls an awful boner in front of everybody, and how you squirm for him and shift in your seats? That is how you feel about Henry Wallace, when he is face to face with the "common man," the little man that Henry is going to save if it kills 'em both.

Mr. Wallace is dramatic when he is unable to speak because people are plastering him with boos and bric-a-brac, or when his lofty principles forbid him to utter a mumbling word. With his mouth shut, Henry is one of the greatest orators I ever saw, because he can look so tired and soulful and downtrod, like every man's hand is ag'in him and his shoes don't fit.

But when the people are standing there, ripe to listen, Henry gets lost. He looks at the faces, and the faces stare back at him, and it discourages him. He gets no spark from the Negroes he has sworn to emancipate. No communication exists between Henry and the po' whites whom he attempts to patronize. Henry stands up and says looky who's come to save you, and the faces answer impassively: Save who from what?

DURING the days I have been trailing Henry on his Southern stump tour, it seems to me his audiences have been composed chiefly of the idly curious, out to see what the critter looks like. A few hundreds come and stand on the sidewalk, shuffle, and wait expectantly for something to happen.

Wallace the extemporaneous orator makes you blush. A humorless man, with all the robust earthiness of a floorwalker in a decorating salon, he strives to establish contact with the audience, and winds up with both feet firmly in mouth.

He has attempted all the cliches of the wool-hat spellbinder, but they are awkward on his lips. He tried a feeble joke. Nobody laughed. I wanted to crawl under the car.

In Alabama, he invoked a dead relative native to that locality to help him reach his audience, but this stab at sympathy died as dead as his old aunt, or whoever she was.

Getting down to fundamentals, he promised a bale of cotton per acre, under the guidance of the Progressive Party. Sunbaked, hard-hewed men just stared and spat. Henry was talking in a region which habitually yields two to three bales per acre.

Mon 9-6-48

HENRY'S theme has been that the South isn't rich enough, and when he tells how he can put a double helping of chitlins in every skillet, he sounds nearly as illogical as old man Townsend. He attempts to flatter, by praising the athletic prowess of a state, and manages to sound like an old maid talking prize fights.

No speech of Wallace's that I have heard has struck even one chord in his audience. He has striven for the homeliness of the red-necked demagogues, and has managed to sound like a Y.M.C.A. counselor lecturing on the evils of sex.

Mon 9-6-48

Henry strides out reasonably smooth on his radio stints, reading ghost-prepared copy in a mealy, come-to-salvation voice. Then he can play savior, then he can play martyr. But face to face with the constituents, he couldn't sell 'em Sears and Roebuck as a social force.

2 Governors Snub Wallace

34 a (1)

MONROE, La., Sept. 2 (AP)—Henry Wallace swept his southern campaign tour into Louisiana today after filing a slate of his Progressive Party electors with the Mississippi Secretary of State.

Wallace's presidential campaign visit was ignored by Govs. Fielding Wright of Mississippi and Earl K. Long of Louisiana. Mississippi is the birthplace of the States' Rights movement, and Gov. Wright its vice presidential candidate.

State highway patrol escorts, provided at the request of Progressive Party leaders in both states, convoyed Wallace.

He cleared Mississippi without incident. But as Wallace entered his car to leave Monroe after a brief talk, a tomato hurled by an unknown pitcher, struck the top of his car.

Makes Radio Speech

34 a (1)

He addressed a crowd of about 1000.

Fri 9-3-48

His Mississippi tour included breakfast at a Negro junior college near Jackson; filing a slate of electors with Secretary of State Heber Ladner who took their qualification papers under advisement; a radio speech; and a public address on the courthouse lawn at Vicksburg. From Vicksburg he motored to Monroe, then to Shreveport. He flies from Shreveport tonight to Little Rock, Ark., and then moves into Tennessee.

About 50 Negroes were in the crowd of around 300 at Vicksburg to hear Wallace, who speaks only before nonsegregated groups. There was no demonstration, and Mississippi Progressive Party leader J. Lewis Henderson of Bay Saint Louis, who accompanied Wallace, told the crowd "that means a lot."

Fri 9-3-48

Ill. Progressive Stoned

MT. VERNON, Ill., Sept. 2 (UP)—Curtis MacDougall, Progressive Party candidate for U. S. Senator from Illinois said today that he was stoned at a West Frankfurt, Ill., meeting last night and forced to flee.

"I think I was hit 10 times by flying stones," he said.

MacDougall charged that police refused to come to his aid.

MacDougall said he would cancel scheduled speeches at Zeigler, Murphysboro, Herrin, and Pinckneyville unless police promise protection.

Fri 9-3-48

At Chicago, Progressive Party headquarters said Florence Gowgiel, Argo, Ill., member of a Progressives local committee, was struck when she stepped in front of MacDougall.

Wallace Trip is Likened to Bilbo's 'Assist'

In Mississippi a newspaperman likened Wallace's visit to the tirade from the North against the late Senator Theodore Bilbo in the 1946 election campaign. He said that Mississippi was pretty well fed up with Bilbo at the time, and might have retired him had it not been for criticism by writers and radio commentators in New York and Washington. Bilbo capitalized on this "outside" criticism and went on to win.

Sun 9-5-48

Are the big corporations, some of them controlled in Wall Street, responsible for keeping the races apart in the South, as charged by Wallace?

(Tour)

There may be something to that, but almost certainly it is not the whole answer. While the Wallace party was in Little Rock, the Arkansas Gazette published an article by Hodding Carter, editor of the Greenville (Miss.) Delta Democrat-Times, that weakened this Wallace argument.

Carter, whose comparative liberal views on the race question have caused Mississippi politicians to call him a "nigger lover," had this to say:

"I cannot emphasize one point too strongly. The white South is as united as 30 million people can be in its insistence upon segregation. Federal action cannot change them. It will be tragic for the South, for the Negro and the Nation itself if the Government should enact and attempt to enforce any laws or Supreme Court decision that would open the South's public schools and public bathing places to the Negro. The one saving factor in such an event would be the Southern Negroes' own common sense refusal to implement the law."

Carter wrote that he was well aware of "the contradictions and the individual humiliation and tragedies of segregation," but he was emphatic in saying that to the South's whites it was something that must not be disturbed.

Exclusively Democratic

WALLACE not only tried to disturb it; he boldly assaulted it.

He declined to live or eat in any hotel that would not shelter or serve Miss Edith Roberts, his Negro secretary, or the two Negro newspapermen traveling in his party. In Durham, N. C., and Birmingham, Ala., he slept in the homes of Negroes. In Decatur, Ala., when his railroad car was cut off from a diner, he had his breakfast brought to him in a box rather than eat it in a segregated restaurant in town.

All this got around, of course, and was the chief reason that Southern youngsters began searching for overripe eggs and tomatoes.

Sun 9-6-48

There was more to it than that, however. Wallace had a couple of strikes on himself aside from his views on the race question.

The South has never regarded the Iowan as a hero, although he seems to have a sincere affection for it. It was the South that first turned against him when he was Vice President, and set up a clamor for President Roosevelt to ditch him in 1944.

Then there was the fact that Wallace is backed by the Communist Party and is Moscow's favorite in the 1948 American presidential race.

Southerners may not be any more patriotic than other Americans, but they are certainly more intense about it.

Thus it was that the placards and the yells from the crowds always struck two notes—"Nigger lover" and "Go back to Russia."

34a(1)

Schooling Enough

WALLACE also hurt the Southerners' pride, although he didn't seem to be aware of it. In almost every speech, he talked of raising the South to the economic level of other sections; of getting the region more and better schools, hospitals, and so on.

He was talking that way in Greensboro, N. C., and being bombarded with eggs and tomatoes.

Sun 9-5-48

A heckler, spurning Wallace's talk about better education, cried out: "I don't want to go to no school at all."

Wallace is going back North well satisfied with his campaign tour of the South. He must know that he didn't pick up any votes to speak of, but he feels that he has brought the issues out in the open and put them on a moral plane in a way that President Truman and Governor Dewey wouldn't dare to do.

The situation in the South seems to be something like this: Some people are ashamed that their towns got a bad name as a result of the egg-throwing. They feel that Wallace, however obnoxious his views, should have been given a chance to have his say. Also, they respect him for his courage in standing up to the barrage.

However, Southern whites don't like him any more now than they did before. If anything, they probably like him less.

Carolina Puzzle

ONE riddle remains to be cleared up. How was it that North Carolina, with its reputation of being the most enlightened and progressive State in the South, acted so differently from Mississippi? North Carolinans showered Wallace with eggs, tomatoes and curses, while the Mississippians allowed him to pass through unmolested.

A man in Mississippi, which State has more Negroes than whites, said the answer was this: Mississippi has the situation in hand; that is, the Negroes there "know their place." North Carolina, a pioneer in abolishing the poll tax, does not have the same feeling of security.

"In other words," he said, "North Carolina is afraid and Mississippi isn't."

He might also have explained that North Carolina got Wallace on the first day and didn't anticipate what was going to happen. Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi, vice presidential nominee of the States Rights (Dixiecrat) Party, noted the bad reaction to the North Carolina demonstrations and had time to prepare.

Sun 9-5-48

He called on Mississippians to be "hospitable" to Wallace, as they would be to any visitor, and when Wallace arrived he provided him with highway patrol cars and 21 policemen.

Candidate Target Again in Charlotte, N.C.

Chicago Ill.

Charlotte, N.C., Aug. 31 (AP)—Eggs and tomatoes again were tossed at Henry Wallace as he attempted to address a crowd of 2,500 at the Mecklenburg courthouse here today.

None struck Wallace who sought to speak amid continual booing from the throng. Eggs did strike two reporters for the Charlotte News, who stood near trying to hear the words of the former Vice President.

Signs were conspicuous in the crowd. One read "Sell Your Junk in Moscow, Henry."

Police Arrest Three

Thru the din, Wallace shouted: "I believe there are people in Mecklenburg county who still believe in human rights."

Police arrested three men and charged them with disorderly conduct in disturbing the peace at a public gathering by throwing eggs and tomatoes. They were released under $100 bond each for a hearing tomorrow. They were booked as Baxter D. Huntley, 30; Everett L. Cloaninger, 20, and Jack Hefner, 25, all of Charlotte.

Boos Drown Out Speech

After the missles were tossed, Wallace made a second effort to speak but boos drowned his words. Shortly afterward he stepped into an automobile and was driven away to appear in Hickory and Asheville.

Wallace came here from Winston-Salem this morning. On a day long trip yesterday he had been the target for egg and tomato throwers at Burlington, Greensboro and High Point.

Mother Struck by Tomatoes At Rally for Wallace Here

Wash Post

A Washington mother—member of the Young Progressives here—said she and her son, 5, were struck by tomatoes thrown by "10 or 12" neighborhood youths yesterday as Wallace followers gathered for a new attempt to lead a mixed racial group into the Rosedale Playground,, 17th and Gales sts. ne.

Sun 9-12-48

Lateer, after the scheduled demonstration had been deferred due to an unanticipated fall early Saturday closing of the white play area, four Negro youths were arrested in the neighborhood for playing ball in the street and striking a street lamp. Ninth Precinct police said the incident had no connection with the Young Progressives proposal.

The tomato throwing was reported by Mrs. Chester Kurrier, 26, of 3545 10th st. nw., who stands a little over 5 feet tall. She told reporters she and her son, Michael were walking in the direction of the playground to verify reports it was closed when some young "chaps" started throwing the tomatoes. Mother and son both were struck in the back but neither was hurt, she said.

Angus MacDonald, 35, of 2662 S. Meade st., Arlington, who also participated in the demonstration, said the same group of boys shouted "Nigger lover" as he passed and slung tomatoes at him. One brushed his back.

Sun 9-12-48

William apitman, secretary of the Wallace Committee here, announced he would make a formal complaint to police.

A spokesman for the Young Progressives said a new attempt to enter the playground will be made at 9 a. m. next Saturday. Four previous tries—all on Saturdays—proved fruitless. Yesterday's demonstration had been planned for 1:30 p. m.

WALLACE ASSAILS 'NORTH'S MONOPOLY'

34a(1) Pres.

At Dalton, Ga., He Tells Religious Group That Sectional Differential Must End

Sun 10-17-48

Special to The New York Times.

[illegible], Ga., Oct. 16—Charging that "the huge modern monopoly corporation" was keeping the "South divided against itself," Henry A. Wallace, Presidential candidate of the Progressive party, declared here today in a campaign speech that the "South will never rise out of peonage to the North" until the wage differential between the two sections of the country is wiped out.

Tour

The former Vice President made his second invasion of the South this afternoon to speak before a religious group, the Church of God, Union Assembly.

This time, the Presidential candidate was spared the indignities of over-ripe vegetables and eggs as was the case in his visit to this region about eight weeks ago.

Mr. Wallace interrupted a campaign tour of the Midwest to come here and meet with one of the most enthusiastic groups of his supporters anywhere in the country. He flew from Chicago this morning. At Chattanooga a motorcade of 150 cars escorted the candidate over the thirty-mile route to Dalton. There were no untoward incidents on the trip.

Here to greet him was Larkin Marshall, Negro editor from Macon, Ga., and candidate for the United States Senate from Georgia on Mr. Wallace's ticket, and the Rev. C. T. Pratt, national administrator of the religious order he addressed.

The name of Herman Talmadge, champion of "white supremacy" and Democratic nominee for Governor of Georgia, was frequently brought into the discussion here this afternoon. Clark Foreman, one of the national [redacted] of the Progressive party, was first to refer to Mr. Talmadge. In introducing Mr. Wallace, Mr. Foreman declared that there were forces in Atlanta that would "keep the one-party system for Herman Talmadge."

Mr. Wallace, in denouncing the "modern monopoly corporation," charged that "it backs Herman Talmadge, the man who calls himself the friend of the people, and then openly accepts the support of the Klan, an organization which denies the very essence of all that is fundamental and holy in Christianity."

Sun 10-17-48

Discussing Southern problems, Mr. Wallace declared that "I have, myself, said for many years that the South would, one day, be the most progressive part of our land."

"Those who use hatred and ignorance—weapons more powerful than any atomic bombs—will not forever keep us separated," he continued. "Men of good will—white and black, North and South—East and West—Russian and Anglo-Saxon—will no longer fall for the false doctrine that man's greatest enemy is his fellow-man."

DETROIT, Oct. 16 (AP) — Henry A. Wallace landed here tonight to open a one-day campaign swing through Michigan tomorrow. Fifty to seventy-five persons stood in the drizzling rain to greet him.

Wallace's Raid

The Post

Wed 9-1-48

Wash. D.C.

The police chief of Winston-Salem, N. C., who told hecklers of Henry Wallace that they were doing just what the Communists wanted them to do showed penetrating insight. It must be self-evident that the provocative Mr. Wallace has not carried his campaign to the South with any real hope of collecting any electoral votes there. Quite possibly, then, his motive for invading the domain of the Dixiecrats was to be made a martyr. Some very foolish Southerners in the half dozen Carolina communities he visited during the past couple of days have now done the job for him.

Whatever may have impelled Mr. Wallace to travel south and however offensive to local prejudices his ideas may have been, the treatment he was accorded quite warranted his query, "Am I in America?" There was certainly nothing American about the ugly mob violence that silenced him. Reviled and pelted by missiles of all sorts, he stood his ground, by common account of the correspondents present, with good humor and great physical courage. Certainly it was Mr. Wallace and not the hoodlums attacking him who emerged from the disgraceful encounter with the moral victory.

The effect of all this is to fortify the faith of those who look on Mr. Wallace as a new Messiah, himself perhaps among them, to strengthen his pretended status as the one true defender of civil rights, and to foster his own view of himself as a symbol of persecution. Moreover, it affords the propaganda artists in the Kremlin magnificent material for deriding American institutions and political procedures. Mr. Wallace, allowed to speak, is not much to be feared. Mr. Wallace, silenced by bigotry, can become a rallying point for all the disillusioned and discontented. In the free competition of the marketplace, his ideas can be dealt with by the common sense of the American people.

Wallace Marches Back To Georgia; No Eggs Hurled

34a(1)

DALTON, GA., Oct. 16.—(AP)—Henry Wallace marched into Georgia today with biblical fervor, preaching the brotherhood of whites and Negroes.

Sun 10-17-48

He mainly attacked "the huge, modern monoply corporation," which he said is "an instrument of the devil, blindly driving the world toward war."

[illegible]

He declared that the corporate "instrument of the devil" is backing Herman Talmadge, Georgia's next governor. He said this instrument "owns legislators and governors" and "openly accepts" the support of the Ku Klux Klan.

The Progressive Party presidential candidate flew about 1,000 miles out of his scheduled path to make one speech in Georgia—one final pre-election thrust into the Deep South where he was egged and heckled last month. No eggs were hurled this time.

Alabama Barnstorming Ends In Uproar As Crowds Close In On Presidential Candidate

Louisville Ky

By TARLETON COLLIER.
Staff Correspondent, The Courier-Journal.

Birmingham, Sept. 1.—A day of barnstorming through Alabama that started pleasantly enough wound up for Henry Wallace in savage uproar. In the end, three principal engagements to speak were canceled.

Wallace gave as the reason that police had separated whites from Negroes. He had insisted from the start of his campaign that he would speak only to nonsegregated audiences, and he stood on this today. But it was probably just as well. In at least two occasions there is no telling what might have happened.

Driving into the industrial city of Gadsden after three hasty but undisturbed talks elsewhere, the Progressive Party candidate for President found his way blocked by a crowd of several thousands in an ugly mood. The covered front porch of the Courthouse was packed by several hundred young men and boys, shouting and jeering as the Wallace motorcade inched toward the spot set for his speech.

Thur 9-2-48

Crowds Temper That of a Mob.

The roar swelled in volume and the crowd, a veritable mob in temper, pressed about the candidate's car. "Take him out," was the most frequent cry. Faces were pressed against the closed window. "Come on out like a man," shouted a burly man with face contorted.

Wallace sat impassive. He and his party saw, as they pressed to the Courthouse corner at Broad and Court Streets, that a stout rope stretched across the street to separate whites and Negroes. From the sound truck just behind the candidate's car the voice of J. P. Mooney, Alabama campaign director of the Progressives strove vainly for a moment to rise above the bedlam. Then when the din permitted, the message came out in pieces.

"Henry Wallace and the Progressive Party will not participate in any gathering," Mooney said, "that violates the Constitution of the United States. We believe in free speech and free assembly without police restrictions and police intimidation."

Police Prevent Violence.

For a moment it looked as if there would be an attempt to turn the candidate's car over, but police moved in. They were there in force—State patrolmen, City police, and men in civilian clothes with guns at their hips, deputies and bailiffs of the court. With difficulty a way was cleared and the column of automobiles bearing Wallace's retinue, Alabama party members, and newspaper correspondents made its way out of town.

They pressed past a picket with an expertly letter dsign:

"Don't be fooled. Uncle Joe tells Henry what to say."

Thur 9-2-48

Birmingham Speech Canceled.

In a way, Gadsdenites were playing a game of "follow your leader." Their mood might have been congealed by the City's Mayor, Herbert Maighan, who yesterday sent Wallace a telegram saying he was not wanted in Gadsden.

Twice more the scene was repeated. The big meeting of the day, in front of the Courthouse in Birmingham, was called off for the same reason. When the Wallace party arrived there, a double line of ropes, stretched on sawhorses, ran from the entrance of the building across the sidewalk. It was the arrangement by which Eugene Connor, police commissioner, undertook to enforce Birmingham's segregation ordinance. This law says the two races must be separated in gatherings, whether sitting or standing, indoors or out.

Another Egg Barrage.

Wallace's car was not yet on the scene when Mooney and Clark Foreman, treasurer of the Progressive Party, walked from the Courthouse to read a statement similar to that made in Gadsden. Taunts filled the air. A barrage of eggs flew, spattering in the closely packed mass. A little later, when the Wallace automobile came into view, the demonstrators found themselves out of ammunition and contented themselves with pressing against the car, shouting insults.

An hour afterward a meeting in the city park of Bessemer, a community 12 miles from Birmingham, was similarly called off. The crowd melted away after brief shouts, a few passers slapping at the candidate's automobile.

Thur 9-2-48

Praise for T.V.A.

The first three stops in Wallace's swift tour, by companions, were all but uneventful. They started at Decatur, where a crowd of several hundred gathered in the Courthouse yard. The presidential candidate spoke for about 8 minutes, standing in the street beside the sound truck, a portable microphone in his hand.

He spoke mainly of T.V.A., this being in the heart of the valley development, and called it "one of the most inspiring works of man." He repeated constantly the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and courted the ears of Alabamans by reference to the state's famous athletic teams. There was only a passing reference to international affairs and the race question.

Pleads for Less Hatred.

"The Cold War must end if we are to have any reduction in the cost of living," Wallace said. "Instead of spending billions to build up the Fascist regimes of Greece and Turkey, we should use the money to create more T.V.A.'s. I come to plead for less hatred, not only in the United States, but between us and other countries."

There were a few mild and experimental "boos" now and then. They sounded lonely, needing only the encouragement of a lusty shout or two to turn them into overwhelming roars.

'Down With Wallace.'

In Huntsville, an hour later, he had the quietest audience of the day, before which he repeated his praise of T.V.A. and the Alabama spirit of athletic competition. Some time before noon he ran into his first band of articulate hecklers at Guntersville, but these were mostly young boys bearing a Confederate flag and signs bearing the legends, scrawled with pencil, "Down with Wallace" and "Down with communism."

The candidate finished hastily as the young hecklers, emboldened as he faltered, stepped up their taunts. The Dixiecrats, he said, are backward men. "They're Communists," a boy yelled. Wallace began talking of the "Wall Street gang." "Let's hear about Joe Stalin," the boys demanded.

Talks With Tenant Farmer.

Later, relaxed for a few minutes as the party stopped for a picnic lunch of fried chicken and rolls at a tenant farm, Wallace said he was gratified at his reception in Alabama. After the bitterness and shambles of his North Carolina meetings, he had reason to say so. It was pleasant in a grove of oaks where the party had stopped. Pete Seeger, the troubadour of the Progressive Party, unslung his guitar and led a group in ballad singing. Wallace wandered off to the cornfield and talked with the tenant, R. B. Knott, about his own corn business.

J. J. Pickens, a spectator at a Wallace gathering in Birmingham, Ala., was splattered by an egg yesterday when an announcement was made that Wallace would not speak there due to "segregation."

Thur 9-2-48

This, however, was the last moment of peace. Soon afterward came the stop at Gadsden. When Wallace arrived in Birmingham, one of his aides read a prepared statement, setting out his view of the afternoon misadventures.

Goes to Mississippi Next.

"When we reached Gadsden and Birmingham," he said, "cities which are dominated by Northern steel trusts, we could not hold meetings because the police insisted on dividing free Americans by the colors of their skins.

"These Northern-owned corporations, Republic Steel and the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, pay no income taxes here. Yet they have political machines that dominate these cities. It is also interesting that one of the most open incitements to violence in the South came from a national radio commentator who is known as a spokesman of the National Association of Manufacturers. (The reference was to Fulton Lewis, one of Wallace's aides said.) People of the South are a grand, courageous, free people. The things which give the South a bad name are not Southern ills but national ills. We must prevent private greed to preserve public welfare."

After a broadcast at 7 o'clock over a state-wide hookup, in which this statement and most of his remarks during the day were repeated, Wallace and his party left for Mississippi. Tomorrow he is scheduled to appear in Jackson and Vicksburg, going then into Louisiana, with stops at Monroe and Shreveport.

Congressman Says Wallace Made Deal In Pennsylvania

Philadelphia, Sept. 1 (AP)—Republican National Chairman Hugh D. Scott, Jr., said today a "deal" had been made in Pennsylvania between Henry A. Wallace's Progressives and the Democratic Party.

Thur 9-2-48

The Pennsylvania congressman told a Rotary Club luncheon the deal was on the congressional election level and pointed to the withdrawal of all but one of the Wallace candidates for Congress.

In addition, Scott said, the Progressives have indorsed Democratic candidates they originally set out to oppose.

Scott linked the deal with the issue of Communism.

The withdrawal of the Progressive candidates, he said, "indicates that the Communists and fellow-travelers have professed themselves entirely satisfied with the record of the Democrats."

"In other words," he declared, "the Communists have come back home again. They're back under the old shelter, and the reasons for that are genuine enough."

Scott blamed the Truman Administration for the alleged presence of Communists on the federal pay roll.

'Housecleaning' Promised.

"Congress," he said, "is powerless to hasten the very leisurely process by which the executive agencies are going about the task of cleaning house."

He promised 'a real housecleaning" if Thomas E. Dewey is elected President.

"Since we are the party of free enterprise, we want every American to be self-sustaining, and our first ambition is to put Mr. Truman back on the road to Independence," Scott said.

Wallace Cleared His Throat

The Advertiser

BIRMINGHAM, Sept. 1.

HENRY WALLACE made three of his better speeches this afternoon in Gadsden, Birmingham and Bessemer. That is to say "Old Bubblehead" didn't speak at all.

34a(1)

Hank didn't speak because the audiences were segregated. City officials had already warned Wallace that audiences would be segregated and even dispatched him copies of the ordinances. He came anyway, but didn't deign to speak. After all, he didn't have to speak to excite the adoration of his hophead followers.

Thur 9-2-48

At Gadsden Hank the Mute let it go by default. There was a crowd, but they had come to scoff and evidently meant to remain to scoff. So Hank gave out with a bleat that he didn't speak because of "police intimidation." That, of course, was a Wallace fabrication.

Taurus the Bull, otherwise Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene Connor, had apparently been restrained by the counsel of the more reflective. For Connor eschewed his effusive lust to put Hank right where he put Senator Glen Taylor—in Bumminham jail.

In fact, Taurus conducted himself with a sensible restraint that must have felt like a new pair of shoes. He dispatched word to Hank to come ahead and speak on the courthouse steps. but admonished him that the city segregation laws would be enforced. To be certain of clarity, Taurus also sent along copies of the law of the Medes and Persians which altereth not even for the Kremlin's American white hope.

WALLACE was due to speak at 4:30 from the courthouse steps. By 4:15 a considerable crowd had filed passed the Jefferson Davis monument in Wilson Park and chafed for the arrival of Hank. The courthouse is new and imposing. We stood on a high point in the park beside the lily ponds, 100 yards from the famous Birmingham courthouse steps from which, Hank had told the nation, he would speak only to an unsegregated audience.

The steps were evenly divided up to the pond between a "reserved white" section and "reserved colored" section. New carpenter's horses had been placed as a segregation wall.

Jour 9-2-48

The whites greatly outnumbered the Negroes. Some 50 of Taurus' blue-shirted constables were posted in the Negro section to prevent any mingling.

Despite Taurus' highly American warnings about jailing egg throwers, there were hearties who had eggs for Wallace. We saw two, maybe three, thrown towards the steps. They were not hurled, they were gently tossed rather like an umpire throwing out a new ball.

Presently two cops were seen to be leading a lanky tow-headed colt off the playing field. They had firm grips on each of his stringy arms. Whether the hobbledehoy had thrown an egg or had crossed the Connor line was not evident.

Jour 9-2-48

Whereupon a Wallace agent said over the microphone:

"We understand Henry Wallace will not make a speech here. Understand he's going to Bessemer . . . He has that right . . ."

WE FOLLOWED at a considerable pace to Bessemer. Proceeding at a considerably greater speed in his cream Ford was Sir Geoffrey Birt, that demon agent of the commonweal who wraps his corpses in The Alabama Journal. Sir Geoffrey apparently got the habit of driving on the left side of the road in his native England and has not seen fit to adapt his procedures to those of the New World. At any rate, Sir Geoffrey was on the left side of the road hard after the communist blighter, and "Gor Blimey" out of my way, sirs.

At Bessemer Hank and his retinue drove up to the park as if to make the speech, but he only cleared his throat and passed on because Negroes are forbidden the run of the park.

As we walked away, we encountered a gent who didn't talk like a steel worker. In fact, he talked easily of historian Arnold Toynbee and his "A Study in History."

"Maybe Wallace is right about this segregation," quoth he, "but he's a rather unpopular fellow to come down here and expect the law to be changed overnight for his benefit."

Jour 9-2-48

He thought a while and added, "Oh well, about the Negro—Toynbee says they may be the coming race of men."

We've only read the one-volume abridgement of Toynbee and let that pass, but our companion has read all five volumes and said:

"Not exactly. He wrote that of the nine races the Negro alone had failed to make his mark as a race. So he may yet do it."

Wallace was headed for Tuscaloosa. We'd had enough listening to him clear his throat and disengaged. But we're quite sure that Sir Geoffrey is hot and grinding upon Wallace's heels—G.C.H.

Wallace's Attack Inflames South

(3440)

BY EDWIN A. LAHEY

Of Our Washington Bureau

Free Press

Detroit, Mich.

Sun 9-5-48

NASHVILLE—Henry Wallace has spent a week in the South without once having set foot in a hotel or a public eating place.

He has spent his nights either on a chartered Pullman or at the homes of friends, Negro and white. He has taken his vittles at these homes, in his Pullman bedroom, or along the roadside, out of picnic baskets.

He has refused to speak at three cities in Alabama—Gadsden, Birmingham, and Bessemer—because local police in each city had separated whites and Negroes.

* * *

THIS NEGATIVE attack upon the segragation laws and customs of the South is not as subtle as it sounds.

It's a taunt, a slap in the face to race-proud southerners.

These people are perhaps as inflamed today as their grandfathers were in the 1850s when, in the face of contstant torment from abolitionists, they abandoned all pretense of finding a solution to the slavery problem and resorted to a bitter aggressiveness which established slavery in the southern mind as a sacred institution.

Most southerners today express a desire to improve the status of the Negro, to provide better education and health facilities, to widen his economic opportunities and lift his standard of living, even to give him full suffrage.

BUT SEGRAGATION in the South is a sacred institution, as firm a cultural pattern as family life. Thus far, but no farther, the southern liberal declares, adding confidently that the Negroes themselves wish to retain their "equal but separate facilities."

When Henry Wallace comes a-preaching "christianity and democracy" the southerner sees red, literally and figuratively, because the Wallace thesis is as harsh as that propounded by William Lloyd Garrison and the abolitionists a century ago.

That thesis is brief and brutal. It says that southerners who strive to "improve" the status of the Negro in a segragated society are building on crooked foundations, because segragation is based upon the concept that one race is inferior to another.

Sun 9-5-48

IN THEIR VIOLENT reaction to Wallace's trip, the southerners who have pelted him with eggs and tomatoes have denounced him for his Communist friends and sympathies as well as for his views against the segragation laws.

Wallace feels that the anti-Communist and the racial taunts spring from the same southern fear that "foreigners" or "outsiders" are plotting to undermine the South's "peculiar institution" of racial segragation.

Clark Foreman, a Georgian who is treasurer of the Progressive Party, and who has been fighting segregation for 20 years, says that anyone who advocates the enforcement of the civil-rights amendments to the Constitution (the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth) is automatically regarded in the South as Communist.

Sun 9-5-48

THE TENSION between the United States and the Soviet Union has increased the anti-Communist feeling in the South, as it has in the rest of the nation.

Most observers agree, however, that the tremendous hostility to Wallace is based primarily on the racial issue. The South hated Wallace at the 1944 convention of the Democratic Party, when he made a smashing demand that the Democrats enact an aggressive civil-rights program.

The third-party candidate feels pretty good about his junket.

Sun 9-5-48

WALLACE PROBABLY would not go so far as Clark Foreman, who describes this trip as "the greatest blow against slavery since the emancipation proclamation," but he certainly believes that the civil-rights issue has been dramatized to the nation, and that every egg and tomato, every police attempt at segragation, has helped to put his story across in readable fashion.

The Wallace backers profess to believe that they have won some votes in the South, but most political observers in Dixie dismiss this claim as baseless.

The opinion of southern liberals and middle-of-the-road observers is that Wallace has helped the Dixiecrats by inflaming a resentment that had already been deepened by President Truman's civil rights program.

Sun 9-5-48

ONE POLITICAL writer in Jackson asserts that 95 per cent of the Mississippi vote in November will go to Gov. G. Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina, and Gov. Fielding Wright, of Mississippi, the Dixiecrat candidate for president.

Southern corporation lawyers representing nothern industrial, utility and tidelands oil interests took over an important part in forming the Dixiecrat party.

Wallace in his southern radio addresses, and in public appearances where he has been permitted to speak, has emphasized the role of "Wall Street" in the south, declaring that northern corporations were exploiting the region, and wanted race pitted against race to protect their own position.

Sun 9-5-48

WHATEVER EFFECT such an argument might have upon workers and small farmers in normal times was certainly lost in the atmosphere of racial tension in which Wallace spoke.

One of the most interesting episodes of the week was the hostility of the crowd that turned out at Gadsden, Ala.

Gadsden, once a dangerous place for any union organizer, has been thoroughly organized in recent years by three right-wing, anti-Communist CIO unions, the steel workers, the textile workers, and the rubber workers.

Sun 9-5-48

DESPITE THE trade-union flavor in Gadsden, the crowd at the Courthouse was apparently more hostile to Wallace and his "Chritianity and democracy" routine than any other crowd encountered in the week.

Wallace did not get out of his car or speak at Gadsden, because the police had roped off the crowds to segregate the Negroes from the whites.

A SOUTHERNER IN WALLACE'S CAMP SIZES UP DIXIE TRIP

By CLARK FOREMAN

Foreman

Thur 9-9-48

The significance of Henry Wallace's trip South will not be fully told even in November. Its real significance is not that a few people in some places threw eggs, but rather that so many people in the South listened attentively to what Henry Wallace had to say.

Even the most hostile Southern newspapers regarded the trip as first-page news. In every one of the seven states which he visited he was able to give his views on the South's welfare to meetings of people freely assembled and unsegregated. Such a political tour has been unthought of in this country by any other candidate for the presidency. But in the future those candidates who seek the vote of the people of that third of our country which is called the South will inevitably be measured against the high standards which Wallace has set.

As a Southerner, I know that Southerners of all political beliefs admire a man of courage. Henry Wallace has demonstrated to everyone that he has the courage of the highest American tradition.

Southerners are supposed to be more religious than the rest of Americans. Hundreds of thousands of Southerners heard Henry Wallace challenge them to live up to their religious beliefs. He was living up to his. I predict that the churches of the South which are already moving in that direction, will support the message which Henry Wallace took to the people of the South. Actually, Wallace gave heart to the millions of Southerners who are deeply concerned about this question. Although many meetings along the route were as peaceful and sympathetic as any candidate could desire, the impression has been given by the press that the Southern people were hostile to Wallace. Partly this was due to the reporters' own deep sense of shock. But I saw enthusiastic crowds greet him in Norfolk and Richmond, Virginia, in some cities in North Carolina, in several cities in Alabama, in Vicksburg, Mississippi, in Louisiana, Arkansas and in Memphis, Nashville and Knoxville, Tennessee. The headlines have not made the egg-throwers typical of the South; the people who listened were the real South.

Artificial Performance

The forces behind young, irrational egg-throwers were apparent from two examples. One was the 14 year old boy who came up to Palmer Weber, Southern co-director of the Progressive Party, with a pop bottle in his hand and said the man over there had offered him five dollars to hit Mr. Weber on the head with it. Mr. Weber asked this boy whether he usually made his spending money picking cotton or carrying a newspaper route. The boy replied, "I don't make any spending money. I don't have any." So Mr. Weber with a gentle admonishment gave the boy a quarter and told him not to let other people get him into trouble.

Thur 9-9-48

I think of the example in Memphis where a very large and obviously sympathetic crowd was listening attentively until some of the photographers assembled a group of young boys and encouraged them to boo while they took their pictures. The artificiality of this performance was apparent to all.

Every time Henry Wallace was cheered—and he was cheered frequently—the young boo-ers jeered. How could anyone take satisfaction from young men booing references to the United States Constitution and the Bible?

The Dixiecrats, or Confederate Republicans as they are more properly called, had young men flying the Confederate flag and trying to disrupt the meetings.

THE BYLINE: Clark Foreman, treasurer of the Progressive Party and president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, accompanied presidential candidate Henry Wallace on his recent tour through the South. Here he presents his version and interpretation of the trip.

A representative of Time and Life on the tour wore a Dixiecrat button.

Any person in the South who defends the entire Constitution of the United States will be called a "Communist." It was equally clear that the forces which were trying to prevent Henry Wallace from telling his story were not just Southern forces but reactionaries of the North as well. In fact, the worst attempts at disruption were in the mill towns of North Carolina where the majority of the spindles are owned in the North. And it was the steel towns of Alabama, dominated by Northern corporations which do not contribute either income tax or sales tax for the welfare of the state, that refused the people their Constitutional right of free assembly. Henry Wallace, in refusing to speak at Birmingham to the tremendous but segregated crowd, has marked the police commisioner of that city as both un-Christian and un-American. But the police Commissioner is not alone responsible. He was supported for office by the Northern corporation, the Ku Klux Klan and corrupt labor leaders.

Thur 9-9-48

As the direct result of Henry Wallace's trip through the South, millions of Americans who were not aware of the meaning of discrimination in the South have suddenly been jolted. Segregation is no work of fiction, but a brutal fact. The conflict between American democracy and segregation hit home to millions.

Hundreds of thousands of Southerners who are as anxious to be progressive Americans as anyone in the country have been encouraged by Henry Wallace's courage. They have been given heart by Henry Wallace's demonstration that in every Southern state it is possible to have a free unsegregated meeting. They rejoice that even in Memphis where the Freedom Train was not able to stop less than a year ago, Henry Wallace addressed large, free and unsegregated crowds far beyond the seating capacity of the baseball park provided—and there was no violence, no incident that can be said to have "set the South back." They know that Henry Wallace is the Freedom man fighting 20th century slavery in the form of segregation.

The Jim-Crow liberals who have said that the South was not ready for full democracy have been proven wrong in state after state. The only real violence which occurred on the trip was in Durham, North Carolina, where the police authorities refused us the protection which we requested. Yet the Durham Morning Herald the day after the speech said editorially that it was the strength of the Progressive Party and the political insecurity of the Democratic machine in that state "that is adding some concern to the life of the state's established leadership."

Thur 9-9-48

Decision in November

Every Southern state, where the political decisions have for decades been made in the Democratic primaries and not in November, this year will decide their political future in November—like the rest of the country.

That means that Negroes as well as white people will participate in the decision to a much larger extent than before. This attack on the "established political leadership" has frightened that leadership. It is giving hope to millions of people who believe with Henry Wallace that the Southern people are entitled to wages and farm income equal to the rest of the people of this country. Those Southerners who in every state invited Henry Wallace to speak to them believe that his visit has greatly strengthened their cause.

Wallace in the South

The Nation
Sat 9-11-48
New York N.Y.

WHAT Henry Wallace tried to say in the South matters very little, most of his words having gone unheard and many of his speeches undelivered. Nevertheless, his journey, marked by violence and intimidation, may well turn out to have been the redeeming feature of an otherwise ill-advised candidacy. It was an act of courage that should not only pay dividends to the Progressive Party in November but contribute materially to the breaking up of antiquated social patterns below the Mason and Dixon Line.

On the purely political level, it is widely assumed that the Wallace strategists, anticipating a rowdy reception, sent their nominee south in order to win votes in the North. There is nothing discreditable in such a maneuver, but as matters worked out, the Southern campaign had effects far transcending this limited purpose. First, the eggs and tomatoes thrown at Mr. Wallace, the boos and catcalls that drowned out his words, and the knifing of one of his aides all served to dramatize the growing struggle of Southern Negroes to attain political rights denied them since Reconstruction days. Second, Wallace's insistence on addressing only unsegregated gatherings broke precedent in communities from Norfolk to Vicksburg, and a taboo violated with such fanfare can never again be quite as potent.

Sat 9-11-48

More than incidentally, this shattering of precedent is bound to affect the two major-party nominees, both of whom have talked of invading the South. With the Wallace pattern established, can Truman afford to address segregated audiences? If not, will the Police Commissioner of Birmingham repeat his famous dictum: "I ain't gonna let no darkies and white folks segregate together in this town"? Wherever he may choose to speak, the Secret Service presumably will see to it that no eggs and vegetables are thrown at the President of the United States. The new pattern will be strengthened still further, and Wallace is entitled to full credit for having forced the issue.

Indirectly, the episode has afforded an insight into Southern behavior that is by no means all on the discouraging side. In the general indignation over the assaults on the Wallace party, it is easy but unwise to overlook the effect on decent Southerners. James Wechsler, the New York Post's correspondent, reports that "the tumult wasn't the whole story." The trouble, in almost all instances, came from a small minority, often adolescents, and on all sides reporters heard expressions of regret and humiliation, though little of it reflected support of Mr. Wallace. Editorial opinion in North Carolina papers took the same tone, and both Governor Cherry of that state and Governor Wright of Mississippi deplored the treatment Wallace had received. Especially worth noting was the fact that there was no trouble where police authorities took their duties seriously. Mississippi's reception of the Progressive nominee was cold but correct, with the predictable result that Wallace gained less from his relative freedom in that state than from his virtual suppression in North Carolina. Add to a list as long as history one more proof that the best way to spread a man's influence is to gag him.

Sat 9-11-48

As we go to press, Governor Dewey has yet to follow President Truman's example in condemning the "highly un-American business" of denying to their common opponent the opportunity "to say his piece."

Only Brotherhood Can Save You, South Told

BIRMINGHAM—Beginning his address with The Lord's Prayer, Henry A. Wallace, Progressive Party candidate for President, told a radio audience here on the first of the month that segregation is a sin and that only through the brotherhood of black and white men can that sin be eradicated.

Excerpts from his speech follow.

"The platform of our new Progressive Party calls for equal rights and equal opportunities for all men. We do this not only because we believe that all men are brothers, but because we believe in the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence.

"Our party therefore, fights against all injustice—against economic and political injustice. We fight against all forms of tyranny over the mind of man. We daily fight for free speech and free assembly. . . free from police or any other intimidation.

Guilty Ones Go Free

"In Greenboro, North Carolina on Monday (Aug. 30) the police arrested a young teen-age lad for throwing eggs and tomatoes at me. When I heard about it, I asked the chief of detectives to release the boy. The boy was wrong. He shouldn't have done what he did.

Afro 9-25-48

"But it is the men who have inflamed his minds who are really responsible for violence. They are never called to pay for their sins.

"I cry out against men who deny the brotherhood of man, because I know what the cost is in human life, and well-being. I know that the infant death-rate, both colored and white, is far greater in Alabama and other Southern States than in the North.

"I know that thousands upon thousands of southern women, both colored and white, die in childbirth every year who could be saved with a real Federal health insurance, infant and maternal care and hospital program.

"And now, I want to ask that President Truman and Governor Dewey join with me in running a Freedom Train through the South, so that all the people of the South may know that we are on their side and not on the side of those who have despoiled their real tradition— the Jefferson tradition that men are more important than dollars.

"Such a Freedom Train will mean much to the sharecroppers and tenants and workers, both white and black. It will mean that we are as much interested in Freedom in the United States as we are in freedom in foreign lands."

Race Law Copy Sent To Wallace

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.— (AP) — Just to make certain Henry Wallace is thoroughly familiar with segregation laws here, Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor has sent him a copy.

Connor mailed the segregation ordinance to the Progressive party's candidate for president, Monday.

34a(1)

Wallace has a permit for an address at 4:30 p.m., Wednesday. The permit stipulates, however, that all city and state laws must be observed.

Wallace has announced that he would speak before mixed audiences only, and his supporters here asked a permit for a mixed meeting.

Connor, in a letter accompanying the copy of the city ordinance, said:

"It is assumed, of course, that whether you agree or disagree with the necessity, wisdom or policy of this local law, you will desire to comply therewith, and I solicit your cooperation to that end.

"You will be, of course, a welcome visitor to Birmingham, and I hope that your visit may be a happy one."

Wallace Speaks

Henry A. Wallace's audiences frequently pay to hear him speak. Admission charges for big Progressive party rallies range from 10 cents to $3.60—and a collection is usually taken.

Sun 9-12-48

Last Friday evening in New York's Yankee Stadium Mr. Wallace held what was probably the most successful rally of his political campaign. About 50,000 persons attended and paid an estimated $78,000 for tickets and about $52,000 in voluntary contributions. The speakers' platform, raised above second base, was floodlit; a band played jazz and Negro spirituals; Paul Robeson sang and a number of Progressive party leaders spoke. When Mr. Wallace mounted the platform at 11:30 P. M. there was a ten-minute ovation from the crowd.

New York N.Y.

Mr. Wallace spoke chiefly about his recent trip through the South in which his demand for racial equality brought him barrages of rotten eggs and tomatoes. He said that press reports which had emphasized the egg-throwing had missed the greater significance of his tour. "The significance," he said, "lies in the two dozen completely unsegregated peaceful meetings which we were able to hold. * * * The good people of the South * * * are learning that no man can believe in both segregation and democracy."

Sun 9-12-48

34a(1)

He said: "Peace is the basic issue of the 1948 election campaign. The most important job in maintaining the peace is the job of conquering hate here at home, the job of protecting the civil rights of all Americans."

Yesterday Mr. Wallace started off on another campaign tour. He spoke in Washington, D. C., last night and will go on to the Middle West this week.

Wallace Talk Offers Race Issue Tussle

Wash. Star

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—Henry A. Wallace's appearance in Norfolk August 29 promises to bring a showdown on the racial segregation issue between the Progressive Party and law-enforcement officials.

34a(1)

"The law on the Virginia statute books is very plain," City Manager C. A. Harrell said today. He added: "I have no further statement to make at the present time."

"The meeting at which Mr. Wallace will speak will be a private meeting, by invitation only, and as such is not subject' to the State's segregation laws, said Sanford Berlin, Progressive Party chairman in Norfolk.

The meeting, at which the Progressive Party's presidential nominee will launch a speaking tour of several Southern States, will be held in the Center Theater in the municipally owned and operated city auditorium.

Berlin said that "as a matter of principle, the Progressive Party has not segregated one American from another in any of its public or private meetings. We do not intend to change that policy when Mr. Wallace appears here August 29."

"We will comply with the law by making the meeting a private one," Berlin said, "although our attorney here has advised us the State's segregation law is unconstitutional because it violates the section of the Constitution providing for freedom of assembly."

WALLACE APPEALS FOR NEGRO SUPPORT

Wk. 8-25-48

Likening Party to Abolitionists

He Says Administration Lets Civil Rights Die

34a(1)

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 3[illegible]—"President Truman and his party have presided over the gradual liquidation of civil rights for the citizens of th United States—145,000,000 of them," Henry A. Wallace, Presidential candidate of the Progressive party, told the fiftieth anniversary national convention of the Grand Lodge of Negro Elks here today.

Mr. Wallace asked the nation's Negros to vote for him and to "turn out the jim crow bigots."

Comparing his new party with "the abolitionists of earlier years," Mr. Wallace said that "jim crow has passed a sentence of death against 15,000,000 Americans and that is why we must say they are fighting for their very lives."

Mr. Truman and Governor Dewey, the Democratic and Republican Presidential nominees, "are only more sophisticated versions of their more articulate brother, the candidate of the Dixiecrat party," Mr. Wallace continued. "Mr. Truman's silence has been the eulogy over the graves of Negroes, some in the United States Army uniform, lynched in the South under his Administration. Mr. Dewey has had a number of lynchings in his state. He has carefully and brazenly whitewashed lynching and attacks on citizens of his state.

"The Truman-Dewey-Dulles combine directed the United Nations to reject the appeal from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the U. N. They directed that the United States delegation vote against the petition of South Africans for equality."

Wed 8-31-48

Mr. Wallace described the foreign policy of the United States "as a triple threat to peace that has sent American guns to half dozen powder kegs in the world."

Later, at a luncheon address before the Cincinnati branch of the Progressive party, Mr. Wallace declared that 99½ per cent of his following was not Communist.

"The American press has erected a paper curtain around me," Mr. Wallace added, and he therefore had been compelled to take to the radio.

Henry Wallace Brings Campaign Here Tomorrow

Tues 8-31-48

Speeches Scheduled;

Eddins Says He'll 'Enforce All Laws'

34a(1)

The Henry Wallace campaign trail — already splashed with raw eggs and ripe tomatoes—hits Alabama tomorrow morning.

Wallace is scheduled to arrive in Decatur at 7:05 a.m. tomorrow—by train from Chattanooga, according to Robert Travis, Jr., head of the Alabama Progressive Party.

Travis said Wallace will speak from the courthouse steps at Decatur at 8:15 a.m. tomorrow. The Wallace motorcade, escorted by the State Highway Patrol, then moves on to Huntsville for a speech by Wallace at 9:30 a.m.

Tues 8-31-48

AT 11:15 A.M. WALLACE is scheduled to appear in Guntersville. Travis said Wallace would not stop in Albertville and Boaz on his way to Gadsden.

The Progressive Party's presidential nominee will lunch in Gadsden, then speak on the courthouse steps there at 1:15 p.m.

He is scheduled to speak at the courthouse steps in Birmingham at 4 p.m. tomorrow, and in front of DeBardeleben Park, in Bessemer, at 5:30 p.m. At 7:30 p.m. Wallace will give a 15-minute broadcast over a statewide network originating at WBRC in Birmingham. At 8:30 p.m. his motorcade will head for Jackson, Miss., where Wallace expects to spend the night.

Wallace will motor to Tuscaloosa, then catch a train to Jackson.

Informed of the reception given Wallace—raw eggs and ripe tomatoes — at Burlington and Greensboro, N. C., yesterday, Birmingham Police Chief Floyd Eddins reiterated today that he was going to enforce "all the laws, including the segregation laws," when Wallace arrives here tomorrow.

Sheriff Holt A. McDowell said his deputies would attend the meeting at the courthouse steps tomorrow afternoon to see that "law and order are enforced."

Tues 8-31-48

The sheriff said enforcement of the segregation statutes would be left up to Birmingham police, but that his men would see that the meeting, if any, is orderly.

J. P. Mooney, campaign director for the Alabama Progressive Party, appealed to Gov. James E. Folsom to protect Wallace from "inspired violence or interference when he speaks in Birmingham."

MOONEY WROTE the governor that "the discourteous attitude being shown toward Wallace by the newspapers and the 'big mules' is not a great deal different from their attitude toward you when you ran for governor."

Mooney also criticized County Commission President W. D. Kendrick for his statement that Wallace's permit to speak from the courthouse steps here would be revoked if the Progressive Party obtained a federal injunction to prevent the city from enforcing its segregation laws when Wallace speaks.

Public Safety Commissioner Eugene Connor has mailed Wallace a copy of the city's segregation laws—in case he didn't know what they are.

Asserting that this is a peaceful community and that he was not anticipating any trouble, Commissioner Connor today warned those planned to attend the Wallace meeting that police would arrest anyone creating a disturbance.

Tues 8-31-48

"WALLACE HAS A perfect right to speak, as long as he abides by the city segregation laws," Connor said. "And we're not going to let anyone disturb his meeting."

Connor said police would arrest anyone throwing eggs, tomatoes, rocks, other missiles, or disturbing the meeting in any manner.

Title 14, Seciton 119 of the Alabama Code was cited by Connor. This provides a fine up to $500 and a jail term of as much as one year for anyone convicted of disturbing any public meeting being held for a lawful purpose.

It was in Birmingham that Wallace's running mate, Sen. Glen Taylor, of Idaho, was jailed for disorderly conduct.

Wallace has announced he will address only mixed audiences, but his permit to speak on the courthouse steps here specifies that all state and city segregation laws must be observed.

County commissioners plan to rope off the area at the west steps of the courthouse so that whites will be separated from Negroes.

Wallace has been denied permits to speak in Birmingham city parks and to hold a mixed gathering in DeBardleeben Park in Bessemer.

AT THE OTHER ALABAMA cities where he is scheduled to maker appearances tomorrow, police officials have announced they intend seeing that segregation laws are enforced.

That means that if Wallace speaks, there must be physical barriers between white and Negro listeners.

Henry Proposes The Wallace Plan For The South

34a(1)

The Columbia Record

Wed 9-1-48

Columbia S.C.

Henry Wallace has been described as a mass of contradictions. And it is an apt description. He is an idealist, a religious mystic, but also something of a scientist and business man, even when he assumes the most unbusinesslike of attitudes. He is the richest of all the candidates making the race for the presidency.

Some of the things he has done have been done in disregard of politics. It is the poorest of politics to associate one's self with the Communists. Wallace has done it.

But he also isn't above the most blatent demogoguery, or at least not above employing the tactics of the professional demogogue.

Consider his proposal advanced at Durham, N. C., of a Marshall plan for the South. He is, of course, opposed to the Marshall plan for Europe, but that is a different matter involving high Soviet policy.

His Wallace plan, it should be called, for the South, involves the idea that the federal government should contribute $1,000,000,000 a year for four years to the South to aid its industry and agriculture. To get this money, which would, of course, upset the plans of Congress for additional tax cuts, he proposes simply to tax the big corporations which each year drain "literally billions of dollars of profits . . . from Southern labor in field and factory." These corporations are owned by wealthy and powerful men, residing in the North, and taxation of these riches would "return to the people of the South a part of the stolen fruit of their toil and sweat."

Now this is almost as good a talking point as the Dixiecratic anti-civil rights platform. The idea of stealing a billion dollars a year for four years—and why stop there if the habit be once established?—from the Yankees will appeal to a superficial sense of justice and right. The North has been taking money from the South for years with its freight rate differential, with its protective tariff, as well as in divers other ways. And it might be simple justice to reverse the process, if for only four years.

This isn't, of course, the remedy the South itself has proposed. The Southern rem[illegible] is to put all sections on a parity, elimin[illegible] any advantage to any section. The So[illegible] has no hopes of getting back the mone[illegible] that has gone. It simply wants to get what it is entitled to and at the same time get the right and the time to work out its own destiny without too much outside assistance, no matter how well intentioned. The Wallace plan therefore will not get very far in the South.

That Wallace descends to demogoguery is, however, significent. It is another revelation of the man's curious mind.

Henry Wallace Should Simply Be Ignored In South

Columbia Record

34a(1)

Henry A. Wallace, the candidate of the Progressives for president, does not expect to win any substantial support in the South for his third party with its Communist overtones.

He may, of course, have some hopes of winning the support of some of the Negroes for his platform goes even beyond the Democratic party platform in promising the Negroes everything the Northerners think they want.

Tues 8-31-48

But he has very little hope here even. The Negro in the South has never fallen for the blandishments of the Communists and most Negroes, like most whites, know that the real race this year, as before, is to be between the Republicans and the Democrats. Those who want to be on the winning side will vote for the Republicans. Those who want to reward Truman and the Democrats for their efforts at doing something for them while the other parties talked will vote Democratic.

Columbia S.C.

Wallace's invasion of the South and his flouting of Southern customs in staying in Negro homes instead of at hotels is not therefore to be taken as a serious campaign effort. If it is being made for any purpose it is to attract attention to Wallace and his campaign by the reaction of Southerners to his denunciation of segregation and his ignoring of it.

The North Carolinians who have been breaking up the Wallace meetings with rotten eggs, tomatoes and catcalls are therefore playing into his hands, giving him ammunition to be used to lampoon the South.

Tues 8-31-48

He shouldn't be allowed to make himself a martyr. He should be permitted to speak, to say whatever he wants to say to any audiences who want to hear him. The great majority of Southerners, white and Negro, should ignore him. Nothing hurts a politician quite so much as being ignored.

Warren Lists Planks For GOP Platform

By the Associated Press

Sacramento, Calif.

Gov. Earl Warren, favorite-son candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, puts civil rights atop his list of platform planks. And the Party, he says, should be "liberal in the finest sense of the word." Tues

Speaking May 16 over a national radio network (NBC), the Governor, who was nominated for his present office by both Democratic and Republican Parties of California suggested these planks:

A "law for all men," so that all may enjoy all the rights of American citizenship; decent housing and job insurance; expanded social security for all those "decreed by industry" to be too old to work; rules of fair conduct for both employer and worker; a system by which every family could afford to "preserve its health," and assurance of a basic education for every child.

Democrats, he said, cannot offer united leadership; they are "torn asunder by sectional, racial, and ideological dissension." But Republicans, he added, must offer "a program worthy of the confidence, not merely the momentary fancy, of the American people," and the GOP leaders must be ready to "sacrifice personal pride and position" to write such a program. 5-18-48

Gov. Warren Is Ablest Candidate

(Editor's Note—As the Republican convention opens in Philadelphia, Drew Pearson concludes his series on GOP Republican candidates by focusing the spotlight on dark-horse Gov. Earl Warren, of California.) Mon 6-21-48

PHILADELPHIA—If Republican leaders want to be sure of winning next November, if they want to carry a sizable portion of the Democratic, pro-labor vote, the man this convention will finally pick will be Gov. Earl Warren, of California.

Of course, when GOP leaders sit down in the smoke-filled rooms, they are notorious for picking the man they want rather than the man the people want. So the modest Mr. Warren, who has done nothing about corralling delegates, may not win their favor.

But history has proved that there is a large bloc of independent voters in this country which switches from one party to the other according to the candidate. Roosevelt was always able to swing this bloc to the Democrats. Warren, on the other hand, is the one Republican who can be sure of swinging them back to the GOP.

He has proved this in California. Asked how he was able to carry every one of California's 58 counties for governor in 1942, Warren replied: "I did it with Democrats." In 1946 he was so popular with both parties that the Democrats as well as the Republicans renominated him. And in the recent California primary Warren got about the same number of votes as Truman, despite the fact that there are 1,000,000 more registered Democrats than Republicans.

Unquestionably, Warren is the one 100 per cent sure-fire GOP candidate guaranteed to beat any Democrat, probably including Eisen-

Mention the name of California's Governor Earl Warren as a potential compromise candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, and colored voters in Los Angeles will laugh in your face. Sat 4-3-48

According to the Association for Abolition of Second Class Citizenship, Warren, who undeniably has White House ambitions, has done nothing during his 29 years of public service which would recommend him to the colored electorate.

As deputy city attorney, deputy district attorney, district attorney and attorney general he made no appointments of qualified colored persons to office. As governor, he has muffed several opportunities to name a colored judge and has declined to make a statement on FEPC, either on a State or national level. Baltimore, Md.

Further, he has not had a single colored person employed in his office since he took over in 1942, despite repeated requests. Californians, therefore, shudder to think of what might happen should Warren get the nod from the GOP.

If he feels no obligations to respect the rights of colored citizens to be represented in the administration of California's government, they reason that there is little likelihood that he could represent us in Washington.

Negroes File as Candidates

34a(1) The Worker

RICHMOND, Va. — The Negro people are becoming the most vocal political force in many Virginia communities. In several cities Negro candidates have already announced their candidacy for public office. New York, N.Y.

Rev. E. T. Thornton has just entered the race for City Council in the city of Lynchburg. In Charlottesville, Dr. Bernard Albert Coles, a dentist is one of six candidates for City Council for three places.

A hotel manager, William W. Miles, is seeking nomination to the City Council in Portsmouth and an attorney, Raymond L. Valentine has just announced his candidacy for a seat in the City Council in Petersburg. Sun. 2-22-48

Last November the intensified activity of Negro citizens in Richmond was responsible for the election of W. H. C. Murray, a labor man, and the loss of election by only 190 votes of a Negro attorney.

Hill Enters Richmond Council Race

34a(1) Va.

Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

RICHMOND — (ANP) — Oliver W. Hill, local attorney, who barely missed being elected to the Virginia House of Delegates last August, announced his candidacy for Richmond's new city council of nine members. Mr. Hill is the third Negro to enter the council race.

Other Negroes in the running of which there is now a field of 11 candidates are Samuel Kelley, radical, who in former years was considered a Communist sympathizer and Lynwood E. Smith. Wed.

Mr. Hill, who has handled a number of school cases in Virginia for the NAACP has planned to try a second time for the House of Delegates of Virginia in 1949, but changed his plans on account of local interest in implementing in Richmond proposals included in President Truman's civil rights program.

NEAR VICTORY 3-24-48

In his bid for the House of Delegates in Democratic primary last August, Mr. Hill won 6,410 votes. The seventh candidate in that race was W. H. C. Murray with 6,500, the candidate with the smallest number of votes who was elected to the House.

Mr. Hill's campaign was well planned and carefully conducted under the general sponsorship of the Richmond Franchise Committee of the Richmond Civic council headed by Dr. W. L. Ransome. Amos C. Clark was employed full time to direct the work of the committee and intensive campaign was conducted to increase the number of Negro qualified voters and to get the vote out on election day.

The record indicates that Negroes fairly freely divided their votes between Mr. Hill and Mr. Murray. Richmond's labor organizations used their influence to help support both candidates as an interracial approach to their political and civic problems.

Negroes Seeking Office in Virginia

34a(1)

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — With Council-manic elections coming up in several, Virginia cities Negroes are evincing more interest in the ballot and several Negro candidates have announced their candidacy for council seats. Others are expected to follow within a week or two.

Post Dispatch

A survey of the political horizon in the state shows that political activity is stirring in Lynchburg, Portsmouth, Norfolk and outlying towns. In these cities and later perhaps in others, the voters will have an opportunity to vote for Negro candidates.

Last week C. V. Wilson, undertaker and prominent Mason, withdrew from the Democratic councilmanic primary in favor of the Rev. E. T. Thornton, pastor of Court Street Baptist church, also a candidate for the city council. Wilson and the minister were the only Negro candidates in the field.

In Portsmouth a Negro hotel manager, William W. Miles, has entered the race for the city council in that city. Here some gerrymandering tactics have been restored to in order to weaken the voting strength of Negroes.

No Negro candidate has been officially named by any Negro group in Norfolk. Dr. S. F. Coppage, prominent dentist and civic leader, C. Arnett Biffins young lawyer, and Victor J. Asho, World War II veteran, have been publicized as possible candidates for the Norfolk City Council in the June primary, but no official action has been taken on either of them.

Two years ago Danville and Charlottesville figured prominently in councilmanic elections because of Negro candidate. No candidates among Negroes have announced in these cities as yet. Yet it is expected thtt some other Virginia cities will have Negro candidates for various ports.

Since 1948 is an election year, more interest in the ballot is anticipated in all sections of Virginia among Negro voters. Each presidential election year stirs Negro citizens more than other years in Virginia.

Fri. 2-21-48

Historically, Negroes are Republicans. Virginia have had a policy of voting only in presidential years. The habit still lingers to a degree. So it is expected that a considerable number of Negroes will vote this year.

The fight in Virginia for equal education opportunities for Negroes, the pressure for more civil liberties and recent reports of committees appointed by President Truman—all have much to do with the new political upsurge among Negroes in the state.

It is probable that Negro candidates will be named in Danville, Roanoke and Charlottesville for state posts in the next election of General Assembly delegates and senators from these cities.

Electing A President

34a(2)

The News

Mon 8-9-48

B'ham, Ala.

The time has come, if it has not long since passed, for clearer understanding of how a president is elected in these United States. Some of the facts in the process seem to be obscured by wishful thinking, especially on the part of some supporters of the "States' Rights" Democrats.

An intriguing idea is held by some Southerners that Thurmond-Wright electors will be able to go to a meeting of electors and there, through the eloquence of a spellbinder, throw the election to some popular hero not a candidate, such as Gen. Eisenhower. But presidents are not chosen that way.

After the election in Alabama, this state's 11 winning candidates for electors will assemble in Montgomery (on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in November) and cast their ballots. These votes will be certified and sent in a sealed envelope by the Alabama secretary of state to the presiding officer of the United States Senate. The electors of Alabama will not meet with the electors of any other state.

Later, according to the 12th amendment to the constitution, the envelopes containing the certified results will be opened by the president of the Senate in the presence of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. The votes will then be counted, and if a presidential candidate has a majority of all electoral votes he will then be declared president by the president of the Senate.

This will take place Jan. 6 shortly after the new Congress convenes Jan. 3 and before the new president is supposed to assume office Jan. 20.

If no candidate receives a majority of the electoral vote, then the House of Representatives takes over. It is confined in its voting, however, to the top three of the candidates named in the electoral vote. Presumably that would be, in the present instance, Truman, Dewey and Thurmond. The House could not vote on any other candidate except the first three.

Moreover, in its voting, each state casts one vote. Nevada would have just as much influence as New York. Alabama's 11 electoral votes would have exactly the same value as Vermont's three. How any state would vote would be determined by the House delegation from that state. In the present Congress 29 states are represented by Republican majorities. In two others there is a tie. On that basis, the Republicans could easily elect their nominee.

But suppose none of the three top candidates in the electoral college received a majority of all the states in the House. Conceivably a deadlock could develop. There might also be a deadlock in the vote for vice president. In that case it is provided that the incumbent vice president would take over on Jan. 20. There is now, however, no vice president, and presumably, under the new law of succession, the speaker of the House would become president. That, as matters stand now, would make Joe Martin, of Massachusetts, president. Martin would remain president as long as the deadlock continued. Such speculation is farfetched, but it shows some of the ramifications of the situation.

In regard to the candidates for vice president, should no one receive a majority, then the Senate makes the choice. In that case, each senator has a vote, and a majority of the whole number is necessary to a choice. But the senators must choose between the two (not three) highest candidates. At present, the Republicans hold 51 out of the 96 Senate seats.

It is well to point out, too, that any representatives or senator voting for president or vice president, in case of a failure of the college of electors to return a majority vote for any candidate, acts on his own. He has the same freedom as do electors. He is not bound by the vote in his state. Thus, for example, representatives from Alabama would be free to vote, in the House, for Truman, even though the Thurmond electors won the state election.

Probably we shall hear more about these possibilities as time goes on. Let it be sufficient now to emphasize that the electors can do no more, after the election, than cast ballots in state meetings.

The Teachers Helped Beat Dewey

Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Georgia

Since the defeat of Thomas E. Dewey I have been digging into what was wrong with my estimate of it. As one delves into the wreckage of the GOP flying machine one comes upon new evidence which was not fitted into the over-all picture before the election.

One of these was the Dewey statement, never effectively denied, to the effect that the country's teachers were a bothersome lot who didn't deserve much and who were becoming a dangerous pressure group. This was denied for Mr. Dewey, but there seems to be no doubt he did say something which would cause the teachers of the nation to view him very dimly indeed.

A gentleman from the Middle West informs me that the teachers and their families, and the many persons who think the nation's teachers have had a bad deal anyhow, voted solidly for Harry S. Truman.

Sun-11-28-48 34a(2)

Force

That the teachers are not an effective pressure group is obvious. The pressure groups that are effective do well financially. But any state politician will tell you that it is very painful indeed to have the teachers in an aroused and hostile mood.

The nation's teachers were one of the most damaging of the winds which blew down the GOP political house. In fact, they probably belong in fourth place. The farmers were first. Labor came second and the Negro vote was third. The teachers certainly were next as one of the major groups which turned away from Dewey.

That Dewey, in his care not to offend anyone, should have alienated the four best-organized groups in the nation, will remain one of the ironies of our time.

In all the States that Mr. Truman carried he ran second to the State tickets in all save one, his home State of Missouri. The State machines were out to save their own organizations, a perfectly understandable plan. They saved them well, and the teachers voted almost 100 percent for Harry S. Truman and labor got out its members to vote. This plus the normal Democratic vote not affiliated with any bloc, was enough to bring him the unexpected and literally astounding victory in the Middle West farm States. There the farm and teacher votes were especially well organized.

Appointments

Meanwhile, the set-up of the official family remains of speculative interest. If I had to guess at one of them I would predict that Jonathan Daniels, editor and publisher of the Raleigh News and Observer, will at least be offered the position of Secretary of the Navy when and if that position becomes vacant after Jan. 20.

He is the son of the greatly beloved and respected Josephus Daniels, who was Secretary of the Navy under Woodrow Wilson. The appointment, if tendered, would inevitably possess a strong sentimental appeal.

Sun-11-28-48

Josephus Daniels' last real speech was made in Georgia at the time the Warm Springs property was turned over to the State of Georgia to be made into a State park. On that day when platitudes were dripping from the lips of the speakers like drops from the spring shower that fell at the beginning of the program, his voice was raised in courage and strength. It was easily the high point of the day—the only thrill in a long program.

Jonathan Daniels joined President Truman's tour after it got off to a poor start. He generally is credited with being one of those who planned the fighting speeches and some of the phrases which caught the ear of the farmers in the Middle West. He earned a high appointment and he is an able man.

Patronage

There will not likely be any open attack on those two Dixiecrat candidates, Strom Thurmond and Fielding Wright, of South Carolina and Mississippi.

They simply will be ignored. Their patronage requests will be put into the wastebasket. In South Carolina Sen. Olin Johnson will get what he wants. One of the factors which caused Strom Thurmond to run, according to South Carolinians in the know, was that he believed he would be able to build a machine strong enough to defeat Johnson in the next Senate race. As National Committeeman from South Carolina he will have less influence with the party than Tom Dewey, a fate he earned. The same will be true in Mississippi.

One of the ironies of the Dixiecrat movement now is that having disfranchised their people to begin with, some of the leaders now are trying to work out a plan to disfranchise them again. In Louisiana there is a strong movement to cast the electoral votes for Harry Truman. It is possible that about half the 40 votes pledged to Thurmond will desert him. If it happens it will be added testimony to the real character of the Dixiecrat movement.

MACON—In session here is the annual convention of the Georgia Farm Bureau. Its convention, coming so shortly after the Truman victory, focuses attention on the meaning of that victory.

It is best illustrated, perhaps, by the plaintive comments of Minnesota's defeated Republican Representative, Harold Knutson, former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Mr. Knutson says he was the victim of a whispering campaign which branded him as an enemy of "rural electrification, old-age assistance, price support for farm commodities, farm co-operatives and aid to Europe."

In reply, the Democrats say they did not whisper those charges. They shouted them.

This explains, too, why Iowa contributed her votes to Harry Truman—a vote which, next to California's, was the most stunning one of them all.

Atlanta Ga

This was a farm victory even more than it was a labor victory, although, admittedly, the farm and labor vote were the sinews of it. The labor organizations had sought to have someone else nominated and their fight was not so much for Truman as for the defeat of Congressmen and Senators hostile to the labor program.

Meaning

Certain commentators and analysists are trying to say that, after all, the Truman victory was close insofar as his plurality was concerned; that one change in each 19 votes would have elected Dewey, and so on.

This is an error as corrupting of our national thinking as was that which accepted the polls, even while we saw farm discontent with Dewey, labor's hard work and the fact that many Democratic congressional candidates were running strong in normally Republican States—Iowa, for example.

Mandate

The Truman mandate is not to be found in his margin over Dewey. But the mandate is there. It exists in the congressional vote.

Knutson was against the farm program and against TVA and REA.

He got beat.

Brooks, of Illinois; Ball, of Minnesota; Revercomb, of West Virginia; Robertson, of Wyoming; Dworshak, of Idaho—all met defeat because they were identified with opposition to farmers or to farm interests, or because they were closely identified with greedy interests which represented that position.

TVA

Dworshak, for example, led the fight against TVA and the proposed steam plant appropriation. He teamed with Representative Ploeser, of Missouri, who was chairman of the House Committee which refused the steam plant appropriation. Both were defeated.

The inescapable "QUED" of it is that the people want TVA extended and they want more TVAs where the river valleys make such development logical.

Republican National Chairman Hugh Scott, who was re-elected to the House, has said that the inescapable pattern is there—the people voted against reaction and isolationism.

New Deal

The fact is, surprising and unexpected though it be, that this is the first New Deal victory in 12 years. The Roosevelt victories of 1940 and 1944 were won because the people wanted him to direct foreign policy and win the war. In 1946 the Republicans increased their trend of congressional victories to take control.

They gave the people a look and the people voted the Democrats back in a heavy-handed manner. Don't look for the Truman mandate in the electoral vote or in the plurality. It lies in the congressional results.

The South

It is perfectly true the Southern membership will remain conservative. It will oppose the civil rights bills if they are introduced in radical form.

But it is folly to believe that the Democrats from the South can't read trends. Even the middle-of-the-road members of the Senate and House will support welfare measures such as public housing, federal aid to education, public health and a modification of the Taft-Hartley law, even though they vigorously oppose civil rights measures and outright elimination of the labor law.

There are farmers in the South who voted for Truman because they thought Dewey meant 10-cent cotton and 20-cent tobacco. And the South, as has been said before, has cities of its own.

There is not much comfort in the outlook for those who wanted to stop the social revolution which began in 1932 in this country and has continued, in typical American style, within the framework of our pattern and laws while in other nations it took the pattern of civil war, fallen governments and dictatorships.

And the farmer has been the chief force behind it.

Continuing Polls

Wash Post

I am writing to advise that the reader does not appreciate your continued display of the Gallup Poll.

The so-called "polls" have mishandled every presidential election for the past [illegible] years.

[illegible]

Each time the Democrats trailed badly until the moment before election—then suddenly the day before election Gallup & Co. narrowed the gap down to a respectable horse race. This time they even convinced themselves and forgot to narrow the gap. If the Democrats couldn't win three times in a row but did win, can this be coincidence?

Wash. D.C.

In the short time that I have lived in Washington, I have been personally contacted by The Washington Post pollsters twice. In the 30-odd years that I have lived in the United States I have never been contacted by the Gallup Poll. Furthermore, I know of no people who have ever been contacted by this farcical Institute.

Courier's Face Should Be Red

To the Editor:

Is your face red, too? Along with the poll-takers, the Dixiecrats, the Wallace followers, and a few million Repubicans, plus a very large number of newspapers and commentators, your face should be very red indeed from the amazing results of the recent election.

Until very recently, I had thought The Courier was very fair in its comment and news stories about President Truman, especially since his amazing stand on civil rights. But recently it became plain for everyone to see that some Republican money must have found its way into Courier hands.

34a(2)

You were not very clever in concealing what now appears to be a fact. Your tune changed too abruptly, and that was after the Republican machinery was well organized, and money collected with which newspaper support was bought. Well, you know by now that a very large majority of the newspapers have been wrong in the last five elections, and it took a little scrappy "show-me" Missourian to lick the pack, and practically single-handed.

He reached the average American by his straight-forward appeal on close-to-the-heart issues. The newspapers did not do that, so why not quit trying to mould public opinion? And especially should Negro newspapers stop trying to deliver the Negro vote.

In my opinion, Mr. Truman is the first President since Lincoln's time to go to bat to try to improve the general status of Negroes in this country. President Lincoln gave the Negro physical fredom, plus a great degree of political freedom. President Truman has picked up where Lincoln left off, and has tackled the job of giving us complete freedom, political, economic and social. From the beginning he never wavered in his fight for civil rights once it was brought before the public. Not even after the Dixie revolt during the Democratic Convention.

Personally, I feel very sorry for Governor Dewey's humiliating defeat. I think he is a very fine, broad-minded man. But his defeat was not of a personal nature. The task of pulling a reactionary, do-nothing party to victory was more than he could do. Whenever the Republican party is purged of its moss-back, take-things-for-granted leaders, and when they show some concern for the common people, they can really compete for our votes. Voters these days do their own thinking and voting. So take my advice and stop insulting intelligent people with your efforts to deliver our votes. We

by Charles H. Ho[illegible]

The election of Pre[illegible] Truman brings back to [illegible] the Southern Senators [illegible] sentatives who have bee[illegible] gress so long from lack of [illegible] tive opposition that th[illegible] worn out the seats of the[illegible].

The one-party system in the South has presented the country with Senator Russell for another term. He was unopposed for re-election in Georgia. It was good he was in Georgia because it is inconceivable that any Northern State would make the mistake of electing "Reb" Russell twice.

Baltimore, Md.

And the same goes for those other senators who mirror the intelligence and culture of their States: such as Ellender of Louisiana, and Eastland of Mississippi.

Need Their Help?

There is really no reason, except cold, hard practical politics, why President Truman or the Democrats of the North, the East and the West should recognize the renegade Dixiecrats of South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana as Democrats.

34a(2)

But when one realizes that these four States have eight senators and that the margin of Democrats over Republicans in the Senate is only 12, we can expect the real Democrats to make a deal with the Dixiecrats and let them slink back into the party in order to provide a working Democratic majority in the Senate.

If the Republicans and the Lord together had not taken care of the extinguished Senator Bilbo, we should probably get "The Man" by seniority rule as the new "Mayor of Washington."

As it is, the voteless citizens of the District of Columbia will be fed Senator Johnston of South Carolina as chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, with Representative McMillan of South Carolina as chairman of the House Committee on the District.

The prospect of the District citizens getting the vote so long as these gentlemen from South Carolina can prevent it, is absolutely nil.

Reforming Lives

We can depend on the Southerners to grab at every important chairmanship in Congress which has jurisdiction over matters affecting race relations.

The Dixiecrats, having staged their Rebellion of 1948 and gone down to ignominious defeat, are now reforming their lines in order to block any civil rights program through squatting in the Committee Chairmanships in Congress.

Nevertheless, we have hopes. This election has demonstrated that the country is getting tired of the bad manners and ignorance of these unreconstructed rebels.

When one realizes that the Dixiecrats put up as their candidates for President and Vice President the Governors of the States of South Carolina and Mississippi (two States with just about the worst records for illiteracy and social progress) we see just how desperate their situation really is.

The Dixiecrats whooped and hollered that they were the only group which could save the country from destruction, but after Governor Thurmond had belched forth all his worst fire and brimstone the Dixiecrats were able to attract less than 3 per cent of the popular vote. The tail is no longer wagging the dog.

Truman Is Honest

President Truman has given his word that he will do his best to carry out the Democratic Party platform. The election campaign showed he cannot be frightened and he does not back down.

He does not indulge in double-talk. He may not always be right, but he is always honest.

This means that the issue of civil rights is going to be brought before the Congress, and the Southern politicians are going to be forced to declare themselves once more before the entire country and the world.

LIBERAL and labor groups in Washington are in difficulties at present as a result of their unanticipated successes in the election. As in a military offensive which suddenly overruns an area, they have made a big advance before all the problems of the new terrain have been worked out. Now they find themselves engaged in an intra-party struggle with Northern conservatives and Dixiecrats who hold commanding points of vantage in the party organization.

The problem of the liberal forces is complicated by the fact that President Truman has been traveling or on vacation at Key West most of the time since the election. On a brief visit to Washington he expressed his gratitude to liberal organizations for their aid in getting out the vote, and—what was more to the point—told his Cabinet that he held it obligated to help him and Vice-President Barkley carry out their campaign promises. But in Key West he is surrounded by his inner circle of advisers at a time when decisions which will determine the whole course of his Administration are undoubtedly being made. The results of some of these decisions should be apparent before long, and it will be possible to see then in what order of importance the President rates his obligations.

The tendency of old friends and colleagues in Congress to be very tolerant of differences of principle among them always increases the gap between what people vote for in a national election and what they actually get from the Administration they have installed. At this writing, for instance, Vice-President-to-be Barkley has nominated Scott Lucas of Illinois to succeed him as Senate majority leader, and it would be extremely difficult for the President to turn this nomination down. No Congressional figure on the scene today has served the party more effectively than Barkley. Lucas raised money and gave the President other aid in the campaign, but the fact remains that he is one of the most conservative figures in the party outside the Southern contingent. He voted originally for the Taft-Hartley act—though he voted later to sustain the President's veto—and he favors an alliance with the Franco dictatorship in Spain. Also, he tried to block the liberalizing efforts of the civil-rights proponents on the platform committee at Philadelphia. For these reasons some liberal elements are strongly opposing his appointment as Senate leader and urging the selection of a Senator of more trustworthy liberal outlook, such as McMahon, O'Mahoney, or even possibly Chairman McGrath of the Democratic National Committee. President Truman's decision on this question will give some indication of the relative importance he assigns to getting his program through Congress and paying off more direct and personal political obligations.

Sat. 11-20-48

THE Democratic state machines of four Southern states attempted and almost succeeded in carrying through one of the greatest political betrayals of American history. One might expect the national Democratic Party, therefore, to take the Dixiecrats at their word and reassign their committee seats in Congress. But next January eight Senators and twenty-eight Representatives from the dissident states will come striding back into Congress, with the monumental assurance of their breed, and line up for their seniority assignments, daring the Democratic leaders to mention the little matter of the November 2 double-cross. And they will get by with it. Although they will certainly continue to vote with the most reactionary Republicans whenever the chips are down—as they have done since 1938—the Democratic Party will nevertheless be glad to list them as Democrats since they hold a numerical balance of power in the Senate and can muster somewhat similar strength in the House with the aid of other Southern delegations.

One result of this will be to put Representative John Rankin back at his post as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and possibly also as chairman of the Un-American Affairs Committee, where he can continue to broadcast his special version of Americanism, Christianity, democracy, and race. It is grimly edifying to observe the Northern Republican press giving the Democratic committee columns of free advice on why it should let this Trojan-horse delegation back into the party.

The House Rules Committee will continue to be a reactionary stronghold in the Eighty-first Congress, as it has been since the alliance of Republicans and Southern Democrats was formed ten years ago. Eight of the committee's places will go to nominal Democrats and four to Republicans, but since two of the Democrats assured of places are Eugene Cox of Georgia and Howard W. Smith of Virginia, who vote consistently with the Republicans, the division on key legislation will frequently result in the stalemate of a six-to-six tie. This was the case in the Seventy-ninth Congress. Thus the coalition may again be able to delay indefinitely important legislation which must get through this committee on its progress to the floor. Among the bills which the Rules Committee will act on in the Eighty-first Congress will be those repealing the Taft-Hartley act, reenacting the excess-profits tax, granting federal aid to education, and extending social security and health insurance

Democratic Victory Puts Southern Reactionaries Back In Power

Journal Guide

Sat 11-13-48

THE unexpected victory of President HARRY S. TRUMAN over New York's Governor THOMAS E. DEWEY in the presidential election on Tuesday, fortunately for the Negro and other minority groups, leaves in the White House for the next four years a man whose declared stand on human rights is an enlightened and liberal one. On that score, the Negro has nothing to fear in the election of the Democratic nominee.

34a(2)

Norfolk Va.

The position of the JOURNAL AND GUIDE as stated several weeks ago is that, as far as constructive legislation guaranteeing civil and other rights to minority groups is concerned, the chances of passage would have been measurably greater with DEWEY in the White House and a Republican-controlled Congress behind him. A Democratic victory, we pointed out, while giving the Presidency to a man who had spoken out boldly for civil rights, would nullify his good intentions by putting in control of most important congressional committees the senior Democrats. And these are the anti-civil rights, anti-labor, anti-Negro reactionary southerners whose political and social philosophy has been openly preached throughout the campaign by South Carolina's Governor J. STROM THURMOND, the Dixiecrat candidate for President.

It remains to be seen, of course what the 81st Congress, dominated by old-line Democrats, is going to do for the Negro. But the prospect of a Congress, with Texan SAM RAYBURN as Speaker of the House, with Kentuckian ALBEN BARKLEY as Vice President, and with all of the major committees headed or dominated by southern Democrats (because of their seniority) should give Negro leaders who had advocated Mr TRUMAN's election very little to be happy about.

One fact stands out clearly. A candidate for President cannot avoid the vital issues with which the people are concerned during his campaign and expect the voters to do likewise. Assured by his supporters that he had the election "in the bag," and doubtless lulled by the almost unanimous findings of the pollsters that the result would be a Republican landslide, Mr. DEWEY played safe and ran the risk of offending no one during the closing weeks of the campaign. He talked about the safe subjects of unity, love, peace and happiness.

Sat 11-13-48

On the other hand, Mr. TRUMAN cut right to the bone of the issues which the people were vitally concerned with—legislation (or lack of it) passed by the 80th Congress, inflation, cost of living and similar matters. Mr. DEWEY did not answer him forthrightly. He did not defend the legislative record of the Republican 80th Congress with sufficient vigor to convince the people.

In that mistaken judgment, he reaped the same harvest which JOE WALCOTT reaped in his first fight with JOE LOUIS. The New Jersey pugilist had done so well in the first 12 rounds that his supporters advised him to play safe and coast to a 15-round victory. WALCOTT proceeded to do his now famous back-pedaling act for the last three rounds and thereby forfeited the best opportunity he ever will have to become heavyweight champion of the world.

It is a safe supposition that, by taking victory for granted, Mr. DEWEY has likewise forfeited his last chance to be President of the United States.

General

George Hails Election As Victory for South

The Constitution

34a(2) Thur 11-4-48

BY M. L. ST. JOHN

Atlanta Ga

As President Truman's victory in Georgia became more and more overwhelming, Sen. George hailed the re-election of the Democratic nominee as a boon to the South, and a Georgia labor leader declared it showed Southern people were more liberal than their Congressmen.

Mr. Truman brushed aside the Dixiecratic threat in the South by picking up more than enough electoral votes over the Nation to win. The Dixiecrats carried South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi to win 28 electoral votes. They were leading in Louisiana, which has 10 votes. The States' Righters placed second in Georgia, and third in most other Southern States which remained loyal to the Democratic Party.

Meanwhile, the revitalized Republicans laid plans for running a State ticket in Georgia in 1950. Henry Wallace's Progressive Party said it would maintain a party organization in this State. Ed Willingham, of Augusta, Georgia head of the States' Rights Party, said the future of this group as a State organization had not been decided.

President Truman turned back the first major effort since 1929 to take Georgia out of the Democratic column. With 1,318 of the 1,736 precincts reported, Truman held a 77,048 majority over the combined total of all his opponents.

Thur 11-4-48

The Democratic nominee had 228,953 votes. States' Righter Strom Thurmond had 80,427, Republican Thomas Dewey, 68,745; Progressive Henry Wallace, 1,723, and Prohibitionist Claude Watson 1,015.

While some business leaders saw the Nation leaning toward a "labor government" because of the part that labor played in the re-election of President Truman, George Googe, Georgia's AFL director and a State-at-large Democratic Presidential Elector, said labor would expect from the next administration "only that to which labor is justly entitled." This includes repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law and passage of "sound, mutually satisfactory industrial relations legislation."

Thur 11-4-48

Googe said there was no comparison with the labor government in England and the labor movement in America. The English labor movement was socialistic, he pointed out, while the American labor movement was based on the profits system of capitalism.

Sen. George said the Southern Democratic Congressmen could battle the socalled civil-rights program in a Democratic Congress much more effectively than they could in a Republican Congress.

George said Mr. Truman's "magnificent victory" proved that the rank and file of Americans did not wish to change administrations when all people have a job or can get a job. The election of a Democratic President and Democratic Congress, he said, meant the continuation of America's present foreign policy. He added that farmers felt more comfortable under a Democratic administration. George said labor was active in the re-election of Truman.

Sen. George and Rep. Carl Vinson are expected to be returned to chairmanship of two of the most important committees in Congress. George was Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and Vinson was Chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee when the Democrats controlled Congress in the past. Most Georgia Congressmen held important committee assignments.

34a(2)

George expressed the hope that the States' Righters would return to the Democratic Party.

Googe felt that the Dixiecraters had put the South and Southern Congressmen in almost a hopeless position.

Gov.-Nominate Herman Talmadge, who remained silent in the presidential campaign, said the election results were "surprising."

Thur 11-4-48

The Republican Party showed big gains in Fulton, Chatham and Bibb Counties, where its campaign was intensified. Incomplete returns in Fulton showed 14,472 Republican votes, as compared with 6,380 in 1944. Chatham polled 5,972, as compared with 1,001. Bibb had 3,013, as compared with 1,354. State Republican Chairman W. R. Tucker said: "We have only begun to fight for a two-party system in Georgia."

Miss Branson Price, Director of the Wallace campaign, said she wouldn't remain in Georgia, but the Georgia leadership would continue the party organization. She complained that election managers failed to count the "write-in" votes for Larkin Marshall, Macon Negro candidate for the Senate; Jim Barfoot, candidate for Governor, and Floyd Hunter, candidate for Congress in the Fifth District.

committee in Congress—the Committee on Finance—which he was forced to vacate when the Republicans ousted the Democrats from control two years ago.

Sen. Russell, Georgia's junior member, will become the ranking majority member of the newly organized Armed Services Committee, having jurisdiction over military, naval and air service components of national defense.

And at the same time, Sen. Russell again will be awarded the chairmanship of one of the important subcommittees of the influential appropriations committee.

Sen. Russell also is regarded as having a chance for selection as Senate majority leader in the Eighty-First Congress. His principal opponents for the post probably would be Sen. Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland, who ranks him in service, and Sens. Pat McCarran, of Nevada, Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, and Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois, all of whom he ranks.

Thur 11-4-48

Sen. George also will return to his position as the ranking majority member of the Senate Foreign Relations body, the group that aids in the formulation of our foreign policy. He is a former chairman of this committee.

On the House side, Rep. Carl Vinson, of Milledgeville, dean of the Georgia delegation in the lower body, will be named Chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the House.

Rep. John S. Wood, of Canton, will take over chairmanship of the House Un-American Committee, and Reps. Eugene Cox, of Camilla, and Paul Brown, of Elberton, will move up to positions of influence on the Rules and Banking Committees, respectively. Both are the ranking members of their committees, two of the most important in the House organization.

As a result of the organization, Georgia will take over a highly strategic position in the new Congress, with some of the most desirable chairmanships on the slate falling to members of the State delegation. These positions will be made more important by virtue of the fact that the Democrats will exercise a greater control of Congress than has been held by the party since the elections in 1940.

TELLS WHY TRUMAN WON, HITS BIGOTRY

New Orleans [illegible]

(The Associated Press)

Tues 12-14-48

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 13.—Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said here President Truman was elected because "he was the first president who had the courage to tackle the problem of segregation head-on."

34a(2)

He told the national convention of the Student Commission for Educational Democracy that "the existence in this country of racial bigotry is the greatest single source of attack by the world on American shortcomings."

Robbins Burling of Trumansburg, N. Y., a Yale student, was elected president.

South Still Can Stymie Truman

The Constitution

24a(2)

WASHINGTON—The course of events in the coming Congress depends largely on two factors. First, whether President Truman will now make terms with the Southern wing of his party. Second, whether the national economy continues at its present high level of prosperity or comes a depression cropper.

The South still holds the balance of power in both houses, strongly bolstered by eligibility under the seniority rule to most of the important committee chairmanships.

The Southerners certainly are coming back more determined than ever to fight to the last gasp against every measure designed to coerce their section in matters of racial equality.

Tues 11-9-48

If Mr. Truman agrees to sidetrack or soft-pedal his civil rights program, the South may go along with him on other phases of legislation. But, if the President begins by reiterating his civil rights recommendations and presses specific bills to carry them out, he is likely to find himself as completely stymied on domestic legislation as he was in both the Democratic Seventy-Ninth and the Republican Eightieth Congresses.

Atlanta Ga

Take the President's proposal to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. By actual count, 244 members of the House and 50 Senators who voted to override the President's veto of this measure remain on the job. And four new Senators—Smith, of Maine, and Mundt, of South Dakota, Republicans, and Chapman, of Kentucky, and Johnson, of Texas, Democrats—voted to override in the House.

Two hard-boiled Southern conservatives—Sen. George, of Georgia, and Rep. Doughton, of North Carolina—not only will return to chairmanship of the tax-laying committees, but the close partisan division under the new LaFollette-Monroney Act insured conservative majorities in these committees.

Assuming that they are placated on the civil rights issue, Sens. George and Doughton might co-operate in a moderate upward revision of last year's Republican tax schedule. If the President continues to bludgeon the South, on the other hand, all of his tax recommendations are likely to land in the wastebasket.

Rep. Cannon, of Missouri, returns to chairmanship of the House Committee on Appropriations, but of the 15 other returning Democratic members of that committee, eight are from the South.

And in the Senate, Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee, becomes Appropriations Chairman, probably backed by a conservative majority.

Tues 11-9-48

The economic danger which Mr. Truman faces was sharply indicated by the cataclysmic drop in stock prices last Wednesday on the news of Democratic victory. For some time business analysts have been saying that while big corporations, helped by cost-plus government contracts, were making abnormal profits, many middle-sized and small businesses were in distress due to continually rising costs.

How Mr. Truman will react to the symptoms of business pessimism is not disclosed, but certainly Congress is sensitive to any sign of approaching economic depression.

Altogether, it would seem that Mr. Truman must tread softly if he is to remesh the Democratic Party gears and hang on to the high national well-being that existed on his re-election day.

Here Are Some Answers for Dewey

The Constitution — Sat 11-6-48
Atlanta Ga

34a(2)

NEW YORK—"What happened?" was the first question asked of Tom Dewey when, having recovered from what must have been the greatest shock of his life, he came downstairs to meet the baggy-eyed press boys early Wednesday afternoon. He could find no answer, but it would be interesting to hear from him now that he has had a time to sit down and give the phenomenon—if Mr. Truman's election was a phenomenon—[illegible] of his analytical mind.

He'll get an answer in time, for time is one thing he'll have in abundance when he leaves Albany in 1950.

Dewey doubtless is through with active politics. He needs money. He once quit a $50,000-a-year private law practice to take an $8,000-a-year job under a frankly hostile Democratic D. A. His subsequent jobs in public office have not brought him a tenth of the material rewards he could find in a law office.

This is just a guess, but when he finally does sift out the reasons for his defeat, these will be among them:

1—People don't change Presidents when times are good and there is little or no unemployment;

2—The polls, which Mr. Truman assayed as strictly phony, viewed the situation so rosily that probably more Republicans refrained from voting than did Democrats;

3—He erred in trying to be all things to all men, instead of spitting on his hands and saying something—as he did when he beat the runaway Harold E. Stassen in Oregon's primaries.

4—He is cursed by a certain frigidity of personality that keeps the average soul from warming up to him;

5—Gov. Warren's tepid campaign failed to give off an ounce of the zip and forthrightness expected of the durable Californian at the time of his nomination.

Sat 11-6-48

During the news conference Dewey, in pretty good spirits after a blow which, I believe, would have killed an older man, remarked that another one-half of one percent of the votes, in three or four States, would have changed the picture.

By the same token, Mr. Truman would have won Dewey's own New York State, and its 47 electoral votes, with a scant 50,000 or so more votes. Those votes were taken away from the President by Wallace. In the South, of course, the President would have won the four States Strom Thurmond captured, and their 38 electoral votes.

34a(2)

It was the closest presidential race since 1916 only because of Wallace and Thurmond. If those two had not formed their splinter movements Mr. Truman would have won handily from Mr. Dewey.

One wonders how any other Republican would have done against the Democratic standard bearer who overcame such appalling odds as a split party, lack of campaign funds, widespread ridicule by the press and radio and defections from his own circle.

Stassen? Possibly. He would have picked up more votes among service men, within labor ranks and liberal circles than did Dewey. Beyond Stassen I can see no others who might have made a better showing than the New York Governor. Taft, I believe, would have been badly beaten.

Sat 11-6-48

There was a prophetic touch to the bulletin board of Republican headquarters in Washington on the morning of election day. For weeks before that day, a sign had proclaimed the number of days left before the election of the GOP standard bearer. On Monday, therefore, the sign read, "One more day until election." But on election day itself some wag made it read, "1.460 more days until election."

Sat 11-6-48

One of the Hollywood hammos who plugged for Dewey called up Dewey headquarters when the Truman landslide began and said, peevishly, "If Dewey loses I'll have to make pictures in Canada!" Imagine!

Also at Dewey headquarters, a new record for looking to the silver lining was established by one of his workers. When it was all over, except for the removal of the debris, he said:

"Well, we really scared the pants off those Democrats this time!"

Argus was the only major St. Louis newspaper supporting the candidacy of the President and led the way of the Negro press nationally with the Chicago Defender.

The courageous Truman, who never backed up from his statement on the civil rights made to Congress in a special address last February, went in on the strong vote of the working people and the Negro as well as many liberals of the middle and upper classes.

Fri 11-5-48

In the closest race since Hughes was nosed out by President Wilson in 1916, Truman climbed to victory, which was not established with certainty until late Wednesday, when it was ascertained the President was leading his chief opponent in 27 states with 279 electoral votes, while the Republican candidate Thomas Dewey was ahead in only 17 with 214 electoral votes. A total of 266 votes were needed to win.

34a(2)

The States Right, Dixiecrat candidate Thurmond, claimed victory in four States, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina. Henry Wallace failed to carry a single State, although he got strong support in New York and Pennsylvania where the failure of Truman was laid to Wallace's presence in the race.

The sweep of the Negro vote by the President was general in most of the heavily populated areas of cities where they hold dominant voting power.

In Truman's own home State, where he carried in the entire Democratic slate with him, the power of the people's candidate's pursuasion was seen. Five Negroes, all Democrats, three in St. Louis and one in Kansas City, won seats in the State legislature. This is the largest number to ever be on in the legislature. Last year there were four, three of them Democrats.

Fri 11-5-48

In the local voting, most conclusive evidence of the sweep was shown in the 6th Ward Republican stronghold of Billy Morant and Alderman J. C. Caston. This ward, which was the only one in the city to go Republican in the Roosevelt sweep of 1936 and which had remained Republican for more than 24 years under the renown leadership of the "Big Four" Clark, Harrison, Morant and Walker, gave Truman 6,199 to Dewey's 2,854. This pattern was followed in all of the city's heavy Negro wards.

In the predominately Negro wards of Kansas City, Truman held a three to one lead. In one of these wards, he had 334 to Dewey's 71.

Margaret Wilson, Progressive; and Josiah Thomas, GOP, candidates lost. Mrs. Wilson, however, made one of the strongest races of any of the party's members in her bid for the U. S. Congress.

One of the most significant results of Truman's victory was that the Democrats gained control of both the Senate and the House. He will now be able to take a strong position and direct his policies in the Congress. He will now have more chance to put over the civil rights proposals which the 80th Congress turned down.

97 Negroes Sought Important Posts In Nov. 2 Election

The Courier
Sat 11-6-48
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Approximately ninety-seven Negro candidates for high offices, ranging from the U. S. Senate downward, were carried on ballots handed to voters throughout the Nation on Nov. 2. It was the highest number of Negro office-seekers in any single election since Reconstruction Days.

Highlighting the election this year was the presentation of Negro candidates for the U. S. Senate by Henry A. Wallace's Progressive party, marking the first time since Reconstruction Days that Negroes have been on the ballot for that high office. The Progressives also offered several Congressional candidates, as well as seekers of high State posts.

NEW YORK

Headed by incumbent Democratic Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, nineteen New York City aspirants were in the field for the U. S. Congress and the New York State Assembly. Two, in addition to Congressman Powell, sought seats in Congress. They were Harold C. Burton, Republican of the Twenty-second District, and Mrs. Ada B. Jackson of the Tenth District on the ALP ticket. 2

The remaining sixteen were fighting it out for the State Assembly. Candidates in the dense Harlem area include the Rev. Ben Richardson (Twenty-first District), James Malloy (Twenty-third District), both Democrats; Golden Brown (R. Eleventh District); Thomas Dickens, backed by Tammany Hall and Cyril Stevens of the ALP.

Harold Stevens, Democratic incumbent of the Thirteenth District, was opposed by Fred H. Farrar, (R), Albert H. Bland (ALP) and Oscar Buckvar, a Liberal. The contest in the Twelfth District was between Eugene E. Kem (R.), Elijah Crump (D), Lynden Henry (ALP) and Clarence Francis (Liberal). Veteran Hulan Jack, Fourteenth District Democrat, faced Israel Davila (R) and Manual Medina (ALP).

CHICAGO 3

In the Nation's strongest Democratic bailiwick, Chicago, incumbent Congressman William L. Dawson (D) was expected to return from the First Illinois District. Democrats Corneal Davis and Fred Smith seemed sure to retain their seats in the State Senate. Charles J. Jenkins, incumbent Republican State Representative, looked like a certainty for re-election. In the Fifth District, Rep. Charles Skyles (D) was favored for re-election over C. Francis Stratford, his Republican opponent.

Although a hot fight seemed certain for the post of Judge of the Municipal Court, held by Wendell E. Green, Judge Green was favored over his foes, Fred (Duke) Slater (D) and Graham T. Perry and Alva L. Bates, both Republicans.

PHILADELPHIA 4

Philadelphia, third largest city in the Nation, was the scene of intense interest, with ten candidates seeking election to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives and one Negro, Republican Hobson Reynolds, running for the State Senate.

Seven of the Legislature candidates had had previous service and one of them, Dr. Edwin Thompson (R) has served seven terms. Others with previous service include J. Thomas Petigrew (D—Forty-seventh Ward); the Rev. Clarence Smith (R—Forty-seventh Ward); Howard M. Henry (R—Fifty-second Ward); the Rev. D. W. Hoggard in a four-ward combination; Lewis Mintess, eight-year GOP legislator in the Seventh Ward, and city GOP leader William Upshur in the Thirtieth Ward.

Grandson of a U. S. Congressman during Reconstruction Days, Magistrate Joseph Rainey of Philadelphia was making a spirited bid for Congress on the Progressive ticket in the Fourth Congressional District. Magistrate Rainey deserted the Democrats in order to support the Wallace forces and bid for a position once held by his grandfather.

The veteran Mintess was opposed by Mrs. N. Mossell Griffin, Seventh Ward Democrat; Granville E. Jones (D) was bucking Upshur in the Thirtieth Ward and Samuel Wadkins (R) was a newcomer to the field of hopefuls from the Thirty-second Ward.

MICHIGAN 5

In Michigan, two Negroes from strongly Democratic Wayne County, aspired for posts in the Michigan State Senate. They were Robert L. Ward (Third District) and Leroy White (Second District), both Republicans. For State Representative, Edgar Currie (D), a candidate-at-large, was expected to win, since he had the backing of both AFL and CIO labor groups, as well as party support.

Dr. Samuel Milton, another Democrat, was a strong candidate for the post of Wayne County Coroner and was expected to come through to victory. Because of the strongly Democratic vote in the Detroit area, the Republicans were not expected to carry too much weight. All four Wayne County candidates come from Detroit.

PITTSBURGH

Not much of a fight was in prospect in Pittsburgh, where only two Negro candidates were in the field for major offices. Both sought the same post and from the same district.

Pennsylvania's oldest Negro legislator in years of service, Representative Homer A. Brown (D) was opposed by Walter C. Rainey, a Republican, in the First District for the State House of Representatives. Mr. Brown, brother of former Michigan State Senator Joseph Brown, was expected to be returned easily to the seat he has held for thirteen years.

CALIFORNIA

On the West Coast, Assemblyman Augustus Hawkins of Los Angeles, Calif., with the nomination of both Republicans and Democrats, was expected to retain his seat in the State Assembly from the Sixty-second District.

At the same time, the first Negro ever to qualify for election from Northern California, W. Byron Rumford of Oakland and the Seventh District, was making a strong bid for election to the State Assembly under the Democratic banner and carrying the backing of both AFL and CIO labor groups.

California Progressives offered Francis Williams of Los Angeles as a candidate for the State Assembly from the Sixty-seventh District.

PROGRESSIVE PARTY 6

Throughout the Nation keen attention was focused on the voting on Progressive party candidates totaling fifty, and seeking offices ranging downward from the U. S. Senate.

Although the Georgia Board of Elections ruled Macon Editor Larkin Marshall off the ballot for the U. S. Senate, Progressive candidate William T. Brown, a Maxton, N. C., minister, was on the ballot for the U. S. Senate from North Carolina. There were also two Negro Progressive candidates for Congress from that State: Robert Lathan in the Fourth District and Robert E. Davis in the Seventh District.

The Progressives offered fourteen Negro Congressional candidates. In addition to the two North Carolinians, they were: 7

Sidney Moore, Calif. (who withdrew in favor of Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas); Earl B. Dickerson, Chicago, First Illinois District; Willard B. Ransome, Indianapolis, Eleventh Indiana District; Alfred Carroll, Third Kentucky District; Dr. J. E. C. Camper, Baltimore, Fourth Maryland District; Mrs. Margaret Bush Wilson, St. Louis, Eleventh Missouri District; Dr. Ulysses Campbell, Eleventh New Jersey District; Mrs. Ada B. Jackson (ALP), Brooklyn, Tenth New York District); Magistrate Rainey, (Pennsylvania); the Rev. Dwight V. Kyle, Memphis, Tenth Tennessee District, and Jerry O. Gilliam, Norfolk, Va., Second Virginia District.

The other thirty-four candidates included the Rev. Stacy Adams of McKinney, Tex., running for Lieutenant-Governor of Texas; Mrs. Eslanda Goode Robeson, wife of the actor, for Secretary of State in Connecticut; Mrs. Pauline Kigh Reed of Chicago, for Secretary of State in Illinois; Mrs. Edna L. Johnson for State Auditor in Indiana, and numerous candidates for State Legislature and other positions. In Chicago, Ullysses S. Keys ran for Judge of the Municipal Court.

Lewis E. Austin, Durham, N. C., editor; the Rev. F. D. Gholston of Harrisburg, Pa., and Robert Henson of Philadelphia ran for the Legislature of North Carolina and Pennsylvania, respectively. 8

Election Outlawed Alibis

The Courier
34a(2)
Sat 11-13-48
Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE American people have elected Harry S. Truman and a Congress which is controlled in both houses by the Democratic party, and to that victory the colored citizens seem to have overwhelmingly contributed.

We are still of the opinion that the interests of the American people in general and the colored citizens in particular would have been better served if Thomas E. Dewey had been sent to the White House.

In winning the election, however, Mr. Truman and his victorious associates have been placed in a position where they must either do as they promised or stand convicted before the Nation and the world as repudiating those promises.

In short, the decision of the American electorate on Nov. 2, 1948 eliminated and outlawed any alibis which may be offered in the future for not initiating and passing the legislation which the administration has been backing.

The chief interest of the Negro public for a long time has been the enactment of President Truman's widely trumpeted civil rights program: i. e., an anti-poll tax law, an anti-lynching law and a fair employment practices law, and it was largely because it believed that a triumphant Democratic administration would do so that it threw its votes to the Democrats.

Now that the Democratic party is firmly in control of the Government we should wait and see what it is going to do toward implementing the heralded civil rights legislation.

The Democratic superiority in the House at this writing is overwhelming, they have a twelve-vote superiority in the Senate and they owe nothing to either the Progressives or the Dixiecrats.

If they do not pass the civil rights legislation in the 81st Congress it will not be because they are unable to do so but because they do not want to do so, and alibis will be strictly out of order.

There will also be no excuse for not initiating Federal aid to education.

Before the election President Truman issued two executive orders designed to eliminate color discrimination in the civil service and the armed services, and his spokesmen assured us that these orders would be enforced.

With the President writing his own ticket because of his personal triumph, he now can have no excuse for not doing what he indicated a desire to do.

As for racial segregation in the armed forces (which he vowed to eliminate) he has every opportunity to end it immediately, because he enjoys absolute control and cannot blame a Republican-controlled Congress for hampering him.

As a matter of fact President Truman could have issued a simple order to end segregated military and naval units a long time ago because he was then, as now, Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces.

We shall also expect to hear no alibi with regard to the erection of more so-called low-cost housing.

In brief, when a President has a Congress dominated by his own party and no commitments to speak of because he virtually won his election single-handed he has no excuse for not doing what he promised to do.

Sat. 11-13-48

President Truman deserves great credit for taking a strong position on these issues in which colored Americans are most interested (a stronger position than his predecessor ever took), but now that he is firmly seated for the next four years, colored Americans who made possible his victory are looking to him to prove his sincerity.

If he fails to do what he promised to do the blame will rest squarely upon his shoulders and that of his party, and no conceivable alibis will free him from responsibility for such failure.

Birmingham News!

(From The Fayette County Times, Fayette)

The Democrats of America have won a great victory by having the people on their side, and not because of assertion, but by being of, for and with the people. What makes the Democratic Party great is that it makes up its own opinions, expresses its thoughts freely, and has conviction behind them.

34a(2)

The recent election was an unusual one and found expression of divergent views by many in high places. And many resented some expressions and fought to show their thoughts in an impressive maner. So much so that a number of states split its Democratic vote into two groups. All have voted, and Americans have said whom they want. Why all this jumping on bandwagons and trying to climb to fame over the mote in thy brother's eye, when there is a beam in your own eye that will ruin you if magnified.

Tues. 12-14-48

Why does not the South accept the verdict of the country, expressed by the mandate of the voters of all the states, and all get behind Mr. Truman and help him write the peace that America and the world needs just now?

Why don't the politicians quit jabbing at each other—the calling of the kettle black? Four states gave Gov. Thurmond their electoral votes, others gave Mr. Truman and Mr. Dewey theirs. Let them vote in the electoral college like they want to or according to their pledge to the people. I'm for the Democratic Party first, last and all the time, and I'm for my state to maintain as much freedom from federal intervention in domestic affairs as possible. I'm not for all Mr. Truman's ideas and expect to fight him on any he might bring up antagonistic to my section and my people. The same was true in Mr. Roosevelt's administration, in President Wilson's, and in those to come.

34a(2)

All the goodness is not wraped up in the Democratic Party, in Mr. Truman, nor in the Dixiecrats, but there is enough goodness in them all for us all, so why doesn't the politicians in all groups shut up? They owe it to their party and their country, but we wonder if they will show sense enough to do that.

This newspaper is expecting for great years of constructive legislation, and on this we expect to elect another great Democrat to lead America. All groups will subordinate themselves if the windjammers and crackbrains will shut up.

Astounding Political Victory

B'ham, Ala.

(From The Anniston Star)

34a(2)

The overwhelming success of President Truman at the polls on Tuesday constitutes the most astounding political victory ever achieved in a major contest in the entire history of the United States. It can be attributed to many causes, but the first and foremost of those causes must be admitted to be the faith and fortitude of the country boy from Independence, Mo., who never lost confidence in the good sense of the people of the United States and in his own ability as a campaigner.

When all is said and done, this was a people's victory. They were given the truth, and the truth will make them free of the injustices they have suffered at the hands of the monopoly lobbyists who pulled the strings that made their puppets in Congress jump to their bidding. There is every reason to believe that the next Congress will be less mercenary, however, as the president has been given an undisputd mandate to redress many of the people's wrongs.

But is is in our domestic affairs that the Truman victory will be felt to the greatest advantage of the people. It probably marks the end of the attempt by vested interests to grab tidelands oil, to take over the public grazing lands for selfish purposes, to curtail public power and to wreck, either by direction or indirection, many other of the New Deal advances achieved under Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is to be hoped that it also means the end of government by lobby and of star chamber proceedings by the un-American activities committee.

The president made one of the most extensive campaigns in the history of American politics; he knows what the people want from first-hand contact, and unless we are mistaken, thanks to a sympathetic Congress, he will give an excellent accounting of his stewardship during the next four years. At any rate, he will have the best wishes of all patriotic Americans, including that good sport, Thomas E. Dewey.

The Chump Defeats The Champ

(From The Lee County Bulletin, Auburn)

Truman, the man who faced rebellion within his own party, the man whom many had come to look upon as a political chump, was not supposed to win the Tuesday election. He faced Dewey, the suave, efficient man with all the political marbles, the champ. But Mr. Truman did win, and quite decisively. . . .

There can be but one explanation. Mr. Truman won on the issues of the campaign—high cost of living, housing, farm price support program, Taft-Hartley act. Consumers liked his stand on the question of inflation. Veterans liked his stand on that issue and on housing. Farmers liked what he had to say about a permanent farm program. Labor liked his stand on Taft-Hartley. None of these groups ever quite knew where Gov. Dewey stood on these issues or any others. They heard him say he was for "unity," but beyond that it was difficult to pin him down. . . .

What will the Truman victory mean to the South?

34a(2)

As for the Dixiecrats, it appears they won't even form so much as the tail of the Democratic donkey. . . . The spurious movement that was to lead the South out of the national Democratic Party has fizzled. No doubt, the few Southern senators and congressmen who were sucked in by the Dixiecrat maneuver will be offered again places of power and trust in the new Democratic Congress if they pledge their loyalty to the party and beg forgiveness. Every effort will be made to restore harmony. But the bolters will not be given a free ticket up front. If they expect to capture important committee assignments, they must expect to repent.

It is highly satisfying to Southerners of good will, and they are in the majority, that the self-seekers in the Dixiecrat leadership failed in their effort to establish our region as one more in step with the anti-progressive philosophy of the Republican big wigs than with the progressive party of Jefferson, Jackson, Wilson and Roosevelt. Their failure to ride into power on the winds of race prejudice and fear was heartening.

WINNING CANDIDATES IN HALL GET NEGRO SUPPORT

34a(2) Daily World

GAINESVILLE, Ga. — (SNS) — Candidates generally supported by Negro voters won in every race in the Hall County elections with the exception of the contest for sheriff. Even in the race for three county commissioners two of the three candidates endorsed by Negro voters emerged victorious. Atlanta,

The margin of victory in a close contest for tax collector was provided by Negro voters in the Fair Street polling place where Negro voters numbering more than 372 favored the Incumbent Henry H. Martin. The winner eased into office by a 4431 count over Joe B. Black, who had a total of 4168 votes at the final tally. Ga

Despite the fact that Negro voters polled 343 votes for Sheriff W. A. Crow their votes failed to save him from defeat. The Sheriff lost to Fred Bryan by a margin of 4356 to 3786. Tues. 4-13-48

Indefeat Negroes gave Sheriff Crow 343 votes. 21 votes were cast for Sheriff Bryan and 3 for W. J. Bush, who was snowed under in the balloting. In the tax collector race Fair Street voters gave Incumbent Martin 301 votes, while 71 voters favored losing candidate Joe B. Black.

The Gainesville Daily Times wrote in an editorial: "However, it is our belief that the Negroes of Hall County are neither misled, grossly uninformed, or dishonest—at least no more so than any other group of voters."

The Daily Times continued: "So if there was any "bloc vote" on the part of Hall County Negroes, it stemmed from fear of the unknown and trust of the familiar. Although a heavily-onesided ballot box might arouse suspicion (as it undoubtedly has) it would be unfair and undemocratic to have the ballot reflect any thing than the will of the voters no matter what their creed or color.

The paper insisted: "The Negroes of Hall County received kind and understanding treatment from our outgoing Sheriff. They found their rights respected and their problems dealt with justly. They weren't afraid of the law as the out-going sheriff upheld it. Tues. 4-13-48

Other winners were R. W. Smith county clerk; Frank Woods, Ordinary; Harve Ingram, tax receiver; Rev. H. G. Jarrad, school superintendent and J. B. Vickers, coroner.

The three county commissioners elected were Incumbents A. D. Bagwell, Roy W. Parks and Joe M. Chandler, who defeated Leco L. Rogers, who had Negro support.

County Unit Vote Margin Of 316 To 86 Held By Herman

34a(2)

ATLANTA, Sept. 9—(AP)—Gov. M. E. Thompson conceded the governorship of Georgia to Herman Talmadge today, ending a struggle for power that began 20 months ago.

He conceded on the basis of unofficial returns in a Democratic primary that gave Talmadge a popular lead of 271,515 to 241,005 and a county unit vote margin of 316 to 86. This was from 1,399 of the state's 1,763 precincts.

Talmadge, meanwhile, was ready for a special legislative session to install him in office early in November, immediately after the general election.

* * *

THOMPSON SAID he would cooperate with the plan if the state's attorney general ruled it was legal.

"The people giveth, the people taketh away," Thompson added. "Blessed be the name of the people."

Staking his campaign on a fight against President Truman's civil rights program, Talmadge led from the beginning of the count in yesterday's primary.

His county unit strength, traditional in Talmadge campaigns, seemed insurmountable. Only 206 units are needed to win under the system, similar to the national electoral college.

BUT UNLIKE HIS FATHER, Eugene Talmadge, who four times was elected governor of Georgia, young Herman also held the upper hand in popular vote and even carried some of the big city strongholds. Thur 9-9-48

For the 35-year-old Talmadge, a special legislative session and quick inauguration would bring long sought revenge over Thompson, with whom he contested the governorship for 67 days last year.

The first act opened with a death scene in December, 1946. Eugene Talmadge, Herman's acid-tongued father whose magic with rural voters had elected him governor four times, died before his inauguration.

In a dramatic pre-dawn session, the Legislature in January, 1947, elected "Hummon" to sit in his father's chair. Then arose scholarly M. E. Thompson, who abandoned an educator's career to enter politics, to claim the office also by succession from lieutenant-governor.

Herman's forces changed locks in the capitol by night to capture the governor's office. After two months of tumult and confusion because the state had two governors, Talmadge walked out quietly when the Georgia Supreme Court said Thompson should serve as acting governor pending an election to fill the remaining two years of the elder Talmadge's term.

* * *

BUT HE PLEDGED, "I'll be back," and today he shouted: "The victory is ours."

His tidal wave swept over several populous counties his father hardly ever hoped to win. "Old Gene" used to say he never wanted to carry a county that had streetcars in it.

Talmadge said his victory was a warning to the nation on the civil rights issue.

* * *

THOMPSON SAID: "Apparently Herman Talmadge has won."

The count was based on unofficial returns from 157 of the state's 159 counties, and 1,393 of 1,763 precincts.

Three other candidates for governor failed to scratch in the unit vote column and trailed badly in popular votes. They were Hoke O'Kelley, Hoke Willis and the Rev. Joseph A. Rabun, ousted as pastor of the Talmadge's home church in McRae because he denounced white rule. Thur 9-9-48

Incomplete reports also favored three incumbent congressmen—Reps. Cox, of the Second District, Davis of the Fifth and Wheeler of the Eighth.

Other congressmen and U. S. Sen. Richard B. Russell were unopposed.

EVERETT MILLICAN, veteran of 12 years in the state Senate and Thompson floor leader in the last session, apparently lost his post to former Mayor Roy LeCraw in yesterday's Democratic primary.

With only a few scattered precincts missing, Millican had 20,842 votes to 35,787 for Lecraw for the 52nd District post.

Millican teamed with three of the candidates for Fulton's three House of Representatives seats on a ticket advocating forced annexation by the city of Atlanta of an extensive area on the city's northern outskirts.

Only one of the quartet apparently was sure of nomination. He is Rep. M. M. (Muggsy) Smith.

Thompson Is Trailing By 3-To-1 Margin In County Unit Votes

ATLANTA—(AP)—One of Georgia's foremost champions of "white supremacy," Herman Talmadge held a three to one lead over Gov. [illegible] Wednesday night in their race for the governorship. The Advertiser

Early incomplete returns in Wednesday's Democratic primary, marked by scattered efforts to intimidate Negro voters, gave Talmadge 218 indicated unit votes [illegible] for Thompson, a former school teacher. Returns were from 397 of 1,763 precincts. Thur 9-9-48

However, in Georgia, the county unit system, [illegible] electoral college, determines the Democratic nominee for governor (and victory in the primary means election in one-party Georgia). A majority of the county unit votes, or 206, is required. The county votes are alloted on the basis of six to the big counties, four to smaller counties and two to the sparsely populated rural counties. Montgomery Ala

Reports drifted in of cross burnings by the Ku Klux Klan, Negro vote purges and attempts to slow down Negro voting.

Crosses Flame

On the eve of the election, huge crosses, the trade mark of the KKK, flamed in three counties and one Negro reported a band of hooded men left a miniature casket on his doorstep.

The Griffin Daily News reported that 558 Negro registrants had been stricken from the vote list on the eve of the Democratic primary, which is the real election in Georgia.

In populous Richmond County, the Augusta Herald charged polling officials in some places were permitting Negroes to vote at the rate of only three every hour.

A Herald reporter said the officials held up the voting by asking foolish questions and quoted one as saying a line of Negroes before one polling place would still be there when balloting ended at 6 p.m.

One report of cross burning came from Valdosta, the home of Thompson. Klan support is behind Talmadge, an advocate of "white supremacy."

Record Registration

A record registration of 1,194,413 indicated the intensity of the contest. The total included 142,491 Negroes, more than have ever registered to vote in any Southern state. Thur 9-9-48

In 1946 there were 1,077,949 registrants, including 118,387 Negroes. The total doubled previous registrations largely because of the abolition of the poll tax and the enfranchisement of 18-year-olds in Georgia.

The curious struggle for the governorship began in 1946 when Herman's father, Eugene Talmadge, was elected by a county unit vote majority, but died just a few weeks before his inauguration.

34a(2)

In January, 1947, the state legislature "elected" Herman to succeed him and carry on the Talmadge program of white supremacy. Thur 9-9-48

But M. E. Thompson, who had been named lieutenant governor, also claimed the office. He was supported by Gov. Elis Arnall until Talmadge forces seized the executive chambers in a midnight coup.

Finally the Georgia Supreme Court, in a 5-2 decision, ruled for Thompson. Herman vacated the office with a defiant "I'll be back" and Thompson moved in.

The Democratic primary nomination, tantamount to election in Georgia, will fill the governorship for the unexpired four-year term, or until January, 1951.

Campaigns On Record

Thompson, a career educator until his sudden elevation, has campaigned on his record in office: Huge expenditures for highways, teachers' salaries and social services with no increase in taxes.

The additional expenditures were made possible by the highest revenue collections in the state's history.

The 35-year-old Talmadge, 10 years younger than his opponent, has made President Truman's civil rights program the issue. He has stumped for racial segregation and against the FEPC and "bloc" voting by Negroes.

Talmadge has been endorsed by the Ku Klux Klan in Georgia and has attributed Communist and Progressive Party support to Thompson. Thompson, however alos has said he opposed feder civil rights legislation.

Analyzing The Talmadge Victory

The Constitution

34a(2)

Atlanta Ga.

Sat 9-11-48

Herman Talmadge's victory in the Georgia primary, with former Govs. E. D. Rivers and Ellis Arnall suddenly joined against him, provides an opportunity to theorize on the influence of those two political figures.

In the 1946 race E. D. Rivers, who was instrumental in winning the race for Eugene Talmadge and who was edging into the Talmadge camp until the nominee died, when he went over to M. E. Thompson, carried [illegible] counties. In other counties the Talmadge and Rivers forces worked together in joint effort against J. V. Carmichael. Former Gov. Rivers remained in the race, which was hopelessly lost to him, to carry those counties in which he had real strength, because had he withdrawn, as the anti-Talmadge forces asked, they would have gone to Carmichael. It was this fact which made many of the normally anti-Talmadge votes cool to the Thompson campaign after former Gov. Rivers joined it "to end Talmadgeism." This was, for the anti-Talmadge faction, too much to swallow, remembering 1946.

1946 In the former primary Mr. Rivers carried Dade and Towns, in North Georgia, and the South Georgia counties of Cook, Berrien, Lowndes, Lanier, Atkinson, Clinch, Echols and Brantley.

In the primary just concluded, Thompson also carried Dade and Towns. In South Georgia, however, the Rivers strength of 1946 was badly shot. Of the eight counties Rivers carried that year Thompson carried his home county, Lowndes, but lost Berrien, Atkinson, Cook, Echols and Brantley, five of the eight. He carried Lanier, Mr. Rivers' home county, and Clinch, but in the latter the margin was small.

This would indicate a severe depletion of Mr. Rivers' influence in that region.

Arnall In former Gov. Arnall's section, about Coweta County, we find that Mr. Arnall's home county of Coweta went for Thompson, but not most of the counties about it. Fulton, to the north, went for Thompson, but Marvin Griffin carried it for Lieutenant Governor.

Even normally anti-Talmadge counties, such as Upson, Lamar, Newton and Carroll, went for Talmadge. The conclusion is inescapable that Mr. Arnall's strength also is badly dissipated.

The anti-Talmadge voters in Georgia, and there are thousands of them still in fighting mood, face the fact that the leadership which has opposed the Talmadge faction is, for all practical purposes, presently destroyed. Whether it can rise, Phoenix-like, as the poets have it, from the ashes of this defeat, or whether the new leadership must be found, remains to be seen. There is one apropos fact in connection with this conclusion, namely, that many anti-Talmadge voters refused to accept the leadership behind Thompson. The vote, of less than 700,000 in a registration of over 1,200,000, indicates that more than a half million voters remained away from the polls.

Obviously, much of the independent vote, and many of the anti-Talmadge voters, were not attracted to the Thompson leadership.

Another significant fact is that there was no bloc voting by Negroes in the usual sense of the word.

Bloc Voting Preliminary investigation reveals that over the State there was less than half of the Negro registration which went to the polls. There was little intimidation. The Ku Klux Klan burned a few crosses, in profane desecration of the Christian symbol, and at two polling places delays prevented all the Negro voters from casting their votes. But, by and large, there was no intimidation or interference. In Atlanta, for example, there was not the slightest interference, and yet only about half the Negro registration went to the polls.

Again, the inescapable conclusion is that not even the Negroes felt there was any compelling reason to accept the Thompson leadership.

Meanwhile, the course of the victorious Talmadge administration will be watched nationally, as well as locally. It is a fact, somewhat ironic, that the Talmadge platform promises the Negro more than ever promised before in Georgia, within the framework of separation. If the Talmadge administration should do a vigorous job in behalf of Negro education, health, and welfare—all promised in the Talmadge platform, it is not inconceivable that 1950 would find at least some Negro support of the Talmadge organization.

Talmadge Returns To Power, Fulfilling 'I'll Be Back' Boast

By C. W. GILMORE

ATLANTA —(AP)— Herman Talmadge returned to power in Georgia Thursday on a "white supremacy" platform and a wave of resentment against the Federal Civil Rights program.

His nomination for governor in Wednesday's Democratic primary was overwhelming and a special session of the legislature seemed assured to inaugurate him early in November.

Gov. M. E. Thompson, his rival since the hectic days of the "dual government" 20 months ago, conceded defeat and agreed to plans for a speedy inaugural immediately after the general election.

Talmadge's popular lead mounted from the start. Unofficial returns from 1,657 out of 1,763 precincts gave him 336,022 to 291,728 for Thompson, and a county unit margin of 322 to 88.

There were more than 142,000 Negroes registered to vote out of the 1,194,000 total and their ballots generally were conceded to Thompson, but it was not enough.

Thompson rolled up a big margin in densley populated Fulton (Atlanta) County, leading Talmadge 41,733 to 25,000 there; but Fulton counted only six unit votes.

Rural Counties In Line

Elsewhere the traditional Talmadge rural counties fell into line and the 36-year-old heir of the "white supremacy" platform even captured some urban counties his father could never carry.

In Georgia it takes 206 county unit votes to nominate a governor. The smallest, farming counties each have two; intermediate counties have four and the eight metropolitan counties have six. The Democratic nomination is equivalent to election.

Thompson conceded defeat Thursday morning, lamenting, "the people giveth, the people taketh away; blessed by the name of the people."

He then offered to appoint Talmadge revenue commissioner until November "in the belief that you will need this valuable experience." Asked if he would accept the post, Talmadge said "No."

Fri. 9-10-48

Thompson agreed to a legislative session immediately after the Nov. 2 general election, if Talmadge's plan for a quick inauguration were legal. The state's attorney general said it is legal.

Three other candidates for the governorship received only scattered popular votes and no units. They are Hoke O'Kelley, Hoke Willis and the Rev. Joseph A. Rabun.

Ironic Revenge

A special legislative session to inaugurate him two months ahead of the usual time will be an ironic revenge for Talmadge. It was the general assembly that "elected" him governor in January, 1947, after the death of his father, Eugene.

Advertiser 9-13-48

The "election" subsequently was declared illegal by the Supreme Court, but only after Talmadge and Thompson both claimed the office for 67 days and had set up rival state governments.

When the court decision came down, Talmadge stalked out of the executive chambers his supporters had seized in a midnight coup and flung a defiant "I'll be back" at the victorious Thompson forces.

"Wisdom, justice and moderation"—Georgia state motto.

The Charlotte News

Charlotte N.C.

The first rocks and rills and templed hills I knew were Georgia ones. It is my native state, and I am allowed to speak of it freely. If young Talmadge there has any sense—and he may have plenty but I don't know yet—he will lean backward from this moment on against the bigots, illiterates, Negro-haters and baiters and exploiters—who will be thinking his nomination calls on them to make a speech. And he will renounce the Klan as forthrightly as Strom Thurmond renounced and denounced Gerald L. K. Smith. The South needs no Klan now. Our colored people are behaving admirably in trying and humiliating circumstances. Our quarrel is with outsiders, and our instrument is the States' Rights organization which will now have Georgia's electors for its growing list.

Herman Talmadge did better than his father. He won a popular as well as a county unit majority. His father had only the county units. The governor-designate should consider well this difference. It is composed of people who want neither a Eugene Talmadge Georgia nor an Ellis Arnall one, who are resolved that Georgia and the South must handle their own peculiar and vital problems but who are resolved, too, that the problems will be handled in ways of light and sense and justice and good will to all men. People who take Georgia's noble state motto—Wisdom, Justice and Moderation—in earnest.

These people who gave Herman his margin over Old Gene are going to vote for Strom Thurmond, the States Rights candidate, for president. Strom Thurmond is as sincerely a foe of darkness, race hate and injustice as he is of federalism gone mad.

The nation, reading of the immense Talmadge victory, is going to say Georgia has fallen into darkness. The nation could be right. But it need not be, and it must not be. For darkness has not won in Georgia unless Herman Talmadge so interprets it, or unless he turns out to be too weak and ill-advised to resist his worst elements. What has won in Georgia is States' Rights. What has been defeated is Ellis Arnall and all the politicians and publicists who have been forgetting Georgia for national offices or audiences.

Even though it may be as hard for Georgia to take cues from Mississippi as for North Carolina to take them from South Carolina, these are topsy-turvy times, and Governor-Designate Talmadge could take a very fine one from Mississippi. Mississippi has got itself a Senator Stennis to replace a Senator Bilbo. Senator Stennis is a States' Rights man, made an outstanding speech at the Birmingham meeting, but he is as different from Bilbo as he is from Ellis Arnall. He stands for that third thing in the South which is really a first thing—States Rights liberalism and enlightenment.

News 9-14-48

I would hate to be the editor of the Atlanta Constitution this morning. With every faith he professes involved in the gubernatorial contest, he stood cautiously on the sidelines, talking his head off and drawing pretty pictures of himself.

Since his national audience was so bitter anti-Talmadge and his Georgia one so pro, Mr. McGill was on a spot. But another man—say, Henry Grady—would have damned the torpedoes in such a crisis for his state. Ralph's picture of himself on election day was neither interesting nor convincing. "I am not by nature non-partisan," he wrote. "I like a political fight as some persons like cake or pie. . . I like throwing punches and rolling with them. . .I have missed that." He missed that in 1947, too, when young Talmadge was first an issue. He missed it, as Ellis Arnall did, in 1945, when neither the publicist nor the politician dared come out forthrightly for state repeal of the poll tax until Old Gene made it safe by, amazingly, doing so himself.

Talmadge Rides to Victory On Anti-Civil-Rights Wave

From Wire Dispatches.

Atlanta, Sept. 9.—Herman Talmadge returned to power in Georgia today on a "white-supremacy" platform and a wave of resentment against the federal Civil-Rights program.

Acting Governor M. E. Thompson belatedly conceded his thumping victory in yesterday's Democratic gubernatorial primary and offered him an immediate place in the State Government as chief of the important Revenue Department. Fri 9-10-48

The 35-year-old Talmadge replied, no, thanks. He said he was too busy planning to restore Georgia to the Talmadge form of government to serve with the outgoing Administration.

Special Session Planned.

Talmadge wants to call the Legislature into session at the earliest possible moment after the November 2 general election—which will confirm yesterday's result—to authorize his inauguration before the end of the year. Ordinarily, he wouldn't take office until January 1.

Talmadge held that the acting Governor should serve only until the voters elected a new one to fill the term left vacant when his father died in December, 1946.

Thompson said he would call the Legislature into extra session himself if Attorney General Eugene Cook ruled the procedure legal. Cook said there was nothing in the Constitution against it.

Talmadge's popular lead mounted from the start. Unofficial returns from 1,657 out of 1,736 precincts gave him 336,022 to 291,728 for Thompson, and a county-unit margin of 322 to 88.

Half Free and Half Fettered Elections?

(34a(2))

There are two angles to the present special session of the Legislature which are unusual. There is overwhelming sentiment to repeal the State's "five percent law" in so far as candidates for President and Vice-President and their electors are concerned, but not in so far as State and local officers are concerned. And Georgia's Democratic National Committeeman advocated legislation making it easier for Georgians to vote a "split" ticket.

The Constitution

Some solons even go so far as to advocate repeal of the "five percent law" now with the understanding that it will be re-enacted at the January session.

Why would Legislators want to create a "free election" nationally and not "free" it locally? Why would they want to open up the ballot only temporarily and then put the restrictions back on in January?

Wed 9-29-48

The answer is this: Because of President Truman's Civil Rights program, the local Democratic solons are no longer interested in protecting the Democratic Party nationally from competition in Georgia. Since their own names are on the State Democratic ticket, they have a natural desire to protect the State Democratic ticket from competition.

Atlanta Ga

Also they don't want to clutter up the ballot with "innumerable nincompoops running for office just for the heck of it and without any chance of getting over a handful of votes." Once they make it possible for the people to express their opinion between Dixiecrat Candidate Strom Thurmond and Democratic Candidate Truman, some solons will want to re-establish the ballot restriction even to presidential candidates aside from the two major parties.

Voting a "split" ticket is good for the development of a two-party system in Georgia, legislative leaders agreed. Since Republicans do not offer a slate of candidates for State House and local offices (and, indeed, are hindered from doing so by the five percent law), it would be good for Georgians to participate in the Democratic primary—the real election in State and local races—and then go ahead and vote Republican, Progressive or Dixiecrat for national officers in the general election.

Wed 9-29-48

Voting a "split" ticket develops a more intelligent electorate, House Floor Leader Bob Elliott says. Many agree that it is better for a voter to exercise his judgment on national candidates instead of just voting a straight Democratic ticket for President because he wants to vote for the Democratic candidate for Governor or Representative. Since Elliott is National Democratic Committeeman, however, it was very broadminded on his part to urge the State to make it easier for Democrats to vote for the nominee of an opposing political party.

The Constitution

One of the most successful political, or rather non-political, figures at the State Capitol is quitting before the change of gubernatorial administrations. But it isn't because of a fear of changes in the Governor's office. He's leaving because his health has failed. Willie Johnson, Negro porter, has served under seven Governors. Beginning in 1927, he worked during the administrations of Govs. Walker, Hardeman, Russell, Eugene Talmadge for three terms, Rivers, Arnall and Thompson—and also during the 67 days when Herman Talmadge claimed the Governors' office. "I gave them the best service that I could by the help of the good Lord." Willie says. "Now my health has failed me and for this cause I'll have to check out. I found no fault in either of them. I was once hired on the job and never fired. I met them all on the level and left them on the square."

I WAS TAKEN ABACK when I saw the front page of Sunday's paper. The headline said: "Handsome, Debonair—Who? Why, it's the Saint—Of Course!" So I read on. Talmadge Victory Boost for Dixiecrats

The Constitution

By HAL BUCK

International News Service Writer

Herman Talmadge's victory in the gubernatorial Democratic primary, besides influencing Georgia's destiny for two years, today may give the States' Rights Democrats a boost in their presidential campaign.

Tues 9-13-48

Talmadge undoubtedly was elected because of the Civil Rights program and the so-called Negro question. He minced no words about his advocacy of white supremacy and virtually promised Georgia voters that he personally would take a hand in the South's battle against enaction of President Truman's program.

Georgia has remained suspiciously silent about its plans since the birth of the States' Rights Party. Chairman James Peters, of the State Democratic Executive Committee, speaking for the State, made it clear that Georgia opposes the Civil Rights legislation. The State voted consistently against President Truman's nomination. But Georgia has not bolted the Democratic Party nor promised its 12 electoral votes to the States' Rights candidates, Govs. J. Strom Thurmond and Fielding L. Wright.

Talmadge repeatedly skirted the issue before his overwhelming election. Even after his victory he refused to say whether he would use his influence to see that Georgia's electroal votes go to the "Dixicrats."

Young Talmadge explained:

That matter must be decided by the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Atlanta Ga

Of course, Talmadge controls the Committee.

It is significant that Dixiecrat leaders have neither beat their drums in Georgia nor commented on the State's silence about its stand.

Some observers feel that the Georgia Democratic Executive Committee may have made some "off the record" promise to Dixiecrat leaders.

In other words, party leaders may have said, in effect, "wait until we see if Talmadge is elected. If he is, then we may be in a position to help you."

Georgia's Presidential electors, under rules of the State Democratic Party, may be appointed by the Executive Committee.

Thus it would seem that, should Talmadge say the word, Georgia's electoral votes could go to the Dixiecrats.

THOMPSON'S MISTAKE?—Acting Gov. Thompson's decisive defeat by Herman Talmadge made many political observers poor prognosticators.

In pre-election predictions, nearly all observers thought Thompson and Talmadge would run a neck-and-neck race, with Talmadge the winner.

But the early spurt taken by Talmadge continued steadily, snowballing into one of Georgia's most surprising political landslides.

Many observers whose predictions were in error are wondering why. Some feel that Thompson would have fared better had he shunned the support of former Governors E. D. Rivers and Ellis Arnall.

Mon 9-13-48

Arnall, though extremely popular throughout the rest of the country, is not too favorably regarded in his home State. Many Georgians — judging from their votes against his gubernatorial choice—resented Arnall's continued allusions to the South's "problems" on his northern lecture tours.

Rivers, although conceded to be a master politician, was soundly beaten in his own gubernatorial race in 1946.

Thompson might have made a better showing if he had stuck to his original role as an independent, unincumbered by political henchmen. Political observers say now that Georgians might have let him finish out his acting term if he had continued to be just an ex-school teacher running on his record.

Talmadge Brings 'Corn-Likker' Rule Back To Georgia

Sat 9-18-48

GEORGIA, through the election of Herman Talmadge, the demagogue son of a demagogue, tobacco-spitting father, goes back in the ranks of a "corn-likker" government. The county-unit election system dating from Civil War days, which makes a vote in the cracker counties worth as many as ten votes in the more enlighened cities, did the trick for young "Hummon," as the ignorant element refers to him. Even in his sweeping victory, there were over 260,000 Georgians (voters) who didn't want him. We hope their influence will prevent Talmadge and his "get even" crowd from making Georgia a hell for a decent citizen to live in for the next two years. He can only serve that long. He cannot succeed himself.

Chicago Bee

Lucius Harper

There is a belief in many corners that President Truman's civil rights program and the FEPC issue did much to help Talmadge win. These may have, in a measure, served to spur the ignorant element to fever heat, but in no wise is the Talmadge rise to the governorship to be credited to these factors. He had victory in his vest-pocket ever since his father died. Georgia has been politically-owned by the Talmadges for almost twenty years. It is just through accident that decency in government has crept in and dethroned this influence for only awhile.

For decades back political clowns have won their way to the statehouse in Atlanta; and from there some have transferred their capers to the national government in Washington. The issue of "white supremacy" is nothing new in Georgia. In fact, it has been the spearhead of every political campaign there since the days of Reconstruction. Talmadge, however, did need that issue to steamwhistle him through. It always works in Georgia when the bigot has enough magic to draw a crowd.

ANY political campaign for the governorship of Georgia, and many other southern states for that matter, is merely a political-circus. A candidate, to be successful in most cases, has to transform himself into a sort of clown. Tom Watson, the dunce from Thomson, was one of the first to inaugurate the hate-spreading scheme to gain political favor. He won his way into the U. S. Senate by getting Leo Frank, an Atlanta Jewish merchant, lynched. When the Negro was no longer an issue in politics, Watson seized upon hatred for the Catholic church, and polluted Georgians' minds with vicious attacks upon the Pope of Rome through his scurrilous magazine, "The Jeffersonian" which was finally barred from the mails for the filth it printed. Through his doctrine of race hatred, he caused a governor, John M. Slaton, to flee the state because he had commuted Frank's sentence to life imprisonment.

Hoke Smith was just a whit better. He kept aflame the e, and finally a disastrous riot ept the city of Atlanta. Then me Tom Hardwick, a country-

wn lawyer from Sandersville, carry on where Watson left off.
He became governor then U. S. Senator without contributing the slightest item to racial betterment; in Georgia or in the senate. During this era, however, decency did creep in through the election of Hugh M. Dorsey, who was the unrelenting prosecutor in the Leo Frank case. While Dorsey almost directly rose to power on the anti-Jewish issue, he did not resort to race-hate spreading during his incumbency as governor, nor thereafter. He became a judge and issued a splendid pamphlet exposing the unfair treatment Negroes received in Georgia.

SINCE there is no white aristocracy now in Georgia (northern industry invading the state has practically wiped it out), old Gene Talmadge counted the noses of the cracker elements in the backwoods and discovered, through numbers, he was in power. He catered to this ignorance through its own understanding. He shunned an auto and travelled among them in horse and buggy. He put on red suspenders, and fouled his mouth with big wads of tobacco. He would casually flick a fly off his horse's ear with a long, golden squirt of tobacco juice. He would snap his suspenders while talking to emphasize a point, and his uneducated listeners did likewise. He styled himself the "Wild Man from Sugar Creek" and the hillbillies latched onto his words. He made all sorts of silly speeches about hogs "killed soft and hard" and the simpletons swallowed Gene's political technique and sent him to the governor's chair four times.

Old Gene did some good things in the way of tax slashing for the farmers, but he likewise did some awful bad things for the factory hands. He established concentration camps for strikers and called out the National Guards to break Georgia's textile strike in 1934. He became a tool of the Georgia Power Trust by being the "daddy" of the ignorant cracker element. His son, "Hummon," has simply fallen heir to this demagogue's political fortune. He didn't need a "white supremacy" issue to win, nor a civil rights program or FEPC to combat. The name Talmadge was in itself enough to gain victory from the ignorance that Georgia has so long nurtured and more often politically encouraged. Georgia made some racial gains and progress under the liberal governorships of Arnall and Thompson. It slides back into squalor and "corn-likker" government with Herman Talmadge. We hope, however, for only two years.

Another Talmadge Comes to Rule In Georgia

THE events in Georgia are depressing. There will be some persons, of course, to suggest that the selection of HERMAN TALMADGE for Governor there was an operation of democracy, since the extent of his victory shows that this was what the people wanted. But you are forced to look beyond the record of the votes and consider the atmosphere of the campaign and the processes of incitement and intimidation that went along with it. These are anything but democratic.

They include rabble-rousing at its most vicious and intemperate. They include the brazen parade of the Ku Klux Klan, the bold strategems by which the Constitution and the law were flouted and the newly emancipated Negro vote kept from the ballot box. They include the appeals to ignorance and prejudice—the setting up of hate so that hate might be pandered to—which Georgians have known to be the brand of TALMADGE politics for 16 years. They include a State's seal of approval on the unlawful gangster methods by which HERMAN TALMADGE actually seized and for 67 days in early 1947 held the State Government after the death of his father EUGENE, one of the most incendiary of demagogues.

It was all done in the name of white supremacy and to the shouts of "Nigger!" and "Communist!" Thus it was in the frenzied temper of the day, which has given rise in the South to the Dixiecrat movement and its rebellion against a program of laws to protect civil rights. To be sure, it was a clash between rival political organizations, and one was no more disposed to soft-pedal the program than the other. But the TALMADGE forces were the more adept, being the more practised, in making the most of an issue of this sort. It was for them political manna. HERMAN took up where death had forced his father to leave off, and heightened the fury of the Cracker insistence that this must be a white man's country. The TALMADGES have been doing it since the older one became Governor for the first time in 1932.

Fri 9-10-48

EUGENE TALMADGE was elected to a fourth term in 1946. He died before taking office. Before the Georgia Supreme Court could approve an orderly succession, in favor of the elected Lieutenant Governor, M. E. THOMPSON, son HERMAN made an audacious bid for the Governorship on the basis of some 650 write-in votes, cunningly engineered. Supported by a strong-arm squad, whose members moved in with flying fists, HERMAN seized the executive offices in the Capitol and tenancy of the Governor's mansion. After two months the Supreme Court held that he had done this without law or right, and THOMPSON was seated as acting Governor pending the next general election. Now HERMAN is about to come back. His nomination in the Democratic primary means certain election in November for the remainder of the term to which his father was chosen. It will run for two years.

The older TALMADGE was nominated although he received several thousand fewer votes in the 1946 primary than his opponent. He won by virtue of Georgia's "rotten borough" system of primary elections, in which county-unit votes and not popular votes rule. The same system of domination by rural counties, their unit votes overcoming the votes of populous urban counties, worked in HERMAN'S favor Wednesday, although this time he received a majority of popular votes as well.

A dynasty has been revived, as in Louisiana only last week the dynasty established by HUEY LONG was perpetuated in his son. A distemper, making for social heedlessness, irresponsibility and violence, sits upon the Deep South.

Herman Talmadge will become the governor of Georgia. He beat Acting Gov. M. E. Thompson in yesterday's Democratic primary. He is moving to have a special legislative session install him in the governor's chair in November.

Will his victory mean a long, dark night for Georgia as some have feared? Or will power and responsibility sober this active young man, as many, no doubt, now are praying? We shall begin to see in November.

We join the good people of Georgia in hoping that Mr. Talmadge can grow, intellectually and spiritually.

Election Highlights

Daily World

By CHAS. W. GREENLEA

Wed 11-3-48

Atlanta Ga.

There were many unusual factors about the election in Georgia.

For the first time in the history Georgia was a "doubtful" state. In every previous election since the Civil War the Empire State of the South could be counted on as "in the bag" for the Democratic candidate—no matter who he might be. In this forty-first election it was conceded that the Republicans as well as the outraged Dixiecrats would make heavy inroads.

Matters even reached such a state in Georgia with the voters and parties boiling, that some observers thought the election may have to be determined by the State Legislature. In case no Presidential Candidate receives a majority of the popular vote in Georgia, the legislature must meet and decide to whom the state's twelve electoral votes will go.

UNUSUAL ELECTION

Georgia's most unusual election was stiffled somewhat by heavy rains over the northern part of the state. Rural counties were so bogged down in mud that only the most enthusiastic voters ventured to the polls.

The States Rights or Dixiecratic candidates for President and Vice-President, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Fielding Wright of Mississippi, who campaigned wholly on an anti-Negro platform, were the chief sufferers from the bad weather, it appeared.

LARGEST BALLOT

The largest ballot in the history of the state faced voters. Everywhere except in Fulton County a huge printed sheet puzzled voters who had to study it at length before finding the desired spots to mark an "X." As a whole, Negroes throughout the state, voted overwhelmingly for Truman and the straight Democratic ticket.

In Atlanta, voting on machines the most complicated arrangement yet did not stem the spirits of Dewey, Truman, and Wallace fans. Despite the rain, Negro voters turned out in relatively large numbers. Several reports of broken machines came to the World office. One irate voter complained that the slides over the write-in candidates would not open so he "couldn't register a protest against Talmadge."

Broken or clogged machines were reported early at precinct 3A, Walker Street School and at 3B, E. R. Carter School. Hasty calls to the courthouse brought mechanics to correct the trouble. Voters were held up for fully forty minutes at Walker Street, it was reported.

Reminiscent of the martyred Isaiah Nixon, Negro who was murdered in South Georgia because he voted in the primary election last summer, comes a story from a Fulton County school teacher. She asked her third grade students whether their parents were going to vote in the Presidential election. Right under the shadows of the state capitol, came the answer from a bright young lad—"My Mama ain't going nowhere and get shot voting."

TWO PARTY SYSTEM

The Republicans are hoping to capitalize on their new following as a basis for establishing an effective party in the state. They have the best wishes of every intelligent citizen in the state. Georgia needs a real two-party system. Dewey attracted the largest vote ever received by a Republican in Georgia. Only four times since the Civil War have Republicans polled more than 50 thousand votes. Hoover, benefiting from an anti-Al Smith movement, even as Dewey took an anti-Truman following, polled 99,369 Georgia votes in 1928. Republican William McKinley in 1896 received 60,107 votes, Wendell Willkie in 1940 received 46,362, and Thomas E. Dewey attracted 56,506 votes in his 1944 effort.

'Hummon' Takes Over As Governor In Georgia

Columbia Record

Young Herman Talmadge, "Hummon" to the wool hat boys of Georgia, has been elected Governor of Georgia, defeating Dr. M. E. Thompson, the lieutenant governor who ousted him from the Governor's office when the legislature elected him to succeed his father who died before he could take office in 1947.

Eugene Talmadge, whose red suspenders and white supremacy platforms endeared him to the rural voters of Georgia, had been elected to his fourth term as Governor, succeeding Ellis Arnall, under Georgia's unique unit vote system, although he failed to get the majority of the popular vote. He died before his inauguration and his son, "Hummon," was named by the legislature to replace him. Thompson, the lieutenant governor, claimed the office also and for 67 days Georgia operated under two governors, with "Hummon" occupying the Governor's office the locks on the doors of which he had changed. Talmadge surrendered when the supreme court of Georgia decided that Thompson was the legal acting governor.

Fri 9-10-48

Columbia, S.C.

"I'll be back," he told Thompson and the voters of Georgia. And back he is, with an assist from Harry Truman, Henry Wallace and all the other advocates of federal force to grant "civil rights" to the Negroes.

Talmadge's one campaign issue was the civil rights issue. And before the election he predicted that the headlines in Georgia after the election would have to be, "Talmadge Wins on Anti-Civil Rights Platform." His victory, Talmadge says, is a warning to the nation on the civil rights issue—exactly how he doesn't explain.

And where the veteran campaigner, Gene Talmadge, his father, squeaked through "Hummon," the son and imitator, won by landslide proportions. "Hummon" was leading with 322 units votes—only 206 are needed for election—to Thompson's 88. And, unlike his father in 1946, he was also leading in the popular vote with 344,582 to 209,551 for Thompson. Fri 9-10-48

For this "Hummon" can thank the Northern do-gooders and the politicians in pursuit of Northern Negro votes. They gave new life to his one issue, increased its vote-getting potency. More than this "Hummon" is being encouraged by his success and by the political origin of the civil rights campaign to pursue his "white supremacy" policies into other fields as well as the field of vote-getting.

It is a long, dark night ahead for Georgia and a difficult time for Georgia's Negroes who will not be the chief sufferers for the agitation that some thought would do them good, if they thought at all.

Georgia Nominates Talmadge

N.Y. Herald Tribune

The victory of Herman Talmadge over Governor M. E. Thompson in the Democratic primary was Georgia's answer to President Truman's civil rights proclamation. The South is not yet ready to accept liberal ideas on race relations from the North. It prefers—or at least a majority of Georgians prefer—an untried, noisy advocate of white supremacy, to a moderate liberal with a good administrative record such as Governor Thompson's.

The present candidate's father, "Old Gene" Talmadge, also used to campaign on white supremacy, but his main political strength was in the backwoods country of the "Wool Hats." By concentrating on the rural counties he was able to win the Governorship by the county unit totals, although his state-wide popular vote fell below that of his opponent.

Fri 9-10-48

Now, after a noisy campaign in which the civil rights program was the center of attack, and fiery crosses burned in the Georgia hills, young Herman Talmadge not only sweeps the backwoods counties, but populous urban areas which formerly responded to a more enlightened political appeal. Not only "Wool Hat" boys but substantial citizens supported his candidacy.

This is, of course, Georgia's own affair. The people have spoken—with a rebel yell. It may be noted, however, that the primary returns which nominated Talmadge in a sense go beyond the state lines. For the first time, they measure the extent of the revolt below the Mason and Dixon Line. Certainly the Dixiecrats will be encouraged to redouble their efforts in behalf of Governor Thurmond. The political revolt of the South is no longer a series of disgruntled echoes from the Philadelphia convention. With Talmadge's sweeping victory it takes on momentum and substance.

New York, N.Y.

Finally, Talmadge's victory gives further proof of the disintegration of Democratic leadership. That leadership was inept when it played blatant politics with its civil rights program. Once having launched the program, it should at least have made a sincere fight for it, instead of dropping it like a hot potato and allowing it to flounder to such ignominious defeat.

No Win For Talmadge

The News

To the Editor of The News:

Referring to your editorial on election of Herman Talmadge as governor of Georgia, I wish to state a personal opinion that this aggressive political figure has won no victory. He has come in on a program of suppressing and keeping suppressed the colored people, and any program based on promises of keeping down the weaker race by a stronger race cannot succeed. 9-10

Poor old Georgia has been set back for a half century, and the loss in actual money to her citizens is staggering, as the new governor has his bluff fixed so he can put force behind any threats of reprisals. Progress does not follow eternal confusion and hatred. A quarter million Georgia voters got whipped, and they are sick at heart, but such is part of the way of life.

Birmingham, Ala.

Before the election strings of automobiles, pickups and trucks loaded with white robed figures would come into small towns with horns blowing, and loudly go through any colored districts where little children and hard working poor Negroes would crouch in fear of the hooded figures.

The South has lost 3,000,000 colored people since 1940, and as a result, thousands of bales of cotton last year, the year before and this year will rot in the field. Everywhere a cry is up for return of labor on farms and in industries.

Gov. Folsom gets knocked right and left for this and that, but he has never been a party to any move that would encourage willful injustices to the Negro or any poor white people. He has never been a party to big meetings to stir up hatred, and to openly defy the laws of the U. S. government.

Fri 9-10-48

There is one thing for which America may be proud, and that is that tyrannical rule is confined by what we call state lines, and that when Talmadge's swashbuckling tirade reaches the borders of Georgia he will be noting a word in the horizon—"Stop."

Montgomery, Ala. D. L. MOORE.

Talmadge's Victory

New York Star

Herman Talmadge's victory in the Georgia Democratic gubernatorial primary is likely to damage President Truman's chances in Georgia and is almost certain to increase the lament that Mr. Truman, by advocating his civil rights program, inflamed the South's white citizens and has done more harm than good. The lament is a little too saccharine to be plausible.

Fri 9-10-48

New York N.Y.

The oligarchies which rule some southern states—frequently through leaders affiliated with northern corporations interested in preserving low southern wage standards—are capitalizing effectively on the apprehensions some southern whites feel about the Negro.

But the impact of Mr. Truman's fight on civil rights and of Supreme Court decisions arising from the Roosevelt-Truman era has been to increase the electorate in the South. In the long run anything which expands Negro voting rights, Negro educational and economic rights, will work profound changes in Dixie's political system. The only places where states' rights defeats seem improbable are the states in which Truman-Barkley electors are not allowed on the ballot.

Fri 9-10-48

Talmadge—Notwithstanding

World

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Herman Talmadge has won an overwhelming endorsement from the white voters of Georgia as their next governor. It is no secret that Negroes opposed his election. Thus, to say that they rejoice in his victory, would be insincere. Notwithstanding that fact, the clear will of the majority, in this case; far too impressive to cause even a doubt, becomes the will of all in a democracy. Atlanta Ga. Fri.

Therefore, as governor of all the people, Negroes are under every civic obligation to him, insofar as he and his forces will permit, to strive earnestly and cooperatively in bringing about a greater Georgia in which all citizens will have an equal opportunity to live and grow and prosper, and in which fairplay and mutual respect will become a rule by which all of us shall live. 9/17 48 Fri.

Happily, the campaign is over. But whether the storm of hate and fears, generated by the campaigners is over, remains to be seen. Mr. Talmadge probably is not strongly opposed to Negro welfare and advancement as his public utterances would indicate. But the mentality of the provincial rural dwellers cannot easily regain calm and sanity.

The false fears against civil rights, FEPC, Negro domination, social equality and widespread circulation of pictures of Negroes and whites fraternizing together, undoubtedly aided Mr. Talmadge in his bid for the governorship. But these alone were not his only aces in the holes. The iniquitous purge movement, which began in May, 1946 and continued almost without serious restraint until the very eve of Wednesday's elections, as well as Klan intimidation, were also factors to be regarded. 9-17-48

Whether we shall have an era of mutual goodwill under the new governor, is difficult to predict. Whether the state will move forward under him will be determined by his own attitude as well as those he chooses to surround his administration. One thing is certain, white Georgians cannot advance and prosper if they determine to waste their energies trying to hold Negro Georgians in a ditch. White Georgians cannot grow and maintain physical health as long as Negro Georgians are diseased, poverty-stricken and ignorant. We must all rise together or we must all sink together. Fri.

Sentiment In Georgia

The News
Fri 9-10-48
Birmingham, Ala
24C(2)

Herman Talmadge, in his victorious campaign for the governorship in Georgia, concentrated on denunciation of the Truman civil rights program. He attributed Communist and Progressive Party support to his opponent, the incumbent, Gov. M. E. Thompson. Thompson himself avowed opposition to the Truman proposals and is not himself to be considered a radical. But it was Talmadge who exploited most effectively the opposition, resentment and fear revolving around the dominant civil rights issue.

Young Herman has taken up where his father left off, yielding only to death before he could assume office after his fourth and last election. White supremacy was Herman's theme. He, too, was the champion of the rural folk. His was a highly divisive appeal to prejudice and ignorance. Only 35, his qualifications for the governorship are in many respects questionable. But he capitalized intensively on old, familiar themes. His opponent failed to develop the strength and appeal needed to stop him.

So Herman goes in—with an overwhelming victory in county unit votes under Georgia's odd and deplorable system of gubernatorial nomination, but with a relatively narrow margin in popular votes.

Fri 9-10-48

It cannot be said that the expressed sentiment of Georgia voters is also overwhelmingly behind Talmadge. Thompson polled about 47 per cent of the popular vote. His support showed a widespread rejection of Talmadge's candidacy and the kind of things, the extremes and dangers, his attitude represents.

But, on the other hand, Talmadge's victory does attest the continuing strength of the sort of campaigning his father made notorious, the extent of fear in that state respecting federal intervention in the racial situation and radical activities and proposals.

Of course, the Talmadge distortion of issues finds much material in these latter issues. Much of the fear revolving around them is extreme and ill-informed. But nevertheless its reality is unmistakably evident. And, obviously, there are many sound reasons for vigilance in these connections. Mr. Truman's proposals were poorly conceived. Communist activity is properly a concern of our people.

Fri 9-10-48

The outcome of this election presents new evidence of the perils inherent in unsound, ill-timed proposals in the field of racial relations; of the danger of trying to impose programs not in line with dominant popular sentiment; of the extremes of apprehension and the lack of discrimination which such matters can arouse.

There is, obviously, a great body of Georgians who are continuing to strive for wise realism, for constructive action, for a balanced approach to their contemporary problems. Their struggle will continue. It still may be hoped that its influence will be strongly felt.

Talmadgeism Takes Over in Georgia

Times Dispatch
Fri 9-10-48
Richmond Va
34A(2)

ONE of the most violently bitter and incredibly abusive campaigns for public office in the history of the South ended Wednesday with the overwhelming nomination of HERMAN TALMADGE to the governorship of Georgia. There is reason to regret the result, although the nomination of TALMADGE'S opponent, GOVERNOR M. E. THOMPSON, would have given no grounds for cheers. The Atlanta Journal said on the eve of the primary, "No matter what the outcome, Georgia faces a melancholy future governmentally."

Virginians, accustomed as they are to orderly and well-mannered campaigns for public office, have no conception of the lengths to which politicians in Georgia go to gain an advantage. For instance, a recent campaign publication of the TALMADGE forces carried the headline in large red letters: "RIVERS-ARNALL-THOMPSON Running Georgia Like Gangsters." In rebuttal to such allegations, THOMPSON said there is no telling what would have happened to the State if it had fallen into the hands of HERMAN TALMADGE, ROY HARRIS, "and the rest of the TALMADGE goons, thugs and drunks."

Fri 9-10-48

It was widely estimated in Georgia that TALMADGE and THOMPSON spent a total of $1 million in the campaign, about equally divided between them. Much of the money was used to buy votes.

Just as Louisiana turned the other day to RUSSELL LONG, a "dead ringer" for his father, the late HUEY LONG, and sent him to the United States Senate, so Georgia has now turned to "HUMMON" TALMADGE, who wears the same mop of hair over his eye and snaps the same red suspenders that helped to make his father, "GENE," notorious. It is to be feared that the LONG and TALMADGE dynasties have fastened their claws on Louisiana and Georgia, respectively, for an indefinite period. Both RUSSELL LONG and HERMAN TALMADGE are young men, in their early or middle thirties, and both seem to be ruthless and determined politicians. Dislodging either will be a major task.

Some observers may be puzzled by the fact that GOVERNOR THOMPSON aroused so little enthusiasm among well-disposed Georgians. The fact is that many simply considered him the lesser of two evils. Partly because he is not a person of much force, and partly because he allied himself with former GOVERNOR E. D. RIVERS, he generated support of a largely negative sort. His ally, "ED" RIVERS, a former officer of the Ku Klux Klan, was charged with engaging in shady deals while Governor with IMPERIAL WIZARD HIRAM WESLEY EVANS, of the Klan, and also with selling pardons.

Former GOVERNOR ELLIS ARNALL backed THOMPSON, his former secretary, which was natural; but many were dismayed to find him snuggled into the same political bed with RIVERS. The outcome seems to have washed up ARNALL politically.

Fri 9-10-48

What does the future hold for Georgia? In the words of CALVIN KYTLE, member of the Emory University School of Journalism faculty, "the night may be a long one." Writing in the September Harper's, KYTLE says many Georgians "foresee an uninterrupted succession of TALMADGE administrations—based on a political machine more efficient than HERMAN'S father ever dreamed of and maintained by ruthless suppression of all dissent within the party." He quotes a "prominent Georgia liberal" as saying: "From the day HERMAN'S elected, you'll probably see more and more floggings and more and more cross-burnings. His election will act like a signal on people of Klan mentality. They'll consider themselves free to commit all manner of atrocities. . . ."

Surely a dismal outlook. One can only hope that the picture is exaggerated, while fearing that it isn't.

Talmadge Succeeds Thompson

The Courier
Sat 10-2-48
Pittsburgh Pa
34A(2)

THE OVERWHELMING victory of the Herman Talmadge machine over that of Governor M. E. Thompson of Georgia in the recent primaries has been regarded generally as a bad sign indicating a probable worsening of race relations in the Empire State of the South.

Talmadge campaigned on a strictly white supremacy platform and devoted his speeches to denouncing the civil rights program of President Truman.

Of course this was a strictly phoney issue because the views of Governor Thompson were no different from those of Herman Talmadge, but it had an appeal to widespread elements in Georgia aroused by any challenge to local culture patterns.

We do not share the apprehension which many of our contemporaries profess about probable terror and strife in Georgia because Mr. Talmadge is to sit in the Governor's chair.

The Negroes of Georgia have lived under Tom Watson, Eugene Talmadge and others of their ilk, and not only survived but prospered, as evidenced by the fact that there are more Negroes in Georgia today than ever before in history.

They have seen the Ku Klux Klan rise and fall, wax and wane.

They have seen their literacy rate go up and their death rate go down.

They have seen lynching decline almost to nothing, and home and business ownership increase.

They have seen NAACP branches multiply ten-fold and they have seen 142,491 Negroes registered to vote in a Democratic primary.

Sat 10-2-48

They are more confident, more self-assured, less panicky and more capable of looking out for their interests than ever before, and they have more friends on the other side of the color line.

So we don't think any sleep needs to be lost over the victory of Herman Talmadge, but it might be advisable to dispassionately analyze the reason for that victory.

MINNEAPOLIS (NR correspondent)

Nov. 11-15-48

MINNESOTANS cleaned house. The people were tired of the congressional activities of their "big" names—Republican Senator Joseph Ball and Representative Harold Knutson. Both had disregarded the requests of the large farm and labor groups in the state, and had made an anti-reciprocal-trade, anti-labor, anti-European-aid record.

New Rep 11-15-48

Minneapolis Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey rolled Ball out of the Senate by better than 100,000 votes. Harold Knutson, the 80th Congress champion tax reducer, lost his House seat to a Democratic-Farmer-Labor newcomer, Fred Marshall. The Republicans also lost two other Representatives—Edward Devitt was defeated by Eugene J. McCarthy, a young college sociology instructor, and George MacKinnon lost to Roy Wier, an AFL union official.

The D-F-L decisively won, in a state that, before Roosevelt, had been traditionally Republican, because of labor's fine get-out-the-vote job. While Knutson, confident of his own victory, was campaigning for Ball, labor blanketed the district with pictures of Marshall in overalls. Humphrey, the first Democrat to go to the Senate from Minnesota, covered every square foot of the state.

The campaign issues were clear-cut and close to Minnesotans. President Truman hammered away at the Republicans' views on farm-price supports and rural electrification. Humphrey hit again and again at Ball's stand on corporative taxation on co-ops. In a state with as many co-ops as Minnesota, that was good politics. And there were GOP blunders. Harold Stassen's speech accusing the government of using supports to keep up prices and his general attack on the Department of Agriculture buttressed some of the Democratic claims of Republican unconcern for the farmer.

RANKIN WINS EASILY IN MISSISSIPPI VOTE

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 24 (UP)—Representative John E. Rankin, outspoken advocate of white supremacy and states' rights, won a fifteenth term with surprising ease tonight as both of his opponents in the Democratic primary conceded defeat. Nomination by the Democratic party in Mississippi is tantamount to election.

34a(2)

Returns from 193 of the 224 precincts in the First Congressional District gave Rankin a majority of 13,646 votes against 5,334 for Circuit Judge Raymond Jarvis and 4,248 for Claude Clayton.

Three other members of Congress, Thomas G. Abernethy, Fourth District, John B. Williams, Seventh District, and William Colmer, Sixth District, were leading their opponents.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Aug. 24 (AP)—South Carolina Democrats today nominated James B. Hare, a 30-year-old lawyer of Saluda, to represent them from the Third Congressional District.

Mr. Hare, the son of a former United States Representative, defeated John C. Taylor of Anderson in a run-off primary. Unofficial returns from 327 of the district's 329 precincts gave Hare 38,440 votes and Taylor, 20,419. Mr. Taylor is a former Member of Congress.

A Red Hot Issue Saves John Rankin

The Courier-Journal

IT LOOKS as if his enemies were too quick to count John Rankin out. His big victory over two solid citizens who sought his seat in Congress confounded those political prophets who had said that this time, sure enough, old John was through.

At this distance from the First Mississippi District, the explanation seems fairly plain. John Rankin had a campaign issue hot off the griddle and he used it to make the constituents forget his dreary performance last year, when he ran a discredited last in the race to succeed Theodore G. Bilbo in the Senate. It was, you might have guessed, Communism.

Thur. 8-26-48

For all that the names of Parnell Thomas, Mundt and Nixon bob up as the inquisitors in reports of Un-American Affairs Committee hearings, Mississippians know the committee as John Rankin's committee. And just now it is riding high, burning up the track, producing a fresh sensation and a juicier smear every day. We can just hear old John telling the boys back home that it will never do to change horses in the middle of the stream that flows from Moscow. We can hear him putting the question: With Rankin out, who is going to save the civilization of T.V.A. and white supremacy? The answer was a clear majority and a 15th term in Washington.

Election Of Negro To New York Assembly From Brooklyn Assured

World: Atlanta, Ga. Wed.

All Majority Candidates In Withdrawal

7-28-48

BROOKLYN — (NNPA) — The election of a colored person to the New York State Assembly from the 17th Assembly District appeared certain last Thursday when all white candidates withdrew from the race, leaving three colored candidates to battle for the post.

The winner will be the first colored person ever elected to office to Brooklyn.

Wed. 7-28-48

The Democratic party in the 17th Assembly District designated Bertram L. Baker as candidate for the State Assembly. Baker, who has the endorsement of the American Labor Party, replaced Assemblyman John Walsh, the original Democratic designee, who declined because of "the pressure of business."

The other candidates are Mrs. Maude B. Richardson, Republican, and Mrs. Clarissa Bostic, Liberal party candidate. Political observers believe that the race will be between Mrs. Richardson and Baker and that Mrs. Bostic may withdraw.

BACKS BAKER

The race was narrowed down when Thomas R. Jones, well known colored labor attorney, declined the ALP nomination to throw his entire support behind Baker's campaign, and Larry Foster, Brooklyn tavern owner who was a candidate for the Republican nomination, announced that he had withdrawn and would support Mrs. Richardson.

Although the Democrats would not admit that pressure compelled the nomination of Baker, it is significant that he was not designated until after a picket line had been thrown around the 17th Assembly District Democratic headquarters, demanding that the Democrats endorse a colored candidate for the Assembly. The pickets were led by supporters of Henry A. Wallace.

Mrs. Richardson, often referred to as Brooklyn's "First Lady" is a strong vote getter in this traditionally Democratic borough. She lost a previous assembly race by seventeen votes. She was an alternate delegate to the recent Republican national convention. The mother of four children, she has been active in community affairs for more than twenty years.

Baker, a public accountant, is a former deputy collector of internal revenue and was the ALP-Democratic candidate in 1945 for the City Council. He is married, 50-years old and has two children. Chairman of the executive board of the United Action Democratic Association of Kings County, he is the recognized spokesman for his party on matters affecting colored people in his district. He also is the president of the New York State Tennis Association and executive secretary of the American Tennis Association.

Mrs. Bostic is well known in Brooklyn political circles.

In the 5th Assembly District, Alfred Duckett, a free lance newspaperman, has entered the race as an ALP candidate against Mrs. Maude Springer, a colored woman who has been designated by the Liberal party.

Trumanites Win Every Election In New York City

Daily World

Atlanta

Sat. 11-13-48

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Negro Democrats won every election in New York City last Tuesday. Headed by Rep. Adam Powell, they swept four members into the state legislature, completely obliterating the Republican vote.

Powell won over Republican district leader Harold C. Burton 63,000 to 14,000 by better than four to one; in the assembly fights, in the 11th district Colden Brown lost to Thomas Dickens, Democrat, Brown polling 6,815 votes to Dickens' 16,000 and 3,343 for Cyril Stephens on the American Labor party ticket; in the 12th district, unknown Elijah Crump won with 26,793 votes to 9,305 for his Republican opponent, Eugene Kemp, and 6,065 for Lyndon Henry, ALP, and 4,827 for Clarence Francis of the Liberal party; in the 13th district, Harold A. Stevens polled 20,238 votes to defeat his Republican opponent, Fred Farrar Jr., who had 8,283 votes, and in the 14th district, Hulan E. Jack was given 10,133 votes to win over his Republican opponent, Israel Davis, who had 2,571 votes.

11-13-48

Running for the state senate, the Rev. Ben Richardson on the ALP ticket had 12,719 votes to Democrat Harold Panken's 55,874.

Harlem stuck with Truman all the way. Figures follow:

	Truman	Dewey	Wallace
11th D.	19,373	4,620	3,484
12th D.	34,052	9,613	6,676
13th D.	24,089	9,055	5,492
14th D.	13,172	2,632	6,251
16th D.	17,957	7,756	7,000
	108,643	34,076	28,903

Thus New York continued to send more Negroes to its state legislature than any other state and turned out a total of 171,622 votes in a year when registrations did not hit the peak.

Race Ballots in Illinois, California and Ohio Put Truman in Win Column

Negro votes in these three key States proved the key to the re-election of President Truman

EDITOR'S NOTE: John Clark, The Pittsburgh Courier's political analyst and writer of this story, is one of the few men who predicted that Ohio and Illinois, two of the most important States in the Nation in the Electoral College, would go to President Harry S. Truman. In the following story he points out clearly the fact that the Negro vote was a decisive factor in swinging the election into the Democratic column. He also called the turn on six Democratic nominees for the U. S. Senate.

The Courier - Sat 11-13-48
Pittsburgh Pa.

By JOHN L. CLARK, Political Analyst, Pittsburgh Courier.

The Negro vote in three key States swang the Democrats into the victory column on Tuesday, Nov. 2. These three States were:

1. Illinois, with twenty-eight votes; 2. Ohio, with twenty-five electoral votes, and 3. California, with twenty-five electoral votes.

A shift of only 51,000 Negro votes in these three States would have reduced President Truman's winning margin of 99,022 popular votes to less than one-half of that number. Governor Dewey naturally would have gained in the shift. If that had happened the President would have finished the race with seventy-eight less than his present 304 electoral votes for a losing to [redacted] of 226. Governor Dewey's 189 total in the Elect [redacted] College implemented by the se ht electoral votes thus gained, would have produ a winning total of 267 . . . e than the needed majority.

Here are the total v Truman majority, the Negro vote and the Neg tage for Truman in the three States mentioned

Truman Margin	60,000

These unexpected figures were revealed in a political survey conducted by the Los Angeles, Chicago and Cleveland offices of The Pittsburgh Courier.

Figures used in State compilations are based on the latest unofficial election returns.

While it has long been recognized that the Negro holds the balancing vote in many States, it has also been charged that the race seldom exercised that advantage.

DECISIVE ROLE

The results reported above prove without a doubt that in the recent election, Negroes joined with organized labor and the women of the Nation to make their ballots count decisively in these three States.

The Negro vote played decisive roles also in West Virginia, according to a report received from I. J. K. Wells, editor of Color magazine, but it was in California, Ohio and Illinois that the margin was so very pronounced. In these three States, where the total Negro vote was 419,000, their votes swept Mr. Truman into office.

The political preference of the Negro before the election was just as baffling as that of other races. An expressionless silence, which started early in the year and lasted until the polls closed, left the impression that Negroes, like all other voters interviewed by samplers of opinion, "were ready for a change." That was not the case. Much of the story, however, did not leak out until after the results were announced last Wednesday.

From this writer's viewpoint it seems to have been a case of not liking Governor Dewey less, but liking President Truman more. As reasons were unfolded gradually it was learned that a few Negroes who belonged to the trade union movement were opposed to the Taft-Hartley Law.

But most of them forgot about that issue. The issue was complicated, too hard to understand and as they viewed it, the law had not made working conditions any worse for them.

But they were determined to back up Mr. Truman's position on civil rights. They weren't too sure about his sincerity when he appointed his Civil Rights Commission.

They still had doubts when he urged that the report of this commission be enacted into law. They still thought he might have been a Missouri hypocrite at the Philadelphia Convention when Mayor Humphries of Minneapolis, Minn., demanded a "spelled-out" plank on civil rights in the Democratic platform.

HE CONVINCED 'EM

They became convinced, however, that he was no run-of-mind Democrat when he refused to back down after Mississippi and Alabama walked out of the convention. The clincher came in the unusual move Mr. Truman made in calling Congress into a Special Session to find out if the Republicans meant what they said in their June platform. Civil rights legislation, public housing, and price control were included in his message to the law-makers of the Nation at that time.

What the special Congress did NOT DO about civil rights moved the Negro voters closer to Mr. Truman. When the President refused to bow to the wishes of Negro-hating States like South Carolina, Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana, and set out to campaign with these States against him, no amount of persuasion could convince the Negro that President Truman was not the greatest champion of minority rights to come along since Abraham Lincoln.

Negroes waved no flags. Negroes took no part in loyalty parades. Negroes (aside from the professional politicians) did no talking in public. But they surprised election officials all over the country by going to the polls early on election day and voting for the man whom they thought would serve their best interests.

BASIC ISSUES

The conduct of the Republican Eightieth Congress and Dixiecrat party made Mr. Truman the standout candidate for Negroes on equal rights. But other issues in his campaign were also appealing. The present cost of butter, hams, steaks and other foodstuffs; Federal low-cost housing for families unable to pay higher rents than those charged in slum areas; Federal program for more school teachers and assistants to those seeking education; increased social security payments and assistant to the agent—these issues reached into the lives of Negroes of all walks of life and, particularly those with low incomes. As election day neared these issues, with Mr. Truman's position on civil rights always in the forefront, sealed the determination of Negroes to vote Democratic.

The interest of the Negro voter was never higher. According to reports his voting was never more concentrated.

From Chicago, Joseph D. Bibb thus reports: "Despite predictions of Chicago Republican bosses in the heavy voting colored communities, the ballot cast for President Truman and the Democratic party assumed landslide proportions.

"In the famous old Second Ward, from whence came ex-Congressmen Oscar DePriest, Arthur W. Mitchell and the present incumbent William L. Dawson, Truman received 30,718; Dewey, 12,295 and Wallace, 133.

"In the Third Ward, (95 per cent Negro) Truman, 26,841; Dewey, 11,457, and Wallace, 13.

"In the new Twentieth Ward (98 per cent colored) Truman, 26,703; Dewey, 10,498 and Wallace, 284.

"The same pattern and percentage prevailed in the Fourth and Fifth Wards where many colored voters live. In scattered districts on the far South Side, the near North Side and the West Side, the colored electorate plumped for the Democratic ticket religiously."

TELLS THE STORY

Negro voters should do well to remember that Mr. Truman's margin in the entire State of Illinois was 52,108. Mr. Truman's margin in three colored Chicago districts was 51,012. That, we think, tells the story of Illinois.

Albert J. Dunmore, representing the Ohio office, gives this information: "The seven large urban centers of Ohio, including Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Akron, Youngstown and Dayton voted better than three-to-one for Mr. Truman in the Negro districts. In Cleveland, where the Negro vote went heavily for Mr. Dewey in the 1944 election, the vote went three-to-one this year for Mr. Truman.

Out of some 200,000 Negro votes cast throughout the State, more than 130,000 went in the Democratic column. A complete breakdown will not be available for another week. For this reason, The Courier had to depend on estimates arrived at through careful checks with both Republican and Democratic leaders and available precinct returns used as an average.

CLEVELAND DEMOCRATIC

In Cleveland, out of an estimated 45,000 Negro votes, 32,000 were cast for the Democratic candidate. Most important of the trend in Ohio was the heavy Truman vote in Cincinnati, home baliwick of Senator Robert A. Taft. This vote came largely from the Negro wards. It has been conservatively estimated that some 15,000 out of a possible 25,000 Negro vote total in Cincinnati went for Truman. Precincts in the teaming Sixteenth Ward, heart of Cincinnati's West Side, turned in results like this:

Truman	207
Dewey	64
Truman	257
Dewey	62

In Columbus, the State capital, 12,000 out of the 18,000 votes went to Truman.

In Akron, in the Twenty-sixth Ward alone where most Negroes live, the vote was: Truman, 7,091;

Dewey, 2,380, and Wallace, 358.

In the Canton-Alliance-Massilon area the count was Truman, 9,000; Dewey, 3,000.

A report form Atty. Maynard Dickerson, Mahoning County, Youngstown reads as follows: "The total registered vote is 99,782;. 10 per cent of this vote is Negro. Out of sixteen precincts heavily populated by Negroes in Youngstown, 88 per cent of the popular vote went for President Truman, which made Mahoning County the strongest Democratic county north of the Mason-Dixon line and east of the Mississippi River."

Hill's California report is incomplete. But he points out that "Byron Rumford became the first Negro Assemblyman from Berkeley, polling 28,494 votes to 13, 594 for his Republican opponent, Edgar S. Hurley. Throughout the State, it was noted that the Republican party lost ground among colored voters. In and around the San Francisco-Oakland area, where the bulk of colored voters residing in Northern California live, it was noted that these voters abandoned the GOP, remained true to the Democrats and sprinkled a few votes to the Wallace-powered IIP."

WINNING MARGINS

The following figures show the winning margins, Negro and electoral votes, in the three States where a shift of the Negro vote could have changed results of the entire election:

Dawson Schedules National Truman Civil Rights Day

Wants Church Congregations To Rally

Oklahoma City Okla.

NEW YORK—Congressman William L. Dawson, chairman of the National Citizens Committee for the re-election of President Truman, this week called upon churchgoers throughout the nation to rededicate themselves to the achievement of true democracy for all Americans.

The Congressman appealed to ministers of all faiths to set aside one Sunday during the period September 12-26 as National Truman Civil Rights Day. He urged them to impress upon their congregations the individual responsibility of every person for supporting the President's Civil Rights Program which he termed "the essence of democracy and the key to world peace.

Sat 9-18-48

"Freedom, peace and security are within our reach at this time," Congressman Dawson said. He reminded, however, that historically, freedom has been bought with sacrifice—often with blood, sweat and tears. He urged church congregations to rally financially behind the National Citizens Committee in their efforts to re-elect Mr. Truman whom he said has demonstrated the highest degree of statesmanship in pressing for a new birth of freedom in America.

"Truman has won the support of all Americans who are true believers in the brotherhood of man," Dawson said. "In his determined stand for civil rights, he has shown a courage and deep conviction unmatched by any of his predecessors in the White House. We must match his deeds with our dollars. We must reelect this true disciple of American democracy."

Congressman Dawson paid high tribute to the ministers of the nation for their labors on the civil rights battle line. He said: "Many have toiled in the heat of day, often unheralded and seldom appreciated to establish the true brotherhood of man throughout the length and breadth of our country. I know that each minister has been greatly strengthened in his efforts through the knowledge that they have had behind them a strong ally in President Truman.'

Sat 9-18-48

Reports coming into the National Citizens Committee headquarters at the Biltmore hotel indicate that numerous communities are moving full speed ahead on their Truman Civil Rights Day plans.

The Kentucky Citizens Committee, headed by Frank Stanley, publisher of the Louisville Defender, will hold a mammoth rally in the Louisville City Auditorium on September 26th. Mrs. Hortense Young, executive secretary of the committee, was in New York this week for a conference with Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., whom they hope to secure as the main speaker for the occasion. Congressman Dawson has also agreed to address the meeting.

The Brooklyn Citizens Committee, headed by Father John Coleman, has completed plans for its Civil Rights Day to be held on September 12th at the Boys' High school. Brooklyn labor leaders this week teamed in to make the rally a resounding success. Odell Clark, Hexton Harden, and Charles Owens are actively supporting the committee's plans.

From Cleveland, Ohio, come reports that Attorney Jean Murrell Capers is having a huge rally on September 26th. Mrs. Anna Arnold Hedgeman, executive director of the National Citizens Committee, will be a guest speaker. Attorney Raymond Pace Alexander of Philadelphia will be principal speaker for the big civil rights rally in Roanoke, Virginia on September 12th, Dr. Harry T. Penn, chairman of the Virginia Citizens Committee, has informed national headquarters.

Sat 9-1948

"These encouraging reports are an indication that American citizens have stopped murmuring about civil rights and are pitching in financially, politically, and spiritually to make it a vital reality in our national life and throughout the world," Congressman Dawson said.

Re-Elect Truman Units Active In 79 Cities, 30 States, Dawson Reports

Chicago Def

NEW YORK—Strong nationwide support by Negroes of the candidacy of President Truman was divulged this week by Chicago's Congressman William L. Dawson in a progress report on the National Citizens Committee for the Reelection of President Truman of which he is chairman.

Branch committees of the organization, formed after the close of the Democratic National Convention in Philadephia, have been estabished in 17 states, and sponsors of the organization represent 79 cities in 30 states, he said.

Sat 10-2-48

In addition 21 outstanding Negro publications have been pledged to back the Truman campaign.

One of the most heartening factors of the drive to raise $1,000,000 to finance the campaign, Congressman Dawson, pointed out in his report is the enthusiasm of the little man in this campaign as indicated by a large number of small contributions.

Dawson's report declared in part:

Sat 10-2-48

"Negro Democrats in South Carolina and Arkansas have already forwarded thousand dollar contributions each to the National Committee. They are continuing to raise funds. Texas, Georgia and Virginia have state-wide organizations rallying Negro voters for President Truman and raising campaign funds for his re-election. A number of understanding Negro Americans in this country have made history by contributing a thousand dollars each for the re-election of Mr. Truman.

"Contributions from thousands of "little people" in America have been heartwarming. In some instances these contributions have been nothing more than strong moral support, but these are as significant as financial contributions. The other day a letter came to us from Mrs. H. Peat, 403 East Easton st., Tulsa, Okla. She wrote: "I am 73 years old. I have no money to give, but I am for Mr. Truman for President. and tell all the colored papers to publishthat he must be our President. Heis the only man for it."

Mississippi's $10,000 for Truman

The Courier

34 a 11

OUR esteemed contemporary, the Jackson (Miss.) Advocate, announces that the Mississippi Division of the National Citizens Committee for the Re-election of President Truman has accepted the task of raising $10,000 from the one million Negroes of Mississippi to keep President Truman in the White House.

Sat 9-11-48

This committee has suggested that every Negro in the State give up the price of a good dinner to make sure that the party of Rankin, et al., remains in power in Washington, D. C.

"What," says the editor, "is the price of a good dinner at the table of liberty?" And he adds, "It is a time of great challenge to every thinking Negro, and every responsible Negro leader in every community in the State."

Pittsburgh Pa.

It is certainly the right of every Negro in Mississippi to give up the price of a good dinner and contribute it to the coffers of the Democratic party or to any other party.

With campaign funds as low as they are, it is unquestionable that $10,000 from Mississippi Negroes would be welcome to the Democratic party at this crucial time with the handwriting appearing faintly on the wall.

Senators Stennis and Eastland and Congressmen Rankin, Whitten, Whittington, Abernathy, Winstead, Colmer and Williams will probably be so glad to get that $10,000 from Mississippi Negroes that they will use their influence and votes to have all civil rights legislation promptly enacted!

As to dining "at the table of liberty," there may be a little difficuty because of the "separate but equal" provision in the Mississippi constitution.

Of course we have never heard of this table of liberty in Mississippi but of necessity it would have to be a jim-crow table, and it is difficult to see how Negro and white Democrats could dine at the same time unless it is planned to build a partition down the center with white Democrats feasting on one side and colored Democrats feasting on the other side.

Possibly the problem might be solved by having the diners eat in colored and white shifts, and in the usual order.

Here, indeed, is "a great challenge to every thinking Negro" in Mississippi and, we might add, to the thinking white folks as well, because the problem of seating all of these Mississippi Democrats of both races at the same time at any table, liberty or otherwise, will be no less difficult than squaring the circle or melting the Greenland ice cap.

34 a 11

Nevertheless there is no doubt in our minds that the problem will be solved in some manner best known to the collectors of the $10,000 because the editor insists that "the price of liberty . . . must be paid for in cash money."

Sat 9-11-48

We know there are some carping individuals who might suggest that the $10,000 be used by Mississippi Negroes for some homely and practical purpose like establishing a health clinic or a portable first aid station against the time when the white Mississippi Democrats resume their usual pastime, but such advice will be rejected with indignation.

After all, if the reforms presumably instituted by Mr. Truman in Mississippi, Missouri and elsewhere in the Smith and Wesson Zone are to be continued, the Negro Democrats should be willing to pay for them, even if they do have to dine at "the table of liberty" after Rankin and Eastland have finished!

One of the most heartening factors of the drive to raise $1,000,000 to finance the campaign, Congressman Dawson, pointed out in his report is the enthusiasm of the little man in this campaign as indicated by a large number of small contributions.

Dawson's report declared in part:

"Negro Democrats in South Carolina and Arkansas have already forwarded thousand dollar contributions each to the National Committee. They are continuing to raise funds. Texas, Georgia and Virginia have state-wide organizations rallying Negro voters for President Truman and raising campaign funds for his re-election. A number of understanding Negro Americans in this country have made history by contributing a thousand dollars each fo the re-election of Mr. Truman.

"Contributions from thousands of "little people" in America have been heartwarming. In some instances these contributions have been nothing more than strong moral support, but these are as significant as financial contributions.

The other day a letter came to us from Mrs. H. Peat, 403 East Easton st., Tulsa, Okla. She wrote: "I am 73 years old. I have no money to give, but I am for Mr. Truman for President. and tell all the colored papers to publish that he must be our President. He is the only man for it.""

Negro Voters Back Truman As 5,000,000 Go To The Polls

The Defender

Chicago, Ill

WASHINGTON — The vote of approximately 5-million Negroes who went to the polls on November 2 was one of the decisive factors in winning the political upset scored by President Truman last Tuesday.

Seasoned Negro politicians estimate the Negro vote for Truman to be between 80 and 85 per cent, much of it concentrated in those states which decided the election—Illinois, Ohio, California and Massachusetts.

The Negro vote in such southern states as Arkansas, Georgia, Texas, and North Carolina helped the President pile up the thumping majorities which placed those states in his column. Although the President lost the state of South Carolina, a larger portion of the 30,498 votes diverted from Dixiecrat Presidential candidate Gov. Strom Thurmond was that of Negroes, informed sources inside the states assert. Some 700,000 southern Negroes were qualified to vote in this year's election. This represents an increase of 600 per cent over 1942. This figure is expected to increase to 2,000,000 by 1952.

In Massachusetts, Dr. Silas Taylor, veteran political leader told the Defender that 82 percent of the Negroes in that state cast their vote for President Truman. Mr. Truman carried Massachusetts by 200,864 popular votes winning her 16 electorial votes.

In New York City's four predominantly Negro districts, the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th gave the President total of 96,686, or approximately 70 per cent of their total vote cast. In each of these districts, Gov. Dewey, Republican Presidential candidate lost by a greater margin than in 1944.

Negroes in Philadelphia gave Mr. Truman a popular vote of 76,166, thereby substantially contributing to his vote majority in this GOP stronghold which he carried by the slim margin of 6,040 votes.

Chicago's predominantly Negro 2nd and 3rd wards lined up strongly behind President Truman and the entire state and National Democratic ticket sweeping the windy city again into Democratic control.

Negro voters in California, many who are immigrants from the South who have benefitted under the New Deal program, also supported President Truman strongly. The fact that the Negro vote is a concentrated vote, due to enforced patterns of segregated living in most urban communities, makes it a potent political factor in strategic states

Sat 11-13-48

Contrary to pre-election claims by certain Progressive Party spokesmen, Henry A. Wallace, the party's Presidential candidate polled a negligible vote among Negroes in Nothern urban communities and practically none at all in the South.

Of the total 1,065,672 votes which the Progressives polled nationally, 507,449, or almost 50 per cent were polled in New York. Of this total, 21,903, or approximately 4 per cent of this vote was Negro. In Philadelphia where Wallace got his third largest support of 20,480

Will Forget Minor Defections, Not 'Mortal Sins,' He Says in Key West—GOP Aid Welcomed

New York, N.Y.

By ANTHONY LEVIERO

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KEY WEST, Fla., Nov. 11—Senator, J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the Democratic national committee, said this evening that the Democrats would welcome cooperation from Republican Liberals in Congress and expressed the belief that President Truman would be lenient with minor offenders among the party's unfaithful.

The Rhode Island Senator joined the Chief Executive this afternoon for a week-end rest at the winter White House on the naval base where Mr. Truman is resting.

The President spent a quiet Armistice Day. Thirty years ago today, as captain of Battery D, 129th Field Artillery, he fired his last shells at the Germans fifteen minutes before the 11 o'clock armistice. Today one of his main activities was to act the host at a swimming party for about fifty members of the press at which note-books and cameras were barred.

Mr. McGrath said he had no specific problems to discuss with the President, that he had merely been invited down for a holiday. He said, however, that he was ready to discuss anything that the President might bring up.

Fri 11-12-48

Senator Silent on Cabinet

The Senator declined to be drawn into a discussion of possible Cabinet changes. Asked if he favored replacement of certain Cabinet members, he stopped the discussion with "no comment."

The brief interview with the Senator then turned in a general way to what might happen to those who deserted Mr. Truman or were merely lukewarm, including Cabinet officers, during the election campaign. After saying that the President was not vindictive, Mr. McGrath added:

"The President isn't geared that way. He can't help but forgive. I'm sure the President will forgive venial sins."

Thu 11-12-48

But he indicated that "mortal" sins would not be forgiven.

Discussion brought out that Mr. McGrath distinguished between venial sins, which he defined as "misdemeanors," and "mortal" political sins. That the party would reward the faithful Mr. McGrath was made equally clear.

"We don't intend to forget our friends," he remarked.

"And what goes with that is that you don't intend to forget your enemies," interjected a reporter.

"That completes the quotation," agreed Senator McGrath.

Meanwhile it was learned that some high party men are after the political scalps of Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce, and Julius A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior. How Mr. Truman feels about this is not known, however. Oscar Chapman, Under-Secretary of the Interior, is mentioned as a possible successor to Mr. Krug.

Prominent in speculation on possible Administration changes was the degree of service given by political figures.

Mr. Sawyer was involved in a party split in his home state of Ohio. As a partisan of Ray Miller, boss of the regular Democratic machine, he was on the losing side.

Mr. Miller was defeated in the primaries for the gubernatorial candidacy of Frank J. Lausche, a Democrat who ran as an independent and won the Governorship on election day. It was also said that some party chieftains were not satisfied with Mr. Sawyer's attitude during the campaign.

Varying reports about Mr. Krug's services in the campaign were being heard. On the other hand Mr. Chapman was one of the chief strategists of the Democrat campaign. Wherever the Presidential train traveled. Mr. Chapman was a few days ahead making arrangements for a favorable reception.

"The assistance of progressive Republicans will be very welcome," was Mr. McGrath's comment on the proffer of such cooperation that was made last week-end by Senator George D. Aiken, of Vermont.

Senator Aiken sent a letter to President Truman in which he said he specifically pledged votes for widening of social Security, development of natural resources, Federal aid to education, and a long-range farm-support program. This letter has not yet reached the winter White House, said Eben Ayres, assistant press officer.

"Not worried" About Deficit

Mr. McGrath said he favored the idea of Mrs. India Edwards, head of the women's Division of the Democcratic National Committee, that women should get greater representation in public office, nut he added that it was "too early to be specific He was asked about the condition of the committee's treasury.

"We have some deficit, which I'M not worrying about," he replied with a smile. He also remarked that before victory came he had been "worried gray"bout campaign funds.

Mr. McGrath came down here with William Boyle, one of his committee aides, who is credited with giving great service during the campaign. Senator McGrath, Vice President-Elect Alben W. Barkley and Leslie L. Biffle, staff director of the senate minority policy committee, will fly to Havana tomorrow for a visit with President Carlos Prio Socarras of Cuba.

Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughn, Army aide to the President, represented the Chief Executive today at American Legion Armistic Day ceremonies in town. He said it was Mr. Truman's "fervent daily prayer" that the youths of this and succeeding generations would be forever spared the horrors of war. He also said that th the President has dedicated his life to "Peace for this nation and the world."

The Winner And Still Champion

Sat 11-13-48

Chicago Ill

From the backwoods hamlet to the big city square the "common people" of America joined hands last Tuesday and staged a demonstration of faith in the democratic system which has no parallel in our history.

Black men, white men, farmers, workers, women and men from every corner of our great land rallied to support their champion in a vote crusade that stunned the master-minds from Wall street to the Kremlin.

Chicago Defender

34a(2)

Harry S. Truman had angered the white supremacists of Dixie, the bosses of monopoly capital, the 'pinks' of Stalin. He was opposed by the vast combines of American propaganda, the powerful newspapers and the great radio chains and the great horde of commentators, poll takers, and all the false prophets who kneel at the altar of organized greed. No candidate for the presidency of the United States ever faced a greater combination of hostile power.

In the face of such opposition Harry Truman never wavered once. He discussed every issue from civil rights to foreign policy and he took his stand without qualification or compromise. He denounced the evils which beset our society and challenged the views of his adversary at every whistle-stop and railroad junction that he possibly could.

Branding the 80th Congress the "worst" in American history, he said the people would never go wrong if they understood the issues. He took it upon himself to make them understand. He discussed high prices, low-cost housing, federal aid to education and civil rights in plain language and dared his opponent to let the people know where he stood.

The vote crusade which Mr. Truman inspired has given America a new Congress that is committed to liberalism and civil rights. This latter issue was supposed to be the kiss of death and Governor Dewey was afraid even to mention the word. Mr. Truman knew that the majority of the American people are ashamed of race prejudice, of racial discrimination and Jim Crow. He knew that Americans at heart believe in equality of opportunity, in freedom and equal justice.

Sat 11-13-48

For us Mr. Truman's sweeping victory proves beyond question that Negroes shall achieve full citizenship in our democracy and that civil rights represent the bedrock upon which our republic rests. The President won our support and the overwhelming majority of the votes of the Negro citizenry. We therefore take special pride in hailing Harry S. Truman, the winner and still champion.

I have just graduated from high school. While there, my teachers always said that the people had the right to vote for whom they pleased. But in this recent election, Truman's name wasn't allowed on the ballot in Alabama. Was this democratic?

My age didn't allow me to vote in this election; if I could have I wouldn't have voted for Truman. But, if any person in Alabama wanted to vote for Truman, that was their privilege. As I will help elect the next president, I would like to know whether a few persons can tell me who I can or can't vote for.

The presidential election is over in America. Regardless of our personal feelings about the outcome, let us bless our government and the leaders and let us extend our blessing to all nations and their leaders.

The overwhelming victory America has given to the Democrats is a real challenge to loyal Democrats. May we accept this as a challenge and may our leaders in Congress be unified in thought, purpose and understanding.

I have always fought for Dixie, and I shall continue to do so within the confines of the Democratic Party.

I shall fill my place on the Democratic National Committee the next four years to the best of my ability, and as the Southern representative of the executive committee of the Democratic National Committee I shall do my best to help Alabama outlive the terrible publicity we gained internationally by not being able to cast a free vote for the President of the United States. Unfortunately, Alabama voters were political prisoners in this general election. I presume the small vote cast is certain proof that the majority of Alabamians feel as I do about the fact that the nominee of the Democratic National Convention was not on Alabama's ballot.

May we together, in a bipartisan way, pray for and decree a permanent peace, uniting all the nations of the earth in a league of justice and righteousness, in which the life, liberty and love of God shall be paramount. If we do this we have nothing to fear about the future of the world.

All Pretty Tough

To the Editor:

Tues 11-9-48

Looks as though Little Ole Harry has his personal housing problem pretty well solved for the next four years. And I thought he was fixing up that balcony for somebody else.

Mr. Truman did a good thing for the country when he showed that a president can be elected without the electoral votes of either New York or Pennsylvania. The boys from those two states never seemed to think so.

But while proving this our No. 1 man from Missouri also showed that a president can likewise be elected as a Democrat without all the Solid South. This doesn't make us folks around here any too happy.

Before you wear anything home you'd better try it on for size. Our Dixiecrat High Hat came down over our ears and made us look kind o' small. The idea of throwing the election into the House was too long a shot. It didn't work. The Dixie group was small enough in the Democrat convention and when it got out in the open sea it was smaller still.

It's all pretty tough.

Yet there is one bright and sunshiny corner for us Southerners to snug up in. The election gives us a Democrat Congress with Southerners as chairmen of over half the powerful committees there. The opposite is true with Republicans organizing the Congress. Nearly all committee heads are Northerners. It is in these committees that such legislation as the Dixiecrats have been frightened about are bottled up.

Just goes to show how short-sighted the South is when it takes action calculated to give aid and comfort to the Republicans. Any time we cannot get our dirty linen laundered and ironed out in party convention we had better hold on and wait for four more years.

THERE IS ONLY one question on which professional politicians, poll-takers, political reporters and other wiseacres and prognosticators can any longer speak with much authority. That is how they want their crow cooked. These particular reporters prefer their crow fricasseed.

With this preface, it is interesting to speculate on the triumphant reelection of President Harry S. Truman in the face of the universal belief that he was a beaten man before the balloting started. An explanation is at least strongly suggested by the vote for the four presidential candidates, plus the votes for candidates for Congress. The people of the United States are considerably further to the left than had been supposed. The facts to support this conclusion can be summarized very easily.

B'ham; Ala

The Reasons

FIRST, ANYONE WHO PAID MUCH ATTENTION to what Truman said, must have been astonished to observe that his campaign speeches were consistently more aggressive and more radical than any Franklin Delano Roosevelt ever uttered. At his hottest and angriest, Roosevelt never laid into big business as Truman did. Nor did Roosevelt ever promise specific reforms, well beyond any currently popular with other politicians, as Truman did.

Second, the record of the Eightieth Congress was beyond doubt Truman's greatest strength. In the farm states, he could and did point to such phenomena as the Republican senators and representatives undercutting the Rural Electrification Administration at the behest of the power lobby. In the great urban areas, he could and did point to the Taft-Hartley act. His huge audiences did not seem to listen very carefully at the time. But these points of Truman's meant pork chops to the farmers and workers; the farmers and workers evidently went home and thought about it and decided that a vote for Truman would be the best safeguard of their interests.

Third, the Republican conservatism of the great Midwestern farming area, which has been an accepted fact in all recent American political calculation, is a fact no longer. Truman had to carry several states in this area in order to counter-balance his loss of New York and the Dixiecrat territory. He carried them handily. No one can any longer talk with pompous certainty about "isolationist, stand-pat Iowa." The voters in these states were not going to the polls in the mood of the sheriff-chasing mortgage-burning farmers of the '30s. A good many of them could, if they chose, have flown in to cast their ballots in their private airplanes. Yet they voted for the Democrats just the same.

They Know What They Want

THERE MAY BE SOMETHING to the argument that the prevailing prosperity was a great help to the Ins and an obstacle to the Outs. But it is outrageously patronizing to assume that the electorate did not understand the issue involved in this election.

Furthermore, there is ample proof that the voters knew exactly what they wanted. Without exception, the senatorial candidates of true Eightieth Congress flavor—the brassy Brooks of Illinois, Ball of Minnesota, Wilson of Iowa, Robertson of Wyoming and the Neanderthal Revercomb of West Virginia—ran badly behind Gov. Thomas E. Dewey. In these states Dewey was undoubtedly preferred, as being relatively modern-minded. On the other hand Dewey tralied the more progressive Cooper of Kentucky, who was unfortunately beaten by a small margin, and Saltonstall of Massachusetts, who won. All these returns, together with the ridiculously small vote for the pathetic Henry A. Wallace, make a perfectly clear picture of the voters' political viewpoint.

Only one or two of the Republican isolationist-reactionaries sensed the voters' viewpoint before the balloting. One such was the great tax-cutter, Harold Knutson of Minnesota, who listened to the wind in the grass roots of his supposedly rock-ribbed isolationist Republican district, and loudly announced his last-minute conversion to the Marshall plan a few days before Nov. 2. Those who could not grasp what the voters wanted before Nov. 2, must at least be able to do so now. The brand of domestic policy peddled by the National Association of Manufacturers, and the brand of foreign policy offered by Colonel Robert R. McCormick, may now be officially considered to have about as much political appeal as red-hot vegetarianism.

What Next?

Sun 11-7-48

THIS IS THE ANSWER, of course, to those blind extremists in the Republican Party who are now muttering the whole business was the fault of Thomas E. Dewey and his "high level" campaign. Governor Dewey could only have come to hard grips with President Truman by talking like Brooks, Revercomb & Co. In that case, the figures say that he would have been far worse beaten than he was. Dewey took the best line he could have taken, to escape the onus of the Eightieth Congress record. The Eightieth Congress record, which was Truman's central campaign issue, was a handicap Dewey could not overcome.

As to what will now ensue, these reporters, feeling somewhat replete after one heavy meal of crow, are not prepared to make forecasts. President Truman returns to the White House owing no individual anything except grudges. He owes much to the American people collectively. But the labor leaders did not want him, the political leaders tried to get rid of him, the Democratic contributors almost unanimously dried up on him, and the press patronized and discounted him. Even within his own administration, there are those whose support he must regard as having been strikingly lukewarm. The question is whether he will not proceed to pay off the unfaithfuls, or will concentrate on the vast responsibility he has courageously won again.—©

The Constitution

Thurs 11-4-48

It was about 3 o'clock in the morning of July 15, in the steaming, anger-torn Convention Hall where the Democrats were assembled.

An effort to produce a platform satisfactory to the South had been defeated in the afternoon by the left-wing groups in the Party. Early in the evening a portion of the Alabama delegation and all the Mississippi group had answered the problem with the primitive and unsatisfactory argument of simply walking out of the hall, leaving the problem to those willing to grapple with it.

By 3 o'clock in the morning, the Democratic Convention had reached the nomination of its leaders, President Harry S. Truman and Sen. Alben Barkley. A mixture of sullenness and hopeful cheering greeted them, as the weary newsmen sent off leads describing them as the nominees of compromise, hopelessness, strife and futility.

Atlanta Ga

Into the bright lights stepped Harry S. Truman. He had said of himself that he was not a great or unusually able man. None thought so of him that night. Mere hours before the political machines in the great cities had sought to block him. The left-wing element had repudiated him, taking him only when, and only because, there was no other choice.

He began to read his statement of acceptance in a flat, uninspiring voice.

"We are going to win," he said, sawing the air with his right hand, "because we are right and they, the Republicans, are wrong."

Today Harry S. Truman and Alben Barkley have won.

An incredulous, astonished and uncomprehending nation cannot quite take in the fact of it. It could not happen. Yet it did happen. Dewey was sure to win. Every poll showed him far ahead. The Atlanta Constitution, while supporting the Democratic ticket, felt, with almost every other newspaper, that Dewey would win but that the popular vote would be close. We had sensed the feeling of the farmers in the South and in the Middle West that the Republican Party was out to destroy the laws of parity and the legislation of price support. We knew the West was disturbed about the GOP effort to balk development of rivers and irrigation. But we never wove this into any interpretation of a great ground swell for Harry S. Truman.

The victory is his. He and Alben Barkley fought for this as no other candidates have fought in the history of our politics. The events of 1916 between Wilson and Hughes were near-miraculous. The events of 1948 were, and are, a political miracle.

It is not difficult to analyze.

The people did not like the Eightieth Congress. The people did not believe it had tried to solve the problems of people who do not, for all the pious promising, have housing. It had not tried to do anything about inflation. It had not tried to do anything to remove the atmosphere of greed and selfishness which were the clothing of that Congress.

The explanation of the Truman victory—which was greater in its aspects than any Roosevelt victory save the one of 1936 —is the same one which won for Roosevelt. The coalition of the farmers and of labor. There were other, lesser elements. But the farmer-labor coalition was its sinews and its bones.

We are happy Georgia gave to the Party its vote. The Republican Party showed a vitality which, had it not been for the Dixiecrats, would have been more effective—as it was in Florida, in Virginia, in Tennessee and other Southern States. The Republicans made a fine showing in the South—when measured against the national yardstick.

It is good, too, that Mr. Truman won to go with the smashing Party victory in the House and Senate. We welcome back to power our old friends, Sens. Russell and George, and our Congressmen. The full responsibility may now be placed where it belongs.

Thurs 11-4-48

We are the most pleased because of the magnificent vitality which the two-party system showed. The Dixiecrats were impotent and futile in their folly and lack of wisdom in appraising the true problems of the South. The Wallace debacle and collapse was very gratifying. That befuddled man, led to the mountaintop and showed the promised land by the Communists, is revealed in all his naked dishonesty of mind. It was not many months ago he was saying how harmful and futile were third parties. That he should have proved it with his own maddening course is perhaps the truest measure of his mind.

We feel that our democratic institutions have revealed their strength and their stability. God seems always to have been with this nation. We trust that He will continue so, and that our people may bind up their political wounds and say, with our great men of the past, "This is my country, which I love and revere and which I will serve to the best of my ability."

Out From The Shadows

act, labor—and many Americans in other groups—felt that in some respects it had gone too far. What would the Republicans do if they achieved full power? What assurance was there that they would do as well as the Democrats? That was the broad question that evidently troubled numerous voters, whose answer was a turndown of the GOP.

Many feared that tendencies of Republican reaction, already apparent, would go much farther under total victory—and the result might lead toward economic decline and growing international peril.

Mr. Dewey did not have the personal appeal and strength to reassure and overcome such feelings. There was too much division within, and uncertainty about, his party for it to capitalize victoriously on the great chance it faced.

But whatever accounts for the result, it is our country—and the peace of the world—which should be the first concern of us all.

Gov. Dewey and Gov. Warren, magnanimous in defeat in the traditional American spirit, have expressed their congratulations and good wishes to the president. That should be the spirit of all Americans. It is events, dangers and realities, irrespective of parties and persons, that largely make the issues confronting the nation. The needs for fundamental unity, which the Republicans admirably stressed so emphatically, remain urgent. We Americans will need all our combined strength, wisdom, fidelity. United endeavor to supreme objectives commands us all.

Thur 11-4-48

That does not mean, of course, that we must forego sincere expression of differing convictions about methods and programs. It does mean that we should seek the light and leading which come from such discussion in a broad-minded spirit and with our highest devotion to the common good.

This newspaper believes that such a spirit and devotion will be dominant and that in the strength and guidance which they provide our nation can press on with confidence, even in this troubled age, toward better and happier times for itself and all the world.

The nation is still trying to take in the meanings and implications of President Truman's astonishing victory and the powerful resurgence of the Democratic Party. Mr. Truman himself steadfastly proclaimed confidence that he would win. But surely there were relatively few Americans who had any such expectation. The results of the election were so surprising as to be shocking to the capacities of analysis of even the most seasoned observers. It was much as if something had happened that simply could not happen. How account for such a reality as that?

Here were the Democrats who had been in executive power for 16 years fraught with many problems and developments making for uncertainty, doubt, divided sentiment and much criticism. Their leader had been subjected to severe and widespread attack. He had made serious errors and shown decided shortcomings. Besides, there was intense division in the party, with one wing going to the Thurmond-Wright ticket, others following Henry Wallace. How could the Republicans fail in such an opportunity. They couldn't—so it seemed. Many of the millions who voted for Mr. Truman doubtless felt that way themselves. But they did. Why?

Well, remember, first of all, that there is a substantial record of Democratic achievement. There is a tremendous mass feeling that the Democratic Party is closer to the people and their problems. There was the obvious fact that Mr. Truman had sought valiantly to serve the nation as best he knew how. In many ways he had shown his courage, his devotion. So far the country is still at peace. It is still enjoying an unprecedented economic prosperity. The president and the Democratic Party—not without persuasive reasons—presented themselves as the faithful guardians of both.

On the other hand, the Republican 80th Congress had raised doubts on the question of foreign policy—particularly aid to other nations. It had done little about the pressing problems of housing and inflation. Sound as are important parts of the Taft-Hartley

. . . THE ADVERTISER IS DISTURBED that Harry Truman will guide the destinies of America in the coming four years. We believe that he is dangerous through his incompetence, so profusely exampled. But for all of that, we have all the time been calling Truman a gamecock and conceding—nay, proclaiming—his gallantry. And that is about all we can talk about today.

Harry Truman will take office for the new term in January as perhaps the most debt-free president in American history. He doesn't owe anybody anything.

Last Summer at the Philadelphia convention the party leaders sought by all means to dump Truman because he obviously could not win. They tried to blast Truman out with the magical Eisenhower.

The fat cats of the party were stingy with their campaign contributions. . . . So there were times when Truman didn't have the price of a needed radio broadcast.

His cabinet officers had as deep an infection of Potomac fever as anybody else in Washington, but why waste their wind on a mortally stricken candidacy? They lay down on Truman and barely went through the campaign motions.

Henry Wallace split off from the party, reviled Truman and—according to the polls—deprived Truman of victory margins in pivotal states.

Parts of the Solid South—as a crowning blow—split off from the party, and the nettle of it was that the desertion could not in this case be attributed to religious prejudice. . . .

What of Alabama, the South and the civil disturbance program?

Truman will now contend that he holds a mandate from the American people to enact these measures.

But there is no reason to despair. We will, as we always have, depend on the only powers that can finally obstruct these enactments—Sen. Hill, Sen. Sparkman and the congressmen.

In their resistance, the congressmen will be served in an unheralded fashion by the Dixiecrat movement. The movement occasioned a debate that impressed many thoughtful and powerful elements.

Truman has no reason to be grateful to the revolting states. That especially applies to Alabama, where Truman's dispirited followers backed down from qualifying a slate of electors. . . .

Mon 11-8-48

Alabama has been twice scandalized in the eyes of her sister states in the past two years. The first national Alabama scandal was James E. Folsom. The next one (as the nation sees it) is a ballot on which Truman's name did not appear.

Only in a spirit of restraint and of calm can we repair this damage. It is now time for the raucous hotspurs to subside. . . .

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 4.—Governor Wright, States' Rights candidate for vice president, Thursday wired President Truman his congratulations and pledged full co-operation "within the framework of the Constitution in your efforts to preserve world peace and find peace and happiness for our peole at home."

The Governor, however, informed the President that the States' Rights "fight to preserve the principle of local self-government" will be continued.

"Along with all the people of the Nation, I admire the courageous and untiring campaign waged by you so victoriously," the Governor's telegram stated.

Fight Will Continue

"Our fight for tates' Rights was a fight to preserve the principle of local self-government, and we shall continue to fight in defense of this fundamental precept of the Constitution whenever the need may arise," the message stated.

In a statement, Governor Wright said the people of Mississippi, "with typical courage and devotion to the cause of constitutional government, have once again expressed their determination to preserve our ideals and freedoms." Mississippi gave the Thurmond-Wright States' Rights electors a 10 to one vote, for which the Governor said: "I am deeply grateful."

Co-operation Pledged

"Our freeway of life can only be preserved through the efforts of interested citizens fulfilling the responsibilities of Government under the Constitution," he said. "Mississippians will always perform abligations as citizens in order that we may continue to enjoy our privileges as citizens of this the world's last great citadel of freedom.

Fri 11-5-48

"Now that the election is over, I know that all Mississippians will give full co-operation in working together with their fellow Americans for a continuation of our way of life in keeping with the spirit of the Constitution—guardian of our freedoms."

'Trying To Steal the Election'

34a(2)

The Courier Journal

WASHINGTON—It is becoming clear already in "interpretations" of the recent election by spokesmen of big interests who are trying to discount the Truman triumph that the campaign already is under way to nullify the victory of the people. What the people said was plenty plain. They want more social and economic protection along the lines that Harry S. Truman promised in his campaign which they ratified. They don't want any more sleight-of-hand and hidden ball plays such as those in the Eightieth Congress to check such changes. Harry Truman told them all about those and the election showed they had caught on.

Yet those who would steal this election, after the fact, are relying again upon Congress and the same sort of legislative legerdemain. Their hope lies in using an old familiar blockade—that coalition between hard-shelled Republicans and mossback Southern Democrats that was organized 10 years ago after the 1938 election and has stopped every proposed social and economic welfare measure since.

It could happen if the people are not alert and if President Truman fails to organize his victory in Congress.

But the President can get most of his program, and without too much compromise, if he constantly calls upon the great public support manifest for him in the election, keeps the people informed of what goes on in Congress, as he did so effectively in his campaign analyses of the Eightieth Congress, and uses his political skill to organize the progressive forces in Congress and the nation.

For the election was a victory for progressivism and an analysis of election results shows that this can be translated into Congress through changes there that the voters made, so that the President can have a workable majority, despite the coalition, in both branches on most of his program. There was a considerable and healthy infusion of progressivism in new members who ran on the Truman program. These came, for the most part, from areas conducive to progressivism, many from big urban centers in the East and Middle West which reflect the influence of labor, others from the West where there is basic progressivism and particularly on conservation issues such as reclamation and public power.

Properly organized and directed, they will be in a position to batter away at such barriers as may be raised by conservative Southern Democrats who again will occupy some important committee chairmanships, though not quite as many as formerly.

An example of the problem of President Truman and progressives is the House Rules Committee where the ball has been hidden so often before, most recently in the Eightieth Congress when the long-range housing bill was tucked away so that the House never got a chance to vote on it. Democrats will have eight places on that Committee in the Eighty-first Congress, with four for Republicans. There are five Democratic vacancies. If the clear mandate of the election is not represented there by progressive appointments and if conservatives are given a preponderance—there are already two Southern Democrats on the Committee—then much of the election victory will be stolen right there, no matter how the people voted.

It took nine months, for example, to get the Wage-Hour Bill out of that Committee back in 1938, though Democrats had an overwhelming majority in the House itself. That was, incidentally, the last New Deal reform. In the subsequent election that year, Republicans boosted their strength from 80 to 169 in the House and the famous coalition was organized with Southern Democrats to squelch every such bill.

That illustrates the potential danger in the next Congress in which Republicans still will have 172 members, Democrats 262 and American Labor Party one. But, of the hundred Democrats from the South, it appears that fewer will go along with Republicans consistently than 10 years ago. Also there are a number of Republicans, both in House and Senate, who will not become parties to the coalition.

Wed 11-10-48

A quick appraisal as of this time indicates that President Truman should be successful on housing, health, education and minimum wage increase bills to which the Republican platform also gave indorsement. He will have difficulty with revision of the Taft-Hartley Act and inflation controls, though he should get something in each of those fields. As for civil rights, he now has a majority in both branches through Republican support, though the same filibuster problem exists in the Senate as before unless the rules are changed to outlaw filibustering.

That Amazing Election Monopolizes Comment In Kentuckiana Press

Courier Journal

Mon 11-8-48

34a(2)

Louisville Ky

THE astonishing upset which elected Harry Truman and Alben Barkley almost monopolized comment by Kentuckiana newspaper editors last week.

Jess G. Anderson, writing in THE MAYFIELD MESSENGER, declared: "Everybody was fooled but the people. They were confounded, too, and puzzled, but they did not concede before the election. They went out and voted in huge numbers. . . . The people had read where the election was all over, but they didn't believe it."

Said THE PADUCAH PRESS, in Senator Barkley's home town: "So many stories have been written on Paducah's favorite son since our last edition that if we devoted every column of our paper to Mr. Barkley, leaving out the ads, we still couldn't get one tenth of everything in, so we've hit the high spots. We're all proud of the well-deserved honors bestowed on the senator and we predict that he will be the outstanding Vice-President in United States history. Can we say more?"

Said THE PADUCAH SUN-DEMOCRAT, in a wrong-guessing editorial written just before the votes were in: "The senator's friends—and his political foes—must agree he has set another example in the 'how you played the game' tradition. He gave it all he had and will continue to give, in the service of country and party."

THE GLASGOW TIMES jubilantly printed "three items written Monday when the clouds were dark and before the Democratic skies opened and the deluge of Democratic votes descended on a startled and unprepared people." Said one of three: "Democrats have little to be thankful for this Thanksgiving. After eating turkey for 16 years it is going to be hard to stomach a meal of crow."

GRINNED THE SCOTT COUNTY (IND.) JOURNAL: "It looks like Mr. Truman might be able to take over the job of Dr. Gallup in case he decides he wants another job. He seems to have confounded all the experts by the accuracy of his prediction."

Said THE MADISONVILLE MESSENGER: "As tabulation of America's vote in yesterday's election neared an end today, the nation was talking, not particularly about the great Dr. Gallup and his monumental inaccuracy in forecasting a Dewey landslide, but about the amazing race which President Truman, the man from Missouri who refused to be counted out, ran against the well-oiled and smoothly-operating Dewey machine."

Said THE CYNTHIANA LOG CABIN: "There probably has never been a national election when public and private opinion so generally agreed on what was considered a certain Republican victory. . . . The highlight of the election in Kentucky was the remarkable race by John Sherman Cooper, Republican nominee for United States senator. . . . Probably 60,000 Democrats scratched their ticket and voted for popular Senator Cooper."

Said THE HODGENVILLE HERALD-NEWS: "The three-year era which was marked by the belief of many that President Truman was a political accident and could not stand on his own feet has ended. The President's smashing win over the Republican candidate, States' Rights opposition splitting the South and Wallaceites costing him the electoral vote of the State of New York, is simply amazing. . . . (Truman) has increased in stature both at home and abroad."

Said THE HENDERSON MORNING GLEANER: "It was wholly a personal victory. Truman was deserted by all the Democratic wheel-horses but his stablemate—the other horse in the entry—Alben Barkley. Barkley could not well have done otherwise than support Truman, but as someone noted, about half of Mr. Truman's cabinet members were in Washington playing golf when he needed them most."

Mon 11-8-48

THE MURRAY DEMOCRAT described the plight of passengers at Cadiz last Sunday when a bus waited until someone succeeded in buying a country ham for Senator Barkley. "From the buoyant appearance of Mr. Barkley in Murray Monday morning," continued THE DEMOCRAT, "apparently he had a big slab of the ham for breakfast." But THE DEMOCRAT, expressing itself just before the election, was afraid "there will be plenty of us who will be absent (from the polls) because of the feeling of futility of the Democrats upon this occasion."

THE LANCASTER CENTRAL RECORD said: "This is Mr. Truman's shining hour. It was he and he alone that sold himself in this campaign. It could be called a single-handed victory in a way, as he had to put himself across when practically everyone, including Democrats and Republicans, didn't think he could do it. . . . The people . . . have said that they were satisfied with Mr. Truman and the policies that he represents. It will be up to the Congress, now Democratic, to fall in line and carry them out."

THE SHELBY NEWS' editorial, apparently written before the votes were in, was headed: "Good, regardless of who's elected." It struck an uneasy tone, however: "The election is over and changes are in order and inevitable. Farm prosperity seems at its height. There is no road open to farm prices but the road down. The turn may be far ahead but inflation cannot last forever."

THE CORYDON (IND.) DEMOCRAT, like many other weeklies, was handicapped because it publishes on Wednesday, and editorial copy must be prepared in advance. However it did say this: "When the presidential campaign was started there likely were some people in some parts of the world who hoped that it would reveal a serious disunity and confusion among the people of America. These hopes did not materialize. As this is written—before the election and just as final appeals for votes are made across the land—it is evident that those anti-American hopes were not realized."

Truman Proves He's an Expert

BY THOMAS L. STOKES

WASHINGTON—Harry S. Truman knows the folks who vote.

He demonstrated very satisfactorily, as far as this reporter is concerned, that he knows more about the psychology of the people of his country than the paid-by-the-hour psychologists, the "experts" who were so very sure he couldn't possibly win, including this blushing exhibit, and the professional pollsters who think they can chart what people think.

And, with his perception of human nature, he did the trick all by himself, with no outside help. He alone, apparently, had the magnificent obsession that he could win.

His victory was not only a tribute to his own sound sense and a sure political intuition, his courage, his faith in himself and in the people, his dogged persistence in a gruelling campaign, but it was also a tribute to the sound sense of the American people. They demonstrated again that, given the chance, they are nearly always able to distinguish for themselves between the real and the artificial, the honest and the phoney, with that rare discernment that has made our democracy the living, vital thing that it still remains in a world of confusion and considerable sham.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY had little money. In many states the organization was weak and handicapped by dissension. Many candidates on the Democratic ticket would not even mention Mr. Truman's name for fear it would endanger their hold on their own jobs.

One of the most interesting things about the election, and somewhat ironical also, was that the President brought in many of these "summer-time Democrats" to Congress on his coattails. That little joke he must indeed enjoy, along with his joke on the "experts."

It was a modern Pied Piper performance. The President set out over the country piping his story. Nobody seemed to pay too much attention. Then come Election Day, somehow or other they got in line, a great multitude of them, and walked in and voted for him.

* * *

HIS ELECTION is regarded as virtually a miracle. This all-wise town is filled with little groups here and there asking: "What happened?" It is a miracle, in a way, and yet when you follow the trail back carefully the simple plan evolves, and you wonder why nobody saw it.

There are enough plain people in all walks of life in this country to elect a President, and this embraces two groups highly organized—industrial workers and farmers.

To arouse people politically an issue is necessary. The Republican Party, when it captured control of Congress in 1946, handed one to Truman on a silver platter, as the astute now realize too late. Big interests caught the people napping after the ordeal of war and were able, by well-financed propaganda, to elect a Congress that immediately proceeded to do their bidding. They were too greedy.

Sun 11-7-48

PRESIDENT TRUMAN went out and told the folks about it in plain language they could understand. He leaned heavily on the first rule of effective propaganda which is to tell the story over and over.

He emerges as a kind of Andrew Jackson character, a plain man of the people against those who would exploit them.

And he owes nobody anything, not the big interests which spent so much money and planned so carefully to get him out of the way; not the Dixiecrats who were left out in the cold with their prejudices by his victory; not a lot of "summer-time Democrats" who refused to lift a hand for him; not the labor leaders who a few months ago were trying to dump him but rallied about him for self-preservation.

After Victory, Truman Tells Brother That 'I Just Want to Deserve the Honor'

By ARTHUR KROCK

The State of Ohio, "mother of Republican Presidents," furnished the electoral bloc early yesterday forenoon which assured to President Harry S. Truman a four-year term in his own right as Chief Executive of the United States. Until this late accounting of votes cast in Tuesday's general election put Ohio firmly in Mr. Truman's column, after it had fluctuated throughout the night, he was certain of but 254 electoral votes, which were twelve less than the 266 required.

The historic role played by Ohio was only one of the dramatic and extraordinary phases of the election of 1948 in which the President, opposed by the extreme right and left wings of the Democratic party, and almost unanimously assigned to defeat by forecasters in professional politics, in the press in the radio business and in the "institutes" that sample public opinion, won a minimum of 304 electoral votes, as against 189 acquired by his Republican opponent, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York; carried a Democratic majority in Congress along with him after the Republicans had held this for two years; and gained victory through a multi-sectional combination of states that did not include New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and four of the Southern states in normal Democratic territory.

Thurs 11-4-48

Miracle of Electioneering Seen

In the political history of the United States this achievement by Mr. Truman will be set down as a miracle of electioneering for which there are few if any parallels. His victory made him the undisputed national leader of the Democratic party which, though bitterly divided for the past few years, has acknowledged none since the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt, whom Mr. Truman succeeded from the office of Vice President.

When it was assured that he would have Ohio's electors and hence the majority he needed, and Governor Dewey had wired his congratulations and publicly conceded defeat, the President dedicated his official future to world peace and domestic prosperity and said to his brother, J. Vivian Truman, simply: "I just want to deserve the honor."

No Record Vote Indicated

In the result, unexpected by nearly everyone who qualified as a judge of elections except the President himself, there were these other attendant circumstances:

1. The popular vote, expected to reach 51,000,000 or 52,000,000 and thus break the record poll of about 49,548,000 in the Presidential contest of 1940, will probably be far short of the 1940 total.

2. It is possible that Mr. Truman's plurality over Mr. Dewey will not exceed 2,000,000 and may be less than that, which is smaller than the electoral division of 304 to 189 would ordinarily indicate. But this can be partly attributed to the fact that two splinter Democratic tickets were in the field—the States' Rights Democrats headed by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, and the Progressives headed by Henry A. Wallace, which will poll almost 2,000,000 votes more than probably would have gone in large measure to the national Democratic ticket in normal circumstances.

THE NINETEENTH MAN

New York Times

At a late hour last night, with not much more than a handful of election districts still missing, the popular vote of the four principal candidates for President stood as follows:

Fri 11-5-48

34-a(2)

Truman	22,590,000
Dewey	20,733,000
Wallace	1,060,000
Thurmond	910,000

These figures warrant three significant observations:

New York N.Y.

(1) The total popular vote cast for President is apparently going to be in the neighborhood of 45,000,000. This is not even half of the Census Bureau's estimate of the 95,000,000 men and women of adult age eligible to vote. It represents, despite the subsequent increase in population, less than the total vote that was cast four years ago. It is considerably smaller than the total vote that was cast eight years ago. While the campaign was in progress, the response of the voters to the business of electing a President was widely described as apathetic, and the accuracy of this description is demonstrated, regrettably, by these all but final figures.

(2) Mr. Truman will win the election by a plurality of about 2,000,000, so far as the popular vote is concerned, and with a total of 304 votes in the Electoral College. This popular plurality of 2,000,000 compares with 3,600,000 for Roosevelt in 1944; with 4,900,000 for Roosevelt in 1940; with 11,100,000 for Roosevelt in 1936; with 7,100,000 for Roosevelt in 1932; with 6,400,000 for Hoover in 1928; with 7,400,000 for Coolidge in 1924, and with 7,000,000 for Harding in 1920. The Truman Electoral College vote of 304 compares with 432, 449, 523 and 472 for Roosevelt in the years from 1932 to 1944; with 444 for Hoover in 1928; with 382 for Coolidge in 1924 and with 404 for Harding in 1920. In short, we have to go all the way back to Woodrow Wilson in 1916 to find either as small a popular plurality for the winner or as low a total in the Electoral College as were registered this year. Tuesday's result looks like a dramatic and stunning Democratic victory only because of the wildness of the pre-election forecasts and the fact that so few observers, aside from Mr. Truman himself, gave Mr. Truman any chance at all to win. Actually this was the closest Presidential election, and the narrowest victory, in the political history of the United States in thirty-two years.

Fri 11-5-48

(3) A shift of one voter in every nineteen from Mr. Truman to Mr. Dewey would have given Mr. Dewey a popular majority. It is to the preference of this one-man-in-nineteen that Mr. Truman owes his margin of victory. This is a fact that should be taken into consideration by those who interpret the result of the election as a smashing endorsement of Mr. Truman's whole legislative program, as outlined in the campaign.

Liberal Ideas Have Taken Deep Root

The Courier-Journal
Louisville Ky
Thur. 11-4-48
34a(2)

THE United States is a liberal country. The United States is a Democratic country, as long as the party sticks to liberal principles. Those are conclusions that emerge from the welter of confusion and astonishment that began when the ballot boxes were opened on Tuesday.

All of us had underestimated the lasting change that Franklin D. Roosevelt wrought in the thinking of the American people. His personal magnetism was so great that many observers believed the mass of voters supported him rather than his program, which meant that the program would lose the acclaim of the public under a less glamorous leader. Tuesday's vote showed us that Roosevelt fixed liberal ideas deeper than we knew in the American consciousness. Like the trees he planted in the shelter belts, they have taken root and flourished, resisting wind and drought. The people want the progressive measures Roosevelt first made them believe in. They will continue to vote for a party that vigorously supports those measures.

Truman

All of us underestimated Harry Truman as well. His courage and determination literally snatched victory from the jaws of defeat. When it looked last spring as if he was certain to lose, he just began fighting harder for his liberal principles, many of which he had supported more vigorously than Roosevelt. He was elected on his own merits, with conspicuous help from almost no important political figures except Alben W. Barkley and, in the late stages of the campaign, Harold Ickes.

Thur. 11-4-48

Now he goes into a new era with a Democratic majority in both houses of Congress. For the first time he has a full chance to show what he can do, not as the accidental heir of a popular President, but as a President in his own right. He has a mandate to pursue certain progressive lines which he laid out for all the voters to see when he was a candidate. We can expect specific action from the 81st Congress in these fields already charted by Truman: housing; inflation control; raising of the minimum wage; broadening the benefits of social security; increase in Federal conservation activities to include a Missouri Valley Authority and similar projects; development of public power with Government control of the transmission lines from power dams; restoration of tidelands oil reserves to the Federal Government; protection of public grazing lands from efforts to turn them over to private cattle ranchers; continued price supports for farm products; Federal aid to education, and removal of restrictive provisions from the displaced persons bill.

In foreign affairs he will steer straight ahead along the course he has charted. The non-Communist world will welcome his re-election as a token of American determination to stay in the fight for Western civilization.

He is committed to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. This newspaper believes that both the President and the Democratic majority in Congress, while disposing of a measure which has become a mania and a shibboleth with labor, will see the necessity for writing many of its sound provisions back into a new labor law. A labor bill under another name can be made to smell sweeter to the unions. We fervently hope that labor leadership will be wise enough to take a constructive part in building a new statute to replace the one they have been so determined to destroy.

On civil rights, we hope President Truman will proceed to cut his program into three parts. It should never have been thrown into one lump in the first place. He could get through the new Congress an anti-lynching and an anti-poll tax bill, forcing if necessary a change in the cloture rule to stop filibusters. We do not believe the new Congress will pass a Federal fair employment practices measure, or that it should, but at least the issue should be debated separately.

Thur. 11-4-48

Truman told the country what he meant to do if elected. The voters knew what to expect, and they returned him to office. Thomas E. Dewey, confident of victory, was unwilling to disclose what course his administration would take on many important issues. His may be the last campaign in the old Republican style of sitting tight and saying as little as possible. The electorate showed a fine new determination to scratch ballots, to vote for men and issues, and to ignore party labels. That is the historic victory of November 2, 1948.

Remove Jim-Crow Toilet Signs At Site Of Truman Inaugural

WASHINGTON — Jim Crow took a beating on Capitol Hill when David Lynn, capitol architect, ordered the immediate removal of "colored"-"white" signs from two separate entrances to temporary toilet facilities erected on Capitol grounds to accommodate workmen who are building the stands for President Truman's inauguration.

Sat 12-4-48

Lynn, who is in charge of designing and approving plans for the 1949 inaugural construction, disclaimed any responsibility for the existence of the Negro-white toilets and demanded their removal as soon as the matter was brought to his attention. "It's against the policy of the Administration, and would be embarrassing to the President" he told the Defender.

A check of some of the Negro workmen employed on the job by Skinker-Garrett, a private construction company under contract to the Government to build the Capitol inaugural stands, revealed that many of them had cold shouldered the Jim Crow toilets. Instead, they had availed themselves of non-segregated facilities in the Capitol building where they reported they had encountered no difficulty. In fact they stated the Capitol guards had shown them every courtesy in directing them to such facilities.

An Affectionate Farewell to Harry

The Constitution
34a(2)

WASHINGTON—The ballots haven't been counted at this writing, but there seems to be no further need for holding up an affectionate farewell to Harry Truman, who will go down in history as the President that nobody hated.

Even his political enemies couldn't help liking him personally; few other Presidents could say as much. We're going to miss lil' ole Harry with the infectious grin, the meticulously folded handkerchief in the breast pocket of the snappily tailored coat, and the penchant for embarrassing the politicians by blurting out what he thought.

He's had his picture taken, I guess, in more trick hats than Cal Coolidge. And even though he acted angry, as when he threatened to draft the striking railroad men into the Army, he didn't really mean it.

Wed 11-3-48

Whether he was a good President or a bad one isn't for me to say. But I do know that for many a year to come prints of the celebrated photo showing Lauren Bacall perched on top of our Harry's piano will bring fond smiles to the beholders.

Atlanta Ga

I happened to be in the National Press Club that incredible afternoon when Mr. T. sat down to thrum out the "Missouri Waltz." The sultry lady from Hollywood assumed a leggy pose on the lid of the battered piano. The sticklers for protocol were bitter about this one, but I doubt if anybody in the room enjoyed Miss Bacall's big moment as much as did the gentleman from Independence, Mo.

The main reason everybody liked him, I think, is this: He was a normal guy. He was scared when he was thrust into the most responsible job in the world; I heard him say so at his first press conference and I'm sure he meant it. He had his worries, goodness knows, but he soon began to enjoy life at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

He got a bang from the weird gifts sent by admiring citizens; he took it big when he went riding in his yacht with the two pianos. He enjoyed his private flying machine, his railroad car with the bullet-proof window panes, and his house full of crystal chandeliers and servants in uniform. He wasn't used to all this and it gave him a lift; the average fellow like me, for instance, enjoyed it all, too, second-hand.

The President never let down his friends; unfortunately this wasn't always vice-versa. Many a critic claimed that this loyalty was one of his greatest weaknesses; perhaps it was, but you can't dislike a fellow who forgives and turns the other cheek.

All this sounds like I'm writing his obituary. I don't mean it that way. He'll be in the White House for another couple of months and I only hope that on sunny afternoons he rocks on his new back porch. He'll get to wander around the house now in an old bath robe, if he wants. That's one beauty about being an outgoing President. He can let the formal social season go hang and not stifle himself in a white pique vest, serving pale punch to stuffed shirts in large masses. He likes small parties, with his pals around, and I hope he gets to play a little penny ante with them.

Wed 11-3-48

He is one of the few Presidents to leave the White House in robust good health. He doesn't look as old as he is, nor does he act it. There has been many a joke (and even the Truman jokes all have been in good humor) about him going back to the haberdashery business. But oddly enough there has been not one hint in any quarter about what he intends to do in January.

One thing's certain. He'll have to go out and earn his living. Perhaps he'll be chairman of an insurance company; he's certain to take some such dignified job. He'll enjoy that, too. And I have no doubt that after a hiatus of nearly four years it'll be his pleasure to dry the dishes again for his beloved Bess.

Labor, Farm, Colored Vote Called Prime Factors in President Truman's Election

Cabinet Post Reward Not Expected, Although Competent Lawyers Are Available for Job

By LOIUS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The prime factors in the election of President Truman, insofar as bloc votes go, were the labor, farm and colored votes.

None of these blocs alone would have been sufficient to elect Mr. Truman. But without anyone of them he would not have been elected.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey might not have been elected, but he would have, at least, received enough electoral votes to have kept. Mr. Truman from getting a majority and the election of a President would have been thrown into the House of Representatives.

There the Dixiecrats would have been in a position to use their strength for bargaining purposes.

In the make-up President Truman's Cabinet, which was under consideration at Key West, where the President vacationed, both labor and the farm interests will have representation. But insofar as is known, no Cabinet representation will be given to colored Democrats.

Lewis Served Under Taft

As a matter of fact, no colored person has ever held a Cabinet post, and not since the administration of the late William Howard Taft has a colored man been in the "Little Cabinet." The last and only colored man to hold such a position was William H. Lewis, Boston lawyer, who served as an Assistant Attorney General during the administration of President Taft.

There are nine Cabinet positions —Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, Postmaster General, Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of Commerce, and Secretary of Labor.

34 a (2)

If Mr. Truman is unwilling to elevate a colored person to a Cabinet post, it appears that equity would dictate that one or more be elevated to a "Little Cabinet" post.

Lawyers Qualified

The argument that there are no qualified colored persons for such posts will not hold water. Since the days when Lewis was an Assistant Attorney General, the colored lawyer has grown in stature and has proved his ability in the courts.

Sat-12-4-48

A number of them, have had judicial experience. Gov. William H. Hastie of the Virgin Islands, has had both judicial and administrative experience. Two now are members of the Federal judiciary —Judge Irvin C. Molilson of the U.S. Customs Court and Judge Herman E. Moore of the U.S. District Court for the Virgin Islands.

A number of them, like Charles H. Houston, who is engaged in the private practice of law, and Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the NAACP, have matched their intellectual powers and legal ability with some of the best white lawyers in the country and have carried off the honors.

Bunche Good Prospect

In other fields there are also colored men of unquestioned ability. For instance, Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Mediator for Palestine, has proved his skill in international diplomacy in a difficut situation. The State Department has two Under Secretaries and six Assistant Secretaries.

Certainly Mr. Bunche can fill one of these eight positions creditably and, at the same time, help the United States to square in the eyes of the world its practices with its professions.

References here to specific persons and positions are not to be interpreted as excluding other persons and other positions. There are today a large number of colored persons, who, by, character, education and experience, are well qualified to fill any position in the gift of their countrv.

Who Elected President Truman ?

The Cleveland Herald
Cleveland Ohio

Ever since the election, some of the more prominent labor leaders have been claiming that the unions elected Mr. Truman. According to them, the biggest single issue in the election was the Taft-Hartley Act. Fri. 11-26-48

That claim will take a good deal of proving to anyone who has made even a cursory examination of the final returns.

34 a (2)

Governor Dewey ran strongly in the industrial states, where the labor vote is proportionately largest—and he carried most of them. The President, on the other hand, did extremely well in the agricultural regions where organized labor amounts to a small minority of the population.

Arizona provides the most interesting example: Mr. Truman carried that state easily. Yet, at the same time the voters of the state approved a measure outlawing the closed union shop. That certainly does not look as if the people of Arizona want labor to hold the whip hand over the government or the people.

Mr. Truman does not owe his remarkable success to any group or any class. He wasn't elected by labor or capital or agriculture or any segment of the people. He was re-elected by the American people—and he is the President of ALL the people. He does not even owe allegiance to the Democratic leaders—most of them having deserted him when they thought his cause was lost—and he won in spite of these defections. Fri. 11-26-48

President Truman, therefore, has a chance to go down in history as one of the great Presidents—as a man who, when the world was torn between slavery and freedom, stood staunchly for the liberties of mankind—refusing to admit allegiance to special interests of any kind.

The whole civilized world is hoping that Mr. Truman may measure up to the enormous responsibilities that have fallen upon him. He has a chance now to rise above group prejudice or group selfishness.

Flabbergasted!

To the Editor:

I'm all groggy and goggle-eyed; my lower jaw has dropped down! Dr. Gallup will have to learn to sell apples, and Hans V. Kaltenborn to read psalms. What can we do now with so few "infallible" people left in the world? Where are the prophets? Who can tell us what is going to happen? Harry Truman, the "little man," seems to have performed a political feat surpassing anything ever pulled by the great F. D. R.

Let us remember that the election records of Roosevelt were due to things outside himself, like depression and war. Likewise, outside of President Truman lay the effect of the Taft-Hartley anti-labor law, which, I believe, slid Fred Hartley down the chute into the ashcan, blew Sen. Taft's own state into the Democratic column, and was the largest factor in the greater national result, which has flabbergasted everybody—except Harry S. Truman! W. C. SKAGGS.

Do We Have Democracy?

To the Editor:

Since when has a law been passed denying citizens of Alabama the right to vote for whom they please, as was done during the recent election, when Truman's name was left off the ballot and you were told that if you added his name to the bottom of the ballot that your vote wouldn't eount?

Isn't some one forgetting everything that our forefathers fought and died for, when they start telling you whom to vote for or else? It is stated in the Constitution of the United States that the majority rules and some have the idea that the majority of the people of Alabama didn't want Truman. If that is the case, how was it determined? I can't recall the issue being voted on. Can you?

Mon 11-8-48

We are all brought up to be good citizens and one of our duties is to vote, because by doing so we make this a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. But if we are told we can't vote for whom we want, and if we do then it won't do any good, then may I ask what is the point of wasting our time voting? Maybe this isn't a government of the people any more and is now ruled by the politicians, capitalists, etc. We complain because other countries aren't democratic, and yet we ourselves don't know what is means. Even Grand Ball Will Be Open to All, Says Committee Member; Observers Skeptical

WASHINGTON

The proponents of segregation in the nation's capital will have to go into hiding on Jan. 20, if the plans of President Truman's inaugural committee materialize.

For the first time since the administration of William Howard Taft, when Jim Crow is said to have first reared its ugly head in the District, the foes of segregation have gained a foothold, and plan a completely integrated program on a city-wide basis.

According to W. L. Houston, vice-chairman of the general inaugural planning committee, all of the inauguration day events, including the parade and the ball to be held at the National Guard Armory, will be open to all citizens, regardless of "race, creed or color."

Hard Fight, Houston Says

Mr. Houston admitted to the AFRO that he has considerable trouble in keeping the program on an integrated basis in all phases.

Much of the trouble, however, has not come from the white members of the committee, but from racial groups, who seek to promote their own interests, Houston said.

Although Mr. Houston would not comment upon it, there is a general feeling around the inaugural committee headquarters that the minority group residents of Washington haven't "warmed up" to the inauguration day festivities as much as the rest of the community.

A Victory For The People

34a(2)

Atlanta Daily World

Thur 11-4-48

Atlanta, Ga

The unexpected and startling victory of president Harry S. Truman over Governor Thomas E. Dewey for the presidency of the United States, the highest elective honor that can be bestowed upon any man, is a victory for the masses of people of this nation and, perhaps, the world. President Truman made a vigorous, almost one-man, campaign and won the people by forthrightly tackling the issues of high-cost of living, housing, labor and other questions that are close to the every-day lives of the people.

But, more important to Negro Americans than any of these above questions was that of the issue of human and civil rights. The president courageously met this question with a bold declaration to the Congress of the United States on February 2, 1948, asking for the enactment of laws to strengthen and equalize the citizenship rights of the minority racial and religious groups of our great nation. It was then that President Truman won this paper's unequivocal support. And, we believe the great majority of Negroes of this nation as a whole stuck with the President because of his stand on Civil Rights.

Yes, we admit that at times after the revolt by certain members of his party in the South and in the face of all the predictions by the various polls we thought President Truman was a lost cause. But we decided, win or lose, we were going to stand by a man who was fighting so courageously and so sincerely for a program that we believe will be for the benefit of a majority of all the people.

President Truman has won a victory over the 80th congress, the Wallaceites and the States Righters. He is unquestionably the most popular and the most powerful man in our nation.

We salute and congratulate President Harry S. Truman and pledge our loyal support to him in unifying our nation and continuing his liberal and progressive leadership in behalf of all Americans, irrespective of race or religion.

Mr. Truman's Victory Can Be Attributed To Four Factors

Courier Journal
Fri 11-5-48
Louisville, Ky.

By JAMES RESTON

Special to The New York Times and The Courier-Journal

(64a(2))

NEW YORK—The elements of President Truman's remarkable victory, it is generally agreed, were these:

1. The ideas of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal and Woodrow Wilson's New Freedom.

2. The faith of President Truman in these ideas and his courage in basing his campaign on them.

3. The political tactics of Clark Clifford which won the admiration of the electorate, if not of Mr. Truman's other associates in Washington; and

4. The organization of a labor movement, which acquired strength from the Middle and the Right by shedding the support of the ideological Left.

There are many observers who believe there were other important and even decisive factors—the arid personality of Governor Dewey; the attempt of the New York Governor to sit on the fence while keeping both ears to the ground, etc. But these four considerations, combined with the nation's unparalleled economic prosperity, are generally credited with having won for Mr. Truman the most dramatic electoral victory since Wilson defeated Hughes in 1916.

Mr. Truman has probably never been so impressed with the strength of the New Deal philosophy among the electorate as he is today. Last week, despite his great show of confidence and his defiance of all his detractors, he was scarcely as confident in private as he was in public.

When his campaign train rolled into Chicago a week ago last Monday morning, he discussed his chances in moderate and even disparaging terms.

"It's worth a fight anyway," he said to one of his Illinois colleagues; and that was about the measure of his faith.

New Deal to the Last

Nevertheless, such as it was, his faith was greater than that of almost any other member of his official party with the possible exception of his handsome young secretary and political tactician, Clark Clifford.

"Peace, prices, and places to live" was the main burden of his argument. Everywhere he went, he emphasized in homespun terms, the issues popularized by his predecessor: controls for "the interest"; more housing; more social security; equality and even privilege for labor; benefits for the farmers; conservation of the natural resources of the nation; medical security; and equality for all citizens before the law.

Many times in the 44 months since the death of Franklin Roosevelt, Mr. Truman had been a dubious and even wavering supporter of many of the New Deal measures of the past, but in identifying himself in the end with these issues, he gained a response which was greater than anybody on his campaign train imagined.

Almost alone among the White House advisers, Clark Clifford supported and added to this strategy. He described the President's campaign problem in these terms:

Fri 11-5-48

When the Democratic Convention met in Philadelphia last July, he recalled, the President was abandoned by all except his most intimate supporters. The liberal wing of the party had left him; the States' Rights Democrats of the South were in rebellion; the Democratic Party's organization, accustomed to winning without much labor, was dispirited and even hopeless.

Boldness On the 20-Yard Line

"At that time," Mr. Clifford observed, "we were on our own 20-yard line. We had to be bold. If we had kept on plugging away in moderate terms, we might have reached midfield when the gun went off. So we had to throw long passes—anything to stir up labor, and to get the mass votes of the great cities of the Middle West, New England and the East.

This strategy—particularly the use of blunt instruments to win the racial and religious groups of the cities—met considerable opposition within the President's family. The Chicago speech—comparing Mr. Dewey and the Republicans with the totalitarian movement of Italy, Germany and Japan—was much more violent in its original draft than when it was finally delivered, but even then it did not win the support of all Mr. Truman's colleagues.

Nevertheless, the tactic worked better than its contrivers dreamed, and while these efforts at the end of the campaign are not likely to remain as a model of morality, they apparently achieved the objective of persuading the electorate that something important was afoot.

Labor did "get out the vote," as the President had pleaded with it to do. It did respond to the campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and defeat the return to power of a party which was pictured as a symbol of reaction.

What the effect of this campaign will be remains in serious doubt. By his tactics, Mr. Truman has opened up some old party wounds, but by his own stubborn courage he has at the same time won the admiration and even the allegiance not only of many members of his own party but of many of the most powerful members of the opposition party.

Men like Senator Arthur Vandenberg, for example, whose support Mr. Truman will need to implement the foreign and domestic programs he has outlined are full of admiration for his accomplishment if not for his tactics, and at least for a time, he is expected to win their votes when the 81st Congress convenes early in the new year.

Morally, If Not Legally, Bound

The Constitution

As expected, the State Senate yesterday passed without a dissenting vote, Sen. Everett Millican's bill opening Georgia's General Election ballot to any presidential candidate.

64a(2)

The bill was amended, also as expected, to delete the sections requiring party authorities to certify that candidates for electors are pledged to vote for the party nominees and making it mandatory that the electors cast their votes as pledged.

Atlanta, Ga.

This latter provision was of doubtful legality, inasmuch as electors are Federal officers and, under the Constitution, afforded wide freedom of action.

Even so, it is customary for candidates for posts as electors to state, in advance, their intentions and to cast their votes in the electoral college for the candidate receiving the largest number of popular votes in the General Election.

Unless the Democrats follow this procedure in Georgia, there is every likelihood of the Republicans carrying the State, since a great many persons would rightfully refuse to vote for a slate of pig-in-the-poke electors. Moreover, those Democrats who wanted to take no chances on helping Thurmond and those Dixiecrats who felt the same way about Truman would naturally vote for Dewey.

The main thing is that Georgians will be given an opportunity to vote for anyone they wish—Truman, Dewey, Thurmond or Wallace. As the bill now stands, they will not have the assurance that the State's electors will be bound—legally, at any rate—to support the candidate receiving the largest popular vote, but they will know that no slate of electors would be politically foolhardy enough to flaunt the will of the people thus plainly expressed in an election where every candidate was on the ballot.

Samplings Taken in Four Heavily-Populated Cities

Those Who Picked Democrats Told Why Majority Would Vote for Him

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

As most of the nation's political poll-takers and predicters are busy figuring up their unemployment compensation, the AFRO-AMERICAN observes that its own poll gave first inkling that the Republican landslide might not develop.

In a pre-election summary of results from four heavily-populated East Coast areas, the AFRO poll predicted "the most evenly split vote . . . since the late President Roosevelt took office."

The AFRO poll showed Mr. Truman receiving a plurality of colored votes in each of Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Northern New Jersey.

Opinions Balanced

The polls showed, also, that colored voters were not basing their choices entirely on "colored" issues. This indicated that their opinions somewhat approximated that of the rest of the population, and that the GOP landslide might not come.

Of Baltimore's registered voters, 51.6% chose Truman, 33.9% voted for Dewey and 11.3 picked Wallace.

This gave Mr. Truman 12% fewer backers than Mr. Roosevelt had in 1944 when he barely won the State. The AFRO analysis showed, therefore, that the race for Maryland would be even closer, with Dewey possibly winning.

Actual results showed Mr. Truman carrying Baltimore with a margin of 25,000 votes fewer than Roosevelt had in 1944. Dewey won the State in the predicted close race.

52% Prefer Truman

In Washington, 52% preferred Truman, 27.9% wanted Dewey and 16.2% chose Wallace. No check on these figures can be made, since most Washingtonians could not vote.

Except for the Wallace vote, which evidently is high, those figures approximate the actual vote in adjoining areas.

In Philadelphia, the AFRO poll found Truman losing 20,000 former Roosevelt backers. It also found that the loss of votes in Philadelphia would likely cost the President Pennsylvania.

Actually, Truman carried Philadelphia by 7,500 where Roosevelt had carried it by 150,000 in 1944. Dewey won the state.

In New Jersey, the AFRO saw a split colored vote which would rule out their chances of serving as the balance of power. The results gave Truman 43.8%, Dewey 28.4% and Wallace 22%.

This was a clear Truman margin of colored votes, but less than Roosevelt's 1944 majority. In a race that was close, and shifting Republican, in 1944, the poll indicated that the GOP would win New Jersey.

Colored voters rallied behind Truman stronger than indicated, many deserting Wallace. Not enough switched to prevent Dewey from winning the State, however.

Sat 11-13-48

For all areas combined, the AFRO poll gave Truman 47%, Dewey 33%, Wallace 12% with 8 per cent undecided.

This Truman margin was less than Roosevelt had in 1944. A comparative analysis indicated Dewey improvement over 1944.

This Dewey gain proved not enough, however. The colored vote was decisive, still, in many areas. The result showed that they were thinking similarly to the rest of the voting public. The landslide never came.

HUNTING AN ALIBI?

It's Just Like Truman Said It Would Be

The Constitution

NEW YORK—(AP)—It was precisely as President Truman predicted:

The faces of the poll-takers were red, the morning after election.

The President said the polls, which proved statistically he was beaten before the ballots were cast were wrong. "Sleeping polls," he called them.

And wrong they were.

34a(2)

Not since 1936 when the Literary Digest poll picked Alf Landon over Franklin D. Roosevelt (final official result: Roosevelt won 46 States to two) have the polls taken such a whipping.

Thur 11-4-48

Dr. George Gallup, Director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, who had predicted a Tom Dewey victory in the presidential race, was one of the few pollsters up for early comment. He said:

"This is the kind of a close election that happens once in a generation, and is a nightmare to poll-takers.

"Everyone is asking 'What happened?' Why did all the polls underestimate Truman's strength? The answer to this question will likely be found in an analysis of voting statistics when they are all available.

Atlanta Ga.

"Here are the pertinent questions to which we are seeking the answer:

"1. Which voters stayed home? Only 47,000,000 voters went to the polls Tuesday. Another 47,000,000 stayed home. Was it the Republicans, or the independent voters who failed to show up at the polls?

"2. What about the undecided vote? As late as the final week of the campaign some 3,000,000 voters had not yet made up their minds. Since many of these voters who were undecided had voted the Democratic ticket in earlier elections, many of them must have decided to cast their vote for Truman during the last few days of the campaign.

"3. Did the Wallace strength early in the campaign return to Truman? Unquestionably the sharp decline in the Wallace vote was a great help in many pivotal States. Wallace insured the Dewey victory in New York. On the other hand, the absence of the Wallace ticket on the ballot in Illinois undoubtedly made the difference there between victory and defeat.

"4. How much help did the national ticket get from local and State candidates? Early returns show many local candidates leading the vote in a number of close States.

"All polls must analyze these problems and work toward their solution to make certain that the same errors do not occur in future election surveys."

Sen. J. Howard McGrath, Democratic National Chairman, had urged Gallup and Archibald Crossley, Director of the Crossley poll, to "properly adjust" their figures to conform with percentage errors shown in the past two presidential elections.

Such an action, he had contended, would show an advantage for Mr. Truman instead of Dewey.

In its final tabulations, the Gallup Poll said Dewey would receive 49.5 percent of the vote and Mr. Truman 44.5 percent.

The Crossley Poll predicted that Dewey would get 49.9 percent, while the President would receive 44.8 percent.

In late August, Elmo Roper, Director of the Fortune Magazine Poll, predicted the New York Governor would receive 52.2 percent of the vote, while Mr. Truman would receive 37.1. Roper stood on these figures to the end of the campaign.

Thur 11-4-48

In the newspaper field, four New York City newspapers supporting Dewey predicted he would receive from 330 to 345 electoral votes.

The Times gave the Republican ticket 345 probable electoral votes from 29 States. President Truman was expected to receive a probable 105 from 11 States.

The Herald Tribune said almost all political experts believed Dewey would get at least 330 to 350 of the 531 electoral college votes. The Sun said the GOP ticket would win the popular vote in at least 32 States.

The Journal-American predicted Dewey would win a minimum of 27 States with 337 electors. It said his popular vote would exceed President Truman's by more than 3,000,000.

The Atlanta Constitution, supporting Mr. Truman editorially, predicted that Dewey would win, as did the Philadelphia Inquirer, which backed the New York Governor.

Other papers which supported Dewey included:

Chicago Tribune, Boston Herald, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Daily News, New York Daily News, Des Moines Register.

NEW YORK—(AP)—The Literary Digest turned over in its grave—and laughed.

At least, its last editor found himself grinning over the hang-over now afflicting the public opinion polls. All picked Gov. Dewey to beat President Truman. It was the Digest in 1936, which quietly folded its tent and went out of business after picking Landon to beat Roosevelt.

"I get a very good chuckle out of this—nothing malicious, mind you," said graying Wilfred Funk. "We were told by contemporary pollsters that we had been unscientific. I'm afraid they made the same mistakes. I'm afraid the word 'science' isn't going to be used with a poll for a long time."

The Alabama Press On Truman And The Election

What think other Alabamians today on such matters as President Truman's victory, the future of the States' Rights movement? Here are some answers as gleaned from other Alabama newspapers:

Truman The 'Miracle Man'

The News

(From The Tuscaloosa News)

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S amazing showing in the presidential election has the poll-takers and other forecasters hanging on the ropes. . .

Sun 11-7-48

This political miracle knocks out several conceptions. One was that the scientifically operated polls could be depended upon to forecast political races. Another was that it is a foolish waste of time in these days to carry a campaign personally to the people. . . .

Truman himself is an ordinary man, hard-working, sincere and conscientious. His people have not taken too much to heart his frequent inclination toward action that place the stamp of "machine politician" on our chief executive.

B'ham Ala

In so far as Alabama is concerned, the situation here still is in a terrific muddle. Theoretically, Alabama voted for Thurmond by going Democratic. Actually, no one knows how this state would have gone if the people had been given the chance to express themselves clearly between Truman and Thurmond.

We hope someone will give him (Mr. Truman) better advice on his civil rights legislation. Alabama and the South will not abide by any such laws, regardless of who may sit in the White House. Efforts at enforcement will inevitably bring discord and blood will be let unnecessarily.

We need a formula that will breed greater confidence, trust, respect and peaceful relationship between various American groups. Anything that will do otherwise, regardless of by whom sponsored, will never be accepted here in the South.

The Political Tides

(From The Alabama Journal, Montgomery)

FOR MONTHS TO COME there will be groping efforts by thousands of people to explain the amazing outcome of yesterday's election contests. We have had no election in recent years in which all the forecasts were so completely upset, when the prophets were so entirely wrong; when something so unsuspected was operating in the minds of the voters.

Sun 11-7-48

This much can be said in the beginning: The outcome of the voting was a vindication of those who have felt that the American people have become too dependent upon their central government. The tide of Washington patronage has become such a flood as to be almost irresistible. Federal favors and promises to groups and individuals sway the political views of millions of people. . . .

Only time can show whether all these promises and appeals can be reconciled with the tax laws and the nation's sources of revenue. But it cannot go on indefinitely.

Today we feel that the States' Rights campaign was a campaign for pure Americanism, for a return to the constitution, for disregard of selfish greed, in the interest of the nation as a whole.

Another factor in yesterday's voting that was all-powerful was the longing for world peace, and the support given to every promise that seemed to offer further assurance of peace and of every effort, no matter how unprecedented, to guard against the horrors of another war which would bring greater horrors than mankind has ever known.

Democratic Landslide

(From The Talladega Daily Home)

. . . THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY has pulled one of history's greatest political upsets.

The party has swept to control of both houses of Congress, is throwing its weight around in gubernatorial contests all over the Union and in general is demonstrating that national elections are decided at the ballot box—and not by public opinion polls. . . .

What happened?

The national Democratic Party, of course, was helped along by the fact that the South remained a part of the organization so far as congressional races were concerned. There was no revolt on congressmen or senators and the Democrats in those races received their traditional Solid South majorities.

Alabama, for instance, gave as big a vote to John Sparkman for the Senate as it did to the Thurmond-Wright States' Rights ticket. The state's political revolt was directed at Truman and Dewey and the civil rights program they had expounded.

Sun 11-7-48

Some of the factors clearly are apparent. One of them was Republican overconfidence, which resulted in a namby-pamby, milk-and-water campaign which didn't impress on GOP partisans the importance of getting to the polls. . . .

Another obvious factor was a tremendous resurgence of organized labor, which did very little talking and a lot of efficient, house-to-house campaigning, spending sums of money which probably will come under inquiry later on.

Still another weight in the Democratic side of the scales was inflation and Truman's successful—and none-too-truthful—effort to pin the blame on the current Republican Congress.

The vote could not correctly be construed as an endorsement for Truman. Senators, representatives and governors were not riding the Truman coat tail to victory. On the other hand, popular candidates in many states pulled the head of the ticket along with them.

At the moment no one can be sure of the impact of the Southern States' Rights movement upon Truman's hopes for election. . . . He found it politically expedient to endorse principles which four states of the Southeast could not endure.

The fight of the States' Righters has not been in vain—win, lose or draw for Truman.

All parties concerned in national politics have been put on record that there are limits to what Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana will endure in the way of being kicked around.

34a(2)

This region definitely will receive greater consideration in the years to come—regardless of whether it decides to remain solidly Democratic, or to continue exercising its newfound independence. . .

Astounding Victory

Sun 11-7-48

WE SUSPECT MOST of the people of the United States feel today just about as President Truman did on April 12, 1945, when he was notified that President Roosevelt had died suddenly at Warm Springs, Ga. Said Mr. Truman to the reporters who rushed to him: "I don't know if any of you fellows ever had a load of hay, or a bull fall on him."

The news of Mr. Roosevelt's death knocked the breath out of him, just as did a load of hay, or a bull, falling on him when he was a farm boy back in Missouri.

Well, the breath has been knocked out of the American people by the totally unexpected election of Mr. Truman. . . .

The victory of Mr. Truman would have been surprising, even if he had had a united party behind him. The Democrats had been in power 16 years; there seemed a national trend of public opinion toward a change.

The after-effects of this election are bound to be widespread on both parties.

Mr. Truman, by reason of his single-handed victory, becomes the almost absolute master of the Democratic Party.

The South will continue to have major control of Congress, because of committee chairmanships, but Southern party leaders no longer will be able to dictate policy or control jobs. The White House is going to have the whip hand, and make no mistake, the "little" Missouri man will know how to use it. . . .

We still entertain the belief that Mr. Truman is shy of the ability needed to guide this nation in the four tempestuous years that lie ahead. He is going to have an almost entirely new band of advisers, for he is sure to drop a large proportion of the present cabinet. . . .

There is one advantage, however — there will be a Democratic Congress working with a Democratic president. That means more harmony and team work than we have had the past two years.

The Nation's Press On Truman

By The Associated Press

American newspapers, a majority of which had opposed President Truman editorially in his battle to remain in the White House, generally viewed his election both as a surprise and a major personal victory.

Pr 11-5-48 24a(2)

Sample post-election comment:

THE NEW YORK TIMES—"His victory is a personal triumph, accomplished in the face of apparently heavy odds and despite the fact that both the left wing and the right wing of his own party deserted him."

LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL — "All of us underestimated Harry Truman. . . . His courage and determination literally snatched victory from the jaws of defeat. . . . He was elected on his own merits."

B'ham Ala

OMAHA WORLD-HERALD—"We said he was not a big enough man for the job. Unhappily we still believe it. . . . That 'scrappy little guy' is today the most important, the most powerful man in all this world. May he gain in wisdom, in vision, in prudent, cautious self-control in keeping with the trust reposed in him."

MIAMI HERALD—"Harry S. Truman has achieved what may well be the greatest personal triumph in our political history. . . . His was a poverty-stricken campaign. There were no lush coffers to dip into. He was cut off the air by one radio network because he did not finish within the allotted time. As he stands triumphant today, Truman can look the so-called big wigs of his party in the eye and laugh at them. He owes nothing to anybody but the American people."

DENVER POST—"The amazing comeback of President Truman may finally be traced to the over-confident campaign waged by Dewey and the Republicans. This goes, in part, to a basic human factor—people just don't like boastful complacence of the sort the Republican candidate exhibited throughout his campaign."

KANSAS CITY STAR—"The president has received this vote of confidence at a time when he faces problems of greatest difficulty at home and abroad. The situation is up to him in the fullest degree because both houses of Congress will be with him."

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—"It will be a long time, we venture, before another candidate for president makes the mistake of running on the assumption that he is already elected. This election clearly is a victory for the progressive principles and policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt."

BALTIMORE EVENING SUN—"The biggest political upset of this generation. . . . His congressional support may prove more nominal than real. Many congressmen are hostile to Mr. Truman, but he will be in a better position to deal with them than in the past."

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE—"He has dumbfounded all the experts. The pollsters were wrong. The 'wise money' was wrong. The Democrats themselves did not dare to expect it. Harry Truman was the only man who really believed that he could be reelected. And he was right. . . . This newspaper, which strongly supported the candidacy of Gov. Dewey, hopes that the president's leadership will be such that the country can be united behind him."

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS—"His election was perhaps the most sensational upset in American political history. We feel more than a little admiration for the way Mr. Truman fought out from behind the eight ball and through a witches' den of polls and dopesters, and not only won his own battle, but also carried husky Senate and House Democratic majorities with him."

LOS ANGELES TIMES—"Deeply disappointed as are all Republicans at this result, they accept it with good grace. When the American people have spoken, Americans bow to the popular will. . . . With the Truman victory, prospects for tax reduction went out the window."

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER—"Public interest, now that the election is over, will be much less in why Truman won, and Dewey lost, and much more in the measures and policies that will be adopted by the Truman government next year. . . . It is fair to presume that he will recommend repeal of the Taft-Hartley act, and in the interest of lower living costs, will recommend the reimposition of a variety of controls—price ceilings and probably rationing."

OREGON JOURNAL—"It was proof that the majority believe in the things the 'little man from Missouri' fought for without ceasing — housing for the homeless, prices within reason, equality of civil rights, educational opportunity, fair labor laws and social security."

LOS ANGELES MIRROR—"The American people relected President Truman because they want somebody to do something about their living problems. . . . The Republicans had their chance in Congress and failed. . . . Dewey failed horribly as a campaigner. . . . One thing all the wise men overlooked—Americans love an underdog."

If the same forces control the next Republican convention, the party is finished and the millions of patriotic men and women who have looked to it for leadership will have to look elsewhere. . . . We are all so pleasantly surprised with Mr. Truman's election; surprised because "God works in mysterious ways His miracles to perform," and pleasantly surprised because the election seems to shut out the possibility of another depression and proclaims loudly that Wallace, with his third party, has no place in the hearts of Americans.

It is pleasant, too, because it showed up the Dixiecrats as not Democrats; for when any man turns against the man and platform nominated and adopted at the national convention by a majority of Democrats, that man has ceased to be a Democrat. If any Dixiecrat thinks he is still a Democrat, let him announce and run for a state office at any time during the next quarter century. The lesson he will learn will be both heart-breaking and expensive.

For the enlightenment of these good Southern gentlemen, we recommend an editorial reprinted in The Birmingham News Nov. 4, from the pen of Jonathan Daniels (son of Josephus Daniels).

To the above mentioned reading we wish to supply the thought that:

1. States' rights is a party issue and will be settled within the party, that is the national party, and a true Democrat will be happy with the settlement so made, else he is undemocratic.

2. The greatest threat to our Southern security is a Republican depression; the second greatest is communism; for with the first upon us we could do nothing about the second.

In passing, it is our belief that Mr. Sparkman is the biggest Democrat in Alabama today.

THE REAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TRUMAN VICTORY

The Afro American

Sat 11-13-48

(AN EDITORIAL)

Baltimore Md

The smashing victory of Harry S. Truman over Governor Thomas E. Dewey for the Presidency in last week's election has already been entered in the record books as one of the most startling upsets in the political history of this nation.

It was a stirring tribute to the personal magnetism of the man whom the pollsters, pundits and newspapers—this one among them—did not give even an outside chance to retain occupancy of the White House. In addition, it was a graphic demonstration that the voters, contrary to popular belief, have a mind of their own.

34a(2)

Definite indication of this was revealed in the AFRO's exclusive pre-election poll, taken in Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and Newark, N.J., which showed that 47 per cent of the people interviewed said that they would vote for President Truman while only 33 per cent favored Dewey.

President Truman's triumph, which climaxed a campaign in which he addressed himself positively and vigorously to the important issues of the day, while his opponent sidestepped them, can be viewed as a victory of confidence over smug over-confidence.

Sat 11-13-48

In other words, Governor Dewey contributed largely to his own defeat by a negative rather than a positive campaign—a fact now freely admitted by those who advised him.

Using the tactics of a successful showman, President Truman, discarding the stereotyped manuscripts provided by his ghost writers, ad-libbed some punch lines of his own to capture the imagination of all segments of the great body politic.

In simple language which cut to the heart of vital issues, he adopted the Roosevelt formula of catering to the common people and the special groups which they compose. Realizing that all minorities are sections of the party, he appealed to labor, the farmer, the colored vote and to Jews and Catholics.

He hammered away at the Taft-Hartley Labor Law, at civil rights, at Communism, at housing and runaway prices and at the Palestine issue. He literally promised the moon while Dewey made no promises other than those made by his party in 1944.

34a(2)

And as the Truman campaign caught fire, it helped Democratic nominees for Federal and State office throughout the land. The Democratic sweep not only gives that party control of both houses of Congress but also control of 30 of the 48 State governorships.

Before the election, the GOP was cocksure not only of putting Dewey into the White House, but of continuing control of the House of Representatives and possibly of the Senate. It lost all of them.

In retrospect, then, it can be said that President Truman's victory was due to:

1. His courageous personal fight despite the advice of his friends;
2. Governor Dewey's unwillingness to "mix it up" by his failure to discuss controversial issues;
3. The dismal record of the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, and
4. Too much reliance, by the Republicans, on opinion polls.

Sat 11-13-48

Yet, although President Truman polled more votes (23,667,727) than his three nearest rivals combined, the total vote in the election (approx. 47 million) fell far short of expectations. There is far too much political apathy throughout the nation and efforts will have to be redoubled to get more qualified voters to exercise their right of franchise.

The election further showed up as erroneous the estimated 4 million votes to be cast for Henry Wallace and demonstrated conclusively that the threat of Communist strength in elections has been greatly exaggerated.

Again, it showed that the civil rights issue, on which it was predicted the President would lose thousands of votes, actually won votes for him. The Dixiecrats notwithstanding, there are many Southern whites who are willing to go along with the program because they can see in it some benefits for themselves.

With a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress in power after January, what can we expect?

Certainly, the Taft-Hartley Labor Law will be amended but not repealed as some believe. Social legislation—housing, health, broadened social security coverage, and stand-by price controls will be pressed for as will civil rights legislation. The Marshall Plan will be continued.

The Democrats, with 263 members of the House of Representatives to 171 for the Republicans, will probably be able to pass much of the President's program but in the Senate, where the advantage is 54 to 42, there is the likelihood that some of the House-approved measures will find tough sledding.

But despite the efforts of certain Dixiecrats who remain in office, we expect to see a new alignment which will bring together Northern Republicans and the more liberal Democrats just elected to office. In this combination lies our greatest strength.

In the true American tradition we believe and hope that now that the election is over, winners and losers alike will join hands in a united effort to carry out a program of greatest benefit to the greatest number.

The people have spoken. It is now up to them to see that the mandate they have handed down is carried through to successful completion.

What Spoils From the Victors?

Pittsburgh Courier

THE analysis of Negro voting in the last Presidential election made by John L. Clark, the political expert of The Pittsburgh Courier, reveals that had the great majority of Negroes voted for Dewey instead of Truman, the Democrats would have lost instead of won in California, Illinois and Ohio, and therefore the election.

Sat 11-13-48

In many industrial centers where Democratic Congressmen and Senators won, they would have lost without the votes of Negroes.

It is not unfair to say, therefore, that the votes of loyal Negro adherents to the Democratic party decided the election and sealed Dewey's doom.

34a(2)

Why did the majority of Negroes vote for the Democrats instead of the Republicans?

Pittsburgh, Pa

We believe they did so because of Mr. Truman's specific promises to do something to better their social and economic position in the Nation rather than his performances which were practically nil.

There simply was no comparison between what Mr. Truman did for Negroes and what Mr. Dewey did for them, considering the records of both.

Since the Negroes voted for President Truman on the basis of his promises rather than his performances, they should now expect some reward for their loyalty to the Democratic standard bearer.

The political spoils are supposed to belong to the victor: i.e., Mr. Truman in this instance, and the Negroes who supported him should be deeply interested in what part of the spoils will be given to them.

One of the first rewards the Negroes should get is complete abolition of segregation because of color in the armed services of the country, with complete representation in all units of the defense forces.

This can be accomplished by the simple issuance of an order by the President who is Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and does not require any Congressional action whatever.

The President does not have to wait until January to do this because he is already in charge of the armed forces.

Another reward it is high time that Negroes received is another Federal judgeship or even two, and here again there is no reason why some of the many distinguished Negro lawyers who went down the line for Mr. Truman when the future looked dark and dreary, should not be appointed as soon as possible.

Considering the number of Federal judgeships and Federal attorneyships in this country, the Negro has practically no representation whatever.

It will be difficult to make Negroes understand why they are being slighted if there are not more appointments to the diplomatic service, hitherto the haven of scions of the rich and well-connected, and one to which only a small handful of Negroes have been named in the past forty years.

A half century ago, when there were very few Negroes qualified to serve their country abroad, there were nevertheless a large number of consuls and vice-consuls, along with some ministers, mostly appointed by Republican administrations.

Today there are not more than a half dozen Negroes in the diplomatic service of the United States although there are a hundred times more qualified colored men and women available.

34a(2)

Certainly with such new colored nations as India, Pakistan, Malaya, Burma and Ceylon, as well as Ethiopia, Egypt and the several Near Eastern countries, there are plenty of available berths to which Negroes of education and training can be appointed.

Admittedly it will not be easy to pass the promised FEPC, anti-lynching and anti-poll tax laws over the Southern opposition in Congress (with the announced unity drive to bring the Dixiecrats back into the fold already in full swing) but the Negroes who helped elect Mr. Truman have a right to expect more consideration from him than the Dixiecrats get when the 81st Congress opens for business.

Negroes also helped to elect Mr. Truman in the expectation that once in the White House in his own right, he would throw all of his influence behind enaction of Federal aid to education, drastic price control, expanded public housing and repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

This should be their reward and we hope they will get it, although we seriously doubt it because we have always been a little dubious about campaign promises made in the midst of desperate conflict.

Right here, we think, is the time for a warning to the Republicans: If they hope to win the Negro vote in the future they must recognize to greater degree than in the recent campaign the importance and influence it wields in this country.

As to Negro voters, they must recognize the potential power they possess in all elections and qualify to vote in much larger numbers than they ever have in the past.

It can be safely stated that only about half of the Negroes outside the South qualified to vote and voted, and only a very small proportion of those who could have qualified to vote in the Southern States did so, else they would have overwhelmed the Dixiecrats.

Sat 11-27-48

There are twice as many eligible Negro voters in the Southern States as there are colored men, women and children outside the South, and the areas in which they cannot qualify to vote are shrinking every year.

If we expect to be a real power in politics and have the full respect of political bosses and our white neighbors, we must fully utilize the opportunities we have to exercise the rights of citizenship.

Popular Vote Gets Backing From South

Johnston Favors New Proposal

34a(2)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21—(AP)—Southern Democratic support appeared today for a move by Senator Lodge (R-Mass) to put presidential elections on a popular vote basis.

Senators Sparkman (D-Ala) and Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) told a reporter in separate interviews they will back in the next session of Congress a proposal to change the present system by which a state's entire electoral college vote is cast for the candidate who tops the popular ballot test.

Amendment Proposed

Lodge offered in the last session and intends to revive a proposed constitutional amendment under which each candidate would share in the electoral vote on the percentage of his election day total.

Thus an aspirant who lost out by only a few popular votes to his presidential opponent would get nearly half of the state's support in the electoral college, instead of none at all.

Sparkman said he thinks Southern Democrats generally will support the proposal because it would "go a long way toward doing away with minority rule in this country."

"There are some minorities in Northern states who get just about anything they want out of the political parties because the parties fear they may have the balance of power in a state with a lot of electoral votes," the Alabama senator said.

Would Have "Good Effect"

He added that he believed a change such as suggested by Lodge "would have a good effect in the South."

"It would encourage both parties to campaign in the South, because if the Republicans could cut into he electoral vote there—which they can't do now—the Democrats would be campaigning to keep them from it."

Johnston pointed out that the South long has felt that its influence in the Democratic party has not been in proportion to the electoral college support it has furnished.

Sat 8-21-48

Other Dixie lawmakers have said they think President Truman would not have pushed his civil rights program with any of the vigor he displayed if the proposed new electoral system had been in effect.

Lodge seems likely also to get strong Republican support for his revision proposal. As chairman of the party's platform drafting committee he succeeded in getting approval in that document of a proposal for a revision "which will more exactly reflect the popular vote."

But any such change must run the gauntlet of two-thirds approval by both houses of Congress and approval by three-fourths of the state legislatures.

Dewey's Aloofness Costly, Hall Asserts

Sat 11-13-48

By DOUGLASS HALL

Baltimore Md

NEW YORK—Why is Harry Truman not our ex-President?

Having traveled with Gov. Thomas E. Dewey for the past month it might seem a bit odd for me to discuss his defeat by President Truman, but I think I am qualified for this task.

I was one of the newsmen who shadowed Truman all over the country. True, I seldom caught up with him, but we always seem to arrive in town, less than 24 hours after a Truman visit.

Called Coincidental

Dewey's aides maintained until the last that this was coincidental. Maybe, that's true. Nevertheless, we were in the Hollywood Bowl before they finished taking down the Democratic Party posters.

People were still singing "I'm Just Wild About Harry" when we arrived in San Francisco. It was the same practically all over the country.

Caught Voters Reaction

The point is this. I always caught the voters reaction to Truman on the rebound and I admit that it caused quite a bit of concern.

34a(2)

Now don't get me wrong. I am willing to eat my crow. I associated with "experts" so much and so long until I got the feeling that Dewey would win.

I think that I deserve only a small helping, and no seconds. I was never a full-fledged backslider.

Sat 11-13-48

But when we reached a town where Truman had been (practically all we visited) and after I looked at the crowd and listened to them talk, I felt that the Dewey "apple-cart" would surely be shaken up a bit, if not overturned.

Truman Was the Reason

There were several other reporters who felt the same way. Often, Lem Graves of the Pittsburgh Courier and I would sit and feel deeply concerned about the apathy of colored persons toward Dewey, only a few of whom turned out to his meetings.

We went into the colored communities in an effort to find the real reason behind their indifference to Dewey. Without exception, it was Truman.

Now they did not dislike Dewey. They felt that he was "the white folks' man." They had heard his speeches over the radio and he had never used the word "Negro" or "Colored."

Discounted Dewey's Claim

Sure, he had put through civil rights in New York, but they did not think much of that. Their reaction to Dewey's touted record on this score was voiced thus:

"A man is not due too much credit for putting through a civil rights bill in New York, where he has half a million colored persons housed in one hole."

"What would he do about civil rights in the South, North, East and West? All the other candidates took a stand on civil rights, then why should we vote for a man who has not seen fit to recognize it by sharing his views with us?"

People Felt Strongly

I have never seen colored persons so closely lined up behind a Presidential candidate.

Not only did they feel that way when they talked about it, but they felt strongly enough to go to the polls and mark their ballot "Truman."

Sat 11-13-48

I think that, perhaps, more colored persons voted in this election than in any other in history—not so much against Dewey but for Truman.

Acted at Polls

It was 5:30 a.m., and the fog was still hanging overhead near a voting booth in Harlem. Yet, there were several hundred persons in line, waiting for the polls to open.

Now a fellow can't go around the polls in New York and ask a person how he is voting. They have policemen there. Then, too, he should not do it anyway. Who a person votes for is his own secret.

That is why I am proud that one did not have to ask these voters which way their votes were going. They yelled and sang and talked "good things" about Truman. There was little doubt where they stood.

Harlem Sold on President

I arrived in Harlem shortly after Truman had paraded there by motorcade from the Bronx and was greeted by 65,000 persons.

I was in Brooklyn and felt the power of his visit. He did something to the people. He seemed to have left them with a feeling that they "belonged."

I visited the Democratic headquarters in New York where almost everyone felt that Truman didn't have a chance to win.

The Big Pay-off

But practically every secretary in the place was carefully guarding her right hand, shaken by Truman, and was singing praises for the "Boss."

A clerk in the Roosevelt Hotel, where the Republican headquarters were, told me:

"I am going to vote for Truman. I will tell you why. He is for colored people. He has pledged himself to aid them.

Sat 11-13-48

"Now I am not any better than colored people. I figure that if he helps them he will help me."

During his campaign tour Dewey called an engineer a "lunatic" because he backed the Governor's train slowly into a crowd gathered at the rear of the train to hear him.

I believe that every voter in the country with the social and economic status of that engineer took the matter as a personal insult.

Many newsmen stated at the time that Dewey lost a million votes. I say that it cost him the Presidency. One of his aides toll me he wished that Dewey had just cursed and let it go at that.

In almost every crowd that we visited afterwards I heard someone say, "Oh, what the hell, we are just a bunch of lunatics!"

I think that Truman is not our ex-President because he never lost faith in the people.

He never took it for granted that the voters were mindreaders, that they could look through his vest and see what he was thinking on important world and domestic issues.

I think that Truman is not our ex-President because he proved that he was a good fighter.

Maybe not a smart one at times, but always a sincere one; maybe not always a crafty one and often leaving an opening for jovial plugs, but surely not a quitter.

I think that Truman is not our ex-President because he was not afraid or ashamed to stoop to the level of the little man in the street, shake his hand, kiss the baby, comfort the aged, pose and freely converse with colored persons.

The payoff for these American characteristics is the Presidency of the United States.

Biggest News Story

Atlanta Ga

Biggest news story continues to be the Truman election. As the Wall Street Journal aptly said in its first editorial comment:

"Barring those few who were in early adulthood at the time of Abraham Lincoln's election, we think that no man now living has witnessed a bigger news event than the election of President Truman on Tuesday . . ."

The big question remains "How?"

The air is filled with the second-guessers—the ones who always appear when the decision is in, to say they knew it, or believed it, all along.

But, the real truth is that no one did expect it, unless it was Harry S. Truman. No Democrat, looking at his Party split three ways and lacking the money to pay the bills for radio time, could expect victory. The Convention itself, discordant and unwilling to accept Harry S. Truman until, finally, there was no one else to take, did not inspire the Party which remained loyal to the ticket. His own campaign managers—with whom I talked early Tuesday night, expected at best a close finish.

Strategy In many States—Georgia among them—it was not possible to fight in the name of Truman, but only in the name of the Party. The issues were distorted. Local leaders were properly unwilling to destroy themselves and could speak only of the Party. Millions in the South believed Harry S. Truman had committed himself to ending segregation, when the most he had said was that he was pledged to end the inequities existing under segregation. It got no one anywhere explaining that. I know because I tried it. So, the fight had to be made in the name of the Party and the Party System. As such most of the Southern leaders did well. Truman could not have won without the South.

The vote was small—and Republicans always before have benefited by a small vote.

The inescapable fact remains that those who did not vote in this election were the Republicans. The Democrats went to the polls, minus, of course, many who were lured off by the Dixiecrats and others who voted Republican.

The "why?" of it remains of paramount interest.

Dewey Yesterday I talked by telephone with a man high in national political circles.

"Dewey," he said, "managed to turn many of the high State organization Republicans against him. There were wounds made at the Convention. But they would have healed had not Dewey taken what, to many of them, was a high-handed position in which they were ignored. Now, I have talked with one of the former Party chiefs who said that the only solace many Republicans were getting out of it was that Dewey was at last finished."

It does seem to be true that the Republicans were so split by petty jealousies they couldn't get together in many of the key States. The fact which becomes clearer and clearer is that in many States, normally Republican, there was not much work done for the Dewey ticket.

It is ironic that the Democrats, split three ways, were able to unite behind Truman, the man most of them had opposed at the Convention, in a more effective fashion than were the Republicans who had so much to gain.

The South For the South the picture is an interesting one. In the first place the Republican organizations in the South did a better job than those in other sections of the country.

Despite a small vote and the presence of the Dixiecrats, who gave many Democrats an opportunity to bolt their Party without going Republican, as honesty should have directed, the Republican vote was generally larger over the South than in 1944 when Dewey was the candidate. That the second-party movement should have had so severe a setback will not stop the Republicans from going ahead with second-party plans.

Sat 11-6-48

Purge The Dixiecrat leaders must be purged from the Party and should be. Any talk of welcoming the leaders, Thurmond and Wright, and their leader-associates, back into the Party should be discouraged, and will be. These men, for their own ambitions, sought to destroy the Party and to take them back on any official basis would be to compound folly.

Those who voted Dixiecrat, of course, exercised their rights to vote as they please and they are welcome back to the Party if they choose to come. The situation of a voter is considerably different from that of a Party leader, holding a Party office, as did Thurmond and Wright, who use the power of those offices to destroy the Party in their States. Also many of the voters were deceived by the false front used by the Dixiecrats.

That the national administration will also get rid of some cabinet members, a few ambassadors, and others who deserted, is assured.

The Party will be shaken down and the Republican Party will, at the same time, have to make up its mind if it will again try to stand on the old issues that long ago disappeared and no longer have meaning.

On Mr. Truman's Triumph

Sun 11-7-48

(North Georgia Tribune)

Harry Truman was elected President of the United States last Tuesday in a campaign that few besides himself thought he could win. Pollsters, news analysts and columnists kept sitting far out on a limb predicting a Republican victory long after the voting polls closed until the voters finally sawed them off to flounder in their own "babble" and loss of prestige. The voters not only elected Truman, they also gave him a Democratic majority in both Houses of Congress with whom they hope he will be able to work out a permanent peace and maintain a stable economy for our nation. Georgia is to be congratulated for repudiating the Dixiecrats, and Henry Wallace and the million voters who supported his communistic ideals found little solace to continue as a party in the United States.

(Columbus Ledger)

Maybe there were millions who—regardless of other considerations—just like to see in the White House a greying, little bespectacled man who plays the piano, and makes mistakes and confounds the politicians with an occasional ill-timed but frank remark, and takes a walk in the mornings, and builds balconies on which he can sit and rock, and who talks just like they do on Main Street and who looks that way, too, in a blue business suit and a neatly-folded handkerchief peeping from his pocket as if his wife had just patted it into place.

But whatever the reasons, the majority of the American public wanted Mr. Truman to remain the Executive and his Party the Legislative more than they wanted a change in his office, or a continuance of Republican control in Congress.

(Savannah Morning News)

It can be reasonably assumed on a basis of the results—against all the polls, commentators, soothsayers, and yes, against many editorial writers—that this country slowly but surely is drifting in the same extreme leftwing direction that has marked national politics since the end of the war in Great Britain.

The majority of the voters of the land have spoken for extreme liberalism in the United States and that the trend possesses the color of socialism cannot be denied. But if that is the way the people want it, they are the ones who will suffer if it proves an economic and social boomerang—which God forbid!

(Brooks Smith in Marietta Journal)

. . . As everyone knew, this election was merely to be a formality, as required by the Constitution, to elect Mr. Dewey and the fact that Mr. Truman was in the race was just a necessary evil and expense to the taxpayers. The only trouble was that Mr. Truman refused to accept the fate assigned to him and went out and made a whale of a campaign in the states that counted.

. . . The Republicans must be wondering if they will ever win, if they couldn't win this time, and if they are feeling ill, no one can blame them. Indeed, one of the Marietta GOP leaders, Brother Bayard Cole, called the first thing Wednesday and announced, "I'm sick."

(Augusta Chronicle)

It must be remembered . . . that the vote was so tantalizingly close, in the categories of both the popular and electoral vote, that President Truman's photo finish victory cannot by any stretch of the imagination be regarded as a clear-cut mandate from the people to carry out, in toto, the program which he has advocated in his campaign speeches.

(Covington News)

. . . The only disturbing element to us in the election is that Henry Wallace secured 2,000 votes in Georgia. We did not know there were that many of his ilk in our State. We hope some "Pied Piper" will come along and entice them to other pastures.

(Louisville News and Farmer)

. . . The State of Georgia remains safely Democratic. So many untoward things have happened in Georgia that is doubly pleasing to know that the rank and file of the people in Georgia can still see the forest in spite of a few trees, can still see the importance of standing by a philosophy of government rather than venting their spleen against an individual who does not see eye to eye with them.

(DeKalb New Era)

One of the most unusual and most far-reaching elections in the history of our nation has just taken place. Its results are a distinct further trend in a direction we started in 1932. Where it will end, only the future can tell. It is a part of a world-wide movement, a part of a trend in world-wide thinking. We are in the midst of a world mental revolution. There are forces that would hurl us at a faster pace. There are forces that would hold us back. The former lead to Communism, the latter to retrogression. It is imperative for the life of our nation, for the stability of our government and for the happiness of our people that we ponder seriously where we are headed.

(Albany Herald)

. . . Events have now proved that psychologically Mr. Truman was right and Mr. Dewey was wrong. The American people have a great fondness for the underdog, particularly one who refuses to believe that he is whipped. In many respect, Mr. Truman was a wild-swinging candidate, but especially in the last week of his campaign, he gained a wide respect for his "give 'em hell" tactics.

Sun 11-7-48

(Brunswick News)

. . . The great rank and file of the people have once again demonstrated their common sense in evaluating the work of a Republican-controlled Congress which the President himself dubbed as history's worst. And it is equally clear that millions of voters are not yet ready to surrender without a fight their hard-won advantages gained through a liberal Democratic Party.

Mr. Truman's personal battle and the resurgence of his party is nothing short of inspirational to plain people the world over. Again, let it be noted, democracy works!

(Macon News)

. . . Real reason, of course, for the smashing Democratic victory is that the present administration has been a thoroughly good, democratic one. . . . He has been open and aboveboard with the American people; he has favored labor over monopoly, man over money. He has made a lot of mistakes but they have been honest errors. He has carried his fight to the people, not to Wall Street. Organized farmers as well as organized labor went down the line for him because he talks their language.

Thurmond Is Given Big Lead Over Dewey In Alabama

Hopes of Alabama States' Rights Democrats that Strom Thurmond would have a voice in deciding the presidency were blasted today as Gov. Thomas E. Dewey conceded the election to President Truman.

Returns from nearly one-half of the state's boxes already had given the Democratic elector ticket pledged to Gov. Thurmond, the Dixiecrat standard-bearer, a huge lead of more than four to one.

With President Truman not having been represented on the Alabama ballot, the Democratic split over the president's "civil rights" program had given the state's 11 electoral votes to the South Carolina governor.

But Gov. James E. Folsom announced he would file court proceedings during the day in Federal Court in an attempt to force the Democratic electors to vote for Truman. The electors have said they cannot be forced to do this.

* * *

BEFORE DEWEY conceded the election to Truman, Horace Wilkinson, one of the electors and States' Rights' campaigner, had predicted Thurmond would become the next president or have a big voice in naming him. He was basing his prediction on reports indicating neither the president nor Dewey would receive a majority of the electoral votes, thus giving States' Righters balance of power in the electoral college.

TRUMAN "VICTORY"

PHENIX CITY, Ala., Nov. 3—(AP)—It wasn't official, but President Truman scored one election victory in Alabama.

His name was on an unofficial straw ballot along with Gov. J. Strom Thurmond's in Phenix City, and Mayor Homer Cobb said the president won by a margin of almost 10 to 1—834 votes to 88.

Cobb had the ballots circulated along with the regular voting lists in yesterday's election to test sentiment for Mr. Truman. The president wasn't on the official ballot because Alabama's Democratic presidential electors were pledged to the States' Rights candidate.

The returns came from all 11 voting places in Phenix City, the mayor said.

The Thurmond States' Rights ticket carried four states — Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and Louisiana—having a total of 38 electoral votes.

Returns from 1,199 of the state's 2,408 boxes showed:

States' Rights Democrats	105,367
Republicans	22,666
Progressive (Wallace)	1,067
Prohibition	587

These tabulations showed the Dewey-Warren ticket trailing far behind in Alabama where the Republicans had hoped to poll their largest vote since the 1928 Hoover-Smith race. But apparently they had done no better than approximate the 44,500-vote total received by the Dewey-Bricker ticket four years ago.

* * *

INCLUDED IN TABULATED returns were votes cast in GOP strongholds of Winston, DeKalb, Chilton and a few other counties.

Returns from 1,116 boxes had given Sen. John Sparkman an overwhelming lead over his Republican opponent, Paul G. Parsons, Birmingham attorney. The count:

Sparkman	106,009
Parsons	17,456

As pointed out during the campaign, Truman's fate in Alabama voting was decided in the May 4 primary when the Democratic elector nominees were chosen on anti-Truman pledges.

Unless court action diverts the electoral votes to Truman, this election will mark the first time since 1872 that the regular Democratic nominee has failed to receive them.

Democrats also swept all the congressional races — four seats were contested—by usual lopsided majorities.

And in Jefferson County, as was expected, Democratic nominees overwhelmed GOP opponents for various county offices.

IN CONGRESSIONAL RACES, Ninth (Jefferson) District, Rep. Laurie Battle was shown by returns from 195 of 258 boxes to have a lopsided lead over his Republican adversary, Hiram Dodd, Birmingham lawyer. They had:

Battle	28,550
Dodd	4,441

In the Eighth, reports from 75 of 252 boxes gave Rep. Bob Jones, Scottsboro, 6,954 to 805 for Harry J. Frahn, Sheffield.

In the Sixth, returns from 80 of 212 boxes, showed Rep.-Nominate Ed deGraffenreid, Tuscaloosa, receiving 6,947 and Republican W. P. (Bill) Ivey, Columbiana, 1,180.

In the Fourth, veteran Rep. Sam Hobbs, Selma, far out-distanced his GOP opponent, B. Hogan Stewart, Sylacauga, by 6,590 to 650.

* * *

IN JEFFERSON COUNTY, Democratic nominees had huge leads over Republican challengers. Reports from 228 of the county's 258 boxes showed:

For County Commission president:

W. D. Kendrick	24,064
Hugh McCary	3,574

Circuit Court judge No. 3:

Judge Alta King	23,947
W. L. Longshore	3,655

Tax collector:

J. W. (Bill) Hamilton	23,953
Kendall G. Springfield	3,482

Tax assessor:

L. A. Whetstone	23,631
Orrie W. Irwin	3,951

County treasurer:

Joe L. Kirby	24,122
James B. Foster	3,806

With yesterday's voting having set the state for a court fight over who is entitled to Alabama's 11 electoral votes, William Primm, Jr., executive assistant to Democratic National Chairman Howard McGrath, was taking a shot at Dixiecrat leaders in this state.

Primm, who formerly lived at Montgomery, said:

"I am sorry the people of my own state did not have the opportunity to vote for President Truman. Certain leaders in Alabama, who are now in control of the Democratic Party machinery there, are directly responsible for depriving the people of my state of a free ballot.

"I do not think these people will remain in control of the party very long. Alabama is the only state in the union which did not have a chance to vote for the regular Democratic nominee."

Scrappy, underrated Harry Truman captured the Presidential election yesterday in one of the biggest upsets in America's political history.

And in the hour of his greatest triumph, the Democratic Party gave him a solid, comfortable majority in both Senate and House.

It was a triumph which the little man from Missouri, standing almost alone against the flood-tide of pre-election forecasts, had predicted with unswerving confidence.

Down to defeat went Thomas E. Dewey, trying for a comeback along the road to the White House which invincible Franklin D. Roosevelt blocked four years ago.

Down with him went Republican candidates in key Congressional races and gubernatorial contests.

They went down fighting, in the toughest Presidential battle since Woodrow Wilson squeezed out Charles Evans Hughes in 1916. Dewey conceded defeat at 11:15 a. m., EST, Wednesday.

And at the moment of decision by tens of millions of American voters, victor and vanquished alike cried out their hopes for peace in a troubled world.

For himself, Mr. Truman pledged anew that he would give all his efforts "to the cause of peace in the world and the prosperity and happiness of our people."

As Dewey lost, he called out to all Americans to "unite" behind the man who beat him and behind "every effort to keep our nation strong and free and establish peace in the world."

In those words of the President and the man who wanted to be President there was new notice that America's foreign policy will remain bipartisan, that it will remain one of unwavering firmness toward Russia.

In fact, there were suggestions that the first big diplomatic move by a Chief Executive bolstered by a resounding vote of confidence in his program will be in the direction of a military alliance with Western Europe.

And at home, Mr. Truman had an evident indorsement of his intention to carry forward and expand a New Deal which he has embraced in its entirety.

All through his campaign, as he trudged up and down and across the country, the President promised that a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President would give the people:

Price controls, housing, more social security, a higher minimum wage, repeal of the Taft-Hartley labor law, benefits for farmers, development of the West, medical insurance, strenghtened civil rights.

Anur 11-4-48

Shake-ups unquestionably are in store in the Republican party leadership. Twice defeated for the presidency on which he had set his heart for 10 years, Dewey said he wouldn't try again. He indicated he might get out of politics.

The popular vote lagged behind the record total of more than 50,000,000 that had been expected. And there wasn't much chance it would climb to a new mark.

Early last night reports from 87 percent of the polling places, 117,872 out of 135,858, put the total at 43,296,211. It was split this way:

Truman 21,593,356, Dewey 19,877,162, Thurmond 826,846, Progressive Candidate Henry A. Wallace, 998,847.

The electoral vote remained unchanged. It had gone up and down during the afternoon as Califoria and its 25 votes leaned first to Truman, then to Dewey, then tilted back again.

But with Ohio's 25 votes finally in the bag for the Democrats, California couldn't change the election outcome by landing at last in the GOP column.

Anur 11-4-48

There were changes, of course, as the count came in belatedly from outlying polling places. But Republican hopes were gone.

At Truman headquarters in the Muehlebach Hotel penthouse in Kansas City, there were cheers and back slapping and hand pumping. Friends, newspapermen, Secret Service agents and White House aides poured out congratulations to the happy, grinning man who had won four more years in the White House in his own right.

The political dopesters still were in a daze trying to figure out how it all happened. Adjectives like "stunning," "amazing," "astounding" were on every tongue.

The grit and never-give-up spirit of the man who inherited the White House from Roosevelt couldn't be discounted. And Mr. Truman could say "I told you so." He had told the poll-takers they would be red-faced today. They were.

Even the cards had been stacked against him.

Presidential candidates aren't supposed to win without the big electoral votes of New York and Pennsylvania. Truman did.

And he did it with his own party split, without the Solid South, without any bulging money bags to finance the campaign, without the big total vote that is supposed to favor the Democrats.

Progressive Party Candidate Henry A. Wallace, fired from the Truman cabinet, got even in part in New York, Connectcut and Maryland. The votes Wallace collected there would have been enough to swing those States to the Democrats.

But the President won without those too.

He raided Republican strongholds in the farm belt, where wheat and corn prices have been sagging. He wrenched States like Iowa and Wisconsin away from the Republican banner.

He ran strong in the border States, including his own Missouri. And he held onto most of the South in the face of attempts of rebelling States Righters under Thurmond to snatch it from him.

Thurmond captured only Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mr. Truman came out of the campaign and the election with new stature and prestige. He was good enough to win on his own. He had answered with his victory the talk that he just wasn't big enough for the job.

He had heard that talk and it must have hurt. He mentioned it time and again as he stumped the country, telling the people he wanted them to see him and listen to him and judge for themselves whether the talk was right.

He told the people he was on a great "crusade" for them, that the real issue was their interests against the special interests. He told them he was fighting on the right side and he would win.

He hit at Dewey as a "shadow" who was trailing him around the country saying "me, too" to Democratic promises to the people. But he insisted there was one place Dewey wouldn't follow — across the White House doorstep.

Always he lit into what he tagged the "awful," the "idiot," the "second worst" Eightieth Congress. He said it tried to "cut the throats" of the farmer and the laboring man. He slugged hard at the Taft-Hartley law.

And in the end, the farmers and the workers helped sew up his victory.

One phrase Mr. Truman stressed in his campaign may have offered some key to the results. He kept repeating that what the people really were interested in was "peace, prices and places to live."

That underscored an old political doctrine—it's hard to toss out any administration when times are good, even if there is some inflation.

Sen. Taft, Republican, Ohio, put it into these words in Washington: "It is almost impossible to put an administration out of office at the very peak of a prosperity boom."

THE reelection of President Truman and the return of Democratic majorities in both houses of Congress sufficient to give him authority as well as responsibility in national affairs, is a great personal victory for Mr. Truman.

It unquestionably gives him new and impressive stature in his own country, and throughout the world.

While it is by no means an overwhelming victory, both the popular and the electoral vote reflecting a fairly even division among the people, it is a conclusive public demonstration of the national preference for him in the face of the existing alternatives.

If this is a surprising and even an astonishing turn of events, it is only because so much of the guessing about the election was so very wrong—and with the exception of Mr. Truman himself, this applies to most of his own followers, INCLUDING THE TOP FIGURES OF HIS ADMINISTRATION WHO HAD GIVEN MERELY LIP SERVICE TO HIS CANDIDACY AND IN SOME CASES VERY LITTLE OF THAT.

Perhaps as much as any presidential candidate in American political history, Mr. Truman made his campaign virtually alone and won it almost entirely on his own—and in consequence the many red faces in the country are not being worn exclusively by his opponents but quite as conspicuously by those who were only in his camp for LACK OF ANY OTHER PLACE TO GO.

There are a variety of explanations of Mr. Truman's victory in these circumstances, but the primary explanation is that the presidential candidate offered by the Republican Party in opposition to Mr. Truman failed to inspire enthusiasm among the people and accordingly bid unsuccessfully for their confidence.

It was the failure of the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia last summer to recognize this disposition of the American people that set the stage for the Truman victory.

While the majority of the people of the United States were in a mood for change in the national administration at that time, the Republican nominating convention failed to sense that the dominant aspiration was NOT FOR MERE CHANGE IN ITSELF BUT FOR NATIONAL LEADERSHIP OF TRULY EXCEPTIONAL CHARACTER—of the high caliber, for instance, of any number of eminent and outstanding Americans, but especially of such a distinguished and inspiring an American as General Douglas MacArthur.

Instead of measuring up to the real expectations of the American people and to its own opportunities, the Republican convention selected a once beaten and very badly beaten presidential candidate who never had widespread popularity in the country and proved to be incapable of winning the confidence of enough of the people to accomplish his election.

It was beside the point that Mr. Dewey was an able and competent administrator of public affairs.

The prevailing factor was that the American people did not want Mr. Dewey as President, and had rejected him on the occasion of his first candidacy, and rejected him again WHEN GIVEN NO OTHER ALTERNATIVE TO THE REELECTION OF MR. TRUMAN.

Now Mr. Truman is President of the United States, not by the accident of being caretaker for another President's unfinished term, but in his own right.

He has his own team now, and he is head man on the team.

He has shown himself to be a man of great political courage and resourcefulness.

He is more obligated now than ever before to demonstrate equally high qualities of statesmanship, for he now must justify and vindicate the judgment of the American people who have not only honored him personally but have entrusted the national interests and safety to him at a most critical and precarious time.

Suggesting A Way To G

The best way to get a secret ballot which would allow the South Carolina voters a free choice in the general election would be to have the General Assembly of South Carolina enact an Australian ballot law for the general election, as Governor J. Strom Thurmond has suggested.

But Governor J. Strom Thurmond, who once suggested that the state Democratic convention be reconvened, has refused to act in the field where his own authority lies. He declines to issue the call for the special session of the legislature, which could have enacted laws to give the state a real secret ballot.

Maxie C. Collins, executive secretary of the South Carolina Federated Forces and a member of the so-called citizens Democratic group, makes the suggestion that the several parties participating in the primary cooperate in printing one ballot containing the names of all party nominees for Congress and electors.

"Inasmuch," Mr. Collins explains, "as Governor Thurmond has failed to call a special session of the legislature to enact a secret ballot law for general elections and inasmuch as it appears particularly important that the citizens of South Carolina have the opportunity to vote in secret at the general election, November 2, without the coercion or pressure of having to reveal for whom they vote, a prominent Democrat (not Dixiecrat) of South Carolina has made . . . the suggestion that all parties be invited to cooperate in printing a secret ballot for the presidential electors and members of Congress.

"It is possible to do this without violation of any present law, but all parties will have to contribute toward the cost of printing the ballots . . ."

And Mr. Collins' proposal has great merit, if it can be done under the South Carolina general election law. It would give the voters of South Carolina the secret ballot to which they are entitled. If it be legal every party in the state should accept Mr. Collins' invitation to join with him in printing a joint ballot. The Democratic party is already on record as favoring the secret ballot.

But there may be some doubts of the validity of this procedure and it is, of course, something less than a real Australian ballot which allows for the voting of a split ticket.

South Carolina's general election law describes the ballots:

"Which ballots shall be of plain white paper and of such width and length as to contain the names of the officer or officers . . . to be voted for . . . clear and even cut, without ornament, designation, mutilation, symbol or mark of any kind whatsoever, except the name or names of the person or persons voted for and the office to which such person or persons are intended to be chosen . . ."

Thur 8-26-48

Whether the scratching of the names of those persons not voted for would constitute mutilation of the ballot within the meaning of this section The Record doesn't pretend to know. Whether Mr. Collins' idea that the ballot might be perforated would be legal, it cannot say, although a perforated ballot appears to be something less than "clear and even cut." But the attorney general of South Carolina could be called upon for an opinion.

The suggestion should not be allowed to die without further study. It should not be cavalierly dismissed as Senator W. P. Baskin dismisses it. The voters of South Carolina are big enough to be trusted to know their own minds and to vote them.

A New Deal Sweep

The News

I WAS AS WRONG as the rest in predicting the outcome of the presidential election, but I can't say I am unhappy about it.

It may be that the poll-takers and the political writers, editors, and politicians (including most of Mr. Truman's chief political lieutenants when they weren't talking for publication) who said Dewey would win made an important contribution to President Truman's victory. They may have lulled a good many Republicans into staying away from the voting booths.

The total vote appears to have been light. The Democratic high command was praying for a heavy vote. Their theory was that there were millions of old Roosevelt voters who, although not enthusiastic about Truman, would choose him in preference to Dewey if they could be got to the voting booths. Most of the top Republican politicos made the same calculation. They thought a light vote would favor Dewey. It was a bit too light, at least on the Republican side. Overconfidence, built up with the help of the unanimously wrong poll-takers and political writers, may have had a lot to do with that.

The intensive efforts of organized labor were, of course, largely responsible for Truman's victory. Even so, Truman did not get as big a percentage of the vote in many of the industrial centers as Roosevelt did in 1940 or 1944. The biggest surprise in the voting pattern was the strength Truman showed in the rural areas. The farmers, who started drifting back to the Republican Party as early as 1936, moved in the other direction last Tuesday. The fall in grain and livestock prices in the few weeks before the election may have had something to do with that.

The farmers knew, too, that, although Dewey declared himself in favor of farm price supports and although the Aiken-Hope bill was passed by the 80th Congress, it was Truman and the Democrats who had forced Congress to pass long-term farm legislation. Moreover, Dewey, although he is a gentleman-farmer, did not look like the kind of man who understands farm problems.

New Deal Lives On

TRUMAN'S PLUCK undoubtedly enhanced the natural appeal of his friendly personality. His victory is being hailed as a one-man feat. And certainly he will now go down in history as a master campaigner. But another man was at least as important in his achievement: Franklin D. Roosevelt. In this campaign, Truman identified himself completely with the Roosevelt New Deal. He took as his target, not Dewey who has embraced much of the New Deal, but the Republican old guard, which so largely dominated the 80th Congress. There are millions of voters who distrust the Republican Party, especially perhaps when they remember the Hoover depression, but who were not too enthusiastic about Truman. Truman played on that longstanding distrust.

Truman was right when he said that his victory was not personal but a victory for the Democratic Party. He might have said for the record made by the Democratic Party under Wilson and Roosevelt, as contrasted with that of the Republican Party following the First World War and the Republican leadership of the 80th Congress. The country turned to the Democratic Party—or, rather, to the Rooseveltian New Deal tradition.

In one sense, Truman rode back into office on the coat-tails of the New Deal. In state after state he trailed the Democratic candidates for Congress, the Senate, and governor. But the Democratic tide was strong enough to carry him to victory, also, and the way he drew and drove home the primary issues of the campaign was, of course, one of the main reasons why the Democratic tide was so strong.

Mon 11-8-48

Licked By The Record

DEWEY RAN AHEAD of his party in nearly every state. He was dragged down by the Republican record. The right wing of the GOP has received perhaps its death blow. A few of the more progressive Republicans were run over, also, along with Dewey. But the repudiation of the GOP right-wing extended even to Rep. Harold Knutson, reactionary chairman of the ways and means committee, after 32 consecutive years in the House. His great contribution to the record of the 80th Congress was the tax-cut. Tax-cuts are supposed to be sure-fire recipes for political success.

In the Senate, the isolationist wing has been almost obliterated, perhaps largely because it was right-wing also on domestic questions. Of the 10 senators in the Senate class of 1942 who voted against the Marshall plan, only Wherry survived this election.

The last person I talked with in New York after the election suggested that the Democratic victory was "a memorial to Roosevelt," and the same phrase came from the first person I talked with on arriving in Washington four hours later. It is not inappropriate.—©

Chicago Tribune Story On Election Tells Of 'Victory' For Dewey

Fri 11-5-48

CHICAGO, Nov. 5—(AP)—The Chicago Tribune, in an election story yesterday, said early returns Tuesday had indicated Thomas E. Dewey had defeated President Truman.

B'ham, Ala

The Tribune, which supported Dewey, claimed his victory in several editions election night.

One replate edition which came out about 10 p.m. Tuesday carried the main headline: "Dewey Defeats Truman." A smaller headline read: "Puts GOP Back in White House," and a third stated: "Sizable Electoral Margin Seen."

THE FIRST PARAGRAPH of the news story said: "Dewey and Warren won a sweeping victory in the presidential election yesterday."

The story, written by Arthur Sears Henning, continued, "The early returns showed the Republican ticket leading Truman and Barkley pretty consistently in Northern and Western states" and that "indications were that the complete returns would disclose that Dewey won the presidency by an overwhelming majority of the electoral votes."

The headlines did not make a flat victory claim in later editions, but the opening paragraph of the general election story in The Tribune's last edition Wednesday said: "Dewey and Warren won the presidential election yesterday."

Fri 11-5-48

Henning, in his election story yesterday morning, said, "In the early returns Dewey appeared to have won. Mr. Truman himself thought so. He went to bed thinking himself defeated, just as Charles Evans Hughes went to bed in 1916 thinking he had been elected."

NO THIRD TERM AS PRESIDENT, TRUMAN HINTS

ABOARD TRUMAN VICTORY SPECIAL, Nov. 4.—President Truman will retire from office after his next four-year term. He will not run for a second full term.

That was learned on the highest authority tonight as the victorious President traveled across the country to Washington.

The President was magnanimous and humble in victory today as he traveled across the country toward a triumphant return to the White House.

The jubilant Chief Executive made it plain in platform talks in his native Missouri that he was not going to crow over his defeated Republican foes.

His train trip back to Washington began to resemble a victory march across the heart of the nation.

Crowds gathered to hail their underdog hero-winner at each point where the train stopped.

THRONGS GATHER—

Ten thousand pressed around the train when it stopped in St. Louis. Other enthusiastic throngs cheered the President in Sedalia and Jefferson City.

Huge crowds greeted the President in other Missouri cities and at Indiana points.

Other crowds stood along the railway at small towns through which the train passed.

Mrs. Truman and daughter Margaret also received victory tokens from the crowds.

Mr. Truman appealed to the crowds that cheered him so wildly for help in continuing prosperity at home and gaining world peace.

Fri 11-5-48

He told them:

"You have given me a terrible responsibility. I hope you will stand behind me."

BIGGEST JOB——

He told the St. Louis crowd to "continue praying for the welfare of this great country." He added:

"I want you to stand by me now. I've got the biggest job in the world."

The President appeared strong and refreshed. His campaign over, he kept on campaigning, or at least making speeches, in the same informal way that captured crowds during his successful barnstorming.

Staunch Thurmond Elector Holds Truman Vote to 303

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—President Truman is assured of 303 votes in the Electoral College although he carried twenty-eight states that will cast a total of 304 electoral votes.

New York N.Y.

A recapitulation today showed that one Tennessee elector, chosen on the Truman-Barkley slate, remained pledged to vote for the Thurmond-Wright States Rights ticket.

There had been one other successful electoral candidate so pledged, but he announced after the election that he would vote for President Truman. If he carries out that intention the Thurmond electoral vote will be thirty-nine.

Thus the President is assured at this point of eleven of Tennessee's twelve electoral votes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—Returns from 135,460 voting places out of 141,046 in the nation showed the vote for President as follows today:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I hope you will not take this as presumptuous. I certainly do not mean it to be. I am disturbed, however, by the tenor of some of the current comment which generally takes the position that President Truman won without the South. It is very important from the viewpoint of those of us who supported the Democratic party and who successfully and earnestly fought the fraudulent and hypocritical Dixiecrat movement that the rest of the nation understand the revolt in the South was confined to four states.

Tue 11-9-48

It is also my opinion that, had the people in those states been given a free opportunity to vote without fear and intimidation, these also would have gone Democratic. As you know, Alabama did not even allow a Truman vote, and in the other states, despite apparent ability to vote for Mr. Truman, intimidation and other means were used to prevent a free ballot.

New York N.Y.

From our viewpoint, it is important and would be enormously helpful if it could be pointed out that Mr. Truman could not have won without Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina and other Southern states which voted for him. I again ask your pardon for addressing this to you, but I have been disturbed last night and today by the general lumping of the whole South in comments that Mr. Truman won without the South.

Truman Constant On Civil Rights

WASHINGTON.—Only a few White House insiders knew it at the time, but President Truman could have avoided the split with the South on the civil-rights issue. However, he decided that the question was too important for any compromise.

In a White House conversation, Morris Ernst, a member of the civil rights committee, urged Truman not to send the committee's report to Congress, but rather to the governors and mayors of the different states. Ernst pointed out that Southern leaders had always contended that this was a state, not a federal, problem; therefore a bitter fight could be avoided by handling the report that way.

Truman's reply was brief and to the point.

"I would not be doing my duty as president," he said.

Ernst, who had been a close friend and adviser of Franklin Roosevelt, then asked Truman why he had such a passion for civil rights—even more so than Roosevelt.

"When I was young," replied the president, "I saw fiery crosses burned on the hills above Independence and 3,000 hooded men parading. I get worried about a return of that sort of thing. We cannot let it happen again."

My Crow And My Meat

The Constitution

Thur 11-4-48

Atlanta, Ga.

My dish of crow wasn't too bad. A little gamey, maybe. The crows are thinner this year. But still, not too bad. If you use a good sauce you hardly notice the strong taste.

Also, I didn't have too much crow to eat. I thought Dewey would win. I did not believe Harry S. Truman could win. I want to be honest about that. There will be a horde of liars who knew all along that Truman would win. But I didn't think he could.

But from the very start the Dixiecrats were my meat. I saw through them from the start, with their leaders selected at Birmingham and Houston, and the boys in the hotel rooms pulling the wires. I had a feeling from the start I could lick the Dixiecrats because they were, insofar as their political principles were concerned, a fraud and a hypocritical affront to the South. That they fooled a lot of good, sincere people, who joined them, made me all the more determined to defeat them.

In Alabama they shamefully, and with all the arrogance of a Nazi gauletier, refused to let the people who wanted to vote for Truman have that opportunity. In South Carolina, where there is no secret ballot, they let everyone know the watchful eye of the State organization would be on anyone who voted for Truman. In Louisiana they made it difficult by requiring a complicated split-ticket vote.

I love the Missisippians and I forgive them. They are elemental about things. They don't try to solve things by reason or logic. They just walk out.

But from the start I felt the Dixiecrats were my dish. I believed I could reveal them for the political frauds they were and, more important, I was sure I could prove to the satisfaction of a great many persons that the Dixiecrats were the enemies of States' rights and of the South's future. They were a selfish lot of self-servers—not South-servers.

You cannot defend a dishonest position. This the Dixiecrats now have learned. Strom Thurmond couldn't tell the South he was bleeding at Seven Pines, when all along the people in his own State—as the Anderson Independent said—knew it was all part of a plan to set up a State machine to beat Olin Johnston for the Senate.

The South is made up of good people in great majority. We are going to defend the principle of segregation, but we are going to be just to the Negro. We will do it because we want to do so.

The Dixiecrats were trying to make of the States' right principle an anti-Negro party, and just as surely as the Wallace Communists were trying to be the pro-Negro party. The Negroes saw through the hypocrisy and fraud of the Wallace party just as the people of the South and the nation saw through the cynical, intellectual dishonesty of the Dixiecrats.

So I had conditioned myself. I lashed myself to the two-party mast, and I conditioned myself to the belief Dewey would win. I had rationalized it. My campaign was in behalf of the two-party system and against the Dixiecrats. As I said, a lot of fine people were in the Dixiecrat camp. They believed in their principles and I honor them. I resented the fact that good people were being used by the Dixiecrats.

When the people of the South—who were free to cast a free ballot in a free country—smashed the Dixiecrat movement, that was my victory.

Now, to have the Democratic Party restored to power with a Democratic House and Senate—well, that's a very satisfactory development.

But I was astonished, surprised and incredulous.

Truman We have got a fine friend of the South in our Vice President. Alben Barkley is a grand man. Sam Rayburn will be back from Texas as Speaker of the House. Our own Sens. George and Russell will head important committees. There will be other Southerners—Alabama's Sparkman and Hill among them—to stand up for what is right about the South. (The Dixiecrats were trying to get us to stand up for what was wrong in the South.)

Thur 11-4-48

I believe they will work out a solution to the problems of the party which will please every thoughtful person of good will.

I imagine the Georgia Democratic Committee is happy it wasn't lured off by the sirens from the captive Dixiecrat States.

I am sure Georgia is proud of her smashing majority for the Democratic Party. It wasn't for Truman. I know that. It was for the Party—and for the true South.

It is amazing—really it is. Just a few days ago we were all wondering about the future of the Democratic Party. Many were saying its factions were so split the Party would be out of power for years.

And now—here we are back in power with a majority in the House and Senate.

Harry Truman and Alben Barkley did it. They had faith in the people.

Dewey Shocked, Dazed at Defeat

The Constitution

NEW YORK—Gov. Dewey, hit with the sledgehammer of President Truman's astonishing upset, last night was the most thoroughly defeated man in the history of American politics.

34a(2)

It was evident everywhere in Republican circles here that the party is shocked and dazed. Dewey, who sat through the long night to hear what his senses at first would not let him believe, was left almost nothing to say.

Where a few hours ago, he had been full of plans and busy at work on the speech he was to deliver in acceptance of the nation's highest office, last night he faced only a dismal return to Albany.

No Plans What would he do then? His aides said that the Governor has made no plans. Would he return to Sea Island, Ga., where he rested after his defeat in 1944? The Governor did not know. It all added up to this: Dewey was totally unprepared emotionally, physically and psychologically for what has happened.

Thur 11-4-48

The Republican candidate collapsed in his bed in his Roosevelt Hotel suite at 8:30 o'clock yesterday morning, perhaps still hoping that a miracle would save him. He slept fitfully and awoke two hours later to learn that there had been a miracle—one worked by his rival.

At 1 p. m.—less than two hours after he had conceded defeat—Dewey went to the mezzanine, to the same hotel room where four years ago he conceded defeat to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Reporters were waiting quietly. The reporters were relieved to see that, at least outwardly, Dewey was taking the stunning defeat like a champion and that he was in good humor. But those who looked closely could see a man who was tired and lost.

Asked for his opinion of the future of political polls, the Governor laughed softly and said:

"Well, I don't like to comment on somebody else's misfortune."

Atlanta Ga.

Mrs. Dewey How was Mrs. Dewey taking the defeat?

"She's been through this before," he said, leaning back in his chair. "We've won and lost before—all in good fun."

He then repeated his message of concession and called again for unity. He thanked the press representatives who accompanied him on tour and expressed gratitude to the millions who worked in his behalf.

"I have had only a couple of hours of sleep and I have not had any chance to form an opinion," Dewey said. "The job now is to support the Administration and to make every effort to secure peace."

Asked if he would consider running a third time, he smiled and said no. The reporters sensed that he knew that his chance was gone forever, that he would never again be asked.

"I'm going back to Albany to get some sleep," he added. "I'm several weeks behind on sleep. I'll take a vacation—at least a weekend—on my farm at Pawling. I have no immediate plans beyond today."

As he turned to go, the reporters felt that they were witnessing the passing from the American political scene of Thomas E. Dewey.

Losers Not all the sadness in New York was in Republican circles. Also in mourning were those who lost election bets at odds of 15 to 1 or greater.

In professional gambling circles, it was learned, bets on the election were left pretty much alone. One bookmaker, contacted by this reporter, said:

"Where did they get this 15-to-1 stuff? People called me and said they wanted Truman on those odds. I wouldn't fool with them."

But there were plenty of bets by amateurs. Anthony Marzulli, who runs a sandwich and coffee shop in the Sun Building, gesticulated wildly with a carving knife as he told this reporter that he had cleaned up on a $50 bet at the odds quoted above.

"You can tell the Georgia people that," he shouted. "Tell 'em Tony won $750."

They're telling it around Democratic headquarters that a smooth-looking chap stepped into a hotel in Albany two weeks ago and offered to cover all bets at 10 to 1. Several chaps, who had not heard about the 15-to-1 bets, took him on. He put up $10,600 to cover their $1,060, and made this statement:

"I don't know of any other place where I could invest my money and realize 10 percent interest in only two weeks."

Few Republicans were as unhappy as that man.

Praise At Democratic headquarters, party leaders were heaping praise on President Truman, who slugged his way through an uphill campaign, carrying the loads of the parties of Henry A. Wallace and J. Strom Thurmond.

One Democrat, who asked that his name not be used, predicted that Thurmond and the Dixiecrats would come crawling to Mr. Truman. And he had kind words to say about Ellis Arnall and other Southern politicians who remained loyal to the Democratic Party.

Wears a Spiritual Hair Shirt

The Constitution

Tues 11-9-48

Atlanta, Ga.

I put on a spiritual hair shirt; poured the ashes of humility over my head, and went out into the desert to reflect.

It wasn't enough merely honestly to admit guessing wrong on the election. Too many persons were wrong. The campaign managers for both candidates were wrong. So were the managers for the Dixiecrats and the Wallace campaign.

The writers of confidential letters (such as Kiplinger) for which businessmen pay good prices to get "inside" information, were all in error.

Time Magazine and Life were emphatically off balance. All national publications followed along.

The nation's newspapers were, in the majority, as strong in their error as the aforementioned magazines.

The radio commentators were as wrong as pundits can be.

And, finally, the polls were the worst of all.

As a newspaperman I was distressed that the newspapers should be so wrong and it is about this I have done a lot of soul-searching. And I think I have an answer.

Evidence I find, in going back over the files, that all along my associates and I kept saying that Georgia would go for Truman. That was, of course, relatively easy, but there was a doubt.

Also, in my articles, including one in the Saturday Evening Post published May 22, I wrote that early that the Dixiecrats would get no more than four States at best and that at least half the Southern States, and probably two-thirds, would give their votes to Harry Truman. It also was indicated that Dewey's best chance was in Florida and Virginia.

All that came out in a very satisfactory manner. The Dixiecrats who, at the time of the writing in May, were talking of taking all the Southern States, had to resort to harshly undemocratic methods to carry even four States. Truman did get two-thirds of the Southern States and Dewey's best Southern showing was in Florida and Virginia.

Regional So, it is most satisfactory that in our State and region our readers did receive an accurate estimate on the election.

But, the national picture is sadly different. It is this which makes me so furious with myself and which has my cup of regret running over. All I can say about it is I believe I learned a lesson.

Checking back through the files, I find that on five occasions I wrote that Truman was doing well in calling attention to the Eightieth Congress because it was helping to make closer races in the States where the worst members of that Congress were again before the people. In two articles I called attention to the fact that even in Iowa, a State heavily Republican, the Democratic Senator was likely to win. On a trip to Minnesota I came back with the information that while the Democrats there thought it would be close as between Dewey and Truman, they believed they could beat Republican Senator Joe Ball.

There was ample evidence the popular vote would be close. There was evidence—which I commented on more than once—the farmers were restive about Dewey.

So, one is left with the question as to why no one—no newspaper and no campaign manager, magazine, radio commentator or columnist—added all these factors up into a chance for Truman?

Why did we keep saying that senatorial and congressional races would be close, with likely Democratic gains, but supinely accepted the fact Dewey still would carry them?

Tues 11-9-48

Polls My only answer is that through recent years we had allowed the subtle influence of the polls to take over and do our thinking for us in regions other than our own.

The polls had been so right that the nation had ceased to dispute them. The polls were, even as President Truman said, "sleeping polls." The Republicans now are sick about them, saying the "sleeping polls" kept some 3,000,000 Republican votes at home. All of us ought to be sick about them.

Dr. Gallup and all the others conducting polls had become somewhat smug and patronizing. Dr. Gallup had even professed to be bored about the business of predicting elections, since it was so sure a thing, and in a public address regretted there were not really difficult problems to poll.

All I can say is, if I were a newspaperman in Iowa or the Middle West, I would feel worse than I do. They didn't even know their own States or their region. But, I have learned this one lesson. I will never again take sleeping polls. I think they are a dangerous factor in our national life.

34a(2) 1948 Third Party

Mr. Wallace Failed To Inspire Confidence

Journal & Guide

Ed. 11-13-48

Norfolk, Va.

THE NEGRO voters throughout the country are to be commended for not allowing themselves to be stampeded into supporting HENRY A. WALLACE'S Communist-controlled third party in spite of the bait dangled before them by the left-wing advocates.

The vast majority of the members of the race who are of sufficient age and intelligence to vote are acutely sensitive of the inequitable citizenship they suffer in this country, but with sound judgment they saw no hope for betterment in the WALLACE movement.

Mr. WALLACE boldly espoused the principles nearest and dearest to the hearts of civilly and economically handicapped minorities, but they failed to see in him any consecrated Moses ordained to deliver them out of the wilderness.

That gentleman's do-nothing record about Negro citizenship while a member of the late President ROOSEVELT'S cabinet could not inspire the confidence that he had suddenly received benediction as a sincere apostle of civil rights.

Although more outspoken and demonstrative in his advocacy of the civil rights doctrine during the campaign than either of the presidential candidates of the two major parties, Mr. WALLACE only dramatized what both of them had already advocated, and in some notable respects, had supported by their action.

Of the three parties accepting and espousing principles dearest to him, the Negro voter wisely chose to cast his lot with the Democrats and Republicans, rather than to align himself with the persuasive but pathetically hopeless Progressive Party, born out of the peeve and disappointment of an ex-cabinet officer and nurtured by the bed-fellows of Josef Stalin.

Fortunately, the election results make it unmistakably clear that Communism among the American Negro, especially in the South, up to the present, is inconsequential. To him the Red ideology is innocuous and without significant appeal, even when it comes disguised as a healing agent for the civic and economic ills to which he is peculiarly subjected.

Ed 11-13-48

In his bid for the vote of the minority groups Mr. WALLACE conducted a unique and audacious campaign, playing heavily upon their many disadvantages. But beyond doubt his well-known attitude toward Russia was distasteful to the average American, and caused many of them to refuse to vote under his banner.

We think they are to be commended.

California

The all-important Tuesday Primary

Los Angeles Tribune Calif.

AN EDITORIAL

Easily the most important and interesting issue to California Negroes in Tuesday's primary election is the race for Congress from the 14th district. That it is the big race of the day is indicated by the fact that the "field" is the lagest of them all, with some 21 candidates at filing time competing for the privilege of representing the district.

34a(3) Sat. 5-29-48

The issue is important to Negroes of the whole state—if not the nation—because there is a possibility of electing a Negro representative; and the example of the four Negroes elected to Congress since Reconstruction has established that Negro congressmen perform the singular feat of giving a great degree of representation to the country's entire Negro population, otherwise not directly represented, rarely spoken for, and pretty generally ignored by the nation's chief legislative body.

34a(3)

Los Angeles' 14th is one of approximately 10 districts, among the 440 congressional districts of the country, in which Negroes have a chance of electing one of their own. For this reason and because the Negro's condition yet remains one in which he is in need of special political nourishment and treatment, it is the duty of the voters of the 14th district and the special concern of the entire race that every consideration be given to voting for a Negro.

And what is required of a Negro candidate for this role of congressman-at-large?

5-29-48

First, he should be a man worthy of representing a race that is so spectacularly spotlighted on the national scene. He should be intelligent, educated, and of high principles.

Secondly, he should be aware of the most pressing needs of the race which are mainly civil rights and economic opportunity.

Thirdly, he should be independent of, and undependent on, the overgrown octopi which hamper action in their convulsive efforts to perpetuate themselves, which is to say, he should be above blind party loyalty and selfish group interests, and should be not only capable of, but accustomed to, making up his own mind and acting according to his conscience.

In light of these requirements, how shall we evaluate the candidates offering themselves to the voters on Tuesday? Our examination fortunately may be limited to only four out of the 21 as those who will receive any consideration from the Negro voters.

Let us consider Sidney Moore, the candidate of the Independent Progressive, or Wallace Party, first. Moore, it has been overlooked, is a Negro, one of two Negroes in the race. That is a point in his favor. He also lives in the district, another point in his favor. But there the credit side of his record runs out.

Put forth, according to political rumor, by the Independent Progressives to whip the incumbent Helen Gahagan Douglas in line, Moore is a fit wheelhorse for such a mean political chore.

He is one of that species of The Inept, which has flocked to the Wallace bandwagon in droves. He is the instrument of any vaguely romantic sounding organization, which offers to the only firm and crystallized part of his personality—the desire to be recognized apart from the mass—a day in the sun.

34a(1)

He is of absolutely no importance except as voters are allowed to remain in ignorance of his fatuousness. As the candidate of the Independent Progressives in the 14th district, his importance to that party is that he is assured a place on the ballot and as a potential, although improbable, lure of Negro votes, he can be used against Mrs. Douglas in the finals to whip her into line, into support of Wallace.

Next to be considered is Wallace Braden, the standard-bearer of the Republican party. Braden has nothing to recommend him according to the slide rule we have used here. He is neither a Negro nor a resident of the 14th district; moreover, he is the antithesis of the ideal we have outlined as most desirable for this office.

He knows nothing of the needs of the race, beyond the meagre fruit of his boning up for this campaign on such cliches as: the anti-lynching bill, the anti-poll tax bill, FEPC, which he doesn't even practice in his own capacity as general manager of the rich County Employees association. Even as a white man, there is little likelihood that Braden would be of any real service to the country, committed as he is to never-ending stewardship to the political machine and its perpetuation in power and influence.

Sat. 5-29-48

Negroes supporting Braden, and they are far too many and unfortunately considerably influential, suffer from the same disease, this last named inordinate devotion to party which makes them mere puppets on a string.

Voters in the 14th district should reject the recommendation of leaders thus sold out to Braden and should forever after suspect not only their sincerity but their intelligence. Of such stuff are despots and the tools of despots made.

Comes now to the candidate who is, unreasonably so, an issue in this community, Helen Gahagan Douglas, the incumbent. Nature intended Mrs. Douglas to be an issue. A woman in a man's world, in which woman, the acquiring of one and the holding of one, is the first issue in a man's life, Helen Gahagan Douglas was probably always dynamite, perhaps even a triple threat. Fading now, she must at one time have been a pretty neat dish; and if not exactly brilliant, she is at least highly vocal and possessing the energies of a couple of dozen clubwomen.

But in spite of her dynamics, Helen Douglas has no business being an issue in this community because she is neither of it nor in it. She is not a Negro; she doesn't live in the 14th district; her comprehension of the needs of the Negro and the underprivileged are elementary and over-simplified; and she is the obedient servant of party. She is a woman who negates the very principles she pretends to uphold when she deliberately intrudes on the right and privilege of citizens to be represented by one of themselves.

The fact is undeniable that by her insistence time and time again on blocking the Negro's chance to elect a Negro to the United States Congress, where there are only two of his kind among half a thousand representatives and Senators, Mrs. Douglas gives the lie to every protestation of being the Negro's friend. She remains a coldly scheming, selfish woman, egotistical and false. And even if she were to devote her entire energies in Congress to the most special and exclusive interest of the Negro, she would still be guilty of theft of a valuable right.

Moody Staten, the opponent of Mrs. Douglas whom we endorse, is a man Negroes could be proud to have represent them. He is manly, simple and unpretentious; he is idealistic; and fitted by birth, background and expectation to speak for a group similarly born, bred and having the same expectations in a nation which has made it and will keep it for some years to come, an insular minority.

5-29-48

Mrs. Douglas is known far and wide as a liberal, but only a highly intellectual woman, and a woman of deep spiritual insight could grasp the hour's need for real liberality when that woman has been born and bred to privilege and has every expectation of remaining in that position. By contrast, Staten's birth, his life and his expectation for himself, his son, his grandson and perhaps a generation of Statens or so to come, plus his intelligence and experience have given him the awareness and insight inspiring much broader liberalism than that of a pale pink politico mouthing the ABC's of housing, high prices, and jobs.

What is needed in Congress are men who can force upon the world the realities of what it means to live in a constant state of denial.

What this people need is the opportunity to speak and act for themselves, not to have half-truths told for them and to have soft-behinded outsiders debate the pros and cons of doing anything at all.

Negroes who espouse the cause of Helen Gahagan Douglas do so purportedly because they regard Staten's Republican label as too strong to stomach. We say purportedly because the real reason is stupidity. Anyone who regards a political party as the sole repository of virtue is a stupid ass, incapable of thinking for himself and short on critical judgment. And any Negro who would place party, no matter what the general trend of that party, ahead of a race whch is the last consideration with all parties, is a bootlicker for whom some lower term than Uncle Tom should be coined.

23 Negroes seek office on Tuesday

Citizens, voters and non-voters alike, eyed Tuesday's primary election this week as the biggest field of Negro candidates ever to enter a California partisan election prepared to go to the post.

Included in the list of candidates for offices, ranging from the Assembly to national conventions, are 23 Negroes: two candidates for Congress, six for the Assembly, two for national conventions, and 12 for County Central Committees.

34a(3)

Holding the spotlight is Los Angeles' 14th congressional district, in which the Negro is making a third bid for election. Opposing the incumbent Helen Douglas are: Col. Moody Staten, retired Army officer and State Guard leader, who is filed on both Republican and Democratic tickets; and Sidney Moore, Independent Progressive.

5-29-48

One Northern Californian is running for the Assembly. He is William Byron Rumford, a pharmacist of Berkeley, running on the two major party tickets for the Assembly from the 17th district.

In Los Angeles three Negroes will square off Tuesday for the traditional "Negro seat" from the 62nd district, occupied by a Negro more than 30 years. Incumbent Augustus awkins, seeking his 15th year in the Assembly and his 8th term, is opposed by Leon M. Giles, an accountant, and Foster E. Driver, a druggist. Giles is filed on the Republican and Democratic tickets; Hawkins and Driver on those two, plus the Independent Progressive ticket.

A Negro woman, Mrs. Frances Williams, occupation not stated, is filed as a Democrat and an Independent Progressive for office from the 63rd district.

In the 67th district, newspaper publisher Leon F. Washington is running on the Democratic and Republican tickets in a field of

The all-important Tuesday Primary

Los Angeles Tribune

AN EDITORIAL

Easily the most important and interesting issue to California Negroes in Tuesday's primary election is the race for Congress from the 14th district. That it is the big race of the day is indicated by the fact that the "field" is the lagest of them all, with some 21 candidates at filing time competing for the privilege of representing the district.

34a(3) Sat. 5-29-48

The issue is important to Negroes of the whole state—if not the nation—because there is a possibility of electing a Negro representative; and the example of the four Negroes elected to Congress since Reconstruction has established that Negro congressmen perform the singular feat of giving a great degree of representation to the country's entire Negro population, otherwise not directly represented, rarely spoken for, and pretty generally ignored by the nation's chief legislative body.

34a(3)

Los Angeles' 14th is one of approximately 10 districts, among the 440 congressional districts of the country, in which Negroes have a chance of electing one of their own. For this reason and because the Negro's condition yet remains one in which he is in need of special political nourishment and treatment, it is the duty of the voters of the 14th district and the special concern of the entire race that every consideration be given to voting for a Negro.

And what is required of a Negro candidate for this role of congressman-at-large?

5-29-48

First, he should be a man worthy of representing a race that is so spectacularly spotlighted on the national scene. He should be intelligent, educated, and of high principles.

Secondly, he should be aware of the most pressing needs of the race which are mainly civil rights and economic opportunity.

Thirdly, he should be independent of, and undependent on, the overgrown octopi which hamper action in their convulsive efforts to perpetuate themselves, which is to say, he should be above blind party loyalty and selfish group interests, and should be not only capable of, but accustomed to, making up his own mind and acting according to his conscience.

In light of these requirements, how shall we evaluate the candidates offering themselves to the voters on Tuesday? Our examination fortunately may be limited to only four out of the 21 as those who will receive any consideration from the Negro voters.

Let us consider Sidney Moore, the candidate of the Independent Progressive, or Wallace Party, first. Moore, it has been overlooked, is a Negro, one of two Negroes in the race. That is a point in his favor. He also lives in the district, another point in his favor. But there the credit side of his record runs out.

Put forth, according to political rumor, by the Independent Progressives to whip the incumbent Helen Gahagan Douglas in line, Moore is a fit wheelhorse for such a mean political chore.

He is one of that species of The Inept, which has flocked to the Wallace bandwagon in droves. He is the instrument of any vaguely romantic sounding organization, which offers to the only firm and crystallized part of his personality—the desire to be recognized apart from the mass—a day in the sun.

34a(1)

He is of absolutely no importance except as voters are allowed to remain in ignorance of his fatuousness. As the candidate of the Independent Progressives in the 14th district, his importance to that party is that he is assured a place on the ballot and as a potential, although improbable, lure of Negro votes, he can be used against Mrs. Douglas in the finals to whip her into line, into support of Wallace.

Next to be considered is Wallace Braden, the standard-bearer of the Republican party. Braden has nothing to recommend him according to the slide rule we have used here. He is neither a Negro nor a resident of the 14th district; moreover, he is the antithesis of the ideal we have outlined as most desirable for this office.

He knows nothing of the needs of the race, beyond the meagre fruit of his boning up for this campaign on such cliches as: the anti-lynching bill, the anti-poll tax bill, FEPC, which he doesn't even practice in his own capacity as general manager of the rich County Employees association. Even as a white man, there is little likelihood that Braden would be of any real service to the country, committed as he is to never-ending stewardship to the political machine and its perpetuation in power and influence.

Sat. 5-29-48

Negroes supporting Braden, and they are far too many and unfortunately considerably influential, suffer from the same disease, this last named inordinate devotion to party which makes them mere puppets on a string.

Voters in the 14th district should reject the recommendation of leaders thus sold out to Braden and should forever after suspect not only their sincerity but their intelligence. Of such stuff are despots and the tools of despots made.

Comes now to the candidate who is, unreasonably so, an issue in this community, Helen Gahagan Douglas, the incumbent. Nature intended Mrs. Douglas to be an issue. A woman in a man's world, in which woman, the acquiring of one and the holding of one, is the first issue in a man's life, Helen Gahagan Douglas was probably always dynamite, perhaps even a triple threat. Fading now, she must at one time have been a pretty neat dish; and if not exactly brilliant, she is at least highly vocal and possessing the energies of a couple of dozen clubwomen.

But in spite of her dynamics, Helen Douglas has no business being an issue in this community because she is neither of it nor in it. She is not a Negro; she doesn't live in the 14th district; her comprehension of the needs of the Negro and the underprivileged are elementary and over-simplified; and she is the obedient servant of party. She is a woman who negates the very principles she pretends to uphold when she deliberately intrudes on the right and privilege of citizens to be represented by one of themselves.

The fact is undeniable that by her insistence time and time again on blocking the Negro's chance to elect a Negro to the United States Congress, where there are only two of his kind among half a thousand representatives and Senators, Mrs. Douglas gives the lie to every protestation of being the Negro's friend. Mrs. Douglas is known far and wide as a liberal, but only a highly intellectual woman, and a woman of deep spiritual insight could grasp the hour's need for real liberality when that woman has been born and bred to privilege and has every expectation of remaining in that position. By contrast, Staten's birth, his life and his expectation for himself, his son, his grandson and perhaps a generation of Statens or so to come, plus his intelligence and experience have given him the awareness and insight inspiring much broader liberalism than that of a pale pink politico mouthing the ABC's of housing, high prices, and jobs.

RUMFORD WINS DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION AFTER RECOUNT

Official count of ballots cast at the June Primary election in the 17th Assembly District, revealed that Wm. Byron Rumford won the Democratic nomination over his closest opporent, Edgar S. Hurley. In the semi-official accounting of the ballots the results denoted that Hurley had won both the Republican and Democratic nod, but at the insistence of Mr. Rumford, that a closer tally be made, the official count finally reveaeld that Rumford had won the Democratic nomination by a total of 7274 to 7008. Hurley is checking abstracts of the precinct returns and has indicated that he will file a recount suit if not satisfied.

When contacted by this paper for a statement Mr. Rumford said: "At this point it appears that I have won the Democratic nomination for the office of Assemblyman from the 7th District. I wish to thank the general public for their untiring support in this campaign. It expresses in a large way the intention of us in the Bay Area to advance politically and otherwise."

As the result of the outcome in the primaries Mr. Rumford and Mr. Hurley will now have to meet in the general election in November for a run-off.

The C I O News

TWO Alabama Congressmen with consistent anti-labor records won't return to Congress in 1949 as a result of last week's Democratic primaries.

Both opposed by CIO unions in their districts, Reps. Carter Manasco and Peter Jarman lost their seats to Carl Elliot and Edward deGraffenried respectively. Nomination in the Alabama Democratic primary is equivalent to election.

Manasco, one of the leading opponents of a higher minimum wage in 1946, had been in the House for seven years. Jarman has held his office for the past 10 years.

Washington, D.C.

CIO enjoyed another Alabama victory in the election of PAC-endorsed Sen. John Sparkman as Democratic senatorial nominee. Sparkman was first named to the Senate in a special election in 1946 to fill the vacancy created by the death of Sen. John Bankhead.

His popularity with the voters was underscored this year by the fact that he swamped Philip J. Hamm, Gov. James Folsom's candidate. Folsom, in previous tests, had proved himself a top-notch vote-getter.

Whether or not the state's delegates to the Democratic convention would walk out if the Presidents' civil rights plank is adopted was the issue around which the battle for delegates' seat raged. Opposition to Pres. Truman on the basis of his civil rights program was unanimous among the candidates. (In 1860 Alabama led a walkout by southern states at the Democratic convention, which then nominated Abraham Lincoln.)

Alabama's Reaction

Sun. 5-9-48

The Arkansas Gazette

THE Alabama Democratic primary had a special significance because it was the first in the South in which the voters have had a chance for direct expression on the proposed Truman renomination.

There can be no doubt, if there ever was any, that Alabama Democrats disapprove of Mr. Truman's civil rights program. They endorsed the most extreme proposal yet offered to insure his defeat when they elected a slate of electors pledged to vote against him or any other Democratic candidate who supports the legislation he has proposed. . . .

34a(3)

The voters gave their heaviest vote in the delegate race to Senator Lister Hill, who is an acknowledged New Dealer. Senator Hill is opposed to the renomination of Mr. Truman, but he is as firmly opposed to splitting the Democratic party.

An the voters also overwhelmingly renominated Senator John Sparkman, another New Dealer whose announced opposition to President Truman's renomination came so late that most observers saw it as a move for political self-preservation. Senator Sparkman, like former Gov. Sparks, who also received a heavy vote as delegate, campaigned against the proposed rebellion, insisting that differences over the Truman program should be ironed out within the party. . . .

The Alabama primary had at least one positive result. It showed that Governor Folsom, whose uninhibited campaigning was supposed to have given him a stranglehold on Alabama politics, has lost a good deal of ground in the two years since he took office. He made an unexpectedly poor showing in his own race for delegate and, even more significantly, his personally-sponsored candidate for the Senate was swamped by Senator Sparkman. Whatever may have happened to Harry Truman's candidacy in Alabama, it may safely be concluded that Big Jim's "favorite son" boom was buried there.

Sparkman Wins In Alabama

Montgomery Advertiser

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch

WHILE only time will tell how much of an anti-Truman vote was cast in the Alabama primary, one reaction of the state's votes could not be clearer. The people of Alaabam are in no mood to build up Gov. James E. Folsom, whose chief distinction is that he cannot resist kissing every pretty girl within the reach of his long arms.

Gov. Folsom supported a candidate in the senatorial primary in the hope of unseating Alabama's progressive Senator, John J. Sparkman. Sparkman is so far ahead of the Folsom entry that there can be little doubt as to the outcome. This is doubly good. It is a rebuke to Folsom and an indorsement for Sparkman, which the latter deserves.

5-9-48

Sparkman entered the Senate only a year and a half ago to succeed the late Senator John H. Bankhead. Yet in that short time Sparkman has impressed himself very favorably with his colleagues and the country. This is not to say his record is perfect. He is on the wrong side of the civil rights issue. But the representation of the South in the Senate on many questions is better for John J. Sparkman.

Alabama Vote Recalls 1860

Montgomery Advertise

The Louisville Courier-Journal

DEMOCRATIC PARTY leaders were watching the Alabama primary election intently for a measure of the Southern Revolt. They saw plenty. They saw the party split, with Alabama hellbent to vote against Harry S. Truman where the vote counts, in the electoral college, even if he is nominated. It is 1860 all over again, with only slight variations.

Sun. 5-9-48

The probable results will be a re-shuffling and realignment of parties and policies. The Alabama vote could portend the end of political solidity in the South Many a rank-and-file voter, offended by the electoral college trick, which foreordains action no matter how the people vote next November, will be marking their ballots, perhaps for the first time, under the symbols of other parties. Negroes, newly enfranchised in the Old South, will hardly be voting to support the States' Rights, white-supremacy opponents of legislation for civil rights.

5-9-48

And so the temporary victors may have their pride and their vengeance for their pains as did their forebears who 88 years ago left Stephen A. Douglas, flocked to John C. Breckenridge on the States' Rights issue and assured the election of Abraham Lincoln. There can be no reconciliation on terms such as the Deep Southern State organizations would dictate today. The times and the world have gone beyond that.

However, if Alabamians were positive as being against Truman, a study of their vote shows a bit of uncertainty in other aspects. It is always like this, as if a sense of guilt were prodding, when people rush impulsively under the lash of prejudice. The incomplete vote shows that several moderate leaders, who have been counselling against a bolt of the Democratic convention in Philadelphia if the South isn't given what it demands, are running well in the front as delegates.

These include Senator Lister Hill and former Governor Sparks. Senator John Sparkman, who is in this group of stick-with-the-party advocates, seems to have beaten the man whom Governor Folsom, recently grown dizzy with power, trotted out against him. And Big Jim himself seems faring poorly in the race for a place as delegate to the national convention. He probably will squeeze in when the votes from down the creek are counted, but not as the leader. If the Folsom bubble is pricked, and demagogery, administrative ineptness and personal misbehavior are rebuked, the day is not completely lost in Alabama.

Alabama Primary Results

Montgomery Advertise

The Memphis Commercial Appeal

OUTSTANDING in the results of Tuesday's primaries is the fact that the Democrats of Alabama are sufficiently aroused against President Truman and his so-called civil rights program to bolt the convention if need be. Second to that is the evidence that Gov. James (Big Jim) Folsom's bid for leadership has found no widespread favor. . .

5-9-48

It seems assured that a big majority of Alabama delegates to the Democratic convention will be strictly anti-Truman. It looks as though Alabama's electors will also be against the President and the national leadership with which he has associated himself. Governor Folsom himself was running far behind as this was written, and apparently would not even be a delegate to the convention, much less Alabama's "favorite son" candidate for the nomination.

If the trend continues as it has begun, Alabama is to be congratulated on all counts. . . .

Alabama Shows Way

J. G. HAYDEN

In The Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON — As affecting the ultimate selection of the next President of the United States, the most decisive event so far is the seemingly sure nomination in Alabama's Democratic primary, Tuesday, of 11 presidential electors solidly pledged against President Truman. By this action Mr. Truman is excluded from the regular Democratic column on the Alabama ballot and this almost certainly means that he will lose the electoral vote of that state.

Sun. 5-9-48

And because there has been more resistance to the anti-Truman movement in Alabaam than in most other Southern states, its popularly voted determination to bolt is taken to indicate that at least five other states—South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas and Virginia — will go the same way. Altogether, these states cast 60 electoral votes. . . .

While only the six states above named are enlisted so far in the anti-Truman drive, its effects are expected to extend farther. Texas probably will join the movement fully, and Louisiana and Florida may do so. Many politicians from Tennesse and Virginia are predicting that, whether or not these states list the Southern anti-Truman candidates on their ballots, they are likely to go Republican on account of the party split.
